And if, in the preſent Caſe, the Truth was, That Mr. Murray did not actually ſurrender, but was apprehended before the Day; and that ſhould be thought, in Strictneſs, not a Compliance with the Act; and the Attorney General was now proſecuting for the Crown only; I believe he would be under no Difficulty of owning the Truth, or apprehenſive, that your Lordſhips would ſay, that the Confeſſion was either illegal or unequitable; or that, when the End of the Act was anſwered, by Mr. Murray's being ready to take his Trial, it was not agreeable to his Majeſty's Royal Juſtice and Clemency, to remove the only Impediment to his having it. Nor can the Exerciſe of this Power be objected to from any Reaſons but what would equally affect the Exerciſe of that great and excellent Prerogative of Pardoning.

What I have now ſaid will fully ſhew, that the Caſes cited are not applicable to the preſent: They are the Caſes of innocent Purchaſers, whoſe Eſtates were to be loſt by the ſubſequent Attainder, and ſuppoſed Guilt, of the Vendors.

It would be unjuſt in itſelf, not to give them an Opportunity of defending their Property, by controverting the Fact on which it depended. The Law, in Conformity to natural Juſtice, gives them, in ſome Caſes Liberty of diſputing the Crime itſelf, where the Conviction is by Confeſſion; and the time of the Commiſſion, where it is by Verdict: But, in thoſe Caſes, the Queſtion was a Matter of Property between the Crown and an innocent Subject, and depended on the Crime's being committed before or after the Purchaſe, and not merely on the Attainder, which would ſtand good, let that Queſtion be determined either Way; but, in the preſent Caſe, the Queſtion is on the Incompetency of a Witneſs, which depends ſolely on his Attainder, and not on the Reality, or Time, of his Crime. Therefore, to make a parallel Caſe, it muſt be ſaid, that if the Attorney General had confeſſed a Plea of Not Guilty to an Indictment of Treaſon, and the Priſoner, being thereupon acquitted, ſhould be brought as a Witneſs either in a Criminal or Civil Suit, his Competency might be objected to, and the Objection ſupported by Proof of his actual Guilt: But this cannot be pretended; the contrary is ſo clear, that if he had never been indicted or acquitted, the cleareſt Proof of his Crime could not be admitted for this Purpoſe; and no Evidence can, in any Caſe, eſtabiſh ſuch an Objection, but a Record of an Attainder.

The only Colour of Diſtinction between the Caſe put, and the preſent, is, that the Attainder here appears prima facie, and muſt be avoided by a Surrender to be proved. This is true; and therefore puts the Proof on us, to remove the Objection; and it is for that Reaſon this Record is offered as the proper Proof: And, as in the Caſe where the Proof lies on the Side of the Objection, the Record of the Attainder is the proper Evidence; ſo in this, where it lies on the Side of the Witneſs, the Record of his Surrender is the direct Proof that he is not attainted.

My Lords, I come now to the Second Reaſon given for the Objection, That the Priſoner is no Party to this Record; and I ſhall have Occaſion to ſay very little upon this, becauſe it is, in Effect, anſwered by the firſt Reaſon inſiſted on by the Counſel themſelves; which ſuppoſes, if the Surrender had been found by Verdict, the Record would be proper Evidence; and yet the Priſoner would then have been equally no Party. This, therefore, deſtroys the Rule and Suppoſition on which this Reaſon is founded, which is, that no Record can be read againſt a Man to which he was no Party; and, indeed, there is not, nor can be, any ſuch Rule; it is moſt notoriouſly otherwiſe in the very Inſtance in queſtion, of the Incompetency of a Witneſs, on account of his Attainder, which never can be proved by any thing but the Record; and yet the Party to be prejudiced by it neither is, nor can be, a Party to it.

The noble Lord is controverting no Property on the Foundation of Mr. Murray's ſuppoſed Attainder; he neither claims or defends any Right that is demanded on the Foundation of his Diſcharge; the Record has no more relation to him than to all the World; and if the Witneſs is diſabled as to him, he is ſo with reſpect to all Mankind, and in all Cauſes Civil or Criminal, and muſt be put on the Trial of his Surrender, as often as he ſhall be called upon during his Life, to give his Teſtimony in any Court, and in any Suit. What Abſurdities this would be attended with, I need not mention; your Lordſhips will be beforehand with me, in ſuggeſting them to your own Thoughts.

Sir JOHN STRANGE.

My Lords,

THE Queſtion ariſing upon the Objection made by the noble Lord at the Bar, is not what the Conſequence of this Record will be, when it is read, but ſingly, Whether we ſhall be now admitted to read it, or no? My Lords, the Objection made by the noble Lord at the Bar againſt this Witneſs, was founded upon this Record. My Lords, it was called for, and read; which was the Act of Parliament made in the laſt Seſſions, for the Attainder of ſeveral Perſons; and, my Lords, upon that Sort of Attainder no Writ of Error could lie; and therefore, my Lords, there was no other Way to take off the Force of that Attainder, that was warrantable, than the Method taken in the preſent Caſe. And, my Lords, I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, whether we are not intitled to read what we now call for, not as a diſtinct Record, but as Part of the whole Record relating to the Perſon now at your Lordſhips Bar; for the Record muſt come before your Lordſhips in all its Parts: Nobody can call for a particular Part of a Record to be read, but the Whole muſt be laid before your Lordſhips; and therefore, my Lords, I beg Leave to contend, that this is Part of the Record of the Proceedings againſt the Perſon whom we now call upon as a Witneſs, which the noble Lord at the Bar himſelf called for. My Lords, what the Conſequence of it will be afterwards, is a Queſtion of another Nature; but I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, that as Part of the Record of the Proceedings againſt Mr. Murray, we are certainly intitled to have it read.

My Lords, One Objection taken by the Gentlemen on the other Side, is, That it is not the Record of the proper Juriſdiction, but that it ought to be a Record made by the Perſon to whom Mr. Murray ſurrendered himſelf: But, my Lords, I muſt beg Leave to ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, by Way of Anſwer, That it is the Record of a proper Juriſdiction, in a Caſe of this Nature. My Lords, the Court of King's-Bench, as a Court of criminal Juriſdiction, may have Offenders of all Sorts brought before them. My Lords, in the preſent Caſe, a Certiorari iſſues out of Chancery, and by Mittimus the Record is removed into the King's-Bench: And I will call upon the Counſel for the impeached Lord, if they will venture to ſay, that a Certiorari will not lie for that Purpoſe. My Lords, if it will lie, it muſt be for ſome End or Purpoſe that a Certiorari was brought, and the Record tranſmitted thither; that was the proper Juriſdiction, and that Court then had a Right to call upon the Party brought up before them by Habeas Corpus, to know what he had to ſay, why Execution ſhould not be awarded, upon the Footing of the Attainder by this Act of Parliament? My Lords, the Queſtion was put by that Court to the Perſon who was then a Priſoner before them: He pleaded a Surrender within the Time; and inſiſted, that there he was amenable to Juſtice: He alledges, that as a proper Anſwer to that Court, upon the Queſtion aſked him; and whether it was, or was not a proper Anſwer, depended upon the Fact. The Court could have no Doubt, but if the Party ſurrendered himſelf in Time, and was amenable to Juſtice, but that was an Anſwer to their demanding to know of him, why Execution ſhould not be awarded againſt him? And, my Lords, if that Fact had not been verified in a legal Way, there muſt have been Execution awarded; but if legal Satisfaction was given by the then Priſoner, it was the Duty of that Court to record that as a Matter of Fact, which was properly verified before them. And, my Lords, there are two Ways of verifying Matters of Fact; one is by the actual Proof of the Fact (if the other Party denies it), or by Confeſſion; and if the Party knows that he cannot in Conſcience deny it, then he ought to confeſs it, and not put the other to the Expence and Trouble of proving that which he knows to be true: If you know that to be Fact, that the Party ſurrendered himſelf to Juſtice, and was forthcoming, will any body ſay, that it is not right and juſt, to admit that Fact as alledged? Therefore, my Lords, the Queſtion of Fact in this Caſe has been properly determined by that Court; the Conſequence of which is, that That Court ought to make a Record of it; and that is to be conſidered, not as a diſtinct, ſeparate Record of itſelf, but as the Proceeding upon this Record of this Act of Parliament, which had thus been removed there by Certiorari; and it is, to all intents and Purpoſes of Law, to be conſidered as a Record of the Proceedings; and they are to be conſidered as having the former Proceedings before them, upon the ſame Record; and all Courts are bound to admit that Record, which was thus made in a Court of legal Proceeding: and therefore, my Lords, if that Court was the proper Juriſdiction, can any body ſay, that the Record of what was there tranſacted is not as proper Evidence as what the Noble Lord at the Bar has called for, and which has been read to your Lordſhips, which is the Act of Attainder of the laſt Seſſions of Parliament? My Lords, the Gentlemen on the other Side ſay, that this is an erroneous Method: Say they, you have not gone to the proper Perſon; here is a particular Juriſdiction to record a Surrender, and you ſhould have gone to the Juſtice of Peace to whom the Surrender was made. My Lords, I have looked upon the Act of Parliament, to ſee what the Legiſlature had thought proper to preſcribe, as the Duty of the Juſtice of Peace to whom the Surrender is directed to be made.

My Lords, all that is required of him by this Act of Parliament is, he is, upon the Surrender, to commit the Perſon ſo ſurrendering to Priſon, for the High-Treaſon, there to remain till he is diſcharged by due Courſe of Law; and he is immediately to give Notice of it to the Secretary of State. Your Lordſhips will then be pleaſed to conſider, what it is that the Gentlemen inſiſt upon: My Lords, will any body ſay, that what is mentioned in this Act of Parliament, in regard to the Juſtice of Peace, will take away the Juriſdiction from a Supreme Court of Original Juriſdiction, in Caſes of that Kind; and that without a Word being mentioned in the Act concerning it?

My Lords, they ſay, That the Juriſdiction of recording the Surrender is given to the Juſtice of Peace, though the Act of Parliament does not ſay a Word of his doing any Thing of this Nature: And, my Lords, if the Act of Parliament had made him the proper Perſon, whoſe Duty it was to record the Surrender, to what Purpoſe is he to ſend an Account of it to the Secretary of State? Was he to make up the Record? No; all the Juſtice of Peace was to do, was to give Notice of the Tranſaction before him, to thoſe Perſons who are appointed to do what ſhall be done upon ſuch a Surrender. My Lords, there is ſomething that was ſaid by the Counſel for the Noble Lord at the Bar, which I will only juſt take Notice of: They were pleaſed to put this Caſe: Say they, Suppoſe this Record is now to ſtand, it is a Matter tranſacted, to which the Noble Lord at the Bar is no Party, and conſequently ought not to be read againſt him. My Lords, I will venture to ſay, there is no ſuch general Rule; Nobody will contend (becauſe there are numberleſs Inſtances of it), that Records are not conſtantly permitted to be read as Evidence againſt Perſons who are no Parties to them. My Lords, Suppoſe a Man is charged with having harboured a Perſon attainted of Treaſon or Felony; and, when he comes to be tried, ſay they, Gentlemen, you ſhall not read the Record of that Perſon's Attainder, becauſe the Man now charged is no Party to it: Do not charge me with receiving or harbouring a Man attainted by that Record; for though the Record may be read as againſt him, yet it cannot be read againſt the Perſon charged, who was no Party to it. My Lords, Would any Court of Juſtice make the leaſt Difficulty in admitting ſuch a Record to be read? My Lords, the Reaſon of the Thing itſelf ſpeaks it; for till the Record is read, it does not appear there is any Perſon attainted; and conſequently no Charge againſt the Priſoner. And, my Lords, to make it a Civil Caſe, ſuppoſe a Lord of a Manor claims by Eſcheat the Eſtate of a Perſon attainted, and another Lord claims the ſame Eſtate, cannot the Record of the Perſon's Attainder be read as Evidence in that Caſe, though neither of them are Parties to it? My Lords, there can be no Doubt but it may; and therefore, my Lords, that Objection has no Force upon the preſent Queſtion. My Lords, the Objection now made is to the reading of a Record, or Part of a Record, which the Noble Lord at the Bar himſelf called for; and I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, that we are entitled to have it now read: What the Conſequence of reading of it will be, is not now to be conſidered; for we argue ſingly upon the Queſtion, Whether it ſhall be now read, or no?

Mr. Sollicitor General.

My Lords,

WHETHER the Record which has been opened may be read at all; and what ſhall be the Effect of it, after it is read (I mean, whether it may be falſified), are two ſeparate and diſtinct Conſiderations.

Your Lordſhips were pleaſed to aſk the Noble Lord at the Bar, and his Counſel, Whether they would reſt their Objection to the reading of it? or ſuffer it to be read, and then object to the Conſequence of it?

They choſe to object to the Reading; and the Counſel were allowed to ſpeak to that Point only: And yet there is not an Authority they have quoted, which don't prove, that at leaſt it muſt be read.

The Competency of all Evidence, in a great Meaſure, depends upon the Nature of the Queſtion to which it is applied; for that is Evidence in one Caſe, and to one Purpoſe, which is not ſo in another Kind of Caſe, or to another Sort of Purpoſe.

The Merits of this Objection, therefore, will depend upon thoroughly underſtanding the Purpoſe for which this Record is produced.

The Incapacity of a Perſon attainted to give Teſtimony, does not ariſe from his Life being thereby in the Power of the King; or any Preſumption, that, through the Fear of Death, he may be induced to exceed the Bounds of Truth; but it is one of thoſe many Incapacities which are the Conſequences of his Attainder.

He is cut off from the Community; his Blood is corrupted; he loſes his Credit; and therefore can be a Witneſs in no Caſe, neither for or againſt a Proſecution, nor in any Civil Suit between Subject and Subject.

All Proceedings upon which a Man can be attainted, at the Common Law, are between the King and the Party only: But ſuch Proceedings are Evidence, and the only Evidence to prove the Attainder between all Perſons, and upon all Occaſions; which ſhews the Miſtake the Gentlemen proceed upon, when they object, that my Lord Lovat was no Party to this Record; and therefore it ſhall not be read againſt him.

The Party who objects to a Witneſs, becauſe he is attainted, undertakes to ſhew, that, according to the Courſe of the publick Law and Juſtice of the Nation, he is ſo; and therefore may read any Proceedings in the Courſe of that publick Law, to prove it.

So likewiſe, in Anſwer to the Objection, and to ſhew the Perſon not attainted, any of the like Proceedings may be read.

If a Conviction and Judgment is read, it may be anſwered by reading the Reverſal of that Judgment upon a Writ of Error; and yet the King muſt be the only Party to both theſe Proceedings.

The likeſt Caſe to the preſent, at Common Law, is that of an Outlawry.

If an Outlawry is produced, to prove a Man attainted, the Reverſal of that Outlawry may be given in Evidence, as a full Anſwer to that Proof: And yet moſt of thoſe Reverſals in High-Treaſon, are grounded upon the Attorney General's confeſſing an Error in Fact, by the King's Command; and this generally is a merciful Confeſſion, contrary to the Truth of the Caſe. Several Noble Families now enjoy their Honours, and their Eſtates, by virtue of ſuch Reverſals.

I will not mention Inſtances; as your Lordſhips have the Aſſiſtance of the Judges, I am perſuaded they will inform your Lordſhips, that there are many. Would an Objection be endured to the reading ſuch a Reverſal?

The preſent Caſe is that of a Parliamentary Outlawry, if I may ſo call it: Perſons fled from Juſtice are attainted in a more expeditious and ſummary Way than could be done by the Courſe of the Common Law, unleſs they come in, and take their Trials within a limited Time.

The only Court in this Part of the Kingdom, which can award Execution againſt a Perſon, as attainted within this Act, is the Court of King's-Bench: There can be no Party to ſuch Proceedings but the King, who is intruſted with the whole Execution of the publick Law of the Nation. A Proceeding, therefore, in that Court, which ſhews a Man never to have been attainted within the Act, is Evidence to anſwer an Objection, which ſays, he is. It proves concluſively, that, in the Eye and Conſideration of the publick Law, he is not an attainted Man; he may inherit, he may purchaſe; he can't be put to Death. By this Proceeding the King is bound for ever; all Magiſtrates are bound; no Judicature can now conſider the Witneſs in any other Light than he ought to be conſidered in, if the Act had never been made. It is poſſible then to doubt, whether (in Anſwer to an Objection, that by the Law of the Land this Witneſs is now looked upon as an attainted Man) a Record ſhould be read, which proves, that by the Law of the Land he is not looked upon as an attainted Man? He is either a Perſon liable to all the Conſequences of an Attainder, or none.

Mr. Noel.

My Lords,

I SHALL be very ſhort in offering my Sentiments to your Lordſhips upon the preſent Queſtion, becauſe three learned and able Gentlemen have already ſpoken very fully to it.

My Lords, The Queſtion ariſes upon an Objection taken by the Noble Lord at the Bar, againſt the Competency of Mr. Murray's Teſtimony, as he ſtands attainted by the Act of the laſt Seſſions of Parliament, which has been read to your Lordſhips: But after that, another Objection aroſe, in conſequence of what we, on the Part of the Proſecution, offered, which was a Record we propoſed to be read: To the reading of which the Noble Lord objected, and has relied upon that Objection, that it cannot be read at all.

My Lords, I was ſurpriſed at that Objection; and the Counſel for the Noble Lord have been ſo ſenſible, that there was no great Weight in it, that they have prematurely, in the Courſe of their Arguments, run into a Debate concerning the Force and Effect of it when read, and not to the actual reading of it; and, my Lords, it was a very ſtrange Propoſition to be inſiſted on before your Lordſhips, that in a Queſtion relating to Mr. Murray, and him alone, when an Objection is made to his Teſtimony, that he ſtands attainted by an Act of Parliament, that your Lordſhips ſhould ſhut your Eyes, and not receive Evidence of the Proceedings of a Court, having proper Juriſdiction to determine any Queſtion which might ariſe upon that Act of Parliament: I ſay, my Lords, that would be a moſt extraordinary Thing indeed, when the Objection relates to Mr. Murray, upon the Attainder by Act of Parliament; and yet, they ſay, your Lordſhips ſhall not ſee the Record of the Proceedings of a Court of Juſtice, founded upon that Act of Parliament. But, my Lords, as the Gentlemen have, under a Notion of conſidering this Objection in ſome Degree, conſidered the Force of the Record itſelf, if it had been read, tho' they have done it improperly, yet I doubt it will be expected, that we ſhould take Notice of the Foundation of that Argument.

The Queſtion, therefore, ſeems to be, Whether Mr. Murray is to be conſidered under the Act, and the Proceedings in the Court of King's-Bench upon it, as an attainted Perſon, or not.

My Lords, the Act of Parliament does not finally conclude any Perſon: It names ſeveral Perſons, whom the Act declares ſhall be attainted by the Force of that Law, unleſs they comply with the Terms expreſſed in it; and the proper Court of Law muſt judge, when the Perſon comes before them, them, whether he was a Perſon within the Meaning of the Act of Parliament, or not. Therefore, my Lords, when he was before a Court, who had proper Juriſdiction upon that Queſtion, Whether he was an attainted Perſon, or not, and they have determined that Queſtion, That he was not, then there is an End of that Queſtion. But it has been ſaid, That this may affect, in conſequence, the Property of a third Perſon; and that the Noble Lord at the Bar ought not to be affected by the Proceedings in the King's-Bench. But I apprehend this Queſtion relates perſonally to Mr. Murray, and to no other. It is merely a Queſtion as to his Capacity or Incapacity; that is, whether he be attainted or no; and therefore, my Lords, that diſtinguiſhes this Caſe from the Caſes of private Property, alluded to by the Counſel for the Noble Lord in the Courſe of their Argument.

My Lords, I beg Leave to ſtate this Matter in a ſtronger Light: If your Lordſhips ſhall ſay, That Mr. Murray is an attainted Perſon, you muſt likewiſe ſay, that he is liable to have Execution awarded againſt him upon this Act; for, when that is the Queſtion, it muſt be conſidered intire, with all its Conſequences.

My Lords, if no Execution can be awarded againſt him, your Lordſhips cannot ſay, that he is an attainted Perſon: Therefore your Lordſhips ſee what Difficulties will enſue, if you ſhould determine, that he ſtands attainted, with reſpect to the Noble Lord at the Bar, but not to the Conſequences that the Law draws from his being an attainted Perſon. My Lords, it would be the ſtrangeſt Caſe in the World, if that ſhould be your Lordſhips Sentiments, that he is not attainted in one Reſpect, and yet that he is attainted in another Reſpect.

My Lords, the Counſel for the Noble Lord object, That the Proceeding which has been had, has been by the Confeſſion of the Attorney General, though they admit it was in the Power of the Crown to make ſuch Confeſſion. I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, that though it is by the Confeſſion of the Attorney General, as it is by proper Authority, and in a legal Court, having proper Juriſdiction, that it is as effectual and binding upon the Crown as any Act they can poſſibly do: And can your Lordſhips ſay, that Mr. Murray ſhall not have the Benefit of a legal Proceeding of a Court of Juſtice, having complete and lawful Juriſdiction, and who have determined the Caſe?

My Lords, it is ſaid, That there is ſome Difference where it is upon the Confeſſion of the Attorney General, and where it is founded upon a Verdict. My Lords, your Lordſhips will conſider what are the Circumſtances of the Caſe in regard to that Matter: A Gentleman is brought before a Court of Juſtice, to anſwer why Execution ſhould not be awarded againſt him upon a ſuppoſed Attainder. He pleads a Fact that is ſufficient, if true, to exempt him from that Attainder: Can the Gentleman ſay, that he muſt not avail himſelf of it, becauſe the Attorney General will not put him to the Expence to prove it? My Lords, it is ſaid, that if he had denied the Plea, the Conſequence to Mr. Murray muſt have been, that he would not have appeared to have been a Perſon exempted from the Act? No: But, ſay they, becauſe the Attorney General and the Crown are ſatisfied of the Truth of the Plea, and will not put him upon proving it, therefore he is not to have the Benefit of the Judgment of the Court upon that Queſtion. I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, that every Man, under thoſe Circumſtances, would be in a moſt fatal Situation, and that it would be attended with very bad Conſequences. A Man is aſked, what he has to ſay why Execution ſhould not be awarded againſt him; and pleads a Fact that actually will clear him from the Attainder: The Attorney General confeſſes the Plea, does not join Iſſue, and will not give him an Opportunity of proving it; and, my Lords, what is to be the Conſequence? Why, according to this Doctrine, he muſt inevitably be condemned as a Perſon attainted; whereas, if he had been put to the Proof of it, it might have been determined, that he was not attainted. I apprehend your Lordſhips will not ſuffer them to draw that Inference, that, becauſe the Attorney General has not put him to the Proof of his Plea, he is to be conſidered as a Perſon attainted, contrary to the Judgment of the Court.

Sir Richard Lloyd.

My Lords,

THE Queſtion has been ſo fully ſpoken to already, that I ſhall not have Occaſion to take up much of your Lordſhips Time: But I cannot forbear expreſſing my Surprize at the Objection now made, viz. "That this Record cannot be read againſt the Noble Lord at the Bar:" The Reaſon given for which is, that he is no Party to it. Many Anſwers have been given; and I will not repeat them: But ſhall offer a Conſideration or two to your Lordſhips, in order to ſhew that the Force and Effect of Mr. Murray's Attainder has been, by this Tranſaction on Record, totally taken off.

My Lords, the whole Argument on the Priſoner's Side is in this Compaſs; viz. they ſay, that Mr. Murray (the Perſon produced by us as a Witneſs, is ſtill attainted; and therefore, by the Rules of Law, cannot be a Witneſs: And 'tis certainly true, that if he ſtands now attainted, he cannot, by our Law, be admitted to give Teſtimony. Let us come then to that Queſtion, Does he, or does he not, at this Hour, ſtand attainted by virtue of the late Statute?

It cannot be doubted, but that a Parliamentary Attainder of this Sort may be diſſolved by ſome Method or other; and the very Statute directs one Way; viz. by Surrender before a particular Day; and the only Way to aſcertain that Fact is a Judgment on Record, that he did ſurrender.

I would aſk the Counſel, for the Noble Priſoner, whether Mr. Murray can by Law be called to Judgment for that High-Treaſon for which he was by the late Act attainted? They muſt own, that this Record of Surrender would be an abſolute Defence on ſuch an Occaſion; nay, it would be an abſolute Bar to ſuch a Demand of Judgment. If this Defence would not be his Security, the Conſequence is, that there would be no Method at all of getting rid of ſuch an Attainder.

It has been objected, that though this may be a good Diſcharge betwixt the Crown and Mr. Murray, yet it ought not to affect others, who are not Parties to that Proceeding. My Lords, 'tis true, others may be affected by Mr. Murray's being reſtored to his Credit. But that is no Objection; for though by virtue of this Record he is ſo reſtored, yet that is only a Conſequence, which neceſſarily follows from the Facts aſcertained by that Record.——The Proceeding on the Record was a legal Tranſaction between the Crown and Mr. Murray, and no other Perſon whatſoever had a Right to be a Party to it.——The King, at the Time of Mr. Murray's pleading on the Record, was the only Perſon to call him to account for his Guilt: The only Controverſy at that Time was betwixt the Crown and the Party called down to Judgment: The Matter therefore being a legal Tranſaction, a Law Controverſy betwixt the only proper Parties, its neceſſary Conſequences muſt follow, let who may be affected.

But 'tis ſaid, "That if it had been found by Verdict, that Mr. Murray had ſurrendered in due Time, then the Record might have been read "in Evidence againſt all Perſons; but that, as 'tis founded on Mr. Attorney General's Confeſſion of the Surrender, it ought not."——This is a ſtrange Diſtinction. I would aſk the Gentlemen who make it, whether this Record by Confeſſion is not a full and compleat Record? Has not his Majeſty's Attorney a Right to confeſs it? No Lawyer will ſay, that he has not ſuch a Right by the Laws of our Land.

My Lords, let me argue this Matter, not on the Principles of Law only, but on thoſe of Reaſon, abſtracted from the Law: and thence ſee, whether Mr. Murray is not as much diſcharged from his Attainder, or his Attainder as much avoided, by this Confeſſion of the King by his Attorney, as he would be by Verdict.

Is the King the only Perſon in the Kingdom, who ſhall be compelled to ſay a Thing is not true, which he knows to be true? Or, is his Majeſty the only Perſon who ſhall be hindered from owning that to be true upon Record, which he and all the World knows is true?

'Tis a Point of legal Controverſy betwixt the Crown and one of his Subjects; and ſuppoſing it to have been a Fact notorious, that Mr. Murray (the Defendant in that Controverſy) had come in and ſurrendered in due Time according to the late Act, would it not be abſurd to ſay, that the Crown's Attorney ſhould be bound by Law to ſay, that he did not ſurrender? i. e. ſhall be bound to deny and put to Trial a Fact, which he knows is indiſputably true; and needs no Trial? Yet this, my Lords, muſt be the Doctrine to be maintained by the Counſel for the Noble Priſoner; or elſe they muſt agree, that this Record of the Fact of Surrender, by Confeſſion of the Attorney General, is of equal Weight with any other Record whatſoever.

My Lords, his Majeſty has a Right to the Life of every Perſon attainted; and would it not be a cruel Law, that ſhould prevent him from admitting any Facts to be true, which ſuch Perſon inſiſts on for the ſaving his Life, when the ſame, within his own Knowledge, ſtrictly are ſo?

There is no Doubt but that a Tranſaction of this Kind betwixt Subject and Subject is good, where each Party to a Controverſy (Plaintiffs and Defendants) admit ſuch Facts on the Record, which they know the Certainty of, and never, unleſs out of a Spirit of Perverſeneſs, put them in Iſſue.——Where is the Difference, ſince the Crown and Mr. Murray are, as to that Matter then in Controverſy, the only Perſons who could be Parties? The Capacity to be a Witneſs is only a Conſequence naturally flowing from the Avoidance of the Attainder. Mr. Murray is not reſtored to his Credit by Act of Favour, but a neceſſary Conſequence of Law, and ſuch as the Crown could not prevent; for as the Attainder was the only Cauſe of his Loſs of Capacity to be a Witneſs; when the Force of that is taken off, that Capacity is of Courſe reſtored, not out of Favour, but of ſtrict Right, and by neceſſary Conſequence.

My Lords, I would aſk one Queſtion; viz. Whether the Counſel for the Noble Lord at the Bar will ſay, that Mr. Murray has this preſent Day any Attainder againſt him? Or whether he can ever be called again to anſwer on the Foot of that Parliamentary Attainder, in which he was included?

If he cannot, as moſt certainly he cannot, then there is nothing now exiſting which takes away his Teſtimony; and as the preſent Record is of a Controverſy betwixt the only proper Parties to it, and is produced only to manifeſt a Fact then depending, and then by the Rules of Law aſcertained, it ought to be read.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, I ſuppoſe you have no Objection to the Counſels replying.

Sir John Strange. No, my Lords; provided we have the laſt Word; which is our Right.

Mr. Forrester.

My Lords,

I Shall take up the leſs of your Lordſhips Time at preſent, becauſe I admit moſt of the Propoſitions laid down by the learned Managers; though I conceive that none of them have anſwered the Objection we made to the Reading of this Record, which was the Poſſibility of Damage that might enſue to the Noble Lord at the Bar. My Lords, the Reaſon is plain why we object to it, becauſe the Credit of the Fact depending merely upon the Confeſſion of the Attorney General, if it be received in the preſent Caſe, it muſt be ſo in every other, whether the Queſtions relate to Property, or any other Matter; and if it be concluſive to the Noble Lord at the Bar, it is equally ſo to every Man in this Land. My Lords I admit every Caſe put by the learned Manager who ſpoke firſt, as relative to Criminal Proceedings; but what we inſiſt upon is, That this Confeſſion of the Attorney General does only bind the Crown, and the Parties to it; but binds no other Perſon: And, my Lords, they have cited no Authority to your Lordſhips to prove it binding upon any body elſe. My Lords, it was ſaid by the learned Manager, That if Mr. Murray was brought a ſecond Time into any Court of Juſtice, he would have the whole Benefit of this Record, and thereby, my Lords, prove himſelf not attainted by this Act of Parliament: And there is no doubt of it, becauſe the Confeſſion is the Act of the Crown, who is bound by it.

They likewiſe ſay, that any Perſon claiming under Mr. Murray might intitle himſelf under this Record. My Lords, I admit that alſo, becauſe ſuch Perſon would have the ſame Right as Mr. Murray himſelf; but, my Lords, that does not prove that it can affect any other Perſon.

My Lords, it is admitted that a Pardon would have taken off all Objection: But I humbly inſiſt, that by this Method, the Gentleman ſtill con-continues liable to be conſidered as an attainted Perſon in another Part of the Kingdom, I mean in Scotland, where this Record would be no Evidence; for ſhould he eſcape from his preſent Confinement to Scotland, and be brought into the Court of Juſticiary, to ſhew Cauſe why Execution ſhould not be awarded againſt him, as attainted by this Act of Parliament, his Plea in the King's-Bench, confeſſed by the Attorney General, would be of no Avail to him: He muſt make out the Fact inſiſted on by other Proof, which, being Matter of Evidence, might as well come out one Way as the other, that he did not, as that he did, ſurrender before the 12th of July laſt; that he was taken by the King's Forces; as that he did ſurrender himſelf as the Act requires. Thus your Lordſhips ſee, in how high a Degree the Queſtion affects the Noble Lord at the Bar; and your Lordſhips will be very tender how this Gentleman's Teſtimony is admitted in a Caſe of this Nature, until both his Competency and Credit be eſtabliſhed by better Authority than the bare Confeſſion of the Attorney General.

My Lords, I mentioned ſeveral Inſtances, where a Record of this Kind would not be Evidence againſt a third Perſon: But, ſay the Gentlemen, that is not the Caſe here; becauſe my Lord Lovat is not affected by Murray's Attainder. The King, who had the ſole Right of proſecuting, and had an Intereſt in the Attainder, has declared him not to come within the Act of Parliament. But I muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhips, that my Lord Levat is affected by, and concerned in, the Conſequence of the Attainder. He has a Right to ſet aſide the Teſtimony of Mr. Murray, if attainted; and that Right of ſetting aſide his Teſtimony is equally ſtrong as a Right to an Eſtate, or any other Right given by Law; and the ſame Methods muſt be uſed to deprive him of the one as the other. My Lords, it is ſaid, That this Method of Confeſſion is the proper Courſe; that it is daily made uſe of in that; and the Attorney General, upon a Writ of Error brought, and Errors aſſigned in Fact, or in Law, may admit them to be ſo. But, my Lords, in none of the Caſes quoted by the Gentlemen is there any, wherein the Attorney General has, by his Confeſſion, made that Error, which is not ſo: And although the Party ſhould aſſign Errors, and the Attorney General admit them, yet would not that bind the Court to pronounce them to be Errors, if they appear otherwiſe. My Lords, as ſo much Time has been taken up already, I will not repeat any of the former Arguments; but ſhall conclude with an Obſervation delivered down to us by one of the greateſt and moſt upright Judges that ever ſat in this Hall; I mean my Lord Chief-Juſtice Vaughan, who tells us, That the artificial Reaſoning of Law ought never to take place againſt the Principles of natural Juſtice and Equity: And, my Lords, it is a Principle of natural Juſtice, that a third Perſon ſhould not be prejudiced by the Acts of others. The ſame learned Judge concludes his Paragraph, by adding, That in Caſes which depend upon fundamental Principles, from whence plain and natural Concluſions may be drawn, Millions of Precedents are to no Purpoſe: But, my Lords, there has not been one ſingle Precedent laid before your Lordſhips, where the Right of a third Perſon may be affected in the Manner now contended for; and as nothing of that Kind has been attempted, I beg leave to inſiſt, That the Right of the Noble Lord at the Bar to ſet aſide this Witneſs, is as much a Right, as that he has to any Part of his own Eſtate; and ſubmit therefore to your Lordſhips, whether they ought not to ſubſtantiate this Teſtimony by ſome better Proof than ſo weak a Thing as a Record, founded only on the Suggeſtion of the Party, confeſſed by the Attorney General.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, the Counſel for my Lord Levat have done with what they had to offer by way of Reply: Would you ſay any thing to it?

Mr. Attorney General.

My Lords,

IT is ſaid by the Counſel for the noble Lord at the Bar, That they do not deny any Propoſition laid down by us; but that they deny the Conſequence of thoſe Propoſitions. My Lords, A Denial of the Premiſes would be a Denial of the Conſequences; but an Admiſſion of the Premiſes here is an Admiſſion of the Conſequences: They now ſay, all they deſire to contend for, is, That the Confeſſion in this Caſe does not bind a Third Perſon; and that they ſhall not by that loſe their Right to this Objection. My Lords, What is that Objection founded upon? It is founded upon this Suppoſition, That the Witneſs called is an attainted Perſon. If he is not attainted, their Objection fails; for they cannot ſay, that he is an improper Perſon to produce as a Witneſs, upon any other Ground. If the Record therefore deſtroys the Pretence of an Attainder, it proves his Competency. Now the Counſel for the Priſoner have not been able to point out, or ſuggeſt, any one Inſtance or Reſpect, in which he can be ſaid to be, or affected, as an attainted Perſon, unleſs for the preſent ſingle Purpoſe. And it would be very extraordinary to ſay, that a Perſon who can loſe neither his Life nor Eſtate, nor the Purity of his Blood, as a Perſon attainted of Treaſon, ſhould be deemed attainted, for no other Purpoſe but to render him infamous. My Lords, What is the Offence by this Act? It is not High-Treaſon; the Offence is in not ſubmitting to Juſtice; and the Record ſhews, that he did ſubmit himſelf to Juſtice. This is ſtronger, as to that Point, than a Pardon, becauſe it avoids the original Guilt. The Gentlemen ſay, That this Record cannot be made uſe of in Scotland; and that if the Witneſs was brought before a Court of Juſtice there, for Execution, upon the Foundation of this Act, he could never avail himſelf of this Record. My Lords, I deny that; and I take it to be clearly otherwiſe; for what would be the Conſequence, if he could not? Much more than the Gentlemen are aware of: For by the ſame Rule that this Record could not avail him there, no Verdict, no Acquittal in England, could protect a Man from another Proſecution in Scotland, for the ſame Offence; and the Priſoners who have already had, or hereafter ſhall receive their Trial, either in England or Scotland, for the late Rebellion, and been acquitted; may, by being ſent into the other Part of the Kingdom, be tried a Second Time, and be put twice in Hazard of their Lives. As this is contrary to the Laws of England, I believe it is equally ſo to the Laws of Scotland, as they ſtood originally; for I take it to be contrary to the Firſt Principles of all Laws, that after a Man is fairly tried for an Offence, by a Court that has full Cognizance of the Crime, he ſhould be taken up, and tried again for the ſame Offence. No Law will admit of it. But, with reſpect to Treaſon, it is made clear by the Statute of 7 Ann. which makes the Law of Treaſon, and the Manner of trying it in Scotland, the ſame as in England. My Lords, if the Gentlemen aſk, How this Record may be made uſe of there? The Method is by producing the Record, or proving a true Copy of it, as is done in Caſe of the Record of a Judgment of any other Court: And the Judges in Scotland will be bound by this Record. My Lords, the abſurd Conſequences ariſing from the contrary Doctrine appear at firſt Sight; and are too many now to enumerate. The Gentlemen ſay, That a Confeſſion of an Error in Law will not be admitted in any Court: I do agree that it will not, becauſe the Court muſt judge upon the Whole of the Record; and determine upon their own Judgment and Knowledge of the Law, whether (ſuppoſing all the Facts to be true) there is Error, or not. The Reaſon is, becauſe that is their proper Province; and they neither want, nor can be bound by, the Confeſſion of the Attorney General. But it is quite otherwiſe as to Matters of Fact, which the Court do not ex officio examine into themſelves; they muſt take them to be either as they are ſtated and admitted between the Parties themſelves, or appear by the Verdict of a Jury. To apply this to the preſent Caſe: Mr. Murray ſays, That he did ſurrender, and ſubmit himſelf to Juſtice, according to the Act of Parliament. The Attorney General, by Command of his Majeſty, admits that Fact: As there is no Iſſue joined, a Jury can't be ſummoned to try it; and it is impoſſible the Court ſhould try it themſelves, by examining Witneſſes; they have no Commiſſion for it; and the Law gives them no ſuch Power. The Fact, therefore, muſt be taken to be true; and, as it cannot be now controverted, your Lordſhips muſt judge, whether it don't clear him of any Attainder.

Sir John Strange.

My Lords,

I SHOULD not now have ſtood up, to have taken up any more of your Lordſhips Time, but in regard to what was mentioned by the Gentlemen who are Counſel for the Priſoner, that this Record cannot be made uſe of in Scotland. My Lords, I will beg Leave to put them in mind of the Statute made in the Seventh Year of Queen Anne; which ſays, That Trials for High-Treaſon in that Kingdom are to be the ſame as if they were here; and whatever Benefit a Perſon will be intitled to here, they would be equally intitled to there: And therefore I would not have it now taken for granted, that in ſuch Caſes, That ſhould not be admitted as Evidence in one Part of the Kingdom, which is Evidence in another Part of it.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, If the Record is now to be read, only to ſhew, That Mr. Murray ſurrendered himſelf within the Time preſcribed by the Act, I ſhould have no Objection to the reading of it; but if it is to prove Mr. Murray to be a competent, or an incompetent Evidence, then I think it of that Conſequence, that I hope ſome Lord will move to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, if any Debate ariſes upon the Point that has been argued at the Bar, your Lordſhips muſt adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament, to debate and conſider it.

Then the Earl Stanhope moved the Houſe to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament: And the Houſe was adjourned accordingly: And, after about Two Hours, returned in the ſame Order as before. The Houſe was reſumed; and Proclamation made for Silence.

Lord High Steward. The Lords adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament, upon the Queſtion which had been argued before them, Whether the Record of the Court of King's Bench, offered in Evidence by the Managers, ought to be read, or not? And their Lordſhips have come to the following Reſolution; with which I am ordered to acquaint the Managers for the Houſe of Commons, and you, my Lord Lovat: And it is this; That the Managers for the Commons be admitted to prove, and give in Evidence, the Record of the Proceedings in the Court of King's-Bench, upon the Certiorari; whereby the Act of the laſt Seſſion of Parliament, for attainting John Murray of Broughton, and others, unleſs they ſurrender themſelves by a certain Day therein mentioned, was removed before that Court.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, We deſire Mr. Tully may be called, to prove the Record.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I told your Lordſhips before, that I would give you very little Trouble; and now I am willing to give you ſtill leſs. I acknowledge the Record; and ſhall not give your Lordſhips the Trouble of hearing it proved.

Lord High Steward. That will ſave the Trouble of proving it; but it muſt be read. Does your Lordſhip admit the Record to be read, without further Proof?

Lord Lovat. Yes, if your Lordſhips pleaſe.

Then the Record was read by the Clerk, at the Table; and is as follows:

Pleas before our Lord the King, at Weſtminſter, of Hilary Term, in the Twentieth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, by the Grace of God, of Great-Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith

I Aſhley Cowper, Clerk of Parliaments, by virtue of the Writ of our ſaid Lord the King of Certiorari to me directed, and to theſe Preſents annexed, do certify, That what is above written is the true Tenor of the Act of Parliament aboveſaid in that Writ expreſſed. In Witneſs whereof, to this Schedule I have ſet my Seal, and ſubſcribed my Name. Dated the Ninth Day of February, in the Twentieth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King, and in the Year of our Lord One thouſand Seven hundred and Forty-ſix.

ASHLEY COWPER.

Plea of John Murray. } AND now (that is to ſay) upon Thurſday next after the Octave of the Purification of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary, before our ſaid preſent Sovereign Lord the King at Weſtminſter, cometh the ſaid John Murray in the ſaid Act named, under the Cuſtody of the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, by virtue of his Majeſty's Writ of Habeas Corpus ad ſubjiciendum, &c. into whoſe Cuſtody he the ſaid John Murray had been before committed, upon the Account aforeſaid, being brought to the Bar here in his own proper Perſon, who is committed by the Court to the ſaid Lieutenant of the ſaid Tower of London, charged as a Perſon attainted of High Treaſon by virtue of the ſaid Act: And being aſked by the Court here, at the Inſtance of Sir Dudley Ryder, Knight, Attorney-General of our ſaid preſent Sovereign Lord the King, who, for our ſaid preſent Sovereign Lord the King, in this behalf proſecuteth, If he the ſaid John Murray hath, or knoweth of, any thing to ſay for himſelf, why the Court here ſhould not proceed to award Execution againſt him thereupon, he the ſaid John Murray, for Plea, ſaith, That it is very true, that he is one of the Perſons in the ſaid Act named and intended; to wit, The Perſon therein deſigned and deſcribed by the Name, Stile, and Addition, of John Murray of Broughton, Eſquire, againſt whom, with the reſt of the Perſons therein named, deſigned, and deſcribed, the ſaid Act was made, paſſed, and intended, for and on account of the High-Treaſon therein mentioned, and thereby ſuppoſed to have been committed againſt our ſaid preſent Sovereign Lord the King: But, for further Plea, he ſaith, That, long before the Twelfth Day of July in the ſaid Act mentioned; to wit, Upon the Twenty-eighth Day of June then laſt paſt, he the ſaid John Murray, at the City of Edinburgh, in the Shire of Edinburgh, did, in due Manner, and according to the Directions, and agreeable to the true Senſe, Intent, and Meaning of the ſaid Act, render himſelf to the Right Honourable Andrew Fletcher, Eſquire, Lord Juſtice Clerk of Scotland, being one of his Majeſty's Juſtices of the Peace in the ſaid Act mentioned and intended for that Purpoſe (he the ſaid Andrew Fletcher having then and there full Power and Authority, by virtue of the ſaid Act, to admit him the ſaid John Murray to make ſuch Render of himſelf to him the ſaid Andrew Fletcher, as aforeſaid); and that he the ſaid John Murray was, upon the ſaid Twenty-eighth Day of June, in conſequence of ſuch Render, as aforeſaid, committed by him the ſaid Andrew Fletcher to Priſon, for and on account of the ſaid High-Treaſon, according to the Directions, and agreeable to the true Senſe, Intent, and Meaning, of the ſaid Act; and that he the ſaid John Murray hath, ever ſince his ſaid Render and Commitment, as aforeſaid, until now, remained and continued, and ſtill doth remain and continue, a cloſe Priſoner, upon the Account aforeſaid; and this he is ready to verify and prove, as the Court ſhall award: With this further, That, at the Time of his ſaid Render and Commitment, as aforeſaid, he the ſaid John Murray was, and ever ſince hath been, and yet is, willing and deſirous to take his Tryal, and ſubmit himſelf to Juſtice, purſuant to the Directions, and agreeable to the true Senſe, Intent, and Meaning of the ſaid Act.

Confeſſion of the Attorney General } AND the ſaid Sir Dudley Ryder, Knight, Attorney General of our ſaid preſent Sovereign Lord the King, who, for our ſaid preſent Sovereign Lord the King, in this behalf proſecuteth, having heard and conſidered the ſaid Plea of him the ſaid John Murray, by him now pleaded in Form aforeſaid, he the ſaid Attorney General for our ſaid preſent Sovereign Lord the King ſaith, That he doth not in any wiſe deny any of the Matters in the ſaid Plea alledged; but doth now here in Court, for and on behalf of our ſaid preſent Sovereign Lord the King, and by the ſpecial Order and Command of our ſaid preſent Sovereign Lord the King, admit and confeſs the ſame to be in all reſpects true: Whereupon it is conſidered and adjudged by the ſaid Court here, That the ſaid Plea of him the ſaid John Murray, for him ſo above pleaded, as aforeſaid, and alſo the ſaid Confeſſion of the ſaid Attorney General by him ſo made of the ſaid Plea, as aforeſaid, be recorded; and that he the ſaid John Murray be remanded to the ſaid Tower of London, under the Cuſtody of the ſaid Lieutenant, to be by him there kept in ſafe Cuſtody, until he ſhall be from thence diſcharged by due Courſe of Law.

Mr. Att. Gen.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Murray may now be sworn.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I desire Leave to falsify the Record, and to prove, by Witnesses, that Mr. Murray did not surrender himself within the Time prescribed by the Act of Parliament.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, what the noble Lord at the Bar now insists upon, is, that he shall be at Liberty to falsify the Record, by shewing, by Witnesses, that Mr. Murray did not surrender himself according to the Act of Parliament; but I must submit it to your Lordships, that there is no Ground whatsoever to admit the Prisoner to go into that Kind of Evidence; because this is a Record, which, according to the known Rules of Proceeding, cannot be falsified, since it is a Proof of a Thing transacted in a Court of Justice, before whom it was properly cognizable, and who alone, in this Part of the United Kingdom, could hear it, and had Power to record it; and I therefore must insist, that it is out of the Power of any Person whatsoever to contradict that Record.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, the Managers insist, that it appearing by Matter of Record, that Mr. Murray did surrender himself according to the Act of Parliament, that Matter cannot now be falsified.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I must beg, that, since it is a Point of Law, your Lordships will be pleased to hear my Counsel to it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, as to its being a Question of Law, whether the noble Lord at the Bar shall be at Liberty to produce Witnesses to falsify that Record; to be sure, my Lords, it is a Question of Law, because it cannot be said to be a Question of Fact; but it does not follow as a Consequence, because the noble Lord at the Bar says, that he has a Point of Law to submit to your Lordship, that therefore your Lordships should permit his Counsel to argue it: For it is still in your Lordships Judgment, whether you have any Doubt concerning it; and it is apprehended, that this is too plain a Case to admit of any Doubt with your Lordships; and therefore that you will not permit Counsel to argue it, as the Consequence can only be Delay; and an Indulgence of this Kind, in Matters of no Doubt, would put it in the Power of a Prisoner to protract his Tryal, and keep your Lordships sitting as long as he pleased.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, I beg Leave to have it clearly understood, what it is that the noble Lord at the Bar insists upon; whether it be to prove, by Witnesses, that Mr. Murray was not in Custody within the Time prescribed by this Act of Parliament; or that Mr. Murray did not surrender himself, and submit to Justice within that Time.

Lord Lovat. I put it upon that strict Word, that he did not surrender himself.

L. H. S. Lord Lovat, does your Lordship desire to be heard by your Counsel to that Point?

Lord Lovat. Yes.

Mr. Forrester. My Lords, it would ill become me, in the Station of Counsel for the noble Lord at the Bar, to decline arguing any Point which he thinks may be of Service to him. The Question now made by the noble Lord is singly this, Whether he shall be at Liberty to adduce Witnesses, viva voce, to falsify the Contents of this Record? that is, to prove that Mr. Murray did not surrender himself within the Time prescribed by the Act; which being closely connected to the former Objection, I can at present, and until I have Time to consider the Question, do little else but what would be extremely indecent in me, repeat a great Part of what I troubled your Lordships with in the Morning, and which is now over-ruled. But, my Lords, the debating this Point may lead to the Consideration of another, and indeed a very material one; which is, Whether Evidence of his being taken Prisoner by the King's Forces will make it a Surrender within the legal Construction of the Act of Parliament, so as to warrant his Plea, and the Attorney General's Confession contained in the Record? And this I shall, in Point of Law, beg Leave to deny, upon the Authority of Lord Duffus's Case, and several other Cases. Your Lordships are to determine, whether we shall be heard to these Points or not: But, if I am at Liberty to speak to them, as they are both Questions of great Difficulty, I must beg some further Time for preparing myself, and laying my Thoughts together; since, at this Hour of the Night, and unprepared as I am, it is impossible to argue them so fully as my Duty requires, as the noble Lord has a Right to expect from me, and as your Lordships have a Right to expect Matters to be debated at your Bar.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I am so very weak and infirm, and have been obliged, in order to attend in Obedience to your Lordships Commands, for two Days together, to be up by Three o'Clock in the Morning; I must therefore beg, that your Lordships will indulge me with a later Hour, and some Respite; otherwise I shall die at your Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, I did apprehend, from what the noble Lord at the Bar said, that the Point he wanted to submit to your Lordships was, Whether he should not be at Liberty to bring Witnesses to prove, that Mr. Murray did not surrender himself within the Meaning of the Act? But something has dropt since from the Prisoner's Counsel, as if they meant to shew, that Mr. Murray did not, in Fact, surrender, but was taken Prisoner before the Time given by the Act to surrender; and that this would not, in Point of Law, be a Surrender within the Act. My Lords, that is a Question totally different from the former. It is one Question, Whether he may be admitted to prove, that he did not surrender according to the Act of Parliament? and another, What would be the legal Effect of his being apprehended previous to the Time appointed? They are two intirely distinct Questions; and whether they shall be admitted to argue the former, is now for your Lordships Consideration; but as to the latter, it is a Matter subsequent, and not now to be considered.

Then the Duke of Newcastle moved to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament; and the Lord High Steward went back to his Chair; and the House was adjourned accordingly.

The Lords and others went back in the same Order as before; and the House being resumed in the Chamber of Parliament, after Debate,

Ordered, That this House will proceed further in the Tryal of the said Lord Lovat To-morrow at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon: And

A Message was sent to the House of Commons, by Mr. Elde and Mr. Thurston, to acquaint them therewith.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do take back the said Lord Lovat, and bring him again to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon To-morrow.

Wednesday, the 11*th of* March, 1746.

The Third Day.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon the Lords and others came from the Chamber of Parliament, in the same Order as on Monday last, into Westminster-Hall; where the Commons, and their Managers, were in the Seats prepared for them respectively, as before: And the Lords took their Places in the Court, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

Lord High Steward. The House is resumed. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, and afterwards the following Proclamation:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Prisoner Simon Lord Lovat to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords to you directed.

The Deputy Governor of the Tower brought the Prisoner to the Bar, in the like Manner as before: and then he kneeled down.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship may rise.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, your Lordship thought fit Yesterday to insist upon it, that, notwithstanding the Record, produced by the Managers for the House of Commons, of Mr. John Murray of Broughton's having surrendered himself within the Time, and according to the Terms prescribed by an Act of Parliament made in the 19th Year of his Majesty's Reign, your Lordship should be permitted to give Evidence, by Witnesses viva voce, that Mr. Murray did not surrender himself within the Time prescribed by that Act. To this Kind of Evidence the Managers for the House of Commons objected, because, as they alledged, it was giving Evidence to contradict a Fact which was verified by a Record of the highest Nature; and that therefore you should not be permitted to enter into such Proof: Whereupon you desired, that your Counsel might be heard to that Matter, as a Point or Question of Law. Against this the Managers thought fit to object, that it was no Doubt or Question of Law at all; that the Law of the Land was full, and clear, and settled in this Point; and that therefore your Lordship ought not to be heard by your Counsel to it. The House has taken all these Matters into Consideration, in the Chamber of Parliament; and hath come to the following Resolution, with which they have directed me to acquaint you; and it is this, That the Counsel for the Lord Lovat be not permitted to argue, that Parol Evidence should be received to prove, that John Murray of Broughton did not surrender himself according to the Act made in thelast Session of Parliament in that behalf, in Contradiction to the Record of the Court of King's-Bench, produced by the Managers for the Commons.

The Lord High Steward asked Leave to go down to the Table: Which was done.

Lord High Steward. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, you may proceed.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, we now desire that Mr. Murray of Broughton may be sworn.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I did object against Mr. Murray's being examined as a Witness: Your Lordships have been pleased to over-rule that Objection, and I now submit, that Mr. Murray may be examined, if you please.

John Murray called in, and sworn.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I desire to ask Mr. Murray some Questions for the sake of forming my own Judgment in the Matter; but if it is improper that they should be asked, I submit it to your Lordships.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, the ordinary Method of proceeding in these Cases is, that where a Witness is produced, he is to be sworn in Chief, unless there be some Objection to his Competency; and then he is to be sworn upon a Voire Dire. After he is sworn in Chief, the Party, who produces him, asks him such Questions as he thinks proper; after which the other Party is at Liberty to cross-examine him either to the Matter of Fact concerning which he has been examined, or any other Matter whatsoever, that shall tend to impeach his Credit, or weaken his Testimony; provided the Questions that are asked him, are such as the Law allows: So in this Court, after the Managers have produced any Witness, and have finished their Examination of him, the Prisoner has Liberty to ask him whatever Questions are proper; and it is most regular, that, after both Sides have gone through with their Examinations of the Witness, any of your Lordships should ask him what Questions you shall judge proper.

Mr. Noel. Mr. Murray, you will be pleased to attend to the Questions that shall be asked you. Give your Answers distinctly, and raise your Voice as much as you can, that my Lords may hear you.---My Lords, the first Thing I desire of this Witness is, that he may give your Lordships an Account when was the first Time that he heard of any Invitation to the Son of the Pretender to come into Scotland, and from whom he heard it.

Mr. Murray. My Lords, to the best of my Remembrance, in the Month of February, 1741-2, when I was at Edinburgh, I had there Occasion to see my Lord Traquair, who told me that there were several Gentlemen, to the best of my Memory, the Prisoner at your Lordship's Bar, my Lord Perth, my Lord John Drummond, Sir James Campbell of Achenbreck, and Mr. John Stuart Brother to Lord Traquair, had employed one Drummond of Bochaldie to go from Scotland to Rome, to assure the Pretender of their Zeal for his Service; and that they would be ready and willing, as soon as sufficient Assistance could be had from France, to appear publickly in Arms for him: And, at the same Time, he said, that he had given Drummond a Memorial signed by those Persons, I think

Seven

Seven of them in Number, to Cardinal Fleury, expreſſing their Attachment to the Pretender, and deſiring him to procure Aſſiſtance from the Court of France; and at the ſame Time this Drummond carried with him a Liſt of all the People, that, by thoſe Gentlemen, were ſuppoſed to be ready and willing to join in the Pretender's Service.

Lord Lovat, interrupting,

MY Lords, Your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to conſider, that what this Gentleman ſays, is only Hearſay Evidence, which ſhould not be admitted before your Lordſhips, as it gives you a bad Impreſſion of a Man. I am now trying for my Life and Fortune, and hope your Lordſhips will conſider it.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, I am ſo far from differing from the noble Lord at the Bar in this reſpect, that I did underſtand the Witneſs was ſpeaking only what he had heard from my Lord Traquair.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, the Managers do know and deſire, that your Lordſhips will diſtinguiſh between Evidence that does, and Evidence that does not affect the Priſoner at the Bar. The Witneſs was giving an Account by way of Introduction; which will be material for your Lordſhips Conſideration. I beg leave to ſay, it is impoſſible for a Witneſs, in his giving an Account of a Tranſaction, to ſpeak nothing but Words that alone will affect the Priſoner; and therefore This, though it does not affect the Priſoner, may be proper to introduce That, which he has to ſay, that may affect him. What he now ſays, is only giving an Account of a Plot or Conſpiracy entered into by ſeveral Perſons, which did afterwards bring on the Rebellion.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, The Managers do admit, that what has been hitherto ſaid by the Witneſs under Examination does not affect you; and they deſire now to offer it only as Evidence of a Conſpiracy in general, which, if they do not apply to your Lordſhip by particular Evidence, will not affect you.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, As I ſaid before, it gives a bad Impreſſion.

Lord Coke. My Lords, I apprehend, that we are right in going into this Kind of Evidence; becauſe, in the Preamble to our Articles of Impeachment, we ſet forth the general Conſpiracy.

Mr. Sollicitor General. My Lords, What has hitherto been ſaid, is not Evidence againſt the noble Lord at the Bar; and God forbid that he ſhould be affected by any thing that is not ſtrictly Evidence againſt him! And therefore it is fit, that the View with which the Evidence is offered ſhould be fully underſtood. The Preamble to the Articles of Impeachment aſſerts, That, ever ſince the Breaking out of the War, and particularly in 1743, many Perſons have plotted and conſpired with the Enemy, to procure an Invaſion of this Kingdom by a Foreign Force, and to raiſe a Rebellion at Home. The firſt Article charges Lord Lovat to have been one of thoſe Conſpirators. It is neceſſary, therefore, by general Evidence, to ſhew, that there have been ſuch Plots and Conſpiracies as the Commons aſſert, and then to affect the noble Lord at the Bar, by proper Evidence, with being concerned in thoſe Plots. This Method of Proceeding is not new, but the eſtabliſhed Courſe. Upon the Impeachment of the Lord Viſcount Stafford, a general Evidence was given of the Conſpiracy, which was declared not to affect him, but as introductory only. The like was done upon the Trials at Law of the Perſons accuſed of having been in the ſame Plot. The ſame Method was allowed as proper, and liable to no juſt Objection, in many Trials after the Revolution. In the Reign of the late King, upon the Trial of Layer, the like Method was purſued: General Evidence was given of a Plot which did not directly affect him. I dare anſwer for the Gentlemen who manage this Proſecution, that no one of us will urge againſt the noble Lord any thing which is not brought home to him by ſtrict and legal Proof: If we ſhould, he is ſafe in your Lordſhips Judgment, which will diſtinguiſh general from particular Evidence.

Then the Witneſs was directed to go on with his Narrative.

Mr. Murray. My Lords, I mentioned to your Lordſhips, That at the ſame Time that Drummond went over to Paris, he carried with him a Liſt of all the Gentlemen in Scotland, who, it was ſuppoſed by thoſe who ſigned this Memorial, were ready and willing to join them: But this Liſt I take rather to be a general Liſt of the Highlands of Scotland; nor do I imagine there could be any Reaſon to think, that the great Number of People there mentioned, could appear in Favour of the Pretender. My Lord Traquair, at the Time of his informing me of this, told me, that Drummond was then in Edinburgh; and propoſed, that I ſhould have a Meeting with him. Accordingly, I had a Meeting with him; and he repeated to me much the ſame thing that I have repeated to your Lordſhips: Said he had been extremely well received by the Cardinal, to whom he had delivered the Memorial given him at Edinburgh: That he expreſſed much Satisfaction, and was very ſanguine, and had the Pretender's Intereſt very much at Heart; and that, provided he could get ſufficient Aſſiſtance and Aſſurance from thoſe who are called the Pretender's Friends in England, that then he would ſend over the Troops required; the Number was 3000 Men, to be landed in Scotland; 1500 at or near Inverneſs, ſo as immediately to join with the Clan of the Fraſers; the other 1500 were to be landed in the Weſt-Coaſt, near Cameron's of Lochiel, who was to take the Command of them upon him, and to raiſe the People of Argyleſhire: At the ſame Time, a Body of Ten or Twelve Thouſand Men were to be landed as near London as they poſſibly could.---That at the ſame Time Drummond was in Edinburgh, he ſent for Cameron; and when they met, he repeated what had paſt, and the Succeſs he had at Rome and Paris; and aſſured them, that provided he could have Aſſiſtance in England, the Scheme might be put in Execution in Autumn following. After a Week's Stay in Edinburgh, Drummond went to London. I do not remember to have heard any thing more concerning this Matter till the Auguſt following. This was, to the beſt of my Memory, the End of March, or Beginning of April, that he left Edinburgh.

Lord High Steward. What Year was it in?

J. Murray. 1742. We call it ſo in Edinburgh.

Lord High Steward. You begin the Year in Scotland on the 1ſt of January?

J. Murray. Yes.

My Lords, in the Autumn following, when I was at my Lord Traquair's Houſe in the Country, he told me he underſtood by Drummond, that Cardinal Fleury propoſed ſending a Body of Swediſh Troops into Scotland, thinking they might be more agreeable to the People there, as they were Proteſtants, than French or Iriſh Brigades would be: But, at the ſame Time, ſaid, he thought it would be neceſſary that a Perſon ſhould be ſent from Scotland, to be deputed to ſollicit thoſe Troops from Sweden, in Conjunction with the Perſon whom the Cardinal ſhould employ. My Lord Traquair thought that I ſhould go on that Account: But I think it was rather Drummond's than my Lord Traquair's Propoſition.

Lord High Steward. When was this?

J. Murray. In Auguſt 1742. I refuſed to comply with this. From which Time I do not remember to have heard any thing for Six Months; and, about that Time, my Lord Traquair and Cameron of Lochiel, at Cameron's Houſe, did ſhew me a Letter written by Drummond from Paris; wherein he ſaid, That upon his Return to France, he had repreſented the thing to the Cardinal in ſuch a Light as engaged him to promiſe, that in a ſhort Time he would land the Troops in Scotland, as propoſed. There were ſeveral other Circumſtances in the Letter, which I cannot now remember: So far I can ſay, that Letter, in general, when it was read to me, ſeemed very extraordinary, to think, that an Affair of ſuch Conſequence as the invading theſe Kingdoms, and raiſing a Civil War in the Country, was to be undertaken by a few People, and by ſuch kind of Management. I ſaid, I apprehended it was a Scheme of Drummond's, to keep up a Spirit of Party in this Country, and to make himſelf uſeful to the Gentlemen who employed him; and that there was no ſuch thing intended by Cardinal Fleury. My Lord Traquair determined, that it was then neceſſary to know the real State of the Caſe; and he deſired I would go to Paris for that Purpoſe. I at firſt did not comply with it; I did not care to execute it; nor did I agree to it till ſeveral Weeks afterwards: I was then coming to London; and in January I came up; but, upon the Road, I underſtood that Cardinal Fleury was dead.

Lord High Steward. When was this?

J. Murray. In January 1743, by the Scotch Stile. I ſtaid ſome ſhort Time in London; and from thence I went over privately to Paris; and, by means of one Mac Donald the Banker, I found out Drummond: He carried me that Evening to one Mr. Semple, who is there called my Lord Semple; and was the Perſon employed by the Pretender to manage his Affairs in France: They both joined in lamenting the Death of the Cardinal; and ſaid, That, had he lived, in all Probability the Scheme would have been executed that Spring; that the Reaſon why it was not, was owing to the Marſhal Mallebois having Orders from France to march his Army towards Hanover, inſtead of the Coaſt of Flanders, as the Cardinal intended; but that the Cardinal had been ſo extremely ſanguine in the Pretender's Intereſt, that he had given all his Papers, Memorials, and the like, to M. Amelot, the then Secretary for Foreign Affairs. I propoſed to ſee M. Amelot; and accordingly I went to Verſailles, where I ſtayed Two or Three Weeks. I was firſt preſented by Drummond to Semple; and had an Audience of M. Amelot, whom I told I had been ſent from Scotland, by the Perſons who had ſigned the Memorial which I mentioned to your Lordſhips, and who were concerned in it, to know whether the King of France, his Maſter, was willing to put the Scheme in Execution. He told me, that Mr. Semple had acquainted him with the Reaſon of my coming: And thereupon he went to the King of France, and told him of it; and upon that I deſired to know what Anſwer he had from the King of France. The Anſwer he gave me was, That the King told him, that I might aſſure thoſe Gentlemen, that he had the Intereſt of their Maſter as much at Heart as they; and that, as ſoon as he had an Opportunity, he would put the Scheme they propoſed in Execution. With this Anſwer I returned to Paris, where I only ſtayed Two Nights. At firſt, I obſerved, that M. Amelot ſeemed very deſirous to have ſuch Aſſurances from England as the Cardinal had required; and he applied to Drummond and Semple on that Head. When I left Paris, Mr. Drummond determined to come over. I ſet out from Paris, and came privately to London. The Reaſon of Mr. Drummond's coming over, was to collect thoſe Aſſurances which had been expected from England.

Lord High Steward. What Time was this?

J. Murray. It muſt have been the End of March, or Beginning of April.

L. H. S. In what Year was it?

J. Murray. In 1743.

I ſtaid but a few Days in London after my Return; and Mr. Drummond deſired me, that as ſoon as I arrived in Scotland, I would acquaint my Lord Traquair of his being come to London, and the Reaſon of it; and deſired, that he would come and aſſiſt in procuring the Aſſurances from the Pretender's Friends. Upon my Return to Edinburgh, I ſtopt at York, where I met with the late Lord Perth, who then was at York; and I acquainted him with what had been done; who ſeemed extremely diſſatisfied at it. I ſoon afterwards came to Edinburgh; and ſoon after my Arrival there, I met Lord Traquair, whom I acquainted with Drummond's being come over; and that he deſired his Lordſhip to go to London to aſſiſt him in his intended Purpoſe. His Lordſhip went with that Intent (as he ſaid) in about two Weeks after, about the Beginning of April, to the beſt of my Remembrance. On Lord Traquair's Return to Scotland, in Autumn, he acquainted me, That he had ſeveral Meetings with Drummond; and that he had endeavoured to get as many Aſſurances as he could from the Pretender's Friends, at leaſt ſuch as he thought ſo: The Perſons he named were Lord Barrymore, Sir John Hinde Cotton, and Sir Watkin Williams Wynne: That he had ſeveral Meetings with theſe ſeveral Perſons; and that Sir John Hinde Cotton ſeemed extremely ſhy, and unwilling to converſe or meet on the Pretender's Affairs; and none of them were willing to give any ſuch Aſſurances under their Hands and Seals as were given by the Seven in Scotland. The ſame Summer one Butler was ſent from France, to know the State of the Jacobite Party in England.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I object to the Witneſs's proceeding to give Evidence

Evidence which does not relate to the Point in Queſtion: He has mentioned the Names of ſeveral Honourable Gentlemen, on a very extraordinary Occaſion, which does not at all relate to the Trial of the Noble Lord at the Bar: He is calumniating the Characters of ſeveral Gentlemen, who are my worthy Friends: And therefore, if it is inſiſted that he ſhould proceed, I think it will be worth our while to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament, to conſider how far it ſhall be permitted.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, you hear what is ſaid by the Noble Lord. It is objected, that the Witneſs is going on to give Evidence of a Fact not relating to the Noble Lord at the Bar, but to other Perſons; and that this is an improper Kind of Evidence, and ought not to be given.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, we did not examine the Witneſs to thoſe particular Facts which he has mentioned, that do not relate to the Noble Lord at the Bar; but in giving an Account of the Facts inquired into, he has himſelf entered into that Kind of Narrative; but as it is only what he heard my Lord Traquair ſay concerning other particular Perſons, we do not inſiſt on his proceeding in his Hearſay Account of what concerns thoſe Gentlemen.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, what the Witneſs has dropt in reſpect of the Honourable Gentlemen he has named, does not affect them at all. It is nothing more than a Relation which he had from my Lord Traquair, and not from any Matter ariſing within his own Knowledge. And, my Lords, I may venture to aſſure your Lordſhips, for myſelf and all the Gentlemen concerned in this Proſecution, that we will not aſk the Name of one Perſon immaterial to the preſent Trial: And therefore I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, whether the Witneſs ſhould not be ſuffered now to go on; and that for the future, when he comes to any Tranſaction of that Kind, he ſhould not name any Perſons till he comes to the Noble Lord at the Bar.

L. H. S. Your Lordſhips hear what is mentioned by the Managers, that they agree that the Witneſs, in mentioning theſe Tranſactions in general, ſhould not name any Perſons, till he comes to the Noble Lord at the Bar.

J. Murray. I was directed, that when I came to be examined here, I was to give a Narrative of the Springs, the Riſe and Progreſs of the late Rebellion, as well as what related to the Noble Lord at the Bar; but if I have committed an Error, I readily ſubmit to your Lordſhips Correction.

Earl of Cholmondeley. As the Witneſs ſays he was directed to give a Narrative, with regard to the whole Riſe and Progreſs of the Rebellion, I beg he may be aſked by whom he was directed?

L. H. S. My Lords, I did not at this Diſtance hear the Witneſs uſe the Word directed; but underſtood him only, that he was brought here to give an Account of the Riſe and Progreſs of the Rebellion. Poſſibly it might eſcape me.

Earl of Cheſterfield. I did not hear the Word directed; but I ſhould be glad to have it cleared up.

L. H. S. Mr. Murray, when you ſpoke laſt of your giving a Narrative of the Riſe and Progreſs of the Rebellion, did you make Uſe of the Word directed, or not?

J. Murray. My Lords, this is the firſt Time I ever ſpoke in Publick; I may have committed an Error; I cannot ſay whether I made uſe of the Word directed, or no.

Earl of Cholmondeley. My Lords, I had no other Intention in the Queſtion, but to know the Meaning of the Perſon who ſpoke the Words; whether he apprehended that the general Queſtion, aſked him by the Managers, was a Direction to him, and whether that was what he meant?

J. Murray. My Lords, ſome Days after my Examination in the Tower, by the Honourable Committee of the Houſe of Commons, a Gentleman, who I believed was their Secretary, came to me to take a further Examination; and to aſk me as to any other Matter that had occurred ſince my laſt Examination: Some Days after that, he told me, that I ſhould be called here before your Lordſhips, upon the Trial of my Lord Lovat; and that at the ſame time, it would be expected that I ſhould give an Account of the Riſe and Progreſs of the Rebellion in general.

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, now the Witneſs at the Bar has explained what he meant by the Word directed, I hope your Lordſhips will have no ill Impreſſion of the Managers, from any thing that may have dropped from the Evidence. And, my Lords, I beg Leave to aſſert, that no Direction has been given to Mr. Murray by the Managers; and that they neither have given, or will give, any Direction to any Witneſs whatſoever. My Lords, we well know, that it does not become us to do any thing of that Kind; nor have we done it: So far from it, that when we firſt examined the Witneſs at the Bar, we examined him ſolely to the Point of the Conduct of the Noble Lord at the Bar. My Lords, we did afterwards determine among ourſelves, that as it was our Duty to lay before your Lordſhips that Conſpiracy wherein the Noble Lord at the Bar appeared to have acted a Part; we did therefore give Mr. Murray Notice, that he would be examined before your Lordſhips to that Point. My Lords, we never had any Information from him on that Subject; and this is the firſt Time I ever heard him give an Account of this general Conſpiracy. My Lords, we were ſo careful in our Examination of the Witneſs in the Committee, that I well remember the Queſtion's being aſked him by the worthy Manager who ſits near me; and it was in the moſt general Terms that we could conceive, in order to let your Lordſhips into the Knowledge of this Matter. And your Lordſhips will obſerve, through the whole Courſe of this Proceeding, that the utmoſt Candour will be made uſe of by the Managers, in their Examination of the Witneſſes; and that they will put no leading Queſtions to them but general Queſtions, and ſuch as they are to anſwer upon Oath, and according to the Truth.

Earl of Cholmondeley. My Lords, I beg Leave to ſay, that I did not conceive that the Managers, in their Examination of Witneſſes, made uſe of the leaſt Direction or Authority whatſoever. I have the greateſt Senſe of their Candour and Fairneſs; it is my Opinion of them, and of the whole Body by whom they are deputed; and it was upon that Principle I propoſed my Queſtion to the Witneſs.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I pray that the Witneſs may be aſked; Whether he is, upon this Occaſion, a voluntary or an involuntary Evidence?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, the Managers are now proſecuting for the whole Commons of Great-Britain; they are proſecuting upon the Foundation of Evidence, for a Treaſon of the greateſt Magnitude; there is now a Witneſs at your Lordſhips Bar, whom they are examining to prove that Treaſon; and, while they are ſo, I hope they ſhall not be interrupted. There is no Doubt, but when they have done with the Examination of the Witneſs, if any Lord thinks proper to aſk him any Queſtions, your Lordſhips have a Right to do it: But we are now examining the Witneſs on behalf of the Proſecution; and we hope we ſhall have Liberty to go through with it; and then your Lordſhips will permit him to be examined by any body elſe: But, my Lords, at preſent we are in Poſſeſſion of the Witneſs; and we beg we may have Liberty to go on.

Earl Stanhope. My Lords, I beg the Queſtion propoſed may be aſked; or that we may adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

L. H. S. My Lords, the Rule for the Examination of Witneſſes in this Court, in either Houſe of Parliament, and every where elſe, is, that if a Witneſs is produced by a Proſecutor, or Plaintiff, they have a Right to examine him firſt: But if any Objection is made to the Queſtions aſked by the Proſecutors, whether they are Managers of the Houſe of Commons upon an Impeachment, or Counſel upon an Indictment, the Objection is firſt to be conſidered; and if the Objection prevails, and is allowed, then the Queſtion is not to be aſked: But all Queſtions that are aſked, whether touching the Matter of Fact to be tried, or the Credibility of the Witneſs, are to be aſked at the proper Time. The Party who produces the Witneſs has a Right to go through the Examination firſt; and then the other Side croſs-examines him; and after that is over, the Judge aſks him ſuch Queſtions as he thinks proper, unleſs, as I ſaid before, there be any Objection to the Queſtions; or any doubtful Matter ariſes that wants immediately to be cleared up. The ſame Method is to be obſerved here; and the Reaſon of it, my Lords, is, that unleſs your Lordſhips obſerve this Method, you will be in perpetual Confuſion.

Earl Stanhope. My Lords, the Queſtion now propoſed, aroſe from an Expreſſion that juſt now dropped from the Witneſs.

The Witneſs proceeded in his Evidence.

J. Murray. My Lords, this Butler, whom I mentioned to your Lordſhips, was for ſome time in England during that Summer that my Lord Traquair was in London; when, to cover his Intention, he bought up a Number of Horſes for the King of France's Uſe, and expreſſed himſelf ſo well pleaſed with the Encouragement he had from the Pretender's Friends in England, that he ſaid, that, as ſoon as he went over, he would repreſent it in ſuch a Light to the King of France, his Maſter, as he imagined, would induce him to ſend the Succours deſired. Upon his Return to Verſailles, where Drummond went with him, Drummond went to Rome, as he ſaid, at the Deſire of the French Court, to perſuade the Pretender to ſend his Son to France. Accordingly he did perſuade him to do it; but Drummond returned to France, before the Pretender's Son left Rome. After Drummond went to Paris, he came to London, to acquaint the Friends of the Pretender in England, that the King of France was determined to ſend over a Body of Troops in the Spring. This came to my Knowledge by two Letters from Drummond; the one written from Paris in December, and the other written from London. The firſt Letter he ſent over, was not forwarded in time to my Lord Traquair; but when Drummond returned, he found it lying here: He incloſed it in another Letter; and they both came to my Lord Traquair's Hands at Edinburgh. In the firſt Letter, he mentioned his intended Journey to Rome: In the ſecond, he mentioned his Return to Paris, and the Reaſon of his coming to London; and that he found the Pretender's Friends there very backward: That with Difficulty he had perſuaded them to agree to the French's Landing. In this Letter, there were a great many Contradictions and Abſurdities, in regard to the landing a Body of Troops in Scotland and England at the ſame Time. It particularly mentioned, that Earl Marſhall was to command the 3000 Men that were to come from Dunkirk to Scotland; and at the End of the ſame Letter he ſays, "But I do not know how my Lord Marſhall is to be equipped; which, with other Circumſtances, determined us to write a Letter to Drummond, to deſire him to explain himſelf." My Lord Perth, and my Lord Traquair, ſhewed me the Letter, and deſired I would prepare a Letter to Drummond, deſiring him to explain himſelf. Accordingly I wrote a Letter in their Preſence, which they both ſigned; and I believe, I cannot ſay poſitively, that I ſigned it myſelf. This Letter, as my Lord Traquair ſaid, was ſent to London, to be forwarded to Drummond at Paris; but the Perſon to whom the Letter was delivered in London, wrote to Drummond, and told him, That ſuch a Letter was in his Hands; and deſiring to know, whether he ſhould ſend it to him at Paris, or not; Drummond ſaid in Anſwer, That he ſhould not ſend the Letter, leſt it ſhould be intercepted; but deſired he would burn it.

Mr. Noel. What Time was this?

J. Murray. In the Month of January 1743.

Mr. Noel. According to what Stile?

J. Murray. It was in the Year 1743, not long before the intended Imbarkation at Dunkirk.

Mr. Noel. When was that?

J. Murray. To the beſt of my Memory, in 1743.

Mr. Noel. Be pleaſed to recollect the Time; becauſe it is very material.

J. Murray. It was about two Months before the intended Invaſion.

L. H. S. You may poſſibly recollect the Time from the other Circumſtances. Do you remember the Year of the Battle of Dettingen?

J. Murray. I believe it was in the Year 1743.

Mr. Noel. How long was this after the Battle of Dettingen that you ſpeak of? Or was it in the January before, or after the Battle?

J. Murray. I believe it was the January following.

Mr. Noel. It would be proper for you to recollect from theſe Circumſtances, if you can, whether it was in January 1743, or 1744, according to the Scotch Stile?

J. Murray. January 1744, by the Scotch Stile.

In Two Weeks after, there was another Letter came from Drummond, conſiſting of a few Lines only, wherein he ſaid, That, in all Probability, before that Letter came to hand, the Pretender's Son would be landed in England, with the Troops under the Command of Marſhal Saxe. From this time, to July following, ſo far as came to my Knowledge, there were no Accounts from Abroad. It was propoſed to me, as I had then an Intention that Summer of going to Flanders to ſee the Army, that I ſhould go the Length of Paris, to know in what Situation their Affairs then ſtood. The Firſt time I declined it; but was afterwards brought to agree to it, upon being ſhewed a Letter of Mr. Semple, wherein he made a Number of Excuſes for the intended Invaſion's not taking Effect; and deſired freſh Aſſurances from Scotland, and that Endeavours ſhould be uſed in England: Upon which I was preſſed to go. We then thought it extremely neceſſary that we ſhould know upon what Footing Things really were. I accordingly came to London, and from thence I went to the Army in Flanders, ſtaid only a few Days there, and then I went to Holland, and from thence, in a private Manner, to Paris. When I went to Paris, I was introduced to the Pretender's Son by Drummond and Semple. The Firſt time I ſaw him, ſo far as I can remember, there was nothing eſſential paſſed. I deſired to ſee him in private; which I accordingly did the next Day. My Deſign was to repreſent to him, that I thought the Perſons employed by him at Paris were impoſing upon him; and that they had no other Intention but to ſerve themſelves, to keep up the Spirits of the Party in Britain, and thereby make themſelves neceſſary to the Party. With this Intent, I explained the Letter wrote by Drummond, endeavoured to ſhew the Contradictions in it, and that Drummond endeavoured to ſerve himſelf, and not him. He ſaid at that time, he was determined to come to Scotland.

Mr. Noel. Who are you ſpeaking of?

J. Murray. The Pretender's Son. He mentioned the Aſſociation; and ſaid, He was determined to come into Scotland, and did not doubt but the King of France intended an Invaſion in the Spring; but that he was then preparing for it, and intended to execute it as ſoon as the Campaign was over; and that, if he did not do it before, he was determined to come into Scotland. I endeavoured to ſhew him, that the Undertaking was deſperate; and that he could not propoſe having above 4 or 5000 Men, ſuppoſing all the Friends he could expect, ſhould be ready to join him: And it was ſeen afterwards, that he had not ſo many. Notwithſtanding which, he inſiſted upon coming. I was ſo much againſt it, that I ſpoke to Sir Thomas Sheridan, a Perſon who lived with him for many Years, and told him of the Danger of ſuch an Attempt; and that it would be the Ruin of many Families, and the Deſtruction of the Country. Sir Thomas Sheridan ſaid, he would endeavour to perſuade him againſt it; and, upon his Arrival in Scotland, told me he had; but to no Purpoſe. After ſtaying a few Days in Paris, I returned to Scotland, where I gave an Account, not to all, but to ſome of the Perſons concerned in the Memorial, of what had paſſed; and every body, but my Lord Perth, declared againſt the Pretender's Son coming into Scotland: Upon which I wrote a Letter to him, repreſenting the Opinion of his Friends in Scotland, and ſetting forth the bad Conſequences of ſuch an Undertaking. This Letter I committed to the Care of a Gentleman who was going to London, in the Month of January 1745, Scotch Stile. This was neglected to be forwarded, and was returned to me in the Month of April following. I, notwithſtanding, endeavoured to forward that Letter ſeveral times; and there having been Occaſion to ſend from the Weſt of Scotland, by my Lord Perth's Means, the Packet was ſent to France; but could not arrive in time, before the Young Pretender ſet out. In June, I received a Letter from the Young Pretender, wherein he ſaid, he was fully reſolved and determined to come into Scotland; and that he was to ſet out in June, and propoſed to come to the Weſt of Scotland; and appointed Signals for his Landing. Upon the Receipt of this, I ſent it, by an Expreſs, to my Lord Perth; deſiring him to forward the Letter, or the Contents of it, to Cameron of Lochiel's Houſe, becauſe I began to reflect, that it would be neceſſary ſome Methods ſhould be taken to inform the Gentlemen in the Highlands, who were ſuppoſed to be ready, and to ſee if they approved of it. Upon that, I went to Cameron's Houſe of Lochiel; who told me, That he had ſent his Brother Doctor Cameron, with a Copy of that Letter, to the noble Lord at the Bar. Doctor Cameron returned the next Day, and ſaid he had accordingly gone to the noble Lord's Houſe; that he had told him he had Buſineſs of Conſequence to impart to him; and that he had taken his Promiſe to mention nothing of what was to paſs between them: Upon which, he ſhewed my Lord Lovat a Copy of the Letter. I cannot ſay theſe were the very expreſs Words; but it was to this Effect: Upon which, the noble Lord at the Bar declared, That it was a fooliſh and raſh Undertaking; and that he ſhould not land; and, if he did, that none of the Men would join him. And this is what Dr. Cameron told me. And it was the Opinion of all thoſe of the Highlands, that he ſhould not land, but return. They deſired I would write a Letter of the Opinion of thoſe Gentlemen to the Pretender, and of the bad Situation the Country lay under; and to deſire, as their utmoſt Wiſhes, that he would return to France; which Letter I did write: I wrote Two of them, and committed them to the Care of a Gentleman; and which Letters he received upon the Iſland.

Mr. Noel. Who received them?

J. Murray. The Pretender's Son. The Firſt Notice I had of his Landing was by an anonymous Letter that I received about a Week after. It did not ſay expreſly, that the Pretender was landed; but, by the Words of it, I judged it was ſo. I was deſired to come to the Houſe of Lord John Drummond: There I underſtood that he was landed; and, in a little Time after, joined him, at the Houſe of Mac Donald of upon the Weſt Coaſt. About Ten Days after that, he erected a Standard in a Place called Glengarie; where he was joined by the Camerons, the Mac Donalds of Keppoch, and a few of the Mac Donalds of With thoſe, he marched to the Houſe of Mac Donald of Glengarie. There was a Gentleman of the Name of Fraſer of Gortuleg, whom he there applied to, and the Laird of Lochiel, as being Perſons acquainted with the noble Lord at the Bar. Lochiel told me there was ſuch a Perſon there; that there were Two Commiſſions granted by the Old Pretender in favour of the noble Priſoner, which he deſired the Young Pretender to ſend. Accordingly, I aſked him for thoſe Commiſſions. He told they were in a Trunk, with other Papers, which he had left up the Country, by reaſon of the Approach of General Cope, who was then expected in the Country; but deſired, at the ſame time, that Mr. Kelley might write a Commiſſion; whether it was of Lieutenant-General, or no, I cannot ſay; but I ſaw the Commiſſion written by Mr. Kelley. I was alſo to make an Apology to my Lord Lovat, why the original Commiſſions had not been ſent. Whether I made the Apology verbally to Mr. Fraſer of Gortuleg, or whether I did it by Letter, I cannot ſay. I did not ſee it put into the Packet, or ſent; and I did not inquire whether he had received it, becauſe I did not doubt of the thing. After the Arrival of the Pretender's Son at Edinburgh, nothing material relating to the noble Lord at the Bar happened between the laſt Time I ſpoke of, and the Time of his Arrival there. Some time after the Battle of Preſton-Pans, Cameron of Lochiel came to me, and told me, That one Hugh Fraſer, who had been Clerk, or Servant in ſome Capacity, to my Lord at the Bar, but was then an Attorney at Edinburgh, he was a fit Perſon to ſend to my Lord Lovat, to deſire him to ſend out his Clan. I agreed that he ſhould go; and he had Inſtructions ſo to do. Whether I wrote to my Lord Lovat by Hugh Fraſer, or no, I cannot recollect; very probably I did; but cannot ſay politively I did. The next thing, in regard to the noble Lord at the Bar, that happened, was upon the Return of the Highland Army from Derby to Glaſgow. There this Hugh Fraſer came to Glaſgow; and this was the Firſt time I ever ſaw him after he left Edinburgh. He came at that time, as he ſaid, from Perth, and was ſent, by the Maſter of Lovat, to procure Arms for a few Men which he had under his Command, and to know where he ſhould join the Army. It was then propoſed to write to my Lord the Priſoner at the Bar, to endeavour to perſuade him to appear publickly in favour of the Pretender. This was agreed to, and the Letter was wrote by Cameron of Lochiel, and ſigned by him, Clunie Mac Pherſon, and myſelf. This Letter was delivered to Hugh Fraſer, with one that was wrote by the Pretender's Son himſelf, a Letter of Compliment. I do not remember that there was any Commiſſion, or any thing ſent, ſave theſe Two Letters, and a Letter which I wrote to the Maſter of Lovat, which was ſent by Hugh Fraſer. If there were any more ſent, it is more than I can remember. Hugh Fraſer at the ſame time aſked, if there had not been a Patent granted by the Old Pretender to create my Lord Lovat a Duke: To which Lochiel anſwered, That if there had been any ſuch granted, it was in the Hands of his Father John Cameron, who was then at Dumblain. It was for this Reaſon that I did not addreſs this Letter or Packet to my Lord Lovat; but left that to the Management of Hugh Fraſer, if he ſhould find the Patent creating my Lord Lovat a Duke, when he ſhould come to Dumblain. Hugh Fraſer, at the ſame time, anſwered, That my Lord Lovat had made a Propoſal, that Lord John Drummond (it was either he, or my Lord Strathallan, who then commanded at Perth, or perhaps both of them) ſhould march, with the Troops under his Command, to Inverneſs, and bring with him ſome more People of his own. The Propoſal, if it came from my Lord Lovat, as Hugh Fraſer ſaid it did, was a very judicious one; and my Lord Lovat muſt have deſired it to cover his Country from the Troops then under Lord Loudon's Command, as my Lord Lovat had left Inverneſs ſome little Time before that. And the next thing that occurs to me, with reſpect to the noble Lord at the Bar, is, that while I was at Inverneſs, I received a Letter from the Hands of Fraſer of Gortuleg. This, he ſaid, came from my Lord Lovat; but wrote to me ſeemingly in ſome Clerk's Hand. This Letter was produced; but, one Paragraph of it being very remarkable, I aſked Gortuleg the Meaning of it; and he ſaid, That my Lord Lovat was deſirous of having that Patent creating him a Duke, which he expected ſome time before. I ſaid, That I had no ſuch Patent; and told him, That he ought to put my Lord Lovat off from any ſuch Expectation.

Mr. Noel. You ſaid, That this Letter came to you at Inverneſs; pray when did it come to you?

J. Murray. It was in the End of February, or Beginning of March.

Mr. Noel. In what Year?

J. Murray. In the Year 1746.

Mr. Noel. According to the Scotch Stile?

J. Murray. Yes.

I had no Occaſion either to ſee or hear from the Lord at the Bar, from that time for ſome Weeks after the Battle of Culloden; and, when in Company with Lochiel, I was informed, that my Lord Lovat was in that Country, and that he lay at the Place called Glenmely; and there was a Boat ſent to bring Lord Lovat to the other Side of the Lake, where a Meeting had been propoſed by Lochiel. I believe that Meeting was accidental in regard to the noble Lord at the Bar, becauſe Lochiel expreſſed great Satisfaction, that they ſhould have Lord Lovat's Advice and Aſſiſtance. Another Reaſon which induced me to think ſo was, that Cameron ſent a Servant, with Two Horſes, to procure Wine and Spirits from Beaufort, Lord Lovat's Seat, there being neither in that Part of the Country. Cameron of Lochiel, with ſome others, and I, came to the Place where Lord Lovat was: He was then upon the Side of a Lake.

Mr. Noel. What is the Name of that Place?

J. Murray. I heard it is called Morell, or Morlaig; but whether that is the real Place, I cannot ſay.

The Firſt Night we were together, or rather the only Night that I was there, I do not remember that any thing material paſſed; but, in general, we told my Lord Lovat, that there was a Meeting to be the next Day; and that we ſhould be very proud of his Advice. Accordingly, the next Day there was a Meeting of about Twelve or Thirteen Gentlemen, where we did deſire the noble Priſoner at the Bar to give his Opinion. There were preſent Cameron of Lochiel, Barriſdale, John Roy Stewart, old Glenbuckett, Dr. Cameron, and a Nephew of Keppoch's, and ſome few others. I cannot particularly remember them all.

Mr. Noel. You have not ſaid whether the noble Lord at the Bar was there?

J. Murray. Yes: He was at that Meeting.

Mr. Noel. Did you ſee him there?

J. Murray.

J. Murray Yes. I propoſed in that Meeting, that my Lord Lovat ſhould give his Opinion. My Lord Lovat ſaid, That, in his Opinion, the only thing for the Gentlemen there to do, was, to raiſe a competent Number of Men to protect their Country, Families, and Cattle, and endeavour to defend themſelves.

Mr. Noel. To protect their Country! from what?

J. Mur. To protect or defend their Country from the King's Forces, who were then at Inverneſs: There were no other Forces. The Number of Men then propoſed to be raiſed was 3000, or 3500; a compact Body, whom it was eaſy to find Proviſions for. This Propoſal was agreed upon; and the particular Number of Men that each Gentleman ſhould bring was agreed upon. Among the others, the Clan of the Fraſers was named for 400, to be commanded by the Maſter of Lovat: But my Lord Lovat himſelf would not anſwer for his Son; but required Lochiel to anſwer for him. My Lord Lovat ſaid, That he was an old Man, and not able to do any thing himſelf; and that he would not anſwer for his Son's Abilities; but deſired they would let Lochiel anſwer for him; and that he did not doubt but he would do it. Lochiel accordingly anſwered for him. There was a Sum of Money diſtributed there, and, I think, about Seventy Louidors given to the Servant of my Lord Lovat, to carry to his Son, as Ten Days Pay for the 400 Men which he was to bring out.

Mr. Noel. Was my Lord Lovat preſent, or not, at the Time you ſpeak of, when that Money was given to his Servant?

J. Mur. I cannot ſay poſitively whether my Lord Lovat ſaw the Servant get the Money; but it was diſtributed by a Perſon who was my Clerk; and my Lord Lovat was at the other End of the Room.

Mr. Noel. Was it in the ſame Room?

J. Mur. Yes: My Lord Lovat was in the ſame Room that the Money was diſtributed in. There were ſeveral Perſons there, to whom Money was paid.

Mr. Noel. Can you name the Servant who received it for Lord Lovat?

J. Mur. No: I think he was called the Steward of my Lord Lovat.

Mr. Noel. From whence came the Money?

J. Mur. From France.

Mr. Noel. What was the Sum that came from France?

J. Mur. Thirty-five thouſand Louidors at that time.

Proclamation was made for Silence.

After this Meeting was over, ſo far as I can remember, I, with Lochiel, croſſed over to the oppoſite Side of the Lake; and my Lord Lovat, as I underſtood, and he himſelf propoſed, remained there all that Night. Four or Five Days after, I had Occaſion to be at a Place called Glendeſherrie, when my Lord Lovat was on the oppoſite Side, at a Houſe formerly belonging to the Brother of Lochiel. I went there to my Lord Lovat the next Day, with no Intention to ſpeak to him of Buſineſs; but upon ſeeing his Servant, to whom the Money was given, I aſked him, when he intended to ſend the Servant away with it? He ſaid, he ſhould go that Day; or the next; and then called a Perſon who was called his Secretary; and deſired him to write a Letter to the Maſter of Lovat, in my Name: But what were the Contents of the Letter, or that I ſaw it, I cannot remember; but I took it in general, that the Contents of the Letter were to give the Maſter of Lovat the Reaſon why the Money was ſent. I did not then ſtay above an Hour or Two with my Lord Lovat, but returned to Lochiel. What was agreed upon at the Meeting, and propoſed to be done, did not take Effect ſo ſoon as was expected; neither indeed was there above Four or Five hundred Men in the Whole, that met, about Ten Days after the Time firſt propoſed; that Handful of Men were Two Days at Lochiel's Houſe before the King's Troops marched Northwards, in Purſuit of them: Upon Intelligence that the King's Troops were on their March, Two Men were ordered out, to ſee what Number of Men there were; and if we could make any Head: They ſaw a great Number of Men; upon which we retired to the Head of the Lake; when it was determined, that we ſhould diſperſe, and every one do the beſt he could for himſelf. From thence I went into the Country that belongs to the Clan Ronald, where I received a few Lines by a young Man, who ſaid he was Servant to my Lord at the Bar; wherein he ſaid, It was neceſſary for him to have a Watch or Guard to attend him, of Twenty-two Men, and a Lieutenant; and deſired, that I might ſend him Money, to pay thoſe Men Twenty Days Pay, I think it was. I do not remember, that I wrote any Anſwer to this Letter, becauſe I had no Pen, Ink, or Paper; but I gave the Servant Fifteen Louidors, having then not much Money; and deſired him to give it to my Lord Lovat. After that I had a Meſſage from the noble Lord at the Bar, by one Biſhop Mac Donald, deſiring, that I would ſee him before I left the Country; but ſo far as I remember, it was nothing farther than Compliments. Since that Time till Yeſterday, I never had the Honour to ſee the noble Lord at the Bar, nor had any Letters from him, nor correſponded with him.

Mr. Noel. Were the Fifteen Louidors that you ſent to my Lord Lovat, Part of the French Money that was landed there?

J. Mur. Yes, it was Part of the French Money.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, He has told your Lordſhips already, that the Men that were to be raiſed were to defend the Country againſt the King's Forces: Now I beg to know, whether it was mentioned at that Meeting, where theſe Men were to march, or where to rendezvous?

J. Mur. It was propoſed, that the general Rendezvous ſhould be near the Houſe of Keppoch. Lochiel's People, Bariſdale, and Clanronald's, were to have rendezvouſed upon the Lake, about two Miles above Lochiel's Houſe, and then to proceed to the general Rendezvous, by Lochiel's.

Mr. Attorney General. Pray, had you any blank Letters from the Young Pretender, after he came to England; or that were ſent to you?

J. Mur. I had Letters that were ſent to me, and were not directed, but left with me, to deliver to ſuch Perſons as I thought willing to ſupport the Cauſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Pleaſe to give an Account to my Lords, what thoſe Letters were, and the Import of them.

J. Mur. I do not remember the exact Number of Letters, but I did receive a Number of Letters; they were not directed, but left to be directed to ſuch People in Scotland as were thought the beſt Friends to the Pretender, and proper to cultivate a Party for him in the Country.

Mr. At. Gen. Pleaſe to give an Account to my Lords, at what Time theſe Letters were delivered to you, and by whom.

J. Mur. There were ſome of the Letters, either Two or Three of them, that I brought with me from Paris; and the others were ſent to me; but who delivered them to me, I cannot particularly remember.

Mr. At. Gen. Pleaſe to mention to my Lords, who delivered you the Letters you received at Paris.

J. Mur. The Young Pretender himſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. What were the Directions he gave then?

J. Mur. There was a Credential attached to every Letter; and they were to be delivered to ſuch Perſons as were diſpoſed to promote his Intereſt in the Country.

Mr. At. Gen. And what was the Meaning of the Credential? Was it ſigned by the Young Pretender, or by any body?

J. Mur. Yes, by him.

Mr. At. Gen. Pleaſe to give an Account to my Lords, to whom you delivered thoſe Letters.

J. Mur. One of thoſe Letters, together with the Credential, I delivered at Edinburgh, to the Laird of MacLeod.

Mr. At. Gen. Pleaſe to give an Account to my Lords, to whom you delivered any of thoſe Letters.

J. Mur. There was another of thoſe Letters ſent to Sir Alexander MacDonald.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſay it was ſent; then you did not deliver it yourſelf?

J. Mur. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know whether it was received or no?

J. Mur. No, I never heard it was.

Mr. At. Gen. Pleaſe to give an Account to my Lords, of any other of theſe Letters which you delivered.

J. Mur. The other Letters, ſo far as I can remember, were put into the Cuſtody of Lochiel, who was the proper Perſon to ſend them to the People who were to have them: As to thoſe who had them, I cannot diſtinctly name them all; but my Lord Perth had one, I am ſure.

Mr. At. Gen. What Time was it, that thoſe ſeveral and reſpective Letters were delivered?

J. Mur. They were delivered in the Months of November and December, 1714.

Mr. At. Gen. Was that after the Time you came from Paris?

J. Mur. Yes, it was.

Mr. At. Gen. Were they delivered, in order to forward the intended Invaſion from France, which you gave an Account of before?

J. Mur. They were deſigned by the Pretender as Letters to be given to People who were moſt his Friends, to know whether or no they were ready to join him; and the Credential annexed was for them to forward his Intereſt in the Country.

Mr. Noel. You have told us, that a Computation was made at that Meeting, of the Number of Men that could be raiſed; pleaſe to give an Account to my Lords, whether any particular Perſon, and who, mentioned the Number of Troops that might be raiſed?

J. Mur. It was the general Opinion, that 3000 Men ſhould be raiſed; and my Lord Lovat ſaid, that ſuch a Number would be ſufficient.

Mr. Noel. Did he mention any Proportion of Men that were to be raiſed by the Matter of Lovat?

J. Mur. He mentioned 400 Fraſers, to be raiſed by the Maſter of Lovat.

Lord High Steward. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, Have you done with the Examination of this Witneſs?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, we have done with this Witneſs at preſent.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, The Managers for the Houſe of Commons declare, that they have done with this Witneſs at preſent: Will your Lordſhip aſk him any Queſtions?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I beg Leave to tell your Lordſhips, that I am the moſt incapable Man of the three Kingdoms to make my Defence, becauſe, as I mentioned to your Lordſhips before, I want both my Sight and my Hearing; and I therefore begged of your Lordſhips to allow my Counſel to examine my own Witneſſes, and counter-examine the Witneſſes againſt me; but your Lordſhips were not pleaſed to allow that. Your Lordſhips are much more capable of examining the Witneſſes than I am; and therefore I ſhall refer it to your Lordſhips; and beg Leave to ſit down. I will aſk this Witneſs no Queſtions now.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I beg Leave to aſk this Queſtion: Did you voluntarily ſurrender yourſelf to the King's Forces? or was you taken by the King's Forces?

J. Mur. I did not intend, at that particular Time, to ſurrender myſelf; and I preſume it is not neceſſary for me to ſay now, whether I ever did intend it or not: But at the Time that the Party of Dragoons came to the Houſe where I then was, the Doors were ſhut, and I was in ſuch a Poſition, as that I could have killed two of them myſelf; but I rather choſe to ſubmit myſelf, and throw down my Arms.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, The Queſtion that I aſk is, Whether he did, or did not, voluntarily ſurrender himſelf; and whether his Intention was then to ſubmit to the King's Forces?

J. Mur. I did ſay, that it was not my Intention then particularly to ſubmit myſelf; it was not my Intention till I ſaw the Dragoons.

Lord Talbot. Did you uſe any Means to make your Eſcape afterwards?

J. Mur. I never did.

Lord Talbot. Have you ever taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Fidelity to the King?

J. Mur. I never did.

Lord Talbot. Did you never take thoſe Oaths, or Oaths of the ſame Nature to any body elſe?

J. Mur. No.

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, we hope the Witneſs ſhall not be obliged to anſwer Queſtions of this Nature; it is a Queſtion that tends to accuſe himſelf of High-Treaſon.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I did not aſk him any Queſtion to accuſe himſelf of any Crime which he had not himſelf before confeſſed; and as he had had before accuſed himſelf of that Crime, this may be ſaid to be a Continuation of it, but cannot be ſaid to be a freſh Accuſation. I ſhould not have aſked him the Queſtion, if he had not before accuſed himſelf.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, There is no Reaſon to ſpend your Lordſhips Time upon this Point; for the Gentleman has already anſwered the Queſtion.

Lord Talbot. Are you at preſent a Priſoner, or under Confinement?

J. Mur. Yes, I am, and have been ever ſince I came to the Tower.

Lord Talbot. Are you, upon this Occaſion, a voluntary Evidence?

J. Mur. I ſhould be glad to have the Meaning of that Queſtion explained; and to know what is meant by a voluntary Evidence.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, The Meaning of the Queſtion is, Whether the Witneſs is not an Evidence in Hopes of a Pardon? and whether, if he himſelf was pardoned, he would be an Evidence at all?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, On behalf of this Proſecution, I muſt oppoſe that Queſtion's being aſked. The Queſtion, as I underſtand it, is, Whether the Gentleman under Examination is a Witneſs in Hopes of a Pardon? and whether he would be a Witneſs, if his Pardon had been obtained? My Lords, This is a Queſtion, as I apprehend, not proper to be aſked, becauſe it is no Queſtion as to any Matter of Fact at all, but only a Queſtion concerning what the Witneſs would do, upon Suppoſition of a Fact which has not happened. I do not apprehend, that any Queſtion can be aſked of a Witneſs, but what concerns a Matter of Fact; not what a Witneſs would, or would not do, upon a future Contingency. The Queſtion muſt tend to a Fact, and the Witneſs either is, or is not capable of giving Evidence; but, my Lords, to aſk Queſtions of this Kind, is entering into the Receſſes of a Man's Heart, which Nobody has a Right to enquire into; and it is ſuch a Sort of Queſtion as I do not remember ever to have heard aſked in a Court of Juſtice: and, perhaps, it is what the Witneſs is incapable of anſwering; for, till the Event happens, he cannot ſay what he would, or would not do. We therefore hope your Lordſhips will think, that this is an improper Queſtion; and that the Thoughts, Inclinations, or Wiſhes of a Witneſs ought not to be enquired into here, where Matters of Fact only are to be tried.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I aſked the Queſtion for this Reaſon, that I might know with what View his Evidence was given; and ſo judge of the Credibility of it. Do you believe your Life depends upon the Conformity of the Evidence that you ſhall give on this Trial, to former Examinations which you have undergone?

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, I preſume, without troubling your Lordſhips with any Argument, that all that has been ſaid by the worthy Manager who ſpoke laſt to oppoſe the former Queſtion, is much more applicable to the Queſtion now propoſed to be aſked; and, therefore, without adding any thing more why this Queſtion ſhould not be aſked, I ſhall ſubmit it to your Lordſhips; and humbly apprehend, it is our Duty to oppoſe the aſking of this Queſtion.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, Do you oppoſe this laſt Queſtion being aſked?

Mr. At. Gen. I ſhould beg that the Queſtion might be a little more fully explained; I do not remember to have ever heard the like.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, The Queſtion to me ſeems extremely clear and plain; and I beg Leave to repeat it to your Lordſhips; and if you have any Difficulty about it, I will readily ſubmit. My Lords, The Queſtion is, Whether you (the Witneſs under Examination) believe your Life depends upon the Conformity of the Evidence you ſhall give upon this Trial, to your former Examinations? I ſuppoſe the Gentleman was examined as well by the Managers for the Houſe of Commons, as their Clerk.

Lord Halifax. My Lords, All that the Noble Lord, who aſked this Queſtion, means by it, is comprehended in the former Queſtion that he aſked; and that is, Whether the Witneſs is a voluntary Witneſs, or not?

L. H. S. The Witneſs ſaid, He did not know what was meant by the Word voluntary; and deſired it might be explained.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I urged the other Queſtion only as explanatory to that; and all that I meant by it was to know, whether the Witneſs at the Bar is governed by Hope or Fear?

J. Mur. My Lords, If your Lordſhips pleaſe, I will anſwer the Queſtion: I am upon my Oath, and obliged to tell the Truth; and I ſay, that poſſibly, and very probably, had I been in another Situation of Life, I ſhould not have appeared before your Lordſhips as a Witneſs againſt the Noble Lord at the Bar.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I am extremely well ſatisfied with the Gentleman's Anſwer to the Queſtion; and it gives me a much better Opinion of his Evidence than I had before.

Lord Barrington. My Lords, I beg Leave to aſk this Witneſs a Queſtion explanatory to the laſt Queſtion. If you had a full Pardon, and was at this Bar, and was obliged to anſwer upon Oath, would you not have given the ſame Evidence that you now have given?

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I apprehend that is only aſking the Witneſs, whether he would come here voluntarily, and perjure himſelf?

Lord Barrington. My Lords, The Queſtion I propoſed is not, Whether the Witneſs would come voluntarily to this Bar? but whether, if he had a full Pardon, and was brought to this Bar (as every Man may, whether free or not free), if he had a free Pardon, and was compelled to give Evidence, whether he would give the ſame Evidence upon Oath as he has now given?

Lord Talbot. My Lords, This is a Queſtion that no Man alive, in this Gentleman's Circumſtances, can poſſibly anſwer.

J. Mur. My Lords, I beg Leave to anſwer the Queſtion. If I was in ſuch a Situation as has been now ſtated to your Lordſhips, and brought here with a Pardon in my Pocket, but brought here to give Evidence againſt the Noble Lord at the Bar, I would not add to, or impair a Syllable of, or vary in the leaſt from, what I have now ſaid.

L. H. S. Is the Evidence you have here given upon your Oath true?

J. Mur. Yes, it is.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, I beg Leave to aſk this Gentleman a Queſtion, relating to a Tranſaction which has been lately mentioned. He was aſked, Whether he did, or did not, ſurrender himſelf voluntarily to the King's Forces? His Anſwer was, That he could, he believes, have diſpatched two of the Dragoons, but that he did not make any Reſiſtance. Now I deſire he may acquaint your Lordſhips, whether that was, or was not, before the 12th Day of July laſt?

J. Mur. It was upon the 28th of June laſt.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, I deſire to know, Whether or not, from that Time till now, he has not been in Cuſtody, and amenable to Juſtice?

J. Mur. I have been in Cuſtody ever ſince that Time.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, I deſire to know, Whether he was then brought before any Judge or Juſtice of the Peace, and whom?

J. Mur. I was carried to my Lord Juſtice Clerk in Edinburgh, the Day I was taken into Cuſtody.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you then committed, or no, by the Juſtice Clerk?

J. Mur. I was that Night committed, by the Juſtice Clerk, to the Caſtle of Edinburgh.

Mr. At. Gen. On the 28th of June?

J. Mur. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you continue in the Caſtle of Edinburgh from that Time till you was ſent from thence to London?

J. Mur. I did continue there till I came to London.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever make, or endeavour to make, any Eſcape all that Time?

J. Mur. I never did.

A Lord. Did you at any Time ſince you have been in Cuſtody, receive any Hopes or Promiſe of a Pardon?

J. Mur. I have never, ſince I have been in Cuſtody, been promiſed a Pardon, nor have heard a Word of Pardon mentioned to me ſince I was in Cuſtody.

[Then the Witneſs, by the Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Sir Richard Lloyd. My Lords, The next Witneſs we beg Leave to produce, is Hugh Fraſer of Dumballoch: Who was called in, and ſworn.

Proclamation for Silence.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you know the Noble Lord at the Bar?

Hugh Fraſer. Yes, I do.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. How long have you known him?

H. Fraſ. I have known him many Years ago.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you remember whether you was ſent for at any Time, and when, to the Houſe of my Lord Lovat?

H. Fraſ. I got a Meſſage from Peter Fraſer of Belladrum: It was he that brought me the Meſſage.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. From whom was that Meſſage brought?

H. Fraſ. From Lord Lovat, as he told me.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. When was that?

H. Fraſ. I think it was about the End of September 1745.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was you ſent for at any other Time about this Part of the Year?

H. Fraſ. I did not go upon the firſt Meſſage.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you go upon the ſecond?

H. Fraſ. Yes, I did.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What Diſtance of Time was there between the Firſt and Second Meſſage?

H. Fraſ. I believe there might be a Day or two: Thereabouts, to the beſt of my Memory.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. When you came to my Lord Lovat's Houſe, pray what paſſed between my Lord Lovat and you?

H. Fraſ. Upon my Word, I cannot remember particularly.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you remember whether any particular Paper was ſhewn you at that Time, and what it was?

H. Fraſ. No, I don't remember ſeeing any particular Paper at that Time?

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was there any Paper read, or talked of, by any body at that Time relating to the Pretender's Son?

H. Fraſ. There was a Converſation there about that Time, and, to the beſt of my Remembrance, it was about the Troubles in the Country.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you ever ſee or read a Paper ſaid to be a Manifeſto from the Pretender's Son? Or did you ever hear it read?

H. Fraſ. Yes, I did.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Where did you hear it read?

H. Fraſ. I read that Paper in a back Room at my Lord Lovat's.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Who gave it you to read?

H. Fraſ. I cannot remember who gave it me to read.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you remember who firſt ſhewed it you?

H. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat directed ſome Perſon in the Room to give it me: Whether it was Robert Fraſer, or not, I cannot ſay.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you remember to have heard my Lord Lovat ſay any thing of that Paper?

H. Fraſ. I have heard him ſay it was a pretty well wrote Paper.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. I beg you'll inform their Lordſhips, whether at that Time you heard any Converſation about the Clan of the Fraſers?

H. Fraſ. Upon my Word, I cannot remember whether I did or not, at that particular Time.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you about that Time hear any Thing about the Clan of the Fraſers?

H. Fraſ. I heard them ſpoken of ſeveral Times.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you hear it ſpoken of, at any of thoſe Times, who was to command them?

H. Fraſ. Yes; I heard that the Maſter of Lovat was to command them.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Who did you hear ſay that?

H. Fraſ. I heard my Lord Lovat ſay it.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. To what Purpoſe did my Lord Lovat ſay he was to command them?

H. Fraſ. It was to go South.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. To join whom?

H Fraſ. To join the Pretender.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What did he call the Pretender? by what Name?

H. Fraſ. He called him the Prince.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Were there any other of the Clans expected at that Time to join the Fraſers to march Southwards?

H. Fraſ. I heard my Lord Lovat ſay, That he was uneaſy about an Anſwer to a Letter, which he or his Son had wrote to the Iſle of Sky.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. From whom was that Anſwer expected?

H. Fraſ. From the Laird of Mac Leod.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you hear my Lord Lovat ſay what ſort of Anſwer he expected, or hoped for?

H. Fraſ. By all that I could learn of the Letter, it was a Letter deſiring that Laird Mac Leod's Men ſhould come and join them.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. A Letter from whom, deſiring that Mac Leod's Men might come and join them?

H. Fraſ. I cannot be poſitive, whether it was from my Lord Lovat, or his Son.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. From whom did you learn the Contents of the Letter?

H. Fraſ. I heard my Lord Lovat ſpeak of it.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was any Application made to you concerning the Raiſing of the Men, or their joining?

H. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat aſked me what Number of Men I could raiſe.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Of what Clan were you to raiſe them?

Sir William Yonge deſired, that the laſt Queſtion might be repeated: Which was done; and he made the ſame Anſwer as before.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What Men did he ſpeak of, and what Clan?

H. Fraſ. The Fraſers: There are no other Men in that Part of the Country.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. With what View were theſe Men to be raiſed?

H. Fraſ. To join the reſt of the Clan of the Fraſers, which were to be commanded by the Maſter.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you tell my Lord Lovat what Number of Men you thought you could raiſe?

H. Fraſ. No; upon my Word, I did not.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you hear my Lord Lovat ſay any thing about the raiſing his Clan, and who was to raiſe them, or did raiſe them?

H. Fraſ. I heard my Lord Lovat ſay, That the Maſter was the Man that was to raiſe the Clan, and to head them.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was he to do that by his own Power or Inclination, or by Advice from any body elſe?

H. Fraſ. That is a Thing I can give but an Opinion upon.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What is your Opinion upon it?

H. Fraſ. That the Maſter could not have raiſed the Men, except my Lord Lovat had countenanced the Thing, and it had been done by his Permiſſion.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Have you heard my Lord Lovat ſay any Thing in regard to his Son's being active, or not, in raiſing the Men?

H. Fraſ. I have heard my Lord Lovat ſay more than once, That his Son was very ſlow in raiſing of the Men.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. And did he ſay ſo as praiſing him for his Slowneſs in raiſing the Men, or as in diſpraiſing him?

H. Fraſ. I thought it was to diſpraiſe it.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you hear my Lord Lovat ſay any Thing of his own Abilities or Inabilities to raiſe Men, and head them?

H. Fraſ. I have heard my Lord Lovat ſay, That he was a tender, infirm Man, and not able to go about thoſe Things himſelf.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Have you heard him wiſh himſelf younger?

H. Fraſ. I have heard him ſay, He wiſhed himſelf younger, that he might go and command the Men himſelf.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Command them in whoſe Service?

H. Fraſ. In the Pretender's Service, that he was talking of.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you know what they mean by the Firy Croſs in that Country?

H. Fraſ. I remember the Firy Croſs when it went about my Father's Ground. It was a long Pole, with two croſs Sticks burnt at the Fore-end; and the Deſign of it was to raiſe the Men, and to threaten them with Fire and Sword; that their Houſes ſhould be burnt, if they did not riſe.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was the Firy Croſs carried through the Clan, that you know of, or have heard?

H. Fraſ. I have heard, that it was carried through the Clan: I did not go about all the Country.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. You ſay you ſaw it at your Father's?

H. Fraſ. Yes; I did.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. By whoſe Order is it that thoſe Croſſes are uſually carried about to raiſe Men in the ſeveral Clans?

H. Fraſ. Order is given by the Perſon that wants the Men.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Is it not always ordered by the Chief of the Clan? Does any body but the Chief of the Clan take upon them to order it?

H. Fraſ. I am an intire Stranger to that: I never ſaw the Thing before.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. When you were at Lord Lovat's Houſe at the Time you ſpeak of, did you obſerve any Tents there?

H. Fraſ. Yes; I obſerved ſome Bell-Tents there.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What Number of them?

H. Fraſ. I cannot be poſitive, whether Two or Three.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Were they new or old Ones?

H. Fraſ. They were new: They ſeemed to me to be new.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What Arms were upon them?

H. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat's Creſt was upon them.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you ſee any Colours?

H. Fraſ. I ſaw Colours at the Houſe of Caſtle-Downey.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What Arms were upon them?

H. Fraſ. There was upon one large Pair of Colours my Lord Lovat's Arms, to the beſt of my Memory.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you know if my Lord Lovat ſaw them?

H. Fraſ. I cannot tell.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was any thing ſaid to you, and by whom, to induce you to join the Pretender, more than you have given an Account of already?

H. Fraſ. There were ſeveral Things dropped in Converſation; but it is ſuch a Diſtance of Time, that I cannot remember what they were.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was any Perſon preſent there, beſides yourſelf and my Lord Lovat, when you was at his Houſe?

H. Fraſ. There were ſeveral Perſons there.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did any Converſation then paſs or not about throwing off the Maſk?

H. Fraſ. Yes; Mr. Alexander Mac Leod, and ſeveral others of the Country there, were ſpeaking about the Pretender; and Mr. Alexander Mac Leod ſaid, That much depended upon my Lord Lovat's throwing off the Maſk, or Words to that Purpoſe.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. To whom did he ſay theſe Words?

H. Fraſ. To my Lord Lovat.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What Anſwer did my Lord Lovat make to that?

H. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat I ſaw take off his Hat, and put it upon the Ground, and heard him ſay, There it is then.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you remember any particular Healths that were drank then?

H. Fraſ. I have heard the Prince's Health drank ſeveral Times there at the Table at Caſtle-Downey.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was my Lord Lovat preſent, or not? Or did he drink it?

H. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat was preſent at the Table.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you know of any Force that was made uſe of in that Clan to make them riſe?

H. Fraſ. I know there went Parties about.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you hear my Lord Lovat ſay any thing about his Expectation which Side would prevail?

H. Fraſ. I heard my Lord Lovat ſay; He was ſure the Prince would prevail.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Who did he mean? Who did he call the Prince? Who was he ſpeaking of?

H. Fraſ. Of the Young Pretender.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you know of any Subſiſtence that was given by Lord Lovat to any body?

H. Fraſ. I have heard my Lord Lovat ſay, That he had ordered his Factor to give an Allowance monthly or weekly to the Wives and Children of the Men.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Of whom?

H. Fraſ. Of thoſe that went with his Clan.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Upon what Occaſion did they go?

H. Fraſ. Thoſe Men that were to go South with the Young Pretender.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was it all, or only thoſe that were to be in his Clan?

H. Fraſ. There were a great many in the Country, that perhaps had nothing to ſupport their Families in their Abſence, when they were gone South.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you know of any Letter that was ſhewn you from the Young Pretender, diſpenſing with my Lord Lovat's perſonal Preſence?

H. Fraſ. Yes; I remember to have read the Letter.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Who gave it you to read?

H. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. From whom was that Letter?

H. Fraſ. He ſaid it was from the Marquis of Tullibardin.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. How was the Letter ſigned?

H. Fraſ. The Letter was ſigned Athol, in large Letters.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What were the Contents of it?

H. Fraſ. I don't remember the particular Contents of it. To the beſt of my Memory, it appeared to be in Return to another Letter, which had been ſent by my Lord Lovat; and it was to excuſe his perſonal Attendance.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Whoſe perſonal Attendance?

H. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat's.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. His Attendance where?

H. Fraſ. To go South in the Pretender's Service.

L. H. S. Where is that Letter?

H. Fraſ. I don't know.

L. H. S. You ſay my Lord Lovat gave it you?

H. Fraſ. Yes.

L. H. S. What did you do with it?

H. Fraſ. I returned it again.

L. H. S. To whom did you return it?

H. Fraſ. To my Lord Lovat, or his Secretary; I don't know which.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you know whether there was any Reward given to the Clans, when they were raiſed, for their Subſiſtence?

H. Fraſ. I know there was Meal, Cows, and Mutton given them.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. For what was it given them?

H. Fraſ. To maintain thoſe Men.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Where were they then?

H. Fraſ. There were ſeveral of them about Caſtle-Downey.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. By whoſe Order were thoſe Things given?

H. Fraſ. That I don't know, indeed.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you ever hear my Lord Lovat ſay any thing about their being maintained by his, or any body elſe's Order?

H. Fraſ. I don't remember, indeed.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, the Witneſs has already told your Lordſhips what the Noble Priſoner at the Bar declared about the Perſon's Succeſs, whom he called the Prince: I beg he may inform your Lordſhips, whether my Lord Lovat, when he ſpoke about that Succeſs, did, or did not, ſay any thing about his ſending for Men, and for what Purpoſe?

H. Fraſ. I don't remember what he ſaid at that particular Time.

Mr. Noel. Do you at any other Time?

H. Fraſ. Yes, indeed: I heard my Lord Lovat ſay, He would ſend his Son and Men.

Mr. Noel. For what?

H. Fraſ. To ſerve the Prince.

Mr. Noel. Who did you underſtand he meant by the Prince?

H. Fraſ. The Pretender's Son.

Mr. Noel. You mentioned the Particulars about pulling off the Maſk: You ſaid, that Mr. Alexander Mac Leod ſaid, That much depended on Lord Lovat's throwing off the Maſk; that my Lord Lovat, upon that, threw his Hat upon the Floor, and ſaid, Then there it is: Pray what was the Subject-Matter of the Converſation when that was done?

H. Fraſ. The Subject-Matter of the Converſation was the Young Pretender's Cauſe; and it was about that they were ſpeaking at that Time.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, the Managers have done with their Examination of this Witneſs.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, has your Lordſhip any Queſtions to aſk this Witneſs?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, there have been ſuch Proceedings againſt me ſince I was ordered to be tried, as never were heard of in Scotland or England.

L. H. S. In what reſpect does your Lordſhip mean?

Lord Lovat. I mean, that after I was brought up to be tried before your Lordſhips, the Impeachment had been read againſt me, my Anſwer put in to it, and the Commons had replied to it, and after I had Leave to ſummon Witneſſes in my Defence, I had ſummoned a great many Witneſſes out of Scotland to come here in my Defence, I did not imagine there would be the leaſt Difficulty in their coming up: But, my Lords, I find there was a Perſon there, who was a kind of a Deputy-Sheriff, but never was known as an Officer of Juſtice, went to ſeveral private Meetings, and endeavoured to prevent my Witneſſes coming up.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, I would not interrupt you, if it were not for your own Sake. If your Lordſhip has any Matter of Complaint, my Lords will be ready to hear you at a proper Time, upon a proper Application; but this is not a proper Time for ſuch an Application. You have Counſel to adviſe you as to the proper Method and Time of doing it, with whom you muſt adviſe.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I was going to object to this Witneſs before he was ſworn, becauſe he had been called in by that Deputy-Sheriff, who threatened the Men, if they offered to come up to give Evidence for me; and ſome were put in Priſon, and driven from their Houſes, particularly thoſe they thought would favour me, after I had your Lordſhips Order to ſummon my Witneſſes: And therefore, I ſhall object to any Witneſs that ſhall come from that Little Court. I beg this Witneſs may be aſked, whether he was examined at Inverneſs before he came here?

H. Fraſ. Yes, I was.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I thought, as I was to be judged in a Court of the Supreme Judicature, and was innocent, that I was ſafe in ſuch Hands; but I cannot think myſelf ſafe, when ſuch Officers as thoſe ſhall manage the Witneſſes, and threaten thoſe who will not ſay as they ſay.

L. H. S. I have already told your Lordſhip, that if you have any Complaint to make, you muſt make it at a proper Time, and in a proper Manner; and my Lords will hear it. You may go on to aſk this Witneſs any Queſtions concerning any Practices that he knows of.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I beg this Witneſs may be aſked, if he was examined upon Oath, in December or January laſt, and by whom?

H. Fraſ. Yes, I was examined at Inverneſs by one Killravock.

Lord Lovat. What is Killravock?

H. Fraſ. He is a Gentleman that lives about four Miles from Inverneſs.

Lord Lovat. What is he?

H. Fraſ. He had Subſtitution from the Sheriff-Depute.

Lord Lovat. Did you ſee Chevis of Murtoun? What Part did he act there?

H. Fraſ. This Gentleman had got a Copy of the Charge ſent into the Country; and he came in Obedience to that Charge, among the reſt.

Lord Lovat. What is a Charge?

H. Fraſ. A Kind of Summons.

Lord Lovat. Was you threatened by any Perſon, to give Evidence againſt me? and by whom?---H. Fraſer. I was not, indeed.

Lord Lovat. Was you promiſed any Favour, or Reward, for being Evidence againſt me?---H. Fraſ. No, indeed.

Lord Lovat. By whom have you been maintained ſince you came to London?

H. Fraſ. I have been, ſince I came to London, in the Cuſtody of a Meſſenger.

Lord Lovat. By whom was you maintained?

H. Fraſer. I do not know at whoſe Expence it was: I have had Victuals and Drink, and a Bed; and never was aſked for any thing.

Lord Lovat. Have you been in Cuſtody by any Order, Force, or Compulſion?

H. Fraſ. No, not at all: I have not been under any Order, Force, or Compulſion.

Lord Lovat. Since you have been at the Houſe of the Meſſenger, have you been at Liberty to go where you pleaſed?

H. Fraſer. I have gone abroad, walked in the Park, and about Kenſington; and I go out at Night to take a Glaſs.

Lord Lovat. When you went out, did not a Meſſenger attend you?

H. Fraſer. Yes, he went to take a Walk with me.

A Lord. When was it that you were at Lord Lovat's Houſe, that he ſaid he would ſend his Son and Clan into the Pretender's Service?

H. Fraſ. I think it was the Beginning of October 1745; it was after the Rebellion broke out.

A Lord. Where was it? and what Perſons were then preſent?

H. Fraſer. It was in my Lord Lovat's Room, at Caſtle-Downey.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, I would beg leave to aſk this Witneſs one Queſtion for Form-ſake: Pray what County is Caſtle-Downey in?

H. Fraſer. It is in the County of Inverneſs.

A Lord. Pray, which of the Priſoner's Servants was preſent then?

H. Fraſ. Upon my Word, I can't remember that.

Lord Lovat. Did you receive any Money, or were you promiſed any Money, for your Expences in coming to London, to be a Witneſs againſt me?---H. Fraſ. There was Money given to bear our Expences.

A Lord. Pray, Who was preſent, when my Lord Lovat ſaid, that he would ſend his Son, with his Men, into the Pretender's Service?

H. Fraſer. I think there were ſeveral preſent; but I cannot condeſcend upon whom they were.

A. Lord. Name any one of them: Was Alexander Mac Cleod there?

Hugh Fraſer. I don't remember.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Have you any more Queſtions to aſk this Witneſs?

Lord Lovat. Not till I make my Defence; and then I hope your Lordſhips will give me Liberty.

L. H. S. Does your Lordſhip mean, that when you come to your Defence, you would aſk this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Lord Lovat. No, I don't mean that.

L. H. S. Your Lordſhip will be at Liberty to aſk any other Witneſs what Queſtions you pleaſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Propoſal of my Lord Lovat, to ſend his Son and Clan into the Pretender's Service, as you have mentioned, before or after the News of the Battle of Preſton-Pans came into that Country?

H. Fraſer. It was after.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you obſerve any Difference in the Behaviour of my Lord Lovat, in regard to his raiſing his Clan, or taking any Steps towards it, after the News of that Battle, from what his Behaviour was before?

H. Fraſer. I did not ſee my Lord Lovat before the Battle of Preſton-Pans.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long was it after the Battle of Preſton-Pans that you ſaw him?

H. Fraſ. I don't remember.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it before the News came to Caſtle-Downey, of the Troops from France being landed?

H. Fraſer. Upon my Word, I don't remember.

[Then the Witneſs, by Order of the Lord High-Steward, withdrew.]

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I beg your Lordſhips Leave to withdraw for a little Time.

The Priſoner was carried from the Bar accordingly.

Serj. at Arms. Our Sovereign Lord the King ſtrictly charges and commands all Manner of Perſons to be uncovered, on Pain of Impriſonment.

In about a Quarter of an Hour, the Priſoner was again brought to the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, The next Witneſs we ſhall beg Leave to produce, is John Riddell: Who was called in, and ſworn.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Have you any Objections againſt this Witneſs John Riddell?---Lord Lovat. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, I beg this Witneſs may give your Lordſhips an Account, whether he knows the noble Lord at the Bar?

Riddell. Yes, I do.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember if you were at Caſtle-Downey ſoon after the Battle of Preſton-Pans?

Riddell. Yes, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you before that Time ſee Bariſdale, or any other Perſon, there?----Rid. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he come there firſt by himſelf, or not?

Rid. I ſaw Kinloch Moidart there.

Mr. Att. Gen. At that Time?

Rid. I cannot remember whether it was the ſame Time, or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long was Bariſdale there?

Rid. Two Nights.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he bring any Horſes with him?

Rid. Four Dragoon Horſes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whoſe Arms were upon the Furniture?

Rid. The King's Arms were upon them, and R and G, or a G and an R.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee any of the Clan of the Fraſers there?

Rid. At the ſame time ſome of them were there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat there at that Time?

Rid. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever ſee any of the Chiefs of the Clans dine at my Lord Lovat's Table?---Rid. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear any Healths drank there?

Rid. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whoſe Health did you hear drank?

Rid. Prince Charles's Health.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat preſent at the Time, or not?

Rid. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever hear my Lord Lovat drink any of thoſe Healths?

Rid. I cannot ſay that; I'm not ſure, 'tis ſo long ſince.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever hear my Lord Lovat drink any other Healths relating to the Rebel Army?

Rid. Never, to the beſt of my Knowledge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever hear him ſay any thing, relating to his countenancing the Rebel Army?

Rid. No, I do not remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give my Lords an Account, whether you ever ſaw any Meal delivered out at my Lord Lovat's.

Rid. My Lord Lovat has given Precepts for Meal ſeveral times.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you mean by Precepts?

Rid. Precepts for ſo much Oats for the Horſes, or Meal.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you mean by that an Order?---Rid. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what was done with the Meal that was ordered to you?

Rid. I got a Precept for Two Bolls of Meal, in Part of my Wages.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know of any Precept that was given to Thomas Fraſer?

Rid. Yes, for Four Bolls.

Mr. Att. Gen. For what?---Rid. It is more than I can tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of Boll-Tents being made?

Rid. Yes, I ſaw them made.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where were they made?
Rid. At Caſtle-Downey.
Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat there?---Rid. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. What were they made for?---Rid. I can't tell.
Mr. Att. Gen. By whoſe Order were they made?
Rid. I can't tell.
Mr. Att. Gen. What became of them?
Rid. I heard they were ſent to Perth.
Mr. Att. Gen. For whoſe Uſe? for what Purpoſe were they ſent there?
Rid. They went there with a Company of Men; I don't know for whoſe Uſe they were.
Mr. Att. Gen. Who were the Company of Men?
Rid. They were the Fraſers.
Mr. Att. Gen. What were they collected together for?
Rid. They marched Southward, with a Deſign to go to Perth, as I heard.
Mr. Att. Gen. Whoſe People were at Perth then?
Rid. The Rebel Army.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did they march to join them?
Rid. 'Tis more than I can tell.
Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Orders from my Lord Lovat, concerning the preparing yourſelf, and Horſes, to go with my Lord Lovat, or his Son?
Rid. Yes; he ordered me to get myſelf ready to go.
Mr. Att. Gen. Where was you to go to?
Rid. With the Maſter.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did not my Lord Lovat tell you where he was to go to?
Rid. No, he did not, to the beſt of my Knowledge.
Mr. Att. Gen. Where did you underſtand he was to go to?
Rid. To Perth.
Mr. Att. Gen. For what Purpoſe?---Rid. To join that Army.
Mr. Att. Gen. What Army do you mean; the King's Army, or the Rebel Army?---Rid. I can't tell that.
Mr. Att. Gen. How did you underſtand it? As you was to go to Perth, don't you know what Army you was to join?
Rid. There was no Army at Perth but the Rebel Army.
Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember any Number of Men paſſing by Lord Lovat's Houſe?---Rid. Yes, very well.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee my Lord Cromertie, or his Officers, there?
Rid. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. How long did they continue there?---Rid. One Night.
Mr. Att. Gen. What Time of the Year was it?
Rid. Hallowmaſs, or thereabouts.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear my Lord Lovat ſay any thing to theſe Gentlemen, concerning his Men being, or not being ready?
Rid. I did not hear from my Lord Lovat; I heard it from ſome of his Servants.
Mr. Att. Gen. What did you hear?
Rid. I heard the Servants ſay, that my Lord Lovat mentioned ſomething about the Men's not being ready.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear my Lord Lovat ſay any thing about it in the Chamber?
Rid. No; if it was ſpoken, it was in the Erſe Language; and I did not underſtand it.
Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat preſent in the Houſe when Lord Cromertie was there?---Rid. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee them together at Table?---Rid. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear any of the Converſation that paſſed betwixt them?---Rid. No.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear nothing concerning the drinking of any Healths?---Rid. No, not at that Time I did not.
Mr. Att. Gen. At what Time did you hear it?
Rid. A good while before.
Mr. Att. Gen. What Healths were drank? and by whom?
Rid. The Chieftains of the Clans drank Prince Charles's Health.
Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat preſent?---Rid. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did he contradict the Health?
Rid. I did not hear he did.
Mr. Att. Gen. Was you preſent, or near, when a Number of Fraſers were drawn up?
Rid. I ſaw 700 Men together once.
Mr. Att. Gen. Where were they?---Rid. In the Aird.
Mr. Att. Gen. Is that Place near my Lord Lovat's Houſe?
Rid. It is within half a Mile.
Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat there at that Time?
Rid. No, I never ſaw my Lord Lovat there.
Mr. Att. Gen. Was he at home then?---Rid. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. By whom were they drawn up?
Rid. By my Lord Lovat's Chamberlain.
Mr. Att. Gen. Were there any Officers among them?---Rid. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. Where did the Officers lodge?
Rid. They went through into the Country, to Farmers Houſes, Change-Houſes, and Ale-Houſes.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did any of them ever dine at my Lord Lovat's Houſe?
Rid. Sometimes they did.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did they dine with my Lord Lovat himſelf?---Rid. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did he know, that there were 700 Men drawn up there, or near that Place?
Rid. I cannot tell, whether he knew, that there were 700 of them; but believe he knew they were there.
Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know what Kind of Mark they had upon their Bonnets?—Rid. They had a Cockade, and Sprigs of Yew.
Mr. Att. Gen. What Kind of Cockades had they?
Rid. White Cockades.
Mr. Att. Gen. Was not that the diſtinguiſhing Mark of the Rebel Army?
Rid. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did they make uſe of the Sprigs of Yew as a diſtinguiſhing Mark?——Rid. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee any Companies of thoſe Men there?
Rid. Yes, Three or Four Companies.
Mr. Att. Gen. Where did they march to?---Rid. To the Southward.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did you, at any time, ſee any of the Officers take Leave of my Lord Lovat?—Rid. Yes, I did.
Mr. Att. Gen. What paſſed upon that Occaſion? Which way did they take Leave of one another?
Rid. My Lord Lovat ſhook Hands with them, kiſſed them, and bid them Farewel.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat wiſh them any thing?
Rid. I cannot ſay I heard that.
Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember, that, at any time after, one Fraſer of Byerly was with my Lord Lovat?
Rid. Yes, that Man was always with my Lord Lovat.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear my Lord Lovat aſk him any Queſtions about the Pretender's Son?---Rid. No, I never did.
Mr. Att. Gen. Recollect yourſelf, whether you did, or no?
Rid. I cannot mind, indeed; if I did, it is out of my Memory.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever hear my Lord Lovat aſk any other Perſon concerning the Pretender's Son?
Rid. I heard my Lord Lovat once aſk what ſort of a Man he was.
Mr. Att. Gen. Of whom did he aſk that Queſtion?
Rid. Some of the Chieftains, ſome of them that had been at Falkirk; I do not know who they were.
Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember what Anſwer was given my Lord Lovat to that Queſtion?——Rid. I do not.
Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember, whether my Lord Lovat mentioned any thing to him concerning the Pretender's Son's Preſervation?
Rid. I do not.
Duke of Bedford. You ſay, that my Lord Cromertie's Men were at Caſtle-Downey, my Lord Lovat's Houſe: Pray were they received there as Friends; or did they come there by Force?
Rid. The Men did not come to Caſtle-Downey; only Lord Cromertie, his Son, and the Officers.
Duke of Bedford. Did they come there by Force; or were they received as Friends?—Rid. They were in the Houſe all Night.
Duke of Bedford. Were they entertained as Friends?
Rid. I did not hear any thing to the contrary; they were lodged there all Night.
Mr. Att. Gen. You ſay you heard my Lord Lovat aſk, what ſort of a Man the Pretender's Son was? Pray, when was it that he aſked that?
Rid. I cannot name the Time certainly.
Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we have done with this Witneſs.
Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, The Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons have done with this Witneſs; will you aſk him any Queſtions?
Lord Lovat. When was you brought to Town; and by whoſe Order was you ſent to Town?
Rid. I have been brought to Town ſince the 24th of Auguſt; and was ſent up by the Judge-Advocate.
Lord Lovat. What is the Judge Advocate's Name?
Rid. David Bruce.
Lord Lovat. Was you examined at Inverneſs, after the Battle of Culloden? and by whom?
Rid. I was examined by the Judge-Advocate, in the Duke of Cumberland's Lodgings.
Lord Lovat. When was you ſo examined?
Rid. It was the 24th of April laſt.
Lord Lovat. Was you threatened by any Perſon to give Evidence againſt me? and by whom? And what was the Expreſſion uſed on that Occaſion?
Rid. I was threatened to deliver up my Money, but not about my being an Evidence.
Lord Lovat. What were the Threatenings?
Rid. That they would put me in Priſon, and hang me next Morning.
Sir John Strange. My Lords, I would not interrupt the noble Lord at the Bar; but I would be glad to know who the Witneſs ſpeaks of.
Rid. After I was examined, they heard I had ſome Money: Brigadier Mordaunt demanded the Money: and Mr. Bruce threatened, that if I did not give up the Money to the Brigadier, I muſt go to Priſon.
Lord Lovat. Was you a Servant of mine?
Rid. I ſerved you for five Years.
Lord Lovat. In what Capacity?——Rid. As a Groom.
Lord Lovat. Was you taken Priſoner?
Rid. I delivered myſelf up to the Duke of Cumberland, at Inverneſs, Eight Days after the Battle of Culloden.
Lord Lovat. Who was it that threatened to hang you?
Rid. The Judge-Advocate.
Lord Lovat. Did any Perſon come to you, ſince you came to London, with a pretended Letter, ſaid to be ſigned by me?
Rid. Yes; there was a Man, whoſe Name is Leſly, who came to ſee if I knew my Lord Lovat's Hand.
Lord Lovat. What was deſired of you by that Perſon? And what Anſwer did you give him?
Rid. I ſaid, that I did not know, whether it was my Lord Lovat's Hand, or not; but that it did not look like it.
Sir William Yonge. My Lords, I beg to know of this Witneſs, whether he did, or did not, ſurrender himſelf a Priſoner to the Duke, at Inverneſs?
Rid. Yes; I did: I delivered up myſelf to the Duke, to get a Paſs to go to Edinburgh; but never was in the Rebellion in my Life.
Sir W. Yonge. Did you come to Inverneſs on Horſeback?
Rid. Yes: There were Two of us.
Sir W. Yonge. Whoſe Horſes had you?---Rid. My Lord Lovat's.
Sir W. Yonge. You ſay there were Two of you; and that you were both on my Lord Lovat's Horſes: and that you were threatened to have your Money taken from you?
Rid. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge.

Sir W. Yonge. Pray how came you by that Money?

Rid. By selling the Horses.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you know, or was you informed of, the Contents of the Letter, which Mr. Lesly asked you, whether it was Lord Lovat's Hand?

Rid. I never saw the Letter, but the Subscription; and he shewed me that, to see if I knew it.

Sir W. Yonge. Did not Lesly inform you what were the Contents of the Letter?

Rid. No: To the best of my Remembrance, he said it was signed by my Lord Lovat in 1738.

[Then the Witness, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, The next Witness we beg Leave to produce is William Walker: Who was called in, and sworn.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Has your Lordship any Objection to this Witness?

Lord Lovat. No; I have none.

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, I beg leave to ask this Witness, If he lived in my Lord Lovat's Family? and how long?

Walker. Yes; for three Years and an half.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you remember any Persons coming to him after the Battle of Preston-Pans? and who were they?

Walker. Yes: There was Alexander MacLeod, and Mac Donald of Barisdale.

Sir W. Yonge. Was Kinloch Moidart there?---Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Was young Glengary there?

Walker. Yes; He was there one Day; I think on a Sunday.

Sir W. Yonge. Did they dine at my Lord Lovat's Table?

Walker. Yes; all except Glengary.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you remember any Healths that were drank?

Walker. Yes: I heard Barisdale drink the young Pretender's Health.

Sir W. Yonge. By what Name?—Walker. By the Name of the Prince.

Sir W. Yonge. Was my Lord Lovat present then?--- Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you know one Thomas Fraser, a Baker?

Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. During the Time that those Persons were at my Lord Lovat's House, did he give them any Advice? and what was it?

Walker. I never heard it: It was always in my Lord's Room; and I never went in, but at Dinner.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you hear them say any thing about the Young Pretender, and the Clan of the Frasers?

Walker. I heard my Lord Lovat say, That they must take care not to let the Young Pretender run into an Engagement.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you know Thomas Fraser the Baker?---Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Was he at my Lord Lovat's then?

Walker. He came to Castle-Downey, with some Colours they were to make at Inverness.

Sir W. Yonge. What Colours were they?

Walker. Two Standard Colours, four Bell-Tents, and two painted Flags.

Sir W. Yonge. What were they painted with?

Walker. My Lord Lovat's Arms were upon the Flags.

Sir W. Yonge. What became of those Things?

Walker. Cameron sent them away, after my Lord Lovat was taken.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you remember the Marching of Two Companies to Perth?———Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you remember soon after the Master of Lovat's coming into the Room where you was?

Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Was my Lord Lovat there?---Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. What passed there between them?

Walker. When the Master came into the Room, my Lord Lovat was speaking to him: I don't know what it was about.

Sir W. Yonge. What did the Master do then?

Walker. The Master rose up, and took his Bonnet, and threw it upon the Floor, and threw the White Cockade in the Fire, and damned the Cockade.

Sir W. Yonge. What did the Father do upon that Occasion?

Walker. He rose up in a Passion, and said, What could he do! and was forcing his Son out.

Sir W. Yonge. I beg you'll inform their Lordships, upon what Occasion it was that the Master of Lovat threw his Cockade into the Fire; and what his Father had said to him to occasion it?

Walker. I don't know that, indeed.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you hear his Father say any thing to him?

Walker. His Father spoke to him in Erse.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you understand Erse?

Walker. No; I do not. The Master of Lovat went to the Door; and Mr. Fraser the Minister stood up in the Master of Lovat's Behalf: Upon which, Mr. Fraser of Byerfield rose up, and said, What have you to do with it? You have no Estate to forfeit.

Sir W. Yonge. What said my Lord Lovat upon that?

Walker. I do not know what he said upon that.

Sir W. Yonge. Did they say nothing in English after that?

Walker. They spoke in a Language I did not understand.

Sir W. Yonge. Did my Lord Lovat say nothing in English?

Walker. Not that I know of: Only he said, What could he do more! He was forcing his Son out, the very Life of him.

Sir W. Yonge. Pray do you know upon what Account that was said?

Walker. It was an Answer he gave to Byerfield.

Sir W. Yonge. To whom did Byerfield speak, when he said, He had no Estate to forfeit?

Walker. To Donald Fraser the Minister.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you remember any Thing about a Smith and a Tinker repairing any Arms?

Walker. Yes; There was one Hugh Monro, and another.

Sir W. Yonge. How long was it that they were at Castle-Downey?

Walker. About a Fortnight, I think.

Sir W. Yonge. Were there any Arms where they were?

Walker. Yes; in the Ward-Room.

Sir W. Yonge. Where was the Key kept of that Room?

Walker. The Key was very often in my Lord Lovat's Room, in his Custody.

Sir W. Yonge. Did my Lord Lovat usually give out that Key to any body that went into the Ward-Room? Or did he use to go there himself?

Walker. My Lord always gave the Key out to any body that wanted it, to get Shoes for the Horses, or the like: My Lord never went there himself.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you know any thing of the Smith and the Tinker's going into my Lord's Room?

Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. What passed there? Did my Lord give them any thing?

Walker. A Dram.

Sir W. Yonge. Have you ever been in the Ward-Room?

Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. What was usually kept there?

Walker. Several Sorts of Things; 'tis more than I can tell how many.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you see any Number of Men rendezvoused in that Neighbourhood?

Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. What Number? How many Companies did you see?

Walker. I don't know how many Companies; the First of the Rendezvous, we reckoned there were 7 or 800 Men.

Sir W. Yonge. Were they armed?

Walker. Some of them were armed, and some not.

Sir W. Yonge. How far from Castle-Downey did you see those Men?

Walker. About a Mile from it.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you ever see them afterwards?

Walker. Yes; I saw a Company of them drawn up on the Green.

Sir W. Yonge. Was my Lord Lovat at home then? Did he see them drawn up?

Walker. He was at home; but I believe did not see them.

Sir W. Yonge. How near is that Green to my Lord Lovat's House?

Walker. About 100 or 200 Yards.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you know of any Violence or Force that was used to make the Men rise?

Walker. The Chamberlain forced them, and young Inverallachy.

Sir W. Yonge. In what Manner did they force them?

Walker. They threatened to burn their Houses, after the Battle of Culloden, if they did not rise.

Sir W. Yonge. But, before that, how did they threaten them?

Walker. That they would take their Cattle and Plaids from them, if they did not rise. Lord Lovat was then a Prisoner to my Lord Loudon, and was then in his Custody.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you remember when my Lord Cromertie marched by my Lord Lovat's?

Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Was Lord Cromertie, or his Son, or any of the Officers, at my Lord Lovat's?

Walker. Yes: my Lord Cromertie and Lord Mac Leod were there all Night.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you hear my Lord Lovat make use of any Expressions, or Excuse, that his Men were not ready?

Walker. My Lord Lovat said, It was a Shame to see Lord Cromertie's Men go by his Nose: But what it was for, I can't tell.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, We have done with our Examination of this Witness.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Would your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Lovat. Was you threatened by any one to give Evidence against me? and by whom? And what were the Expressions used on that Occasion?

Walker. No, I was not.

Lord Lovat. Was you examined at Inverness? and by whom?

Walker. I was examined at Inverness by Mr. Bruce and Brigadier Mordaunt.

Lord Lovat. What passed between you and Mr. Bruce?

Walker. I was examined: Nothing passed between me and Mr. Bruce at that time.

Lord Lovat. Or at any time afterwards?

Walker. Nor afterwards.

Lord Lovat. Was any Force used to get out the Men, while I was a Prisoner, or while I was at home, or after my Return from Inverness?

Lord High Steward. First, Was there any Force used to get out the Men, while my Lord Lovat was at home?

Walker. I cannot truly tell that; It is more than I can tell.

Lord High Steward. Was any such Force used while he was a Prisoner at Inverness?

Walker. Lord Lovat was with Lord Loudon when the Force was used to raise the Men.

Lord High Steward. Did you say, that the Dispute between Lord Lovat and his Son happened after the Frasers had marched Southwards, or not?

Walker. It was the Frasers of Strathorick that had marched; there was not a Man marched out of the Aird at that time.

Lord Lovat. Did I know of the Marching of the Men?

Walker. My Lord Lovat knew nothing of it: It was Fraser of Byerfield that took as many of the Frasers as he could get to the Castle of Culloden, in order to take the Lord President Prisoner: But my Lord Lovat knew nothing of that; for when he heard of it, he was like to go mad; he cursed for a matter of two Hours; and we had no Peace with him.

Lord Lovat. Was that the Occasion of my Quarrel with my Son?

Walker. No; my Lord Lovat, nor the Master of Lovat, knew nothing of it; for this Byerfield, as I heard, was designed to raise the Men, without my Lord Lovat's Authority; and, if he had got the Command of of the Houſe of Culloden, he would have kept them there: It was he that marched with the Strathbarick Men to Perth.

A Lord. Did my Lord Lovat, or his Son, know nothing of this?

Walker. No; they were Twenty-four Miles off.

A Lord. What was the Occaſion of the Quarrel between Lord Lovat and his Son?

Walker. I cannot tell.

A Lord. Was you preſent in the Room, when the Diſpute began between my Lord Lovat and his Son?

Walker. No; I was not in the Room: I came in with a Diſh in the mean time; and there was this little John Fraſer of Byerfield ſpeaking to my Lord: My Lord Lovat fell foul of the Maſter, who roſe up, and took his Cockade off the 'Scriptore, and threw the Cockade into the Fire, and damned it.

A Lord. What Language did they talk in?

Walker. They talked in Erſe, when I heard it firſt.

A Lord. You ſay, that Fraſer the Miniſter took part with the Maſter?

Walker. Yes.

A Lord. Did he talk in Erſe?

Walker. Yes.

A Lord. Then how do you know he ſpoke in favour of the Maſter?

Walker. The Reaſon why I knew it was, that little John Fraſer flew up to Donald Fraſer, and ſaid, He had no Eſtate to forfeit; and that, if he had got a Stipend, it was all he had to take care of.

Lord Lovat. Do you know whether I uſed my Endeavours to get my Men home after they were taken out by Fraſer of Byerfield, or any other Perſon?

Walker. Mac Donald of Bariſdale would have my Lord Lovat's Men out, and was never away from the Houſe; and there came on a great Snow, that my Lord Lovat's Men did not go out at that time; but about Two Days after that, ſome of them went up to a Hill with Bariſdale's Men; and they would take Cattle, to maintain them upon the Road: When my Lord Lovat ſent for them from Urquhart, and brought them all back again. When there was any of them riſen at all, then my Lord was Priſoner with Lord Loudon.

A Lord. Pray what kind of Servant is a Chamberlain?

Walker. The Steward, who gathers in the Rents.

A Lord. Did you ever hear of the Croſs being carried about the Country?

Walker. I never either ſaw it, or heard of it.

Lord Lovat. Do you know, whether Fraſer of Dumballoch, that was here To-day, went out in Arms, at the Head of a Company, to Urquhart, till I brought him home?

Walker. I ſaw him that Day at Lord Lovat's Table; but whether he got to Urquhart, or no, I cannot tell.

A Lord. Did the Men that went to Urquhart dine with my Lord Lovat?

Walker. Yes.

[Then the Witneſs, by the Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Mr. Yorke. My Lords, The next Witneſs we ſhall produce, is Hugh Monro.

Hugh Monro called in.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Has your Lordſhip any Objection againſt Hugh Monro's being examined as a Witneſs?

Lord Lovat. Yes; he is my Tenant.

Lord High Steward. Would your Lordſhip have him examined upon that Point?

Lord Lovat. Yes.

The Witneſs was ſworn upon a Voire dire.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, What Queſtions would you aſk him?

Lord Lovat. Have you any Lands, Houſes, or Yard, that you hold of me?——Monro. Yes.

L. H. S. What Lands do you hold of my Lord Lovat?

Monro. Six Bolls a Year.

L. H. S. How do you hold it of my Lord Lovat, as Vaſſal, or by Leaſe or Tack?

Monro. While I was a Servant, I had it from him.

L. H. S. Do you hold it of my Lord Lovat now?

Monro. Another Man hath taken Poſſeſſion there.

L. H. S. Have you the ſame Tenure under my Lord Lovat as you had before?

Monro. Yes.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, I beg this Witneſs may be aſked, If he holds any Lands of my Lord Lovat at this time.

Monro. I have the ſame Land that I had before; but another Man hath it in Poſſeſſion ever ſince Whitſunday.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is that other Man's Name?

Monro. Kilbocky.

Mr. Att. Gen. How does he hold it of my Lord?

Monro. I don't know.

Lord Lovat. Do you think you have any Right to hold this Land, though another Man is in Poſſeſſion of it?

Monro. No, I have no Right to hold it.

Lord Sandys. Why do you ſay you have no Right to hold it?

Monro. Becauſe the Superior Lord may turn me out of the Land at any time.

Lord Sandys. Has the Superior Lord turned you out of the Land?

Monro. No.

L. H. S. Who do you take to be your Superior Lord?

Monro. My Lord Lovat.

Sir W. Yonge. Had you any Wages from my Lord Lovat, while you was his Servant?

Monro. Yes; I had.

Sir W. Yonge. What were the Wages you had?

Monro. Five Pounds a Year.

Sir W. Yonge. Was it paid in Money, or in Lands of any Rent?

Monro. It was paid in Land.

Sir W. Yonge. Was that the Land you now ſpeak of which you hold of my Lord Lovat?

Monro. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Have you any Title to that Land, now you are not his Servant?

Monro. I don't know what Way it is.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you think you have any Claim to the Land, now you are not his Servant?

Monro. No; I have none.

Sir W. Yonge. How long have you left my Lord Lovat's Service?

Monro. I was always his Servant: I did not leave his Service.

Lord Lovat. The Perſon that now is in Poſſeſſion of that Land, has he it by my Conſent?

Monro. I don't know: The Man that is in Poſſeſſion ſays he muſt have the Rent this Year.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever hold this Land by any Writing?

Monro. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever hold it by any Contract for any certain Term?

Monro. I had the Land from my Lord Lovat, for what I worked for him in the Year.

Lord Lovat. Was you turned out of this Land by Force, or againſt your Will?

Monro. No; I was not.

A Lord. By what Means was you diſpoſſeſſed of this Land?

Monro. I have the ſame Land yet.

Mr. Grenville. In what Capacity was you a Servant to my Lord Lovat?

Monro. I was his Blackſmith.

Mr. Grenville. Do you know the Perſon, who, you ſay, is now in Poſſeſſion of that Land?

Monro. Indeed do I.

Mr. Grenville. What is he? Is he a Servant to my Lord Lovat?

Monro. No: He is a Gentleman.

Lord Halifax. My Lords, I ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, as this Witneſs has already contradicted himſelf ſeveral times, whether he ſhould not be ordered to withdraw.

Sir J. Strange. I ſtood up to acquaint your Lordſhips, that we ſhould not inſiſt on the Examination of this Witneſs; but deſire it may be underſtood, that we only do that from the Manner of his anſwering the Queſtions which have been aſked him; and do not thereby ſubmit to the Objection that has been made againſt him by the noble Lord at the Bar.

[Then the Witneſs, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

The Duke of Newcaſtle moved to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I have moſt humbly repreſented to your Lordſhips every Day of my Trial, that I am ſo weak and feeble, that I am not able to attend your Lordſhips. I fainted away thrice this Morning, before I came up to your Lordſhips Bar; but yet was determined to ſhew my Reſpect to your Lordſhips, or die upon the Road. My Lords, it is impoſſible for me to come up in the Manner I have done for theſe Three Days paſt. I am every Day obliged to get up by Three or Four o'Clock in the Morning; and therefore I beg your Lordſhips to have Compaſſion on me, and to give me a later Hour, and a Day's Reſpite, that I may try to recover myſelf.

The Lord High Steward went back to his Chair: And then the Houſe adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament; and the Lords, and others, returned in the ſame Order as before.

The Houſe being there reſumed,

Ordered, That this Houſe will proceed further in the Trial of Simon Lord Lovat in Weſtminſter-Hall, on Friday next, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons, by Mr. Elde and Mr. Thurſton, to acquaint them therewith.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do take back the ſaid Lord Lovat, and bring him again to the Bar of this Houſe in Weſtminſter-Hall, on Friday next, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Friday the 13*th Day of* March, 1746,
The Fourth Day.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon, the Lords, and others, came from the Chamber of Parliament, in the ſame Order as on Monday laſt, into Weſtminſter-Hall: Where the Commons and their Managers were in the Seats prepared for them reſpectively, as before: And the Lords took their Places in the Court; and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

L. H. S. The Houſe is reſumed. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence; and afterwards the following Proclamation:

Serj. at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London; Bring forth your Priſoner, Simon Lord Lovat, to the Bar, purſuant to the Order of the Houſe of Lords to you directed.

The Deputy-Governor of the Tower brought the Priſoner to the Bar, in the like Form as before. And then he kneeled down.

L. H. S. Your Lordſhip may riſe.

The Lord High Steward deſired Leave to go down to the Table: And went down accordingly.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, You may proceed.

Mr. Yorke. My Lords, the next Witneſs we ſhall produce to your Lordſhips is Thomas Fraſer.

Thomas Fraser called into Court:

Mr. Yorke. My Lords, We deſire this Witneſs Thomas Fraſer may be ſworn.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, has your Lordſhip any Objection againſt Thomas Fraſer being ſworn as a Witneſs?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I have no Objection to him; but, my Lords, I am not able to riſe up, and ſit down, having been ill all Night, and am very ill now. I hope your Lordſhips will excuſe my riſing up and down.

Thomas Fraſer ſworn.

Mr. Yorke. My Lords, I would aſk this Witneſs, If he knows my Lord Lovat? And I deſire he would ſpeak out.

T. Fraſ. Yes, my Lords, as well as I do myſelf.

Mr. Yorke. How long have you known him?

T. Fraſ. Ever ſince I was a Child.

Mr. Yorke. Have you been employed to work for my Lord Lovat at any time about September 1745; and upon what Occaſion was you ſo employed? Anſwer the Queſtion diſtinctly.

T. Fraſ. No; I never was employed by him.

Mr. Yorke. Was you employed at Caſtle-Downey about that Time?

T. Fraſ. Yes, I was at Caſtle-Downey, and was employ'd by my Lord's Chamberlain.

Mr. Yorke. About what Buſineſs?

T. Fraſ. About mending ſome old Colours.

Mr. Yorke. And what elſe was you employed in?

T. Fraſ. About ſome Camp-Colours.

Mr. Yorke. Was you employed in any thing elſe?

T. Fraſ. Yes: There were ſome Bells for Arms that I was employed about.

Mr. Yorke. Who gave you Directions about making theſe Things?

T. Fraſ. John Fraſer, my Lord Lovat's Chamberlain or Steward; and he paid me for my Pains when I had done.

Mr. Yorke. At what Houſe was this Work done?

T. Fraſ. Moſt of it was done at my own Houſe at Inverneſs.

Mr. Yorke. Was none of the Work done at Caſtle-Downey?

T. Fraſ. There was a Camp-Colour, and ſome other Things, done at Caſtle-Downey.

Mr. Yorke. Whoſe Arms were put upon theſe Colours, or Bells for Arms?

T. Fraſ. There was no Arms upon them, but the Creſt of Lord Lovat's Family, the Deer's Head.

Mr. Yorke. Was that Creſt put both upon the Bell-Tents and Colours?

T. Fraſ. It was upon the Camp-Colours, and Bells of Arms.

Mr. Yorke. Were the Arms upon the Colours?

T. Fraſer. They were a Stand of old Colours that were done by Fraſer.

Mr. Yorke. Where were theſe Colours ſet up afterwards? Or, were they ſet up at all?

T. Fraſ. Yes, I ſtuck them up on the Green of Caſtle-Downey.

Mr. Yorke. Did my Lord Lovat ever ſee them there?

T. Fraſ. To my Knowledge, he never did.

Mr. Yorke. What were thoſe Bell-Tents and Colours, which you painted, intended for? What was to be the Uſe of them?

T. Fraſ. I cannot tell that, upon my Faith.

Mr. Yorke. Did my Lord Lovat know of your being employed about theſe Things?

T. Fraſ. No; he did not, to my Knowledge, as I ſhall anſwer.

Mr. Yorke. Who paid you for them?

T. Fraſ. The Chamberlain, or Steward.

Mr. Yorke. Do you think the Chamberlain would have paid you for them, without my Lord Lovat's Order?

T. Fraſ. I can't tell that: Let the Judges determine that.

Mr. Yorke. Pray who uſed to pay you for Work that you had done for my Lord Lovat before that? ---T. Fraſ. The Chamberlain.

Mr. Yorke. Was my Lord Lovat in the Houſe at the ſame Time?

T. Fraſ. Yes; he was in the Houſe: He was very ſick.

Mr. Yorke. Did you obſerve my Lord Lovat ever look at theſe Colours that you ſet up?

T. Fraſ. I ſaw him one fair Morning take a Walk upon the Green, and take an old Colour in his Hand.

Mr. Yorke. Did he ſee there the Colours which you ſet up?

T. Fraſ. Yes, the Bells of Arms and Colours.

Mr. Yorke. Did he ſay any thing to you about them?

T. Fraſ. Yes: He ſeemed to be very ill pleaſed.

Mr. Yorke. What was he ill pleaſed with?

T. Fraſ. I don't know whether it was with the Manner of doing the Work, or becauſe it was done at all.

Mr. Yorke. When his Lordſhip expreſſed himſelf ill pleaſed, did he direct you to take them away, or not?

T. Fraſ. No: They were to ſtay there till they were dried by the Wind.

Mr. Yorke. When he expreſſed himſelf to be ill pleaſed, did he order them to be taken away?

T. Fraſer. He did not ſpeak a Word to me afterwards about them.

Mr. Yorke. Do you know what became of thoſe Colours?

T. Fraſ. No: I went home to Inverneſs, which is the Place of my Reſidence: But, when I am employed by any Man, I muſt anſwer and obey.

Mr. Yorke. My Lords, We have done with this Witneſs.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Will your Lordſhip aſk this Witneſs any Queſtions?---Lord Lovat. No, my Lords.

[Then the Witneſs, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, the next Witneſs we ſhall produce is Hugh Fraſer, who was Secretary to my Lord Lovat from 1741 to 1744, when Robert Fraſer, who was before examined, became Secretary in his Room.

Hugh Fraſer was called in.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Have you any Objection to this Witneſs?

Lord Lovat. No, my Lords.

Lord Halifax. My Lords, As the noble Lord at the Bar has complained, that he is ſick and faint, I move, That your Lordſhips may diſpenſe with his riſing up.---Lords. Ay, ay.

Hugh Fraſer ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know the noble Lord at the Bar?

Hugh Fraſer. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you known him? and raiſe your Voice.

H. Fraſ. I've known my Lord Lovat for about Five Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever ſerve my Lord Lovat, and in what Capacity?

L. H. S. Raiſe your Voice, Mr. Fraſer.

Mr. Att. Gen. In what Capacity did you ſerve Lord Lovat?

H. Fraſ. I ſerved my Lord Lovat in the Capacity of a Secretary.

Mr. Att. Gen. When did you firſt come into his Service? and when did you quit it?

H. Fraſ. I came into Lord Lovat's Service in April or May 1741, and left it towards the End of December 1744.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give an Account to my Lords, whether you was at Edinburgh in the Month of September 1745?---H. Fraſ. I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know one William Fraſer of Belnain? Was he then at Edinburgh?

H. Fraſ. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you and he any, and what, Converſation together? And did you come to any Reſolution upon it, in order to your going to my Lord Lovat's?

H. Fraſ. I had a Converſation with Mr. Fraſer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you Two come to any Reſolution together concerning your going to my Lord Lovat's, in relation to his Son the Maſter of Lovat?---H. Fraſ. We did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pleaſe to tell my Lords what that Reſolution or Agreement between you was.

H. Fraſ. The Reſolution between Mr. Fraſer and me was this, That as there had, at that Time, a Rebellion broke out in the North of Scotland, it was agreed between us to be proper, that I ſhould go into the North Country, in order to converſe with my Lord Lovat upon the Subject of his Son's going out of Scotland, to avoid any Cenſure, or wrong Interpretation that might be put upon his Conduct, as he was then in that Country.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you and this Fraſer, at that Time, any Apprehenſions that he might be prevailed upon to go into the Rebellion?

H. Fraſ. We had no Grounds for any Apprehenſions, further than the ſpreading Contagion there was at that Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Propoſals made by William Fraſer, or you, to prevent his being infected with that Contagion?

H. Fraſ. The Propoſal made by Mr. Fraſer, and agreed to by me, was, that he ſhould be removed, and go abroad.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you, or did you not, propoſe that he ſhould go abroad?

H. Fraſ. The Thing was unanimous: I don't know which of us propoſed it.

Mr. Att. Gen. To what Place was he to go?

H. Fraſ. We intended that he ſhould go to Leiden.

Mr. Att. Gen. At whoſe Expence was he to go to Leiden?

H. Fraſ. The Expence in the End was to fall on my Lord Lovat; but it was to be defrayed by Mr. Fraſer for a Year, to be advanced by him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was agreed upon, with reſpect to making any Propoſals of this Kind to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fraſ. It was agreed, That it ſhould be propoſed to my Lord Lovat, and his Son; and was not to be done without my Lord's Conſent.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it agreed upon, that you ſhould go to my Lord Lovat upon this Propoſal?

H. Fraſ. Yes; it was.

Mr. Att. Gen. And did you go to him?---H. Fraſ. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. And did you deliver the Meſſage to him?

H. Fraſ. I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what Anſwer did he give you?

H. Fraſ. He approved very much of the Propoſal, and agreed to the Thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did he continue in that Agreement to this Propoſal?

H. Fraſ. Some Days after, he ſaid, He did not think it quite ſo convenient a Thing; and that he had altered his Mind in regard to That.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did he ſay any thing concerning his Intention about the Maſter his Son's going into the Rebellion?

H. Fraſ. He communicated his Deſign to me, when he talked to me on the Subject; which was, that the Maſter ſhould.

Mr. Att. Gen. Should do what?

H. Fraſ. Should go into the Rebellion; that is, to head the Clan of the Fraſers.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear my Lord Lovat ſay any thing, or no, concerning his own Intentions originally to head the Clan in the Rebellion?

H. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat told me then, That he had intended to head them himſelf; but that he had altered his Reſolution.

Mr. Att. Gen. For what Purpoſe, or with what View, did he alter his Reſolution?

H. Fraſ. In order to ſtay himſelf at home, I ſuppoſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. And who was intended to go in his room?

H. Fraſ. I ſaid before, That the Maſter was to head the Fraſers.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you mean, by ſaying he altered his Reſolution, that he had reſolved the Maſter ſhould go?

H. Fraſ. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear my Lord Lovat ſay any thing concerning the Number of Men that he had thought might have been raiſed, or that would riſe?

H. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat did talk to me of a greater Number of Men he thought might be raiſed, than was likely to riſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Number did he mention?

H. Fraſ. If I remember right, he talked of Four or Five thouſand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he give any Reaſon, in relation to his Reſolution, concerning the Maſter's going out, inſtead of himſelf?

H. Fraſ. He told me, That he had once intended to have headed them himſelf, in Expectation that there would be a Riſing of Four or Five thouſand Men; but, as that was not then likely to happen, he intended that the Maſter of Lovat ſhould go with the Clan, to head them.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords; If he, at that Time, told you of any Disappointment he met with from other People?

H. Fras. He talked in general, That some People had not acted up to their Engagements, or to that Purpose.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords, If you remember the Time when the Battle of Preston-Pans happened?

H. Fras. Yes: I remember the Time very well.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you at Castle-Downey after, or before that?

H. Fras. After that Battle.

Mr. At. Gen. How long were you there after that Battle?

H. Fras. It may be about Eight Days after.

Mr. At. Gen. Did any body come to Castle-Downey when you was there, and give an Account to my Lord Lovat of that Battle; and who was it?

H. Fras. There were several Gentlemen came to Castle-Downey while I was there; who said they had been in that Action.

Mr. At. Gen. What did they say concerning it?

H. Fras. What they said of it was, giving a History of the Matter of Fact.

Mr. At. Gen. Who did they give the History to?

H. Fras. To the Company, where I was present: I don't know to whom in particular.

Mr. At Gen. Was Lord Lovat present at any Conversation of that Kind?---H Fras. I do not doubt but he was.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember whether he was, or not?

H. Fras. I believe he was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you hear Lord Lovat say any Thing, and what, concerning that Battle?

H. Fras. I remember to have heard my Lord Lovat say, That it was a Victory obtained, not to be paralleled in History.

Mr. At. Gen. I beg you will give an Account to their Lordships, Who the Persons were that came to my Lord Lovat's with this Account of the Battle? Please to name them.

H. Fras. That they came with an Account of the Battle, is more than I can say.

Mr. At. Gen. Who were the Persons that told it? and who were there?

H. Fras. Mac Donald of Barisdale was there,

Mr. At. Gen. Was any other Person there?

H. Fras. There were with him Servants, and one Gentleman, I think, that was in Company.

Mr. At. Gen. Was young Glengarie there?

H. Fras. Yes: The Son of Glengarie was there.

Mr. At. Gen. Were Barisdale and Glengarie in the Rebellion, or no?

H. Fras. So they said themselves.

Mr. At. Gen. Are these the Persons that said they had been in the Battle?

H. Fras. They said they had been there; and gave an Account of their own Conduct in it.

Mr. At. Gen. What did they say they came Northward for?

H. Fras. That they told their real Business, I cannot affirm. What they gave out was, That they intended to levy more Men, in order to prosecute the Affair they had undertaken.

Mr. At. Gen. What Affair do you understand that to have been?

H. Fras. The Rebellion, sure enough.

Mr. At. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat present, or no, at the Time when they declared what they came into the North for?

H. Fras. He must have been present; because, where I heard them speak of it, was in his Room.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember my Lord Lovat said any Thing, and what, upon his being told of the Views of Barisdale and Glengarie's coming into the North?

H. Fras. He said, They might raise Five thousand Men: And I don't remember I heard him say any more upon this Subject.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did you continue at Castle-Downey this Time that you went there?

H. Fras. For a matter of Twelve or Fourteen Days, I believe, at first.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did you go to when you went from Castle-Downey?---H. Fraser. I returned to Edinburgh.

Mr. At. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat charge you with any Thing to be communicated at Edinburgh, as from him?

H. Fras. I am sorry to say he did.

Mr. At. Gen. What was that Charge my Lord Lovat gave you to communicate? and to whom was you to communicate it?

H. Fras. What my Lord Lovat gave me in Charge to communicate, was in Import, the Conversation I before mentioned to have passed at Castle-Downey, That he had once intended to have raised and headed such a Number of Men as I mentioned.

Mr. At. Gen. What Number was that?

H. Fras. Four or Five thousand, the Number I have mentioned already.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray give an Account to my Lords, of the Remainder of the Messages which my Lord Lovat sent by you to Edinburgh.

H. Fras. It was this: That he intended to have headed such a Number of Men; but that his Age and Infirmities would not allow him to do that; and that he had resolved his Son should head the Frasers, and go into the Rebellion.

Mr. At. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat add any Thing to what you have now mentioned? Did he give any Reason why he chose to send his Son rather than go himself?

H. Fras. I have given the Reason already: To the best of my Remembrance, that was the principal Reason.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he give any other? Did he mention any Thing relating to his Marks of Affection for the Cause?

H. Fras. He said, the Master of Lovat's going, for whom he had such Regard, was a greater Mark of his Attachment and Affection, than if he had gone himself.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he, at that Time, mention any Thing of the Danger there might be of his going himself personally? and what Danger was it?

H. Fras. He talked much of the Inconvenience and Danger that would attend it; and mentioned the Inconvenience of crossing the Forth; and that it could be done no other Way than by the Bridge of Stirling.

A Lord. I desire to know to whom the Message was sent?

Mr. At. Gen. I intended to ask the Question the noble Lord mentions. You were giving an Account of some Inconveniences that Lord Lovat had mentioned; go on with it.

H. Fras. I have given the Reason why he did not go himself; I mentioned Stirling Bridge; and that he said it was impossible for him to cross the Forth elsewhere; and that might be very dangerous to him.

Mr. At. Gen. To whom did he charge you with that Message? or to whom was it to be delivered?---H. Fras. To the Pretender's Son.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you, or did you not, deliver that Message to the Pretender's Son?---H. Fras. I did deliver it to him.

Mr. At. Gen. What Answer did the Pretender's Son give you to it?

H. Fras. The Answer he gave, was no more than that it was very well; or to that Purpose.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was it gave that Answer to you?

H. Fras. The Pretender's Son.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did you continue at Edinburgh after this, before you went from thence?

H. Fras. I continued at Edinburgh from that Time, which was the Time of my Arrival from the North, in the Beginning of October, till the Beginning of November after.

Mr. At. Gen. Before you left Edinburgh, did any Person, in Behalf of the Pretender's Son, come to you, and who, in order to employ you upon any Message to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. I left Edinburgh twice; which of the Times is meant?

Mr. At. Gen. When you left Edinburgh at the Beginning of November.

H. Fras. Before I left Edinburgh in November, I was called upon by one who appeared to me to be in the Service of the Pretender, and by him carried to Holyrood-House.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was at Holyrood-House then?

H. Fras. The Pretender's Son was the principal Tenant.

Mr. At. Gen. When you came to Holyrood-House, who was the Person you was brought before? and what Conversation passed between you?

H. Fras. I was brought before Mr. Murray.

Mr. At. Gen. Who is he?

H. Fraser. John Murray of Broughton, who then took upon him the Name of Secretary to the Pretender's Son.

Mr. At. Gen. Was any body with Mr. Murray at the Time you had this Meeting with him, when you went to Holyrood-House?

H. Fras. There were two or three Gentlemen in the House.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you name them?---H. Fras. Some of them I can.

Mr. At. Gen. Who were they?---H. Fras. Cameron of Lochiel was one.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was there else?

H. Fras. Mac Donald, and Stuart of Ardshields; these Three were in the Room with Mr. Murray.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Mac Donald of Keppoch there?---H. Fras. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. What did Mr. Murray say to you upon that Occasion?

H. Fras. He told me, that there had been a Letter intercepted from the North, which was directed to me; and that he understood, from that Letter, that it was owing to me that the Frasers had not already marched.

Mr. At. Gen. Marched whither?

H. Fras. Marched, and gone into the Rebellion; and that the Letter bore, that none of them would march till I should go into the North Country.

Mr. At. Gen. Was any Thing said concerning my Lord Lovat upon that Occasion?

H. Fras. I believe Mr. Murray told me, that he had heard from a Gentleman who was one of their own Party, that my Lord Lovat was very well disposed towards supporting the Cause.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he say any Thing concerning my Lord Lovat's Intention to raise Men, or no?---H. Fras. I can't tell.

Mr. At. Gen. In the Letter was any Thing of it mentioned?

H. Fras. The Letter I never saw: it was not given to me: I asked for a Sight of the Letter, and asked from whom it was written; and they told me it was from one of the Frasers.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you give any Answer to this, or no?

H. Fras. The Answer I gave was, That it was a Misrepresentation of me, and a Falshood.

Mr. At. Gen. In what respect was it a Misrepresentation?

H. Fras. Because the moving, or not moving, of the Frasers, no way depended on me.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to give an Account, and go on with what passed between Mr. Murray and you.

H. Fras. Mr. Murray said, That it was possible it might be so; but that it was necessary for the Vindication of my Character, that I should go into the North Country.

Mr. At. Gen. Go on.

H. Fras. I told him, that my Business would not allow me to do it.

Mr. At. Gen. What was agreed upon then?

H. Fras. That I should write such an Account of the Situation of the Rebel Army at Edinburgh, as he then gave me; and they would be satisfied with such Account.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you, or did you not, agree to this?

H. Fras. I did agree to it.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the Consequence of that Agreement?

H. Fras. I agreed to it, and obtained a Pass for the Bearer of it; and, in Consequence of that Pass, I meant to send what I took to be the real State of the Matter on both Sides.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you, or did you not write, according to this Proposal?

H. Fraser. I went to write, and was about doing it, when I was called upon a second Time by the same Person who had called upon me before, and was brought by him to the same Place.

Mr. At. Gen. What passed when you was thus brought back to the same Place?

H. Fras. I was told that Writing would not do, but I must go myself.

L. H. S. Who told you so?---H. Fras. Mr. Murray.

Mr. At. Gen.

Mr. At. Gen. Be pleaſed to inform their Lordſhips, what was done upon that. Did you, or did you not agree to go?

H. Fraſ. In the End, I did agree to it, becauſe I underſtood, if I had not, I muſt have expected a worſe Service.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the Meſſage you was to go upon?

H. Fraſ. The Meſſage I was charged with was to give ſuch an Account of their own Situation as they had given me.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you charged with any Letter for my Lord Lovat? and from whom?

H. Fraſ. There was a Letter from Mr, John Murray delivered to me, and directed to my Lord Lovat.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it delivered to you open or ſealed?

H. Fraſ. The Letter was open when it was delivered to me.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you or did you not read it?

H. Fraſ. I did read it.

Mr. At. Gen. Who delivered it to you?

H. Fraſ. Mr. Murray.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, give an Account to my Lords of the Contents of that Letter that was thus delivered to you by Mr. Murray.

H. Fraſ. The Import, or Contents of the Letter, was, to the beſt of my Remembrance, that Mr. Murray was extremely glad of the Accounts he had received, with reſpect to my Lord Lovat's Intentions; and that he begged of him to perſevere in them; and that he earneſtly deſired, that the Fraſers ſhould march forthwith: And I think, to the beſt of my Remembrance, there was a Route directed for them.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any Place mentioned where they were to meet the Army?

H. Fraſ. The Place where it was intended, according to that Route, they ſhould join the Rebel Army, was about Moffat or Carliſle.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you go with that Letter or not to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fraſ. I went into the North Country; and ſome time after my Arrival at that Place, I delivered that Letter.

Mr. At. Gen. To whom did you deliver that Letter?

H. Fraſ. To my Lord Lovat.

Mr. At. Gen. When you delivered Lord Lovat that Letter, did you give him any Account of the Situation either of the Rebels, or the King's Army, or of the Affairs relating to the Rebellion?

H. Fraſ. I gave him the Account, which I intended to have wrote, of the Situation on both Sides of the Queſtion, ſo far as I knew of it.

Mr. At. Gen. What was that Repreſentation that you made, and did, in Fact, deliver or give to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fraſ. The Repreſentation I delivered to my Lord Lovat at that time was this, That with reſpect to the Government, there were above 21 Battalions of Forces arrived from Flanders: That there were two Regiments arrived from Ireland: That the Dutch Auxiliaries were expected: And that the Rebels did not ſeem to be a Party ſufficient, according to their Number, to engage with ſuch a Number of regular and well-diſciplined Forces.

Mr. At. Gen. What did my Lord Lovat ſay to this Repreſentation of yours, that you thus made to him?

H. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat ſaid, that he conceived what I had ſaid, with reſpect to the Situation of Affairs on both Sides of the Queſtion, to be very true.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he ſay, as the Conſequence of that Belief of his?

H. Fraſ. He further ſaid,—But that he thought himſelf too far engaged to look back.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he ſay any thing elſe relating to that Matter?

H. Fraſ. Yes, I believe it was Part of the Converſation, that he forbid me to mention or intimate any thing of the Converſation that had thus paſſed between us to his Son.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you tell the Reaſon why he was unwilling that his Son ſhould know of it?

H. Fraſ. As for the Reaſon, that muſt depend upon my own Conjecture, ſince Lord Lovat expreſſed none.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you continue at my Lord Lovat's Houſe after this for any, and what Time?

H. Fraſ. I continued from my Arrival there, which was the Beginning of November, till the Middle or towards the End of December.

Mr. At. Gen. You had by that an Opportunity of ſeeing ſome of my Lord Lovat's Conduct, and hearing his Converſation: Pleaſe to give an Account to my Lords, whether there was any Rendezvous of the Fraſers, my Lord Lovat's Clan, during the Time you were there?

H. Fraſ. I heard there was a Rendezvous before I came into the Country; but I was preſent at none, nor ſaw any while I was there. I ſuppoſe by the Word Rendezvous, you mean a Gathering of Men.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you ever ſeen any of them?

H. Fraſ. I never ſaw an univerſal one, or general one: Perhaps I might ſee forty or fifty Men together at a Time.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you ſeen forty or fifty Men at a Time gathered together there, as a Body of Men in Arms?

H. Fraſ. No, I cannot ſay I did ſee, or was preſent at any Gathering of Men in Arms.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever ſee a Liſt of the Officers appointed out of my Lord Lovat's Clan?

H. Fraſ. I have ſeen ſuch a Liſt.

Mr. At. Gen. By whom was that Liſt ſhewn to you?

H. Fraſ. It was ſhewn to me by the Maſter of Lovat.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know, whether my Lord Lovat ſaw that Liſt?

H. Fraſ. I do not know that, indeed.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you yourſelf appointed or named as one of the Officers in that Liſt?

H. Fraſ. I was.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the Office or Poſt you had there?

H Fraſ. I was named there a Captain-Lieutenant.

Mr. At. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat call you by that Name or Title, or by any other, after this Time?

H. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat has called me by that Name after this.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it or was it not the uſual Name he called you by?

H. Fraſ. Yes, very often.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he ever call you by the Name of Captain before that Time?

H. Fraſ. No.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you underſtand by your being called by that Name by my Lord Lovat? Did you underſtand by that, that he looked upon you as a Captain or Officer in his Son's Regiment?

H. Fraſ. I underſtood by that, that my Lord Lovat apprehended it was ſo wrote in that Liſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat underſtand by it, and ſo expreſs himſelf, that you were actually a Captain, as well as wrote ſo in that Liſt?

H. Fraſ. Actually a Captain I was not; he could not underſtand what was not, becauſe as I had not undertaken or done any thing, all the Foundation he had for calling me Captain, was owing to my Name being in that Liſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you had any Converſation with my Lord Lovat concerning his Diſſatisfaction at his Son's Backwardneſs in raiſing the Fraſers?

H. Fraſ. I have heard my Lord Lovat complain ſometimes of his Son's Backwardneſs to raiſe the Clan, and ſometimes of his too much Forwardneſs.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever hear him ſay any thing concerning the Conſequence of this Engagement of his in the Rebellion, in reſpect to himſelf?

H. Fraſ. I have heard him ſay, that he apprehended the Conduct of his Clan, upon this Occaſion, would be his Ruin, and very probably coſt him his Life.

Mr. At. Gen. I beg you will inform their Lordſhips, whether the Officers of this Clan, or of the Maſter of Lovat's Regiment, did or did not to live or dine with my Lord Lovat?

H. Fraſ. I have dined at my Lord Lovat's Table ſeveral Times, with the Officers who were named in that Liſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever hear the Pretender's Son ſpoken of at Dinner, or at any other Time, in my Lord Lovat's Houſe?

H. Fraſ. Any particular Converſation, with reſpect to the Pretender's Son, I cannot recollect; but that he has been ſpoken of, there is little Reaſon to doubt, becauſe it was the Topick of Converſation in all the Country.

Mr. At. Gen. By what Name or Title was the Pretender's Son uſually called, in the Converſation between my Lord Lovat and thoſe Officers?

H. Fraſ. To the Converſation between my Lord Lovat and thoſe Officers, I cannot anſwer; but in the Converſation upon that Subject, in my Lord Lovat's Preſence, I can ſay he was called Prince Charles.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, my Lords, I will beg Leave to aſk the Witneſs concerning another Matter of Fact: Did you ever hear my Lord Lovat ſay any thing concerning a Patent to create him Duke of Fraſer, by the Pretender?

H. Fraſ. I have heard him ſay there was ſuch a thing in being.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he ever ſay, whether he had or had not ſeen the original Patent, or any Copy of it?

H. Fraſ. He did not ſay that he had ſeen the Patent; I think he ſaid he had never ſeen it.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever hear him ſay any Thing concerning any Copy of it which he had?

H. Fraſ. He ſhewed me half a Sheet of Paper, whereon was wrote what had been ſhewn or given to him, as a Copy of ſuch a Patent.

Mr. At. Gen. What Patent do you mean?

H. Fraſ. The Patent to create him a Duke.

Mr. At. Gen. By whom was that Patent ſaid to be granted?

H. Fraſ. The Copy that I ſaw was in the Name of one whom I took to be the Old Pretender, who called himſelf James the VIIIth.

Mr. At. Gen. How was that ſubſcribed, do you recollect?

H. Fraſ. I don't remember it was ſubſcribed, or ſuperſcribed.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any Name at the Top of it?

H. Fraſ. I really cannot ſay.

Mr. At. Gen. That Copy which you ſaw, by whom was it ſhewn to you?

H. Fraſ. It was ſhewed me by my Lord Lovat.

Mr. At. Gen. You was ſaying, that you continued with my Lord Lovat, from the ſecond Time you came to Caſtle-Downey, to the latter End of December: Pleaſe to inform their Lordſhips, if during that Interval of Time, any of the Men of the Fraſers did actually march, in order to go to the Pretender's Army, or to join them?

H. Fraſ. Yes; there were Men that marched: About ſix or ſeven Companies of Men marched about ſix or ſeven Miles from their own Country, to an adjacent Country.

Mr. At. Gen. What Place was that they went to?

H. Fraſ. It was a Place called Urquhart.

Mr. At. Gen. What became of thoſe Men? How far did they march?

H. Fraſ. I ſaid before, about ſix or ſeven Miles.

Mr. At. Gen. Were they afterwards recalled?

H. Fraſ. They were.

Mr. At. Gen. Who were they recalled by?

H. Fraſ. They were recalled by a Letter from my Lord Lovat, directed to his Son, the Maſter of Lovat.

Mr. At. Gen. Did, or did not, they comply with that Letter which recalled them?

H. Fraſ. The Son complied; and they, in Conſequence, I ſuppoſe, complied with the Son's Orders.

Mr. At. Gen. Did the whole Clan comply?

H. Fraſ. All, except about 25 of them.

Mr. At. Gen. Did they return to their own Habitations?

H. Fraſ. They returned.

Mr. At. Gen. At or about what Time was this?

H. Fraſ. I believe it was in the Month of November.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, Sir, I would aſk you, Did you take it, that the Maſter of Lovat marched with them, by Order of my Lord Lovat; or was it out of his own Head that he thus marched?

H. Fraſer. The Men had marched, and were in that Country, before the Maſter of Lovat went from Caſtle-Downey: When he went from Caſtle-Downey, it was not with a View to proceed upon that March, in caſe he ſhould be able to prevail on the Men to return. I went along with the Maſter; and after we came where the Men were, we called the Officers together, and propoſed to them that they ſhould return: The only Reaſon we gave them for this Advice was, a Storm of Snow which then fell, and which would probably render their March very troubleſome: But, by the Influence of Mac Donald of Bariſdale, it was carried againſt the Maſter's Sentiments that they ſhould march. Upon that Reſolution, I returned to Caſtle-Downey; and a few Hours after my Return, my Lord Lovat wrote the Letter I mentioned himſelf; which occaſioned their coming back.

Mr. At. Gen. Pleaſe to inform their Lordſhips, whether you was ſent at any Time, by my Lord Lovat, to the Preſident of the Seſſion of Scotland: Or mention firſt, if my Lord Preſident was at Inverneſs.

H. Fraſ. He then was at his own Houſe at Culloden.

Mr. At. Gen. Was my Lord Loudon there?

H. Fraſ. He was at Inverneſs.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you ſent by my Lord Lovat to the Lord Preſident, or to my Lord Loudon, with any, and what Meſſage?

H. Fraſ. I was ſent by my Lord Lovat to my Lord Preſident and my Lord Loudon both.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the Meſſage that you was ſent with?

H. Fraſ. The Intention of the Meſſage was, to ſee to diſcover from thoſe Gentlemen, what would be the Reſult of the Fraſers marching, and going into the Rebellion.

Mr. At. Gen. Was that the Intention of the Meſſage?

H. Fraſ. Yes; it was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you carry any Letter or Letters from my Lord Lovat to the Lord Preſident, or my Lord Loudon?

H. Fraſ. There was a Letter I carried from my Lord Lovat to the Lord Preſident.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know what was the Contents of that Letter? Did you read it?

H. Fraſ. I did.

Mr. At. Gen. What were the Contents of it?

H. Fraſ. The Contents of it were, informing my Lord Preſident, That the Maſter of Lovat had gone off in a headſtrong Way, and carried the Fraſers into the Rebellion.

Mr. At. Gen. What did my Lord Lovat mean by the Word headſtrong?

H. Fraſ. I ſuppoſe he meant, that it was contrary to his Advice.

Mr. At. Gen. When you came to my Lord Preſident, did you deliver that Letter?——H. Fraſ. Yes; I did.

Mr. At. Gen. What Anſwer did my Lord Preſident give to it?

H. Fraſ. He told me by Word of Mouth, That the Conſequence that would ariſe to my Lord Lovat from ſuch a Step taken by his Clan, would in all Probability be the Seizing of his Perſon, and making an Inquiry into his Conduct.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you, or did you not, return with that Anſwer of my Lord Preſident, and deliver it to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fraſ. I returned with that Anſwer of Lord Preſident, and with an Anſwer to the ſame Purpoſe from my Lord Loudon; and delivered them both to my Lord Lovat.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you likewiſe charged with a Letter from my Lord Preſident to Lord Lovat?

H. Fraſ. My Lord Preſident did write to my Lord Lovat, in Return to his Letter.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſee that Letter?

H. Fraſ. I ſaw it.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you give my Lords an Account of the Contents of it?

H. Fraſ. The Import of it was what I already told their Lordſhips.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you, or did you not, go to my Lord Lovat with thoſe Meſſages and this Letter?——H. Fraſ. I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Before you delivered this Letter, or theſe Meſſages, had you any Meeting with the Maſter of Lovat?

H. Fraſ. I had a Meeting with the Maſter of Lovat upon the Way. It was concerted between him and me before I ſet out upon that Meſſage, that he ſhould meet me privately by the Way in my Return, in order to know what paſſed between my Lord Preſident and me, and my Lord Loudon and me.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you that Meeting before your Return?

H. Fraſ. Yes, I had.

Mr. At. Gen. What paſſed between you Two at that Meeting?

H. Fraſ. I made a Report to the Maſter of Lovat of all the Converſation I had with thoſe two Gentlemen.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any thing concerted or agreed between you Two upon that Occaſion?

H. Fraſ. The Reſult of our comparing our Sentiments on that Meeting was, that the Maſter of Lovat, if it was poſſible, ſhould be got immediately ſent over to Holland; and that the Scheme which he had propoſed ſome Months before, ſhould then be put in Execution, with reſpect to the Maſter of Lovat's following his Education at Leiden, or ſome other Univerſity in the Low Countries.

Mr. At. Gen. What Anſwer did you return to my Lord Lovat in regard to theſe Meſſages?

H. Fraſ. I reported what was agreed upon between the Maſter and me, and agreeable to my Lord Preſident's Letter, and to my Lord Loudon's verbal Meſſage by me: I ſay, we had agreed, that there was a Report to be made agreeable to this Reſolution between the Maſter and me, to my Lord Lovat.

Mr. At. Gen. Pleaſe to inform their Lordſhips, in the firſt Place, Whether you delivered my Lord Preſident's Letter to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fraſ. I did.

Mr. At. Gen. And did you make a Report to my Lord Lovat, according to what was agreed upon between his Son and you?——H. Fraſ. I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Pleaſe to repeat them again to my Lords; and ſtate what was the Meſſage you delivered to my Lord Lovat, beſides the Letter.

H. Fraſ. The Report I delivered to my Lord Lovat, beſides delivering the Letter, was this, That it was my Lord Preſident's Belief, that an Order would be immediately ſent down from London for the ſeizing his Perſon, and inquiring into his Conduct; and that it was my Lord Loudon's Determination to put that Order in Execution, as ſoon as ever it came into his Hands.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you recollect any thing more concerning it? Do you remember whether it was to be put in Execution, in caſe the Fraſers did, or in caſe they did not march?

H. Fraſ. In caſe the Fraſers did march.

Mr. At. Gen. Is this the whole Subſtance of the Report that you made to Lord Lovat?——H. Fraſ. Yes, ſo far as I remember.

Mr. At. Gen. What Anſwer did my Lord Lovat make you upon that Occaſion?

H. Fraſ. When I made the Report, I do not remember any particular Converſation that paſſed upon it.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he give you any Anſwer to it at any other Time? and when?

H. Fraſ. There was a Converſation between us ſoon after about it: I believe it was the next Day after my Return to Caſtle-Downey.

Mr. At. Gen. What did my Lord Lovat then ſay to you relating to thoſe Meſſages, or to that Report which you made?

H. Fraſ. I believe my Lord Lovat ſaid, That he thought the Report of ſecuring his Perſon, and inquiring into his Conduct, was to be conſidered rather as a Bugbear.

Mr. At. Gen. Was the Maſter of Lovat preſent at that Time?

H. Fraſ. Yes, he was.

Mr. At. Gen. What did my Lord Lovat ſay to his Son upon that Occaſion?

H. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat told his Son what I have already ſaid, That he looked upon it to be rather a Bugbear: And that it was his Opinion, he ſhould proceed in the Undertaking he was engaged in.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he, upon that Occaſion, give or make any Orders concerning what was to be done?

H. Fraſ. Yes, that the Men ſhould march immediately.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he give any Orders for it?

H. Fraſ. Not in the Way of an Order.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he ſay upon the Occaſion?

H. Fraſ. That it was his Opinion, That the Men ſhould march immediately.

Mr. At. Gen. What Men did you underſtand by that, were to march immediately?

H. Fraſ. The Clan of the Fraſers:

Mr. At. Gen. What March did you underſtand it was to be? Or, whither were they to march?

H. Fraſ. To join the Rebel Army.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any other Company preſent at this Converſation, beſides my Lord Lovat, and the Maſter, and you?

H. Fraſ. Yes, there were two other Gentlemen.

Mr. At. Gen. Did Lord Lovat then ſay any thing to them concerning it, by way of aſking their Opinion, or their Agreement to it?

H. Fraſ. He aſked the Opinion of all the Gentlemen preſent, after he had given his own, by ſaying, That it was his Opinion; and that he hoped all the Gentlemen preſent agreed to it.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you underſtand by that?

H. Fraſ. That he hoped all preſent agreed to the Opinion which he had delivered himſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you give any Anſwer to that? or any Opinion concerning it?——H. Fraſ. Yes, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. What was it?

H. Fraſ. So far as I remember, the Anſwer I made was, That my Opinion had not been aſked; but that, notwithſtanding that, I thought myſelf obliged to give it: And it was this, That if the Affair could not be entirely dropped, that it ſhould be put off for ſome Time.

Mr. At. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat give any Anſwer to that?

H. Fraſ. When I ſaid, That my Opinion had not been aſked, he told me, That ſome People's Opinion might be eaſily read in their Countenances, or Words to that Purpoſe.

Mr. At. Gen. What Anſwer did you make upon that?

H. Fraſ. The Anſwer I have already given.

Mr. At. Gen. What Anſwer did Lord Lovat give as to the putting off the March for a while?

H. Fraſ. No Anſwer at all; ſo far as I remember. The Maſter of Lovat, upon that, burſt out into Tears; and ſaid, He had been made a Fool of, and a Tool from firſt to laſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he ſay any Thing more?

H. Fraſ. Yes; he ſaid, That he had been one Day doing, and another Day undoing; but that now he was determined, that whatſoever Reſolution Lord Lovat ſhould come to, that he would execute it; let the Conſequence be what it would with reſpect to himſelf, and other People.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any Thing more paſſed? Did Lord Lovat ſay any Thing upon this Occaſion?

H. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat ſaid, That he had given his Opinion already; and that he would not alter it; or to that Effect.

Mr. At. Gen. You have ſeen my Lord Lovat and his Son pretty often together, and were at his Houſe for two or three Months together; pray what was your Opinion as to the Backwardneſs of the Maſter of Lovat? or as to his Obedience or Diſobedience to his Father, in reſpect to his going into the Rebellion? Do you think that the Maſter was guilty of Obſtinacy and Diſobedience to his Father in going into the Rebellion? or that, by ſo doing, he complied with his Father's Orders and Inclinations?

H. Fraſ. If I am to form my Opinion, with reſpect to the Maſter of Lovat, upon his own good Senſe and Underſtanding, or his avowed Principles, I ſhould apprehend, that he would not have gone into the Rebellion, had he been left to himſelf: And if I am to form my Opinion upon the private Converſation I had with him, and particularly one, which I remember I had in Urquhart; I ſay, if I am to form my Opinion upon what he declared with reſpect to his Intentions and Sentiments declared to me, it is my Belief, that he would not have had any Concern in this Rebellion, had he been entirely left to himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire to ask you, Sir, Whether, from your Knowledge of the Situation of the Clan of the Frasers, and of the Power and Influence which either my Lord Lovat or the Master had over them, do you think, that the Master of Lovat could have raised the Clan, without the Concurrence and Order of my Lord Lovat?

H. Fraser. I believe, had the Lord Lovat and the Master acted in direct Opposition the one to the other, that the Clan would have been divided; and Part would have gone with one, and Part with the other; but what Part to either of them, is what I cannot determine.

Mr. Att. Gen. About what Time was it that the News came first to Castle Downey of the Landing of Lord John Drummond with Soldiers from France?

H. Fras. It was about a Day before I went to my Lord President, or that Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire to know, Whether, in your Opinion, that News had any Influence to determine my Lord Lovat's Conduct at that Time?

H. Fras. I cannot take upon me to say what it was that determined my Lord Lovat's Conduct.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear my Lord Lovat say any Thing about that particular Event of Lord John Drummond's landing then?

H. Fras. I have heard my Lord Lovat report what Intelligence had been returned to him on account of that Landing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords when the Master of Lovat and the Frasers did march? and where they marched to?

H. Fras. Some Part of the Frasers marched at one Time, and some at another: Some of them marched a short Time after this Conversation passed between my Lord Lovat and the Master, at which I was present.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did they march first?

H. Fras. They marched first to Perth; but the Master of Lovat did not go along with them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat know, or not know, of their marching?——H. Fras. That I don't know of my own Knowledge; but that my Lord Lovat must have heard of their March, is certain.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they, or did they not, march against his Orders?

H. Fras. Truly that is what I cannot easily answer: He certainly gave Orders for them not to march sometimes, and it was sometimes given out, that he gave Orders for their marching; but I did not see either of these Orders.

Mr. Att. Gen. Please to give my Lords an Account when the Frasers did march to Perth; and be as correct as you can.

H. Fras. The Times that they marched were different.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they march in large Numbers?

H. Fras. They marched in very small Numbers, not, I believe, above fifty at a Time; and the Number that marched in all was but very small.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Number do you suppose might march?

H. Fras. When they were strongest at Perth, they were between Two and Three Hundred at most.

Mr. Att. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords, Whether my Lord Lovat was apprehended by Lord Loudon's, or my Lord President's Order? and when?

H. Fras. The next Morning after the Conversation passed between the Lord Lovat and the Master, as I mentioned already, I left Castle-Downey.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were the Frasers then gone, or were they going to Perth?

H. Fras. I believe there were none of them gone at that time; but I cannot say that I remember positively; but their March was then resolv'd on.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember when it was precisely that you came from my Lord President's to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. I do not remember the precise Day of the Month.

Mr. Att. Gen. About what Time of the Month was it?

H. Fras. I dare say it must be about the Beginning of December.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say, That you went to Perth with the Master of Lovat; pray who was with you?

H. Fras. The Master and I went to Perth by ourselves alone.

Mr. Att. Gen. When you came there, where was the Body of the Rebel Army?

H. Fraser. I believe it was in England.

Mr. Att. Gen. How soon after that did they come into Scotland again?

H. Fras. About Two or Three Weeks at most, after the Master and I had got to Perth, there came an Account, that the Rebel Army had returned to Glasgow.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Orders from the Pretender's Son about marching?

H. Fras. There were Orders given by Mr. Murray, that the Rebel Forces should march to Stirling, to join those coming from Glasgow.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the Frasers go thither?

H. Fras. They did.

Mr. Att. Gen. How far did they go?

H. Fras. To Stirling.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Message sent to Glasgow, or any Place thereabouts, by the Master of Lovat, relating to the Frasers?

H. Fras. Yes, there was: It was sent from Perth to Glasgow.

Mr. Att. Gen. For what Purpose was it sent?

H. Fras. In order to procure Firelocks for the Frasers.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you yourself go to Glasgow?

H. Fras. I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. To whom did you apply there?

H. Fras. To Mr. John Murray.

Mr. Att. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords what was the Effect of that Application of yours?

H. Fras. The Effect of it was, that an Order was sent to Lord John Drummond, in the Name of one that called himself the French Ambassador, that Lord John Drummond should deliver Arms for the Frasers out of the Arms that he had in Charge, that were the King of France's Arms, as he himself said.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did you stay at Glasgow?

H. Fras. About Twenty-four Hours.

Mr. Att. Gen. Before your Return from thence, had you any Conversation or Meeting with Mr. Murray of Broughton, the Pretender's Secretary?

H. Fras. I called upon him there, and saw him in his own Room.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Import of your Conversation at that Meeting?

H. Fras. The Business that brought me there was, to desire him to send the Arms I mentioned.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that the only Subject of your Conversation?

H. Fras. No: We talked with respect to the Situation of Matters in the North Country, and with respect to the Imprisonment of my Lord Lovat, and his Escape from Inverness, which I had then heard of.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Proposal then made concerning the Army's going into the North Country to take Inverness?

H. Fras. There was a Proposal then made, that a Detachment should be sent from the Army, in order to make themselves Masters of Inverness.

Mr. Att. Gen. What more passed between you relating to this Proposal?

H. Fras. That Proposal was agreed to, and a Resolution formed upon it, in a Council that was called in the Afternoon.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you at that time hear any thing, or receive any thing, from my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. No: I had no Charge from my Lord Lovat when I went to Glasgow.

Mr. Att. Gen. But, when you was there, did you receive any Order from Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. I received no Order or Letter from my Lord Lovat, while I was at Glasgow.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Orders or Letters from Lord Lovat at all relating to the sending any Men Northward; I do not mean while you was at Glasgow, but in Stratharrick, or any other Place?

H. Fras. Before I went to Perth, there was a Letter delivered to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say it was concerted to send a Detachment to Inverness, or that a Detachment of the Army should go thither: What was done in pursuance of that Resolution?

H. Fras. Nothing at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say, that you received a Letter from my Lord Lovat at Stratharrick; pray what were the Contents of it?

H. Fras. I did say so: There was a Letter delivered to me: It was not signed; but it appeared to me to be the Hand-writing of Robert Fraser, who then acted as Secretary to my Lord Lovat; but it had no Name subscribed to it.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Import of that Letter?

H. Fras. The Request of the Letter was, That I should have gone to Perth, in order to have prevailed with the Gentlemen who commanded at that Place, to send a Number of Forces to Inverness, in order to make themselves Masters of that Place, by dislodging my Lord Loudon, and to rescue my Lord Lovat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was any thing done upon this?

H. Fras. Nothing: I refused to do it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Before you went from Glasgow, and returned with the Answer to the Message you had delivered there, did you receive any Message from Mr. Murray the Secretary, or any Packet? and what was it?

H. Fras. Mr. Murray proposed me to carry a Packet from Glasgow to Perth.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he deliver you any Packet?

H. Fras. I refused to take it; because, I told him, that very probably his Packet would require Dispatch; and that I rid my own Horses, and did not incline to abuse them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you, or did you not, receive the Packet?

H. Fraser. When he told me afterwards, That he had no other Person to carry it, and that it did not require Dispatch, I accepted of the Packet.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know what that Packet contained?

H. Fras. I came to know it afterwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what were the Contents of it?

H. Fras. There was a separate Letter, directed to the Master of Lovat only, with respect to the Army; and there was a large Packet of Papers, not directed to any Person, but which, Mr. Murray told me, I was to deliver to the Master of Lovat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know what that Letter, or Packet, did contain?

H. Fras. Upon my Return to Perth, as the Master of Lovat happened not to be there at that time, another Gentleman and I took the Freedom to open the large Packet.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you find in it?

H. Fras. There was in it a Commission of Lieutenant-General to my Lord Lovat, that is, in my Lord Lovat's Name; and it was granted in the Name of James the VIIIth.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was there in it else?

H. Fras. There was another Commission in it, to my Lord Lovat, of Lieutenant of some Northern County, granted in the same Manner.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did that appear to be signed and sealed by the Pretender?—H. Fras. It had a Subscription and Superscription, and a Seal.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any thing else contained in that Packet?

H. Fras. There was another Commission to a Gentleman of the Name of Fraser.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did that Commission import to be?

H. Fras. It was a Colonel's Commission.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you recollect to whom it was made?

H. Fras. The Gentleman was named Fraser: One who was called Inverlacky, and a Gentleman of that Name was then acting in that Capacity among the Frasers.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did that Commission appear, upon the Face of it, to be signed and sealed? and by whom?

H. Fras. Yes, it was signed and sealed in the same Manner as the other Commissions were.

Mr. Attorney

Mr. Attorney General. Was there any thing elſe in the Packet?

H. Fraſ. There was a Letter under the Hand of the Pretender's Son.

Mr. Att. Gen. To whom was that directed?

H. Fraſ. It was directed to my Lord Lovat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any other Paper there?

H. Fraſ. Yes; there was a Letter from Mr. Murray, Cameron of Lochiel, and Mac Pherſon of Clunie.

Mr. Att. Gen. To whom was that Letter directed?

H. Fraſ. That Letter had no Direction, or Cover; it was in the large Cover.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were thoſe all that were in the large Cover?

H. Fraſ. All that I remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was the large Cover addreſſed to any body?

H. Fraſ. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Reaſon of that?

H. Fraſ. The Reaſon given me by Mr. Murray was, That it was intended for my Lord Lovat; but could not be directed, becauſe he could not aſcertain by what Title to write it.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the doubted Title?

H. Fraſ. The doubted Title was that of a Duke.

Mr. Att. Gen. Duke of what?

H. Fraſ. Duke of Fraſer, or Beaufort: Fraſer, I believe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Does not my Lord Lovat's Houſe go by Two Names?

H. Fraſ. Yes, by the Name of Caſtle-Downey and Beaufort.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know, whether that Letter, that was ſigned by Clunie Mac Pherſon, Lochiel, and Mr. Murray, was referred to in the Letter that was ſent by the Pretender's Son?

H. Fraſ. I don't know that it was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you recollect the Subſtance of the Letter from the Pretender's Son to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fraſ. The Subſtance of the Letter, as far as I can recollect, was requeſting my Lord Lovat to come and join with him in Perſon.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, Theſe are all the Queſtions we have to aſk of this Witneſs.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, The Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons have done with this Witneſs: Would your Lordſhip aſk him any Queſtions?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I have told your Lordſhips already, that I am ſo ill that I am not able to ſpeak, or to get up, or ſit down; and therefore hope your Lordſhips will indulge me to retire a little, and refreſh myſelf.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, my Lord Lovat deſires Leave to withdraw for a little while.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Upon which Lord Lovat withdrew for a little while: And being returned,

Lord Lovat. I deſire, that your Lordſhips will indulge me in permitting your Clerk to read the Queſtions I would aſk.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Lord Lovat. Was not you taken Priſoner by the King's Forces, after the Battle of Culloden?——H. Fraſ. I was.

Lord Lovat. Have you not been in Cuſtody ever ſince? and are not you ſo now?——H. Fraſ. I have been, and I am.

Lord Lovat. Have you as yet obtained any Pardon?

H. Fraſ. I know of none.

Lord Lovat. Are you in Expectation of a Pardon from what you ſhall depoſe againſt me?

H. Fraſ. I will anſwer that Queſtion very readily. I do not expect Puniſhment will be inflicted; but I aſſure your Lordſhip, it is no Condition or Paction made with me.

Lord Lovat. Have you ever had any Offer made to you of a Pardon, upon this or any other Condition? and what was that Condition?

H. Fraſ. I have had no Offers made to me of a Pardon, upon any Condition whatever.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I have taken a particular Account of the Evidence of this Witneſs; which I beg Leave to repeat to your Lordſhips, in the Preſence of the Witneſs, that, in caſe I miſrepreſent any Part, he may correct it, I having been already accuſed of Unfairneſs, in the Manner of ſtating my Queſtions. My Lords, The Witneſs ſays, that the Men marched before the Maſter of Lovat went from Caſtle-Downey: That he and the Maſter of Lovat followed the Men, and endeavoured to prevail upon them to return; but that Bariſdale prevailed upon them to advance, contrary to the Deſire and Advice of the Maſter of Lovat: That my Lord Lovat afterwards wrote a Letter to them to return, and that they did return: That my Lord Lovat certainly gave Orders ſometimes, that they ſhould not march. Am I right in this State of the Evidence?

H. Fraſ. Yes; my Lord Lovat certainly gave Orders for them ſometimes not to march; and, I believe, he gave Orders, at other times, for them to march.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, he ſays, That he believes that, at other times, my Lord Lovat ordered them to march: But, my Lords, this might be only a general Report, without any Foundation, as it might be the Report of Bariſdale, in order to prevail on them to march.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, The noble Lord is in the right, to ſtate the Evidence to the Witneſs, in order to introduce Queſtions, by way of Explanation; but to obſerve upon that Evidence now, is not regular.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, All that I mean is to come at the Truth; which I cannot do from my own Knowledge.

Lord Talbot. You have ſaid, that you have heard my Lord Lovat ſay, that the Conduct of his Clan might coſt him his Life.—H. Fraſ. I did.

Lord Talbot. Now, my Lords, the Queſtion I would aſk him, from all this put together, is, Whether he did underſtand, by theſe Expreſſions of my Lord Lovat, that he diſapproved of the Conduct of his Clan?

H. Fraſ. That my Lord Lovat diſapproved to me in private, and that I have heard him diſapprove, and condemn in publick, the Conduct of his Clan, is Truth: That I affirm before Almighty God.

Lord Talbot. Have you been examined by any body relating to this Trial, ſince you was a Priſoner, before you came to this Place?

H. Fraſ. I have.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I will beg Leave to aſk him, Whether the Confeſſions he made upon that Examination, or the Anſwers he gave there, proceeded from the Hope of a Pardon?

H. Fraſ. I cannot ſay that I would have done it, had I been convinced that I ſhould meet with no Mercy; though, at the ſame Time, I had no Aſſurance given me of Mercy; neither had I any Promiſe of Pardon.

Lord Talbot. Do you believe, that your Pardon may depend upon the Conſiſtency of the Evidence you ſhall give here, with what you have ſaid upon thoſe former Examinations?

Duke of Bedford. My Lords, I do not think that is a proper Queſtion to be aſked of any Witneſs; and, if it is inſiſted upon to be aſked, I ſhall beg your Lordſhips may adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament, to determine that Queſtion: And I will there give my Reaſons againſt it.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I have no Partiality for the noble Lord at the Bar; but what I have ſaid proceeded from a Principle of Humanity, a Principle of Honour, and a Principle of Juſtice.

L. H. S. You have ſpoke of different Orders that were given at different Times: Sometimes my Lord Lovat ordered the Men to march, and, at other Times, not to march. Do you know, of your own Knowledge, of any of theſe Orders being given?

H. Fraſ. I have already ſaid, that I ſaw an Order under his Hand, for the returning of ſeven Companies of Men, from Urquhart, whither they had marched.

L. H. S. Whither were they to return?

H. Fraſer. To their own Houſes.

L. H. S. When was that Order given?

H. Fraſ. In the Month of November.

L. H. S. What Orders did you ever ſee, or hear, from my Lord Lovat, for the Men to march?

H. Fraſ. I never ſaw any Order of my Lord Lovat for the Men to march.

L. H. S. Then why did you ſpeak of thoſe Orders?

H. Fraſ. I have given my Reaſon for that, That I heard ſuch Orders talked of; but that I heard them given, I never did ſay, and never will.

Lord Orford. When my Lord Lovat declared himſelf diſſatisfied with the Conduct of his Clan, was it for their being too forward, or too backward, in going into Rebellion?

H. Fraſer. I have ſaid already, That I have heard him diſſatisfied for their too great Forwardneſs, and I have likewiſe heard him diſſatisfied for their too great Backwardneſs.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, In conſequence of ſome Queſtions that have been aſked, I beg Leave to know of this Witneſs, Whether what he has ſaid in Evidence before your Lordſhips, notwithſtanding his having ſaid it under the Circumſtances of his being now a Priſoner, is, or is not true?

H. Fraſ. I ſay, that what I have ſaid, is literally Fact.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then I beg he may inform your Lordſhips, Whether, ſuppoſing he had been called on to be a Witneſs, and had not been a Priſoner, but had been, by Virtue of your Lordſhips Summons, obliged to come before you, to give Evidence upon this Trial, would he have given any other Evidence than what he hath given before your Lordſhips?

H. Fraſ. If I would give Evidence in any Caſe, it ſhould be the Truth; and, if the Truth were ſuch as I did not chooſe to diſcloſe, I would declare poſitively, that I would give no Evidence at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was not you in ſo dangerous a Condition, in point of Health, when you were at Fort Auguſtus, that your Life was not expected?

H. Fraſ. At Fort Auguſtus I was paſt all Hopes of Recovery, and at Inverneſs.

Mr. Att. Gen. During that Time, did not you give, in Subſtance, the ſame Account of theſe Tranſactions as you have given now?

H. Fraſ. There were Queſtions aſked me then; and the Anſwers I gave to them were the real Truth: Matters were not then ſo fully explicated as they have been ſince; ſo that thoſe Declarations were not ſo complete as the Account I have given now: But the Anſwers that I made there, were ſtill the real genuine Truth, as to thoſe Queſtions that I was aſked; and ſo is the Account I have now given.

Mr. Att. Gen. I beg he may inform your Lordſhips, if, ſo far as his Examination then went, it was not the ſame as his Examination is now?

H. Fraſ. So far as the Examination was then extended, it was the ſame as now: Truth is always the ſame; it will never vary from itſelf.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not then expect to die?

H. Fraſ. I expected not to live, ſure enough.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it from the Condition you were in by your Diſtemper, that you expected not to live?

H. Fraſ. It was from my Wounds, and the Ailments that I laboured under.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, We have done with this Witneſs.

A Lord. I beg this Witneſs may inform your Lordſhips, If the Packet which he carried from Mr. Murray, containing the Papers that he has mentioned, was ever delivered? and to whom?

H. Fraſ. That Packet was never delivered to my Lord Lovat.

A Lord. I beg he may inform your Lordſhips, to whom that Packet was delivered?

H. Fraſ. When I came to Perth, a Gentleman, who then commanded among the Frafers, and I, opened the Packet, to ſee what it contained; and, while I was intending to ſhut it up again, and to forward it to the Maſter of Lovat, the Maſter himſelf came into the Room; and I told him the Freedom we had uſed with thoſe Letters and Packets: He ſaid, that we might always uſe that Freedom, and were welcome. All thoſe Papers which I have mentioned to have been contained in that Packet, were then lying upon the Table where we ſtayed: I told the Maſter, in general, what they were; and he threw them from him; and there they continued to lie till I went from Perth to Stirling: And, as that March was made a little precipitately, thoſe Papers, and every Thing elſe that belonged to me, that were in the Room, were thrown into my Cloak-Bag, and they and my Cloak-Bag continued in my Poſſeſſion till ſome few Days before the Battle of Culloden, when I lodged them in a Houſe at Inverneſs, and went myſelf to the Field of Battle.

[Then the Witneſs, by the Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, The next Gentleman we beg Leave to call, is Lieutenant Alexander Campbell.

Lieutenant Campbell called into Court.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Have you any Objection to Lieutenant Campbell being a Witneſs?

Lord Lovat. I don't know him: I never heard of him.

Alexander Campbell ſworn.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, We beg Leave to aſk this Witneſs, Whether, at any Time, in the Year 1745, he went to Caſtle-Downey?

A. Camp. Yes, I did.

Sir W. Yonge. About what Time was it that you went?

A Camp. I don't remember particularly: It was ſome Time in October.

Sir W. Yonge. Upon what Account did you go there?

A Camp. To require ſome Cattle that were carried off from ſome People in the Shire of Roſs.

Sir W. Yonge. By whom were theſe Cattle carried off?

A. Camp. By ſome of my Lord Lovat's People: I don't know whether it was done by his Orders, or not.

Sir W. Yonge. When you came near Caſtle-Downey, did you ſee any Number of armed Men?---A. Camp. Yes, I did.

Sir W. Yonge. How was you received by thoſe armed Men? with Acclamations? or in what Manner? and how many were there of them?

A. Camp. I cannot condeſcend upon the Number of Men.

Sir W. Yonge. How was you received by them? with Acclamations? or how?---A. Camp. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. How was you received? in what Manner?

A. Camp. They were all out with their Arms; ſome of the Mac Leod's Deſerters that came from Inverneſs.

Sir W. Yonge. How were you received there by thoſe Men? in what Manner?---A. Camp. Some of them took off their Bonnets.

Sir W. Yonge. Were there any Shouts, or Huzzas, made uſe of?

A. Camp. Yes; ſome of them did.

Sir W. Yonge. Upon what Account?---A. Camp. I can't tell.

Sir W. Yonge. Did not they ſay any Thing to you of the Reaſon of it?

A. Camp. No; they ſpoke nothing to me.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you go to dine with my Lord Lovat, at Caſtle-Downey?---A. Camp. No; I did not.

Sir W. Yonge. Was you at Caſtle-Downey with him?---A. Camp. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Had you any Converſation with my Lord Lovat there?

A. Camp. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. What Converſation had you with him?

A. Camp. I told him, I came to require the Cattle; and he told me, the Cattle were not brought there by his Order, but his Son's.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, The Witneſs had better go on with the reſt of the Converſation: I know he can, without being aſked particular Queſtions; for I would not lead him.

A. Camp. I do not remember what paſſed.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I muſt take Notice to your Lordſhips, that I think it is a very odd Expreſſion to make uſe of to a Witneſs, That he had better anſwer the Queſtions; for I know he can: It is a kind of threatening the Witneſs.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, I ſtand here as a Manager, on this Trial, for the Commons of Great-Britain; and I hope I ſay nothing that is offenſive to your Lordſhips; and that the Manner in which I aſked the Witneſs the Queſtion, ſhewed that it proceeded from a Fairneſs in ſtating of it. My Lords, I think, as a Manager, I ought to know what a Witneſs can ſay; and the whole Tendency of what I ſaid, was adviſing the Witneſs, without giving your Lordſhips unneceſſary Trouble, to tell all he knew, fairly and impartially, without my being obliged to put any leading Queſtions to him: And I hope, I ſhall have your Lordſhips Liberty to go on.

L. H. S. My Lords, Every body knows, that it is the conſtant Courſe and Uſage of Parliament, that, when a Committee of Managers is appointed by the Houſe of Commons, upon an Impeachment, it is their Duty to examine, and they always do examine the Witneſſes beforehand: And the ſame Method is uſed by Proſecutors for the Crown, upon Indictments. If this was not done, it would be impoſſible to know, whether a Witneſs could ſpeak materially to the Facts in Queſtion, or not.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, Though they are Managers, I am a Judge. I have as high a Veneration for the Repreſentatives of this Kingdom, as any Man in the World; I ſat ſome Time among them myſelf: But I am ſure, my Lords, the Repreſentatives of England do not deſire a Language may be uſed to a Witneſs, that may ſeem threatening. And, my Lords, I took the Expreſſion uſed by the Manager in this Light. The Expreſſion was, That he had better ſpeak; which, I apprehend, was as much as to ſay, That, if he hoped for Mercy, he muſt tell it. My Lords, I deſire a fair Examination, that I may form a true Judgment. My Honour depends upon it.

L. H. S. My Lords, I deſire this may be forborn. It is my Duty to acquaint your Lordſhips, that it is irregular, and contrary to all Rules of Proceeding. The Honourable Manager explained his Words in a very proper and candid Manner, that he thought it was fairer in him to aſk the Witneſs general Queſtions, to declare what he knew of the Fact, than any particular Queſtions, which might tend to lead him; and he was in the right.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, in order to clear up this Matter, I beg Leave to aſk the Witneſs, Whether he is now a Priſoner?---A. Camp. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you ever a Priſoner?

A. Camp. Yes; I was a Priſoner with the Rebels.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you then the King's Commiſſion?

A. Camp. Yes; when I was a Priſoner.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you engaged in the King's Behalf againſt the Rebels, when you was taken?---A. Camp. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Your Lordſhips now ſee, That the Witneſs is no Priſoner, nor under any Terror or Apprehenſion, but has now the King's Commiſſion in his Pocket; and therefore I beg Leave to aſk him, What the Converſation was that paſſed between my Lord Lovat and him about the Cattle?

A. Camp. As I did not expect to be called here as a Witneſs, ſo I do not remember what paſſed upon that Occaſion.

Sir W. Yonge. Did my Lord Lovat perſuade you to join the Rebels, or not?---A. Camp. He did not.

Sir W. Yonge. Did he ſay nothing to induce you to it?

A. Camp. He ſaid nothing at all to induce me to join them.

Sir W. Yonge. Or his Son?

A. Camp. No.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, I don't know whether it be ſo proper: But have you never ſaid ſo?

A. Camp. No; I never did ſay ſo.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, I beg Leave to aſk him, Whether any Diſcourſe paſſed between my Lord Lovat and him touching the Rebellion?

A. Camp. Yes.

Mr. Noel. Pray tell my Lords what that was?

A. Camp. He ſaid, His Son was engaged in the Rebellion, not him; and that he was a very loyal Perſon.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, We have done with this Witneſs.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Would you aſk this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Lord Lovat. No; I have no Queſtions, my Lord, to aſk this Witneſs: I never ſaw him before in my Life.

[Then the Witneſs, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Mr. Lyttelton. My Lords, The next Witneſs we ſhall produce, is Peter Fraſer, Tutor of Belladrum.

Peter Fraſer was called into Court.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I have a material Objection to this Witneſs: He is my Tenant in all that he poſſeſſes.

L. H. S. Would your Lordſhip aſk him that Queſtion? Or, would you prove it upon him by Witneſſes?

Lord Lovat. I humbly think he will not deny it. If he does, I have Witneſſes to prove it.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, I beg the noble Lord at the Bar may explain what he means by ſaying, If he denies it, that he has Witneſſes to prove it; for, if the noble Lord puts it to the Oath of the Witneſs, and he denies it, then he cannot, without the Conſent of the Commons, call a Witneſs to prove it.

L. H. S. My Lords, The Rule is, That, upon an Objection made to the Competency of a Witneſs, the Party objecting may either put it to the Oath of the Witneſs produced, or call Witneſſes to prove it. If he puts it to the Oath of the Witneſs produced, then he is concluded as to the Point of Competency, by the Anſwer he gives to it, unleſs the other Side conſents to wave that. My Lord Lovat, Do you chooſe to put this to the Oath of Peter Fraſer, or to call a Witneſs to prove it?

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I deſire to know, if this Witneſs ſhould deny it, whether my Lord Lovat may not give Evidence of this Man's being his Tenant, when he comes upon his Defence.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, You hear what the noble Lord ſays; what do you ſay to it?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, To be ſure my Lord Lovat may give ſuch Proof by way of Objection to the Credit of the Witneſs; but not to his Competency.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Do you chooſe now to put this Queſtion to the Oath of the Witneſs himſelf, or to call a Witneſs to prove it?

Lord Lovat. I will put it to his own Oath.

Then the Witneſs was ſworn upon a Voire Dire.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I deſire to aſk him, Whether or no the Lands he poſſeſſes are not my Lands?

P. Fraſ. Yes; they are: I poſſeſs them in virtue of my Nephews Right, who hold a Tack under my Lord Lovat.

L. H. S. How do you hold them in virtue of your Nephews? Is it as their Manager, or Tutor?

A Lord. My Lords, I will beg Leave to aſk a Queſtion to explain that; which is, Whether or no the Witneſs pays the Rents of thoſe Lands to my Lord Lovat's Chamberlain or Steward?

P. Fraſ. I do.

Lord Lovat. Do you pay any Part of that Rent in your own Right?

P. Fraſ. No; I do not. I only pay it in virtue of my Nephews, as taking Care of them.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, The Queſtion, which the noble Lord at the Bar has now put to the Witneſs, is that which I intended to have put to him; which is, Whether he holds any Lands in his own Right, or only as Tutor? He has told your Lordſhips, That he holds none in his own Right, but only as Tutor to his Nephews.

Mr. Lyttelton. My Lords, We pray the Witneſs may be ſworn in Chief.

Peter Fraſer ſworn in Chief.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I beg to aſk him, Whether he does not hold a Tack of Land within the Lordſhip of Lovat, of Aird, or Stratharrick?

P. Fraſ. I do not.

Mr. Lyttelton. I beg this Witneſs may inform your Lordſhips, Whether, in the Year 1745, he was at my Lord Lovat's Houſe at Caſtle-Downey?

P. Fraſ. Yes; I was.

Mr. Lyttel. And whether he remembers to have ſeen any of my Lord Lovat's Men rendezvous there about that Time?---P. Fraſ. Yes; I did.

Mr. Lyttel. Did you ſee any of the Officers that headed thoſe Men go to my Lord Lovat's Houſe, and converſe with him there?

P. Fraſ. Yes; I did.

Mr. Lyttel. Who did you ſee there?

P. Fraſ. Simon Fraſer of Mac Leod.

Mr. Lyttel. Did he talk to my Lord Lovat about the Regiment? or aſk any Orders from him?

P. Fraſ. I never heard him ſay any Thing; only that my Lord Lovat deſired him to go to their Colonel: That is all I heard.

Mr. Lyttel. Who did he call their Colonel?

P. Fraſ. His Son, the Maſter of Lovat.

Mr. Lyttel. How came he to be their Colonel? Had not the Lord Lovat the abſolute Power over his Clan?

P. Fraſ. Yes; he had.

Mr. Lyttelton.

Mr. Lyttelton. Do you imagine or believe, that the Maſter of Lovat could have carried the Fraſers into the Rebellion, if his Father had been againſt it?

P. Fraſer. No; he could not; I am ſure he could not.

Mr. Lyt. Had the Maſter of Lovat any Manner of Foundation to think he could raiſe the Men himſelf? Or did he, at his own Charge or Coſt, pay thoſe Men when they went into the Rebellion? Or, had he Money to do it?

P. Fraſ. I ſuppoſe he had no Money of his own.

Mr. Lyt. Who do you think furniſhed him with the Money neceſſary for that Purpoſe?

P. Fraſ. Really I know nothing of the Money: I ſaw no Money given.

Mr. Lyt. Do you know any thing of Bariſdale's keeping a Party of Men upon my Lord Lovat's Ground?---P. Fraſ. Yes.

Mr. Lyt. What were they to do?

P. Fraſ. To overawe the Country.

Mr. Lyt. To do what?

P. Fraſ. To riſe in Arms.

Mr. Lyt. In Arms for whom?---P. Fraſ. For the Pretender.

Mr. Lyt. Had he got any of them to riſe in Arms then?--P. Fraſ. Yes.

Mr. Lyt. Did he make any of my Lord Lovat's Vaſſals riſe in Arms at that Time?

P. Fraſ. They ſtaid in the Country till they ſaw ſome of the Men did convene.

Mr. Lyt. Do you know of any body's giving the Men any Cattle or Meal?---P. Fraſ. Yes: My Lord Lovat gave them ſome Cows.

Mr. Lyt. To whoſe Men? To Bariſdale's Men?

P. Fraſ. No; to my Lord Lovat's Men.

Mr. Lyt. Thoſe that join'd with Bariſdale?---P. Fraſ. Yes.

Mr. Lyt. Did you ſee Bariſdale converſe with my Lord Lovat then?

P. Fraſ. Yes; I did.

Mr. Lyt. Did my Lord Lovat know that he was then in the Rebellion?

P. Fraſ. No doubt of it.

Mr. Lyt. Did he wear any Mark of Diſtinction to ſhew it?

P. Fraſ. He wore a white Cockade.

Mr. Lyt. Do you remember any Part of the Converſation between Bariſdale, Mac Leod, and my Lord Lovat, concerning my Lord's declaring openly for the Pretender?

P. Fraſ. I remember one Day, that Alexander Mac Leod ſaid, That all would be well, if my Lord Lovat would pull off the Maſk: Upon which my Lord Lovat, by way of Reply, pulled off his Hat, and ſaid, There it is then.

Mr. Lyt. What did that Converſation relate to?

P. Fraſ. I heard no more of it.

Mr. Lyt. What were they talking about?

P. Fraſ. I only heard, that he ſaid, All would be well, if my Lord Lovat would pull off the Maſk.

Mr. Lyt. What did that Converſation mean? What meant, All would be well?---P. Fraſ. I can't tell.

Mr. Lyt. What did my Lord Lovat mean by pulling off his Hat?

P. Fraſ. All that they ſaid was, That all would be well, if my Lord would pull off the Maſk: Upon which my Lord Lovat pulled off his Hat, and ſaid, Here it is then.

Mr. Lyt. Did he throw his Hat down?

P. Fraſ. I did not ſee that.

Mr. Lyt. Did my Lord Lovat offer you to be an Officer?

P. Fraſ. No; he never did.

Mr. Lyt. My Lords, We have done with this Witneſs.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Would you aſk this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Lord Lovat. Was you examined at Inverneſs? and by whom? and who were the Perſons you ſaw there?

P. Fraſ. I was examined at Inverneſs before one Kilravock: He was a Depute. And I was examined before my Lord Loudon.

Lord Lovat. Was you examined upon Oath?

P. Fraſ. Yes: I was ſummoned, and ſtrictly deponed.

Lord Lovat. Upon Oath?---P. Fraſ. Upon Oath.

Lord Lovat. Who were the Perſons you ſaw at Inverneſs, when you was examined?

P. Fraſ. We were examined but one by one: As ſoon as one was examined, another was called; and no other Perſon heard what the Examinations were.

Lord Lovat. Who were preſent at the Examinations?

P. Fraſ. Lord Loudon, Kilravock, and a Clerk.

Lord Lovat. At what Time was you examined at Inverneſs?

P. Fraſ. I don't remember the Day of the Month, indeed.

Lord Lovat. What Month was it?

P. Fraſ. It was in January; the latter End of January.

Lord Lovat. In January laſt?

P. Fraſ. Yes, in January laſt.

L. H. S. You ſay you were at Caſtle-Downey in 1745, and ſaw all the Men rendezvous there: In what Month was that?

P. Fraſ. In November.

Then the Priſoner begged Leave to withdraw a little: Which was granted; and he ſoon after returned to the Bar again.

Mr. Legge. The next Witneſs we ſhall call is John Farquhar.

At the Priſoner's Requeſt, he was ſworn upon a Voire Dire.

Lord Lovat. Are you Tenant to me?---J. Farquhar. No.

Lord Lovat. What is your Name?---J. Farq. John Farquhar.

Lord Lovat. What Employment are you of?

J. Farquhar. I was Servant to Mr. Murray.

John Farquhar ſworn in Chief.

Mr. Legge. My Lords, We propoſe to examine this Witneſs to the Steps taken by my Lord Lovat ſubſequent to the Battle of Culloden, in order to revive and reſtore the Pretender's Cauſe in Scotland.

Mr. Legge. Was not you Servant to Mr. Murray of Broughton?

J. Farquhar. Yes.

Mr. Legge. In what Capacity did you ſerve him?

J. Farquh. I was his Groom.

Mr. Legge. For what Space of Time did you ſerve him? From what Time, and to what Time?

J. Farquh. From Michaelmas till the Ninth of June laſt.

Mr. Legge. In what Year?---J. Farquh. In 1745.

Mr. Legge. Was there a Meeting of the Chieftains in the Rebel Army after the Battle of Culloden?

J. Farquh. Yes.

Mr. Legge. When was that Meeting?

J. Farquh. On the 10th of May laſt.

Mr. Legge. Who were the Perſons that met on that Occaſion?

J. Farquh. Mr. Murray of Broughton, Lochiel, Young Clanronald, Cameron of Dungallon, Doctor Cameron, and ſeveral others that I did not know, and my Lord Lovat: They met at the Iſland of Mortlaig.

Mr. Legge. Did you hear of any French Ships having landed any Money in Scotland then?

J. Farquh. Yes.

Mr. Legge. Upon what Day did you hear that they landed that Money?

J. Farquh. Upon the 4th of May.

Mr. Legge. What did you imagine was the Subject-Matter of the Meeting you mentioned?

J. Farquh. In order to have a Second Gathering of the Rebel Army.

Mr. Legge. Did you hear any, and what Orders given to any body, and to whom, upon that Occaſion?

J. Farquh. There was an Order for the Men to be gathered together at a Place called Glenmany.

Mr. Legge. Who were the Perſons that gave thoſe Orders?

J. Farquh. There was Lochiel, and the ſeveral other Perſons that were preſent at the Meeting.

Mr. Legge. How did Lord Lovat behave on that Occaſion? Did he expreſs any Satisfaction on that Head?

J. Farquh. He was preſent during all the Time I was there.

Mr. Legge. Did he ſay any thing about the Number of Men that were to be raiſed?

J. Farquh. The next Morning, when the Parties were going away, my Lord Lovat ſaid, They had no need to fear; and he did not doubt raiſing Eight or Ten thouſand Men preſently.

Some Lords deſired the laſt Anſwer to be repeated: Which was accordingly done by the Witneſs, as follows:

J. Farquh. The next Morning, when the Parties were going away, Lord Lovat ſaid, that there was no Need to fear; for that he did not doubt to raiſe Eight or Ten thouſand Men preſently; and that thoſe, with the Highland Men, would be able to fight the Elector of Hanover's Troops. He ſaid this to Lochiel's Officers: When they embraced each other.

Mr. Legge. Had my Lord Lovat any of his own Clan there?

J. Farquh. Yes: He had ſome of them to wait upon him.

Mr. Legge. Were they armed?

J. Farquh. Yes, with Swords, Dirks, and Piſtols.

Mr. Legge. Did they wear any Mark of Diſtinction in their Hats?

J. Farquh. Some of them had Sprigs of Yew, and ſuch-like Things, in their Hats; by which they were known to be of that Party.

Mr. Legge. Did you hear my Lord Lovat expreſs any Wiſhes that he had joined their Army?

J. Farquh. He ſaid, He wiſhed to God he had joined the Prince, as he called him, at firſt when he came over.

Mr. Legge. While you was there, did you hear the Pretender's Health drank?---J. Farquh. Yes.

Mr. Legge. By what Stile or Title?

J. Farquh. By the Title of Prince Charles, to the Young One.

Mr. Legge. And what Title did they give to the Old One?

J. Farquh. The Title of James the Eighth.

Mr. Legge. Who were the Perſons that drank it? Did you hear my Lord Lovat drink it?---J. Farquh. Yes.

Mr. Legge. Pray how long did this Council laſt?

J. Farquh. From Night till next Morning: I was there from Two o'Clock till Ten in the Morning.

Mr. Legge. You mention the French Money's being landed on the 4th of May; do you know any thing of the Diſpoſition of any Part of that Money?---J. Farquh. Yes.

Mr. Legge. To whom was it given?

J. Farquh. To the Officers of the Rebel Army.

Mr. Legge. For what Purpoſe was it given them?

J. Farquh. For a Second Gathering of the Men.

Mr. Legge. Do you know what was the general Reſolution that That Council came to? or what was their Determination?

J. Farquh. That they would aſſemble a Body of the ſeveral Clans to march South, ſo far as I could conjecture.

Mr. Legge. Why do you conjecture that?

J. Farquh. I heard it.

Mr. Legge. Did you hear of any Expectation of further Aſſiſtance from France?----J. Farquh. Yes.

Mr. Legge. What Number of Men did you expect?

J. Farquh. I did not hear any particular Number mentioned; but we expected a Reinforcement every Day.

Mr. Legge. Where was the Rendezvous to have been?

J. Farquh. At Glenmany.

Mr. Legge. Did they meet there?---J. Farquh. Yes; ſeveral of them.

Mr. Legge. What do you think prevented the reſt of them from meeting there?----J. Farquh. The King's Troops.

Mr. Legge. My Lords, We have done with this Witneſs.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Will you aſk this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Lord Lovat. Was you taken Priſoner by the King's Forces?

J. Farquh. No.

Lord Lovat. Do you know whether the Money that came over from France in the Ship, was given to Mr. Murray?

J. Farquhae. I cannot tell. Mr. Murray was there when the Money came.

A Lord. Do you know of any more Meetings than one between Lochiel and Lord Lovat?——J. Farquh. No.

[Then the Witneſs, by the Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Mr. Grenville. My Lords, The next Witneſs we beg Leave to call, is Charles Stuart.

Charles Stuart called into Court.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Have you any Objection to this Witneſs?——Lord Lovat. No.

Charles Stuart ſworn.

Mr. Grenville. My Lords, We beg this Witneſs may inform your Lordſhips, whether he remembers the Battle of Culloden?

C. Stuart. Yes.

Mr. Gren. Did you go with Mr. Murray, the Pretender's Son's Secretary, after that Battle, to Mortlaig?——C. Stuart. Yes.

Mr. Gren. Was there a Meeting there of any of the Rebel Officers?

C. Stuart. Yes.

Mr. Gren. Who were preſent?

C. Stuart. There were Lochiel, Clanrenald, Bariſdale, and ſeveral others.

Mr. Gren. Was my Lord Lovat there?

C. Stuart. Yes, he was there.

Mr. Gren. Where were they?——C. Stuart. In a little Hut.

Mr. Gren. Was you in the Room with them?

C. Stuart. Yes, I was.

Mr. Gren. Did you hear what paſſed in the Room? If you did, pleaſe to give my Lords an Account of what paſſed there.

C. Stuart. Lochiel and Mr. Murray of Broughton came there, where they met with my Lord Lovat, and ſeveral other of the Highland Chieftains. They wanted to create an Aſſociation for re-aſſembling the Men together, in order to procure a Peace, or Terms of Surrender with the Duke of Cumberland, or to ſtand it out to the laſt. Mr. Murray ordered me to draw up the Articles; which I wrote: And it was ſigned by every Chief that was there.

Mr. Gren. Did my Lord Lovat ſign it?

C. Stuart. No; all but he.

Mr. Gren. Was it propoſed to him to ſign it?

C. Stuart. Yes, it was; and he would not.

Mr. Gren. What was the Purport of it?

C. Stuart. That they were to aſſemble again in ten Days, in order to procure Terms of Peace from the Duke, or ſtand it out to the laſt.

Mr. Gren. What Number of Fraſers were propoſed to be raiſed?

C. Stuart. I think Three or Four Hundred.

Mr. Gren. Did any body undertake for the Fraſers?

C. Stuart. I think Lochiel did.

Mr. Gren. At whoſe Requeſt did he undertake for the Fraſers?

C. Stuart. When it was propoſed to my Lord Lovat to ſign the Paper, he ſaid, He would not; and deſired Lochiel to anſwer for his Son.

Mr. Gren. What did he ſay about Lochiel?

C. Stuart. He deſired Lochiel to anſwer for his Son.

Mr. Gren. Did he, or did he not, anſwer for him?

C. Stuart. I can't tell.

Mr. Gren. What Reaſon did my Lord Lovat give why he would not ſign the Paper himſelf?

C. Stuart. I don't remember he gave any Reaſon.

Mr. Gren. Do you remember any Expreſſions made uſe of by my Lord Lovat then?——C. Stuart. No.

Mr. Gren. Was there any Money given then to any of the Chiefs of the Clan?——C. Stuart. Yes, to all of them.

Mr. Gren. Who delivered it to them?——C. Stuart. I did.

Mr. Gren. Was there any delivered to my Lord Lovat?

C. Stuart. No, not to him; but it was given to ſome of the Perſons about him: I don't know whether it was his Servant, or no.

Mr. Gren. Was he my Lord Lovat's Servant?

C. Stuart. I don't know: He was a Perſon about him.

Mr. Gren. For what was it delivered? For what Purpoſe?

C. Stuart. For the Maſter to raiſe the Men againſt the Time.

Mr. Gren. You ſaw the Money given, and was the Perſon that delivered it?——C. Stuart. I did.

Mr. Gren. How much was there of it?

C. Stuart. Seventy or Eighty Pounds.

Mr. Gren. How came you by the Money?

C. Stuart. I got it from Mr. Murray.

Mr. Gren. What Money was it?

C. Stuart. Part of 35,000 l. that was landed ſome Days before from France.

Mr. Gren. Was my Lord Lovat preſent when the Money was delivered?

C. Stuart. Yes, he was.

Mr. Gren. Did he object to any Thing that was done, but to the Signing of the Paper?——C. Stuart. I don't remember he did.

Mr. Gren. Was the Money that was given in Guineas, or in Louidors?

C. Stuart. It was all in Louidors.

Mr. Gren Was there any Thing ſaid about a Neutrality then?

C. Stuart. I think my Lord Lovat ſaid, That he was a neutral Perſon; ſo would have no Concern in it.

Mr. Gren. Do you remember Mr. Murray's being at Ariſaig?

C. Stuart. Yes.

Mr. Gren. Did he receive any Letter there from a Captain of any Guard that my Lord Lovat had?

C. Stuart I ſaw a Man come from the Houſe where my Lord was, and ſaid, He came from the Captain of my Lord's Guards, with a Letter for Mr. Murray; and aſked ſome Money of him.

Mr. Gren. Did you ſend any Money to my Lord?

C. Stuart. Yes.

Mr. Gren. How much did you ſend?

C. Stuart. I believe it was about Fifteen Guineas.

Mr. Gren. By whoſe Order did you ſend it?

C. Stuart. It was by Mr. Murray's Orders I delivered the Money.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, I will beg Leave to aſk this Witneſs, Whether he was ever abroad on any Occaſion?

C. Stuart. I was; but 'tis long ago.

Sir J. Strange. How long is it ago?

C. Stuart. It was in the Year 1736.

Sir J. Strange. Do you remember to have met with a Perſon called Roy Stuart whilſt you was abroad?——C. Stuart. Yes.

Sir J. Strange. Where did you meet with him?

C. Stuart. At Boulogn in France.

Sir J. Strange. Where was he going when you ſaw him there?

C. Stuart. He ſaid he was going to Rome.

Sir J. Strange. Pleaſe to recollect, as near as you can, the Time when it was you ſaw Roy Stuart at Boulogn, and give my Lords an Account thereof.

C. Stuart. I think it was in 1736, as near as I can remember.

Sir J. Strange. When Roy Stuart told you he was going to Rome, did he ſay upon what Errand he was going?

C. Stuart. He ſaid he was going with Letters of Recommendation from my Lord Lovat.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, I ſhould not trouble your Lordſhips with aſking the Witneſs any Queſtions of this Kind, if we had not laid a Foundation for it already, by having proved, that a Meſſage was ſent by this Roy Stuart from my Lord Lovat to the Pretender at Rome; and therefore what I now enquire of him is not Matter of Hearſay; but it is in Corroboration of the Circumſtance which has been proved to your Lordſhips, That my Lord Lovat did give ſuch a Meſſage to this Roy Stuart: And therefore I will beg Leave to aſk this Witneſs, What Meſſage did Roy Stuart ſay he was going upon?

C. Stuart. Nothing elſe.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, if this, or any other Witneſs, ſhall be examined upon Hearſay Evidence.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, You hear in what manner the Managers offer this Evidence: They ſay, That they have proved by one Witneſs, that you ſent a Meſſage by Roy Stuart to the Pretender at Rome. Now, to corroborate that Evidence, they offer to prove, that Roy Stuart, about the ſame time, declared to this Witneſs, That he had ſuch a Meſſage to carry.

Lord Lovat. What the other Witneſs ſaid was Hearſay.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, I will ſet the Noble Lord at the Bar right. It was ſuch Hearſay as he had from my Lord Lovat's own Mouth; for Chevis the Witneſs ſaid, on his Examination, That, after Roy Stuart had made his Eſcape out of Inverneſs Gaol, when he was going away to Rome, he heard my Lord Lovat charge him with a Meſſage to the Pretender at Rome, to aſſure him of his Fidelity, and to proſecute the Affair of his Patent for a Duke: So that was not Hearſay, but poſitive Evidence.

Lord Lovat. That poſitive Evidence would ſay, That I was a natural Ideot.

L. H. S. Chevis did ſwear, either that he heard my Lord Lovat charge Roy Stuart with a Meſſage to the Pretender, to aſſure him of his Fidelity, and to expedite his Commiſſion of Lieutenant-General of the Highlands, and his Patent of a Duke; or elſe, that Lord Lovat told him, That he had charged Roy Stuart with ſuch a Meſſage: But I am not certain which it was.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, I beg Leave to aſk the Witneſs, when he met with Roy Stuart, and he ſaid he was going to Rome, What he ſaid he was going upon?

C. Stuart. All that Roy Stuart ſaid was, That he depended on Letters of Recommendation he had from my Lord Lovat; and was in Expectation of getting the Poſt that Colonel Allan Cameron had.

Sir J. Strange. What Letters were thoſe he mentioned?

C. Stuart. Letters, he ſaid, he had from my Lord Lovat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, In order to explain a little more particularly the Affair of the Meeting: As this Witneſs ſays, That my Lord Lovat refuſed to ſign the Paper, I deſire to aſk him, What Part my Lord Lovat took in the Deliberations about raiſing the Men, before he had an Opportunity of making that Refuſal?

C. Stuart. I was buſy at that Time in diſtributing the Money, and do not remember.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, We have done with our Examination of this Witneſs.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Would you aſk this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Lord Lovat. No.

[Then the Witneſs, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Lord Coke. My Lords, The next Witneſs we beg Leave to produce, is Lieutenant John Dalrymple.

Lieutenant Dalrymple called into Court.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Have you any Objections to Lieutenant Dalrymple?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I do not know him; but have no Objections to any Dalrymple.

Lieutenant Dalrymple ſworn.

Lord Coke. My Lords, I beg Leave to aſk this Witneſs, Where he was when my Lord Lovat was taken?

Dalrymple. I was on board the Furnace Sloop.

Lord Coke. Where was ſhe?

Dal. At Loch Morar.

Lord Coke. Had you any Converſation with my Lord Lovat after he was taken Priſoner?

Dal. I had frequent Opportunities of diſcourſing with him, as I dined and ſupped with his Lordſhip on board the Sloop.

Lord Coke. What did he ſay upon thoſe Diſcourſes? What was the Purport of them?

Dal. On the 8th of June, I heard him ſay, That, if his Advice had been been taken, the Rebel Army might have laughed at the King's Troops, and tired them out all Summer. He said, It was not their Business to fight the King's Troops; but that, as Summer was coming on, they might have taken themselves to the Mountains, and could have lived on Butter, Cheese, and Milk; for that the Duke of Cumberland's Horse could be of no Service to him in that Country. At another Time, I was asking his Lordship, How he came to be engaged in this Affair, after having received so many Favours from the Government? He said, He did it more in Revenge to the Ministry, for having taken away his Independent Company, than any Thing else. And, in talking of the Pretender's Son, he called him Prince: And, when he came on board, there was one Fraser taken, from whom we took about Twenty-two Guineas; and my Lord Lovat complained, that the Money had been taken from his Servant, which he had given him to pay his Men with.

Lord Coke. Had my Lord Lovat any Men in Arms with him when he was taken?

Dalrymple. That I am no Judge of, because I was on board.

Lord Coke. My Lords, We have done with this Witness.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Would you ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Lovat. Was you in Captain Fergusson's Ship?

Dal. Yes; your Lordship may remember me very well.

Lord Lovat. Then I hope you parted my Money amongst you: Did you see him take my Strong Box, in which were 700 Guineas?

Dal. I did not see him take the Box.

Lord Lovat. Did you see it in his Cabin?

Dal. I saw the Outside of it; I never saw the Inside.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, He says he saw the Outside, but did not see the Inside of the Strong Box: he will inform your Lordships whether he was present when the Papers were taken out of that Box afterwards?

Dal. No; I was not present at the Opening of it.

[Then the Witness, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Mr. Noel. My Lords, The next Witness we beg Leave to produce, is David Campbell.

He was called into Court.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Have you any Objection to David Campbell?

Lord Lovat. No; I have no Objection to any of the Campbells.

David Campbell sworn.

Mr. Noel. Please to tell my Lords, Whether you were with Captain Fergusson upon any Occasion, and in what Capacity?

D. Campbell. I was a Volunteer with General Campbell when we went to search the Islands; our Officers and Forces that served with General Campbell in the Western Highlands were divided; a good many went by Land, and a good many by Sea; and it fell to my Share to go with Captain Fergusson; I was on board and on Shore with Captain Fergusson for about six Weeks.

Mr. Noel. What Islands did you go to search? and for what Purpose?

D. Camp. We went into several Islands to search.

Mr. Noel. Do you remember your going into the Island of Morar?

D. Camp. The Coast of Morar is on the Continent.

Mr. Noel. Where did you search?

D. Camp. All along the Continent, and in all the Islands that lie there.

Mr. Noel. Who did you find there?

D. Camp. We found a good many Rebel Gentlemen in the Islands, and upon the Continent.

Mr. Noel. Did you find any of the MacDonalds there?

D. Camp. We apprehended several of that Name.

Mr. Noel. Do you remember one called the Bishop, or Vicar-General?

D. Camp. We had Intelligence of his being in Morar; but the Day we expected to have taken him, he escaped with some others.

Mr. Noel. Was you present when my Lord Lovat was taken?

D. Camp. I was not present when he was taken, because it was ashore.

Mr. Noel. Did you see him after he was taken? and where?

D. Camp. I saw him that Morning when he was taken, and brought on board the Furnace Sloop: I was then on board that Ship.

Mr. Noel. Did you search for any Letters belonging to my Lord Lovat, on his being brought on board? and where did you search?

D. Camp. Captain Duff, who was the Captain of the Terror Man of War, was the oldest Officer, and, as such, was the Commanding Officer of all those Vessels; and when my Lord Lovat was brought on board, Captain Duff and Captain Fergusson determined to open his Box, and search it.

Mr. Noel. Did they find any Letters there?

D. Camp. My Lord Lovat, and the Two Captains, desired me to be present at the Opening and Examining the Box; and accordingly I came off the Deck, and was present, and was desired to take down a Particular of every Thing in the Box; which I did write down accordingly: And there was a Bundle of Papers, which seemed to be Letters, and was the last Thing we came to in the Box; and when we came to examine those Letters, I undertook to examine and read them, which I was desired to do; and I read them all.

Mr. Noel. Do you remember any particular Letter that you took notice of to my Lord Lovat? If you do, pray tell my Lords what Lord Lovat said upon it.

D. Camp. I remember that the Purport of all the Letters, except the last, or the last but one, was about my Lord Lovat's domestic Affairs; I cannot be positive whether it was the last, or the last but one; but that was a Letter directed to my Lord from his Son.

Mr. Noel. Did you say any Thing, and what, to my Lord upon that Letter?

D. Camp. I read over that Letter; my Lord Lovat at first had said to us, that we should not find, among those Papers that we were examining, any Matters of Disloyalty or Correspondence with the Rebels: And I expected it was so; but this Letter seeming to be a Correspondence with the Rebels, I said to my Lord Lovat, after I had read the Letter, I think your Lordship had better not have had this Letter here: My Lord said, I was right, and he thought so too; or to that Purpose.

Mr. Noel. Did you say any Thing to my Lord Lovat concerning his engaging, or not engaging, in the Rebellion?——D. Camp. Yes.

Mr. Noel. What did you say to him?

D. Camp. I cannot be positive whether I said it in the Manner of a Question, or in the Way of Conversation; but I took notice to him the one Way or the other, that I wondered his Lordship should be along with the Rebels, and be concerned in bringing his Country into Confusion. I remember I either asked him, or had Conversation with him, to this Effect.

Mr. Noel. What Answers did you receive from my Lord?

D. Camp. What I remember of the Purport and Effect of it was, that he had been disobliged by the Government, and angry ever since he had his Independent Company taken from him.

Mr. Noel. Did he give that as an Answer to the Question that you asked him?

D. Camp. He answered that immediately upon that Question, or this Part of the Conversation, as far as I can recollect.

Mr. Noel. Did you hear my Lord Lovat say any Thing about his Opinion of fighting the Battle of Culloden?

D. Camp. Yes; I heard my Lord Lovat say, That the Rebels and the Pretender's Son did not behave Soldier-like in fighting the Duke of Cumberland at that Time.

Mr. Noel. Did he say that as the Opinion of others, or as his own Opinion?

D. Camp. To the best of my Remembrance, the Purport of the Conversation seemed to be, that he thought it was an unsoldier-like and a bad Manner of carrying on their Affairs.

Mr. Noel. Did he say any Thing about any Opinion of his having been, or not been, taken?

D. Camp. I don't remember I heard any Thing of that.

Mr. Noel. Recollect yourself whether he did or no?

D. Camp. It is so long since that happened, and I never expected to be questioned about that Conversation, that I do not recollect any particular Circumstances about my Lord Lovat's giving any particular Reasons.

Mr. Noel. Did he speak any Thing of his own Advice or Opinion not being followed? and what was it? or to what Purport or Effect?

D. Camp. I cannot recollect whether he did or not.

Mr. Noel. Did he say any Thing about continuing in the Highlands? or for what Purpose?

D. Camp. I cannot charge my Memory with that Circumstance.

Mr. Noel. Did you hear my Lord Lovat say any Thing about his coming to London, after he was taken?——D. Camp. Yes.

Mr. Noel. What did he say upon that Occasion?

D. Camp. In the Course of Conversation, sometimes my Lord said, He was in Hopes that he might get Friends that would befriend him; and he observed, that his being dealt mildly with, might be of more Service to the Government than rigorous Methods; and that it would be of more Service if they would spare him, than treating him with Rigour could possibly be.

Mr. Noel. Did he say in what respect it might be of more Service?

D. Camp. I do not remember that.

Mr. Noel. Did he mention particularly in what he could be of Service, or no?

D. Campbell. I do not remember any Particulars farther, than that the general Tenor of his Conversation seemed to imply, that he could be of Service to the Government, by letting them into the Politicks of the Rebels, or some of their Counsels, or to that Purpose; I cannot be positive to any particular Thing.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, The Witness says, that he was sent for down from the Deck on board the Furnace, as he understood, at the Request of my Lord Lovat, to be present when the Box was opened; and that accordingly he went down for that Purpose: Now I desire he may inform your Lordships, whether there were, or were not, many Papers in that Strong Box?

D. Campbell. It seemed to be a Bundle containing from about 25 to 30 Letters.

Mr. Noel. After you had read a Number of them, before you came to the Letter from his Son that you have mentioned, did my Lord Lovat say any thing about the Contents of the Papers?

D. Campbell. He said, either before or after I had the Letters, directing his Discourse to the Company, that we should find nothing in those Letters that would shew any Correspondence of his with the Rebels.

Mr. Noel. Did he drop any thing to that Purpose during your reading the Papers?

D. Campbell. I cannot say whether he did, or not.

Mr. Noel. Was the Paper you have spoken of at the Bottom?

D. Campbell. I took them all up in Course as they lay; and that was the last, or last but one.

Mr. Noel. What did you say upon having read that Paper?

D. Campbell. I said, that he had better not have had that Paper there; and he said, I was right.

Mr. Noel. What did my Lord Lovat say, or do, upon that Occasion?

D. Campbell. I remember nothing farther than what I have expressed.

Lord Halifax. My Lords, This Witness has told your Lordships, that, among the Letters which were in this Box, there was a Letter found from my Lord Lovat's Son to him; which makes me imagine there was some treasonable Correspondence in that Letter: I therefore pray, he may acquaint your Lordships what the Purport and Tenor of that Letter was.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, We shall produce the Letter in the Course of our written Evidence; and therefore we do not ask him any Questions about it now.

Sir J. Strange. When you said, that you believed the Letter had better not have been there, did my Lord Lovat say any thing to his Servant how such a Mistake happened?

D. Campbell. I do not recollect any such Circumstance; it might have been, but I do not remember any such thing.

Sir J. Strange. Do you recollect, that he said any thing to his Secretary, or any of his People, about him?

D. Campbell. No.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, We have done with this Witness.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Would you aſk this Witneſs any Queſtions?

Lord Lovat. Was you preſent when I ſurrendered my Sword in the Deſert of Morar?

D. Campbell. I was not preſent; I was not aſhore all Day, came on board the Night before, and therefore could not ſee my Lord Lovat ſurrender his Sword.

Lord Lovat. Do you know whether it was to Captain Dugal Campbell, of the Argyllſhire Militia, that I ſurrendered my Sword?

D. Campbell. Captain Campbell was upon the Command; he is a Relation of mine; when he came on board, he ſaid he had taken my Lord Lovat Priſoner. I heard Captain Ferguſſon's Boatſwain mention how they came up with my Lord.

Lord Lovat. Did Captain Ferguſſon threaten Captain Campbell for not delivering up my Strong Box; and did they not fall to Loggerheads about it?

D. Campbell. Captain Ferguſſon never ſaid any thing about it; Captain Campbell did; but I do not apprehend they were at Loggerheads. Captain Campbell told me, that when he had got Lord Lovat, and the Box, he did not know where Captain Ferguſſon was; he went a different Route; and afterwards Captain Campbell's Servant gave Captain Ferguſſon the Box, and deſired him not to part with it.

Lord Lovat. Did you ſee my Brother-in-Law, Major General Campbell, in Captain Ferguſſon's Ship, when it lay there?

D. Campbell. I did not ſee him, becauſe I went juſt before to another Ship.

Lord Lovat. Do you know that I delivered up my Strong Box to General Campbell, and ſaid it would be as ſafe as in my own Hands?

D. Campbell. No; I was not there.

Lord Lovat. Do you know whether General Campbell and Captain Ferguſſon went themſelves into the Cabin, to examine my Strong Box, and ſtaid there two Hours?

D. Campbell. I don't know it; but I had an Inventory of the Things in the Box; and whoever had the Box, the Things contained in it were in the Inventory.

Mr. Attorney General. I deſire to know, if the Strong Box was not opened by a Key delivered by my Lord Lovat, juſt at the Time it was opened?

D. Campbell. Yes, it was; and the Things put in the ſame Order they were before, and the Key delivered back to my Lord Lovat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had it ever been opened before that Time?

D. Campbell. This was the firſt Opening of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. At the time you took the Inventory, was not that the firſt Opening of the Box? And was not the Key delivered by my Lord Lovat?——D. Campbell. Yes.

[Then the Witneſs, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, We will now call Sir Everard Fawkener.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Have you any Objection to Sir Everard Fawkener?——Lord Lovat. Not any.

Sir Everard Fawkener ſworn.

Mr. Attorney General. I deſire, Sir Everard Fawkener, that you will pleaſe to give an Account to my Lords of the Converſation you had with Lord Lovat, after he was taken Priſoner.

Sir Everard Fawkener. After Lord Lovat was taken and brought Priſoner to Fort Auguſtus, and lodged in an Apartment of the Fort there, his Royal Highneſs the Duke ordered me to go and viſit him; not with any Deſign to examine him particularly; for his Highneſs ſaid, he intended to ſend him to London, there to receive what the Laws of his Country ſhould order; but that as, in all Appearance, he had been a great Cauſe of the Miſchiefs brought upon his Country, this Viſit was deſigned to ſee whether he would diſcover any thing that might tend to bring thoſe Miſchiefs to a more ſpeedy End. When I went to him, I thought it would be the moſt candid Way of Proceeding to inform him who I was; and accordingly I told him, that I had the Honour to be Secretary to his Royal Highneſs the Duke: My Lord Lovat ſaid, that, notwithſtanding the Circumſtances he then appeared in, he had formerly rendered great Services to the Government, and the preſent Royal Family; and that he had received ſeveral Marks of the late King's Favour: And my Lord imputed to Marſhal Wade the Cauſe of his preſent Misfortunes; which was, the taking away his Company; which he expreſſed his Reſentment at, by ſaying, that if Kouli Kan had landed in Britain, he ſhould have thought that would have juſtified his Lordſhip to have joined him with his Clan; and he would have done it. He ſaid further, that he had been in a Condition to render Service to the Government, and that he might be of future Service to the Government; and that Mercy, as well as Juſtice, belonged to Sovereigns; and that, if his Majeſty would extend Mercy towards him, he would ſhew his Loyalty, and deſerve more than Twenty ſuch Heads as his were worth. I would have entered more particularly into the Services that he would render the Government, but that I found, by his own Diſcourſe, that the Service he meant was no more, than to bring his Clan for the future into the Service of the Government, inſtead of employing them againſt it. He ſaid, the World allowed him ſome Abilities, and he would apply them to that Service; and concluded with this, ſaying, He was ——— in utrumque paratus

Seu verſare dolos, ſeu certæ occumbere morti.

Mr. Attorney General. Can you charge your Memory with any particular Expreſſions he made uſe of?

Sir Everard Fawkener. I cannot ſay whether what I have ſaid was the Subject of one or two Converſations; but he uſed to ſend for me frequently, and I remember there was one thing he would ſeem to make reconcileable, which was, his Principle of Loyalty to the Family of the Stuarts, and the Services done for the late King and the Royal Family.

Mr. Attorney General. What were the Services he ſaid he could render he Government?

Sir Everard Fawkener. Only that he would employ the Fraſers in the Service of the Government, inſtead of employing them againſt it, and employ his Talents in the Support of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat confeſs or deny that he had been concerned in the Rebellion?

Sir Everard Fawkener. He did not ſeem to me to take the Trouble to deny it, but rather acquieſced in it that he had.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he ever ſay he was not concerned in it?

Sir Everard Fawkener. I cannot ſay he ever did.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, We have done with this Witneſs.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Would you aſk Sir Everard Fawkener any Queſtions?

Lord Lovat. No; only that I am Sir Everard's humble Servant, and wiſh him Joy of his young Lady.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, We have now done with calling our Viva Voce Evidence, any further than what will be neceſſary to prove the written Evidence which we ſhall produce; and therefore what we propoſe now, is, to call a Witneſs, to prove ſome Letters, ſome of them of the Signature and Hand-writing, and all of the Dictating, of the noble Lord at the Bar.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, I ſubmit to your Lordſhips, if it would not be better to have the Whole of the written Evidence together, rather than to go on To-night with Part of it only: We ſubmit it intirely to your Lordſhips, whether we ſhall now go on or not.

Lord Lovat. And I hope your Lordſhips will remember poor Lovat, who cannot ſtand; and that you will give a little Reſpite till Monday, or order his Funeral.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, Is your written Evidence likely to be long?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, It will be very long.

L. H. S. Will it take up more than one Day?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, It is difficult to ſay, with Certainty, how long it will take up: There is a great deal of written Evidence to lay before your Lordſhips; and there muſt be the Summing up of the whole Evidence by one of the Managers.

Lords. Go on; go on.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, Then we will beg Leave to call Robert Fraſer.

He was ſworn and examined on this Trial before, and was my Lord Lovat's Secretary.

Robert Fraſer called into Court.

Sir W. Yonge. Look upon that Letter (ſhewing the Witneſs a Letter), and tell my Lords of whoſe Hand-writing it is.

R. Fraſer. 'Tis my own.

Sir W. Yonge. By whoſe Order did you write that Letter?

R. Fraſ. By Order of my Lord Lovat.

Sir W. Yonge. Did my Lord Lovat dictate it to you, or not?

R. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat dictated every Word of it.

Sir W. Yonge. Look upon the Signature of the Letter, and tell my Lords of whoſe Hand-writing it is?

R. Fraſ. 'Tis my Lord Lovat's.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you, or did you not, ſee him ſign it?

R. Fraſ. I ſaw him ſign it.

Sir W. Yonge. As the Letter is not addreſſed to any body, pleaſe to inform their Lordſhips to whom it was intended to be ſent?

R. Fraſ. It was intended to be ſent to John Murray of Broughton, the Pretender's Secretary.

Sir W. Yonge. Was it ſent from Caſtle-Downey?

R. Fraſ. No; not from Caſtle-Downey.

L. H. S. How do you know this Letter was intended to be ſent to Mr. Murray?

R. Fraſ. My Lord Lovat told me ſo.

Sir W. Yonge. Was the Letter ſent at any time?

R. Fraſ. Yes; it was ſent from Gortuleg.

Sir W. Yonge. When was it ſent?

R. Fraſ. After my Lord Lovat had made his Eſcape from Lord Loudon.

Sir W. Yonge. How long was that after the Letter was writ?

R. Fraſ. It was writ in December, and ſent in January.

Then the Letter (marked N°. III.) ſigned Lovat, was delivered in, and read by the Clerk at the Table, as follows:

No. III.

Honoble and Dear Sir,

I Received, with vaſt Pleaſure, the Honour of your Letter of the 31ſt October, by the Bearer, who has the Honour to be known to you. He is my Relation, and was my Secretary for ſeveral Years; and he is now Captain-Lieutenant in the Firſt Battallion of my Son's Regiment. He gave me great Joy in letting me know at this Time, as well as when he came from Edinburgh ſome Weeks ago, that you was in perfect Health, notwithſtanding of the extreme Fatigue, and conſtant Hurry, that the eſſential Affairs of the Royal Prince keeps you in Day and Night.

I do aſſure you, dear Sir, that no Man in Scotland is better pleaſed to hear of the Continuation of your Health, and the Proſperity of your Perſon in every Shape, than I am, as I always found you a worthy Gentleman, full of good Senſe and Politeneſs, full of true Loyalty and Valour, and faithfully zealous for the Intereſt of the Royal Family, and, in the mean Time, mighty civill and oblidgeing to me, when I had the Honour to ſee on the Subject of the King's Affairs, which never was ſo well taken care of, as ſince they were in your Hands: I woud be therefore a moſt ſtupid, worthleſs Animall, if I had not a moſt grateful Senſe of your Goodneſs and Freindſhip towards me: So, dear Sir, you my beleive me, when I aſſure you, that my Heart and Soul is full of Thanks and Gratitude for the great Marks of Freindſhip, that I had the Honour to receive from you; and I have laid my poſitive Commands upon my Son to love, honour, and reſpect you as my beſt Freind, and to make you his Patron at the Prince's Court, and to do nothing that is eſſentiall without your

Advice

Advice; and he will find it his own Intereſt to obſerve exactly my Inſtructions on that Head.

I ſolemnly proteſt, dear Sir, That it was the greateſt Greif of my Life, that my Indiſpoſition and ſevere Sickneſs keept me from going South to my dear brave Prince, and never parting with him while I was able to ſtand, but venture my old Bones, with Pleaſure, in his Service, and before his Eyes, while I had the leaſt Breath within me: But, when I found, that by Pains and Weakneſs in my Knees, I loſt the Uſe of my Limbs, I reſolved to give a Proof of my ſingular Zeal for my dear Maſter the King, and for my brave glorious Prince, that, I truly beleive, few or none in Scotland would do, but myſelf. I ſend my eldeſt Son, the Hopes of my Family, and the Darling of my Life, a Youth about Nineteen Year old, who was juſt going abroad to finiſh his Studys and Education, after having learned, with Applauſe, what is taught in our Scots Univerſitys, and was graduate Maſter of Arts. But, inſtead of ſending him abroad to compleat his Education, I have ſent him to venture the laſt Drop of his Blood in the glorious Prince's Service; and, as he is extreamly beloved, and the Darling of the Clan, all the Gentlemen of my Name and Clan (which, I thank God! are numerous, and look well, and always beleived to be as ſtout as their Neighbours) are gone with him.

There is not the Head of ane old Family or Trybe of my Name and Clan in this Country, that have ſtaid at home; only a few old Gentlemen, infirm like myſelf, that were not able to travell: And, as my Son is adored by the common People of my Clan, he has brought along with him a conſiderable Number of the beſt of them, in two handſome Battallions; and, if they were as well armed and equipped as I could wiſh, they would look as well as any Clan that went South this Year; for, as I poſſeſs the largeſt and beſt Eſtate in the Shire, I have a great Number of Commons on my Property, about 1500 good and bad; and that which is very ſingular, is, that, in that 1500, there is not 30 but what are Fraſers; which no Chief in the Highland, can ſay of his Clan, but myſelf; for moſt of them are mixed with Men of all the other Clans.

I flatter myſelf, that my Son will behave well at the Head of my People; and I am ſure every one of them will be ready to live and dye with him; and, if he lives, I hope he will be ane uſeful Servant to the King and Prince, and ane Honour to his Family; for he has very good Parts and Learning for his Age: And ſince I am like to make my Exit very ſoon out of this troubleſome World, and that, I thank God! I have ſerved my King faithfully from my Infancy till now; and that it is well known by all the Gentlemen in the King's Intereſt in the North, that, for many Years paſt, I was the Life and Spirit of the King's Affairs in theſe Countrys; and as I made it my only Buſineſs to encourage and keep up the Hearts of the King's Freinds, it was very fatigueing and troubleſome to me, and vaſtly expenſive, by my extravagant Houſekeeping, and giving away often a little Money to the King's Freinds that wanted it much, and from whom I never expect any Payment; and now I give the laſt Proofs of my uncommon and unalterable Zeal for my dear Maſter the King, in ſending what is deareſt to me in the World, my eldeſt Son, and my Clan, to venture their Lives with the glorious Prince Royal, and under his Eyes.

As it would be ill Manners to trouble you in a Letter with ſome eſſentiall Things that concerns my own Perſon and Family, I have entruſted my Couſin, the Bearer, to give you a true Account of what I have to ſay; which, I hope, you will receive with your ordinary Goodneſs, and Freindſhip for me. And I earneſtly entreat, after you conſider what I have to ſay, that you repreſent it to the Prince in the kindly and freindly Manner you always behaved to me: And, as I aſk nothing of his Royal Highneſs, that is either expenſive, diſhonourable, or diſadvantageous, to his Royal Highneſs, and to his Intereſt, I am convinced, that his Royal Highneſs will give me a juſt and gracious Anſwer; which will for ever fix me, my Poſterity, and all concerned in me, to his Royal Highneſs Perſon and Family: And I can ſay without Vanity, that there is not one Family in the North of Scotland more capable to ſerve him, and his Royal Family, than mine, nor non that has deſerved it more of the Royal Family of Stuarts, ſince their Acceſſion to the Throne, than the Fraſers, and the Lords of Lovat. They likewiſe ſignalized themſelves with Honor and Valour for King Robert Bruce, and his Offspring: And it is likewiſe ſingular, that no Lord Lovat of Twenty-four that have been of my Family, ever fought or voted againſt their King.

I beg you Ten thouſand Pardons for this Digreſſion; but, as I look upon you as my beſt Freind, I thought proper to let you know this under my own Hand; which, I hope, you will forgive, and the Tediouſneſs of this Letter, and beleive that I am, as much as any Man alive, with the utmoſt Eſteem and Reſpect, and with a moſt ſincere and conſtant Gratitude, while there is Life in me,

Honoble and Dear Sir,

Your moſt obedient, moſt obliged, and moſt affectionate, faithful, humble Servant,

LOVAT.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Letter will be proved to have been received by John Murray of Broughton. My Lords, he is not now here; and therefore we do not call him to that Particular: But the next Letter we ſhall produce, is a Letter written by my Lord Lovat to the Pretender's Son. The Letter itſelf will appear to be torn in ſome Parts, which will, in a ſmall Degree, mangle the Senſe; but that will be ſupplied by a Copy of the ſame Letter, written at the ſame Time, by the ſame Hand, and by the Order of my Lord Lovat, which we ſhall produce to your Lordſhips.

Sir William Yonge, producing the Letter to the Witneſs, aſked,

Sir Wm. Yonge. Of whoſe Hand-writing is that?

R. Fraſer. It is mine.

Sir Wm. Yonge. By whoſe Order did you write it?

R. Fraſ. By my Lord Lovat's Order.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Was it dictated to you by him?

R. Fraſ. Every Word of it.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Was the Letter ſigned by my Lord?

R. Fraſ. It was.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Is the Signature there? Or, is it torn off?

R. Fraſ. It is torn off.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Look upon that Copy of a Letter, and tell my Lords whom that was written by?---R. Fraſ. By me.

Sir Wm. Yonge. By whoſe Order?

R. Fraſ. By my Lord Lovat's Order.

Sir Wm. Yonge. For what End or Purpoſe was it made?

R. Fraſ. It was made for a Copy to keep.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Is that a Copy of the other Letter which you were juſt now ſhewn?

R. Fraſ. That is a Copy that was drawn from the Principal.

Sir Wm Yonge. Was the Original ſent at any Time?

R. Fraſ. Yes; it was.

Sir Wm. Yonge. When was it ſent?

R. Fraſ. It was ſent from Gortuleg at the ſame Time the Letter to Mr. Murray was ſent.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Can you give an Account how the Signature of the original Letter came to be torn off?

R. Fraſ. I cannot.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, There is ſome Part of the Signature remaining: The Top of the L, and the Top of the t, remain.

My Lords, We deſire the Letter may be read.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Deliver both the Letter, and the Copy, to explain it.

L. H. S. Was the Signature originally there?---R. Fraſ. Yes.

L. H. S. You ſay my Lord Lovat dictated it?---R. Fraſ. Yes.

L. H. S. Did he ſign it?---R. Fraſ. Yes.

L. H. S. Was the Name intire upon it, when it was ſent away from Gortuleg?---R. Fraſ. Yes; it was.

L. H. S. When was it ſent away from Gortuleg?

R. Fraſ. At the ſame Time with the former Letter, that has been read.

L. H. S. When was that ſent?---R. Fraſ. In January.

L. H. S. By whom was it ſent?

R. Fraſ. By a Tenant of my Lord Lovat's; one of his Stratharrick Men.

L. H. S. My Lords, As both the Letter and the Copy have been proved, it will be proper for your Lordſhips firſt to hear the Original read, imperfect as it is, and then the Copy.

Clerk read the Letter No. I. dated Beaufort, November, 1745, and then read the Copy of the ſame Letter, No. II.

* * * *

Then the Copy of the above Letter was read.

Lord High Steward. By whom was this Letter intended to have been ſent to the Young Pretender?

R. Fraſer. It was intended to have been ſent by the Maſter of Lovat.

L. H. S. How long had you this Copy in your Hands?

R. Fraſ. I had it in my Hands for ſome time after it was written: It lay in my Deſk.

L. H. S. How long had you it in your Hands?

R. Fraſ. I cannot be poſitive.

L. H. S. To whom did you deliver the Copy?

R. Fraſ. I do not know to whom I delivered the Copy.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, Though it is impoſſible for your Lordſhips to doubt who is meant by the Words Moſt glorious Prince, and Your Royal Highneſs, in the Letter, yet, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, this Witneſs may be aſked, as he wrote the Letter by my Lord's dictating, Who was meant by theſe Words?

R. Fraſ. I took it to mean the Pretender's Son.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, The next Letter we beg leave to produce, is another Letter that was intended to be ſent to the Maſter of Lovat.

Look upon that Letter [ſhewing the Letter to the Witneſs], and tell my Lords of whoſe Hand-writing it is.

R. Fraſ. It is mine.

Sir W. Yonge. By whoſe Order did you write it?

R. Fraſ. By my Lord Lovat's.

Sir W. Yonge. Was it dictated by Lord Lovat to you?

R. Fraſ. Every Word of it.

Sir W. Yonge. Was it ſigned by my Lord Lovat, when it was written?

R. Fraſ. I cannot be poſitive whether it was ſigned, or not.

Sir W. Yonge. Recollect, if you can, whether it was ſigned, or not.

R. Fraſ. To the beſt of my Remembrance, it was ſigned. It was intended to be ſent, with the other Letters, to the Laird of Lochiel, who was then at Perth. It was written by me, and dictated by my Lord Lovat every Word.

Sir W. Yonge. Can you take upon you to ſay, that it was ſigned, or not?

R. Fraſ. To the beſt of my Knowledge, it was.

Sir W. Yonge. Was that Letter ſent at the ſame time with the others?

R. Fraſ. Yes; it was.

Sir W. Yonge. At the ſame time, and by the ſame Perſon?—R. Fraſ. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. By whoſe Orders were they ſent?

R. Fraſ. By my Lord Lovat's.

Sir W. Yonge. What was you ordered to do with theſe Four Letters?

R. Fraſ. To put them up in a Packet; which I did, and directed them to the Maſter of Lovat.

Sir W. Yonge. By whom was you ordered to do it?

R. Fraſ. By my Lord Lovat.

Sir W. Yonge. Were there Three or four Letters in all?

R. Fraſ. There were Four Letters.

L. H. S. Was this Letter ſent in the ſame Packet with the others?

R. Fraſ. Yes; it was.

Then the Letter N° IV. was delivered in at the Table, and read by the Clerk, as follows:

No. IV.

My Dear Laird of Lochiel,

I Could hardly beleive ane Angell from Heaven, if he had told me, that Donald Laird of Lochiel wou'd forget Simon Lord Lovat, as you have done: And this is the more ſurprizeing, that you cannot ſay, nor juſtly think, that, in one Article of my Life, I fail'd to ſhew my ſingular Affection and Reſpect for my dear Couſin Lochiel; but, on the contrary, gave you all the Marks of Freindſhip in my Power, or that I was capable off; and yet, my dear Couſin, ſince ever you join'd the Prince, you never did me the Honour to write me one Scrape of a Pen, notwithſtanding of the ſtrict Union and Freindſhip that we always lived in, and our conſtant Correſpondence. I ſolemnly proteſt, that I know not what to attribute this Sillence to; ſince I cannot accuſe myſelf of any thing that deſerves it at your Hands: For you never ſaw me fail in my Loyalty to the King, or in my Affection and Freindſhip towards you; nor never will, tho' you ſhould continue as unkind as you are. I therefore beg of you, my dear Couſin, to let me hear from you; and be ſo good as to comfort my languiſhing Soul, and drooping Spirits, by aſſureing me that you are the ſame affectionate Laird of Lochiel to me that ever you was: I truely never had ſo much Need of your Comfort and Aſſiſtance as at this time; for I am in vaſt Diſtreſs of Body and Mind.

The baſe and treacherous Behaviour of our wretched Couſin the Laird of Mac Leod has almoſt coſt me my Life already: The Night before he took his Journey to the Iſle of Sky from this Houſe, ſitting by me, he looked up ſerriouſly, and ſwore to me, that as he ſhould anſwer to God, and wiſhed that God might never have Mercy on him, and that he might never enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but that his Bones might rott on Earth, be burnt, and his Aſhes blown up in the Air, if he did not come with all Speed imaginable, and with all his Men that was already prepared, and come and join my Son, and the Clan Fraſer, and march South with them to the Prince's Service, wherever he was. He ſwore the ſame terrible Oaths and Imprecations next Day to my Son, and to your faithful Servant Gortuleg: And if he had keept his Oaths and Word, I had ſo manhaged this Part of the North, that about 6000 Men had marched South to the Prince's Aſſiſtance; which I thought wou'd much encourage his own Loyal Party, and frighten the Engliſh to his Obedience. But when I got Mac Leod's Letter about Twelve Days after, in which he told me, that, after deliberateing fully with his Neighbour, Sir Alexander, and weighing the Arguments on both Sides, he, and his Neighbour, had reſolved to ſtay at home, and not to trouble the Government.

In reading this Line, I had almoſt fainted, and my Body ſwell'd with Anger and Vexation; ſo that I could not ſleep nor eat for ſeveral Days; and I am yet far from being recovered, for I have a ſevere Stich and Pain in my Left-ſide, which keeps me from my Night's Reſt, and has intirely taken away my Appetite; ſo that I beleive the Treachery of that unnatural, ungrateful, and wicked Man, will be the Occaſion of my Death very ſoon: But before I die, I reſolved, if poſſible, to give ſuch a Mark of my Zeal for my good Maſter the King, and for the glorious brave Royal Prince his Son, that I beleive few in Scotland would do but myſelf.

I ſend my eldeſt Son, who is the great Hopes of my Family, and the Darling of my Life and Soul, to venture his Life and Blood in the brave Royal Prince's Service; and he has all the Gentlemen of my Clan with him, except a few old Gentlemen that are not able to travell. He has Stray, Killbokie, and Religg, the principal Heads of Familys of the Fraſers this Side of Lochneſs; and he has Foyers, Ferraline, and Leale-Garth, as the principal Heads of the Familys in Stratherrick and Abertorff; and he has certainly taken with him the Flour of my Clan. I pray God preſerve him and them, and influence them to fight gallantly before the brave Prince's Eyes; for I had much rather hear of my Son's Death, and of my Clans, than that they ſhould miſs-behave; ſince Hiſtory cannot ſhew ane Occaſion in which the Fraſers miſbehaved; for, I thank God, they were always known to be brave.

Now, my dear Couſin Lochiel, you cannot but think it juſt and reaſonable, that I deliver my Son to your Care, in every reſpect; and that your Clan, Cluny's, and mine, ſhould be moſt unite, and live together like Brethren; and that the Quarrell of the one ſhould be the Quarrell of the other, according to our mutual Engagements by Word and Write; in which, I hope, we will never fail. The treacherous Behaviour of the monſtrous Laird of Mac Leod ſhoud put all Relations and intimate Freinds on their Guard not to fail to one another; for he has, by his Treachery and unnatural Behaviour, fixed upon himſelf the moſt infamous Character of any Man on Earth: That Traitor, inſtead of coming to this Houſe, where he was always Mr. to join my Son, according to his Promiſe, has marched the other Side of Keſſock this Day with 400 of his choſen Men and Gentlemen: I beleive that, hearing that my Son's Regiment was in Arms in this Country, he was affraid to paſs through it, though it's the beſt Way to Inverneſs. His Fears was groundleſs; for I woud not hurt my Mother's Kin, though it was in my Power: But if my Son ſaw the Laird, I believe he would ſhott him, or bring him Priſoner to the Prince, becauſe of his abominable Breach of Oath and Promiſes to him.

When he ſent a little ſneaking Gentleman here with his treacherous Letters, my Son and Gortulegg made two bitter Anſwers to them. When the little Gentleman ſought my Anſwer, I told him to tell his Chief, that he was a Traitor to the King, and a Murderer of my Son and me, which he might be ſure I would reſent, if I was able; but that I would never black Paper to a Man that had ſo baſely betray'd me; that ſince he went to the Devill, I would leave him there, and have no more to do with him.

Honeſt Gortuleg, who made up a Company to go with my Son, and who would be moſt uſefull to him, fell very ill, Eight Days ago, of his old Diſtemper, ane Inflammation in the Kidneys, of which he had almoſt dyd ſome years ago in Lochaber, and many times ſince. He lies in the next Room to me; we are both much indiſpoſed, and Invalids. He joins me in aſſureing you, and my dear Couſin the Lady Lochiel, and all your lovely Family, of our moſt affectionate humble Duty and beſt Reſpects.

Since you are juſtly the Royal Prince's great Favourite, I hope you'll be ſo kind, dear Couſin, as make my Court to his Royal Highneſs; for tho' it is my Misfortune not to be able to follow him wherever he goes (which would be the Delight and Honor of my Life), yet you can freely aſſure his Royal Highneſs, that he has not a more faithfull and zealous Partizan in Scotland: And tho' I am not able to mount a Horſeback, or travell a Foot, yet I have done his Royal Highneſs more Service than any one of my own Rank in Brittain; for I keep Life and Spirits in his Affairs more than any Man in the North: And tho' the Preſident tells me plainly, that I have forfeit Life and Fortune, and that my Perſon is not ſafe in this Houſe; yet I am reſolved to live and die with Courage and Reſolution in my King and Royal Prince's Service; but no Death that they can invent can leſſen my Zeal, or fright me from my Duty.

I beg, my dear Couſin, you may acquaint me what you know of our dear Couſin Mr. William Drummond of Bochaldy; for I can get no certain Accounts of him, which vexes my Soul and Heart; for he was one of the Men in the World that I loved moſt, and that loved me moſt.

I beg you ten thouſand Pardons for this very long Letter; but it is to puniſh you for your Sillence, and to convince that I am always the ſame Man to wards you and yours.

I intreat

I intreat you make my moſt affectionate Compliments to my dear Son-in-law Cluny.—I am perſwaded he will do Honor to all concerned in him.——I am convinced that you will eaſily beleive, that I am, as much as any Man alive, with unalterable Eſteem, Attachment, and Reſpect,

My dear Laird of Lecheil,

Beaufort, Nov . . . . .

The Signature of this Letter was torn.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, There was another Letter, which we take to be One of the Four which was ſent in that Packet; it is not a very material one; and we ſhall produce it to your Lordſhips, rather to connect the Evidence of this Witneſs, than for any thing contained in it. It is a Letter to the late Marquis of Tullibardine, by the Name of Duke of Athol.

Sir William Yonge producing the Letter, the Signature to which, and Part of the Date, is torn off.

Sir W. Yonge. Of whoſe Hand-writing is that Letter?
R. Fraſer. My own.
Sir W. Yonge. By whoſe Directions did you write it?
R. Fraſ. By my Lord Lovat's.
Sir W. Yonge. Did he dictate it to you?
R. Fraſ. Every Word of it.
Sir W. Yonge. Was the Letter ſigned by Lord Lovat?
R. Fraſ. Yes, it was.
Sir W. Yonge. Did you ſee my Lord Lovat ſign it?
R. Fraſ. Yes, I did.
Sir W. Yonge. Is the Signature torn off?
R. Fraſ. Yes.
Sir W. Yonge. Was that Letter ſent with the others?
R. Fraſ. It was ſent with the former that have been read.
Sir W. Yonge. In the ſame Packet?
R. Fraſ. Yes.
Sir W. Yonge. Which was directed to the Maſter of Lovat?
R. Fraſ. Yes.
Sir W. Yonge. For whom did my Lord Lovat ſay that Letter was deſigned?
R. Fraſ. For the Duke of Athol.
Sir W. Yonge. Who did he mean by that?
R. Fraſ. The Marquis of Tullibardine, the Duke of Athol that was abroad.
Sir W. Yonge. By whoſe Order did you ſend that Letter?
R. Fraſ. By my Lord Lovat's Orders.

Then the Letter, N° V. dated 5th December, 1745, was delivered at the Table, and read by the Clerk, as follows:

No. V.

My good Lord Duke

I HAD the Honour to receive two very ob . . . . * from your Grace; for which I give you * * . . . nks; and I can freely aſure your Grace * * . . . neſs and Civilitys towards me, have had * * . . . preſſion upon me, that I will remember * * . . . ays of my Life with Gratitude and Thankf . . . And your Grace ſhall always find me moſt ready to ſerve your Perſon and Family.

I had the Honour to return Anſwers to both your Grace's Letters; one by Mr. Mac Donell, and the other by Mr Mac Pherſon, both of the Army; but as the Bearer has the Honour to be your Grace and is my Relation, and one whom I truſt as much as any of my Family, I have put it upon him to acquaint your Grace of every thing that happens in this Country worth your while to hear, ſince I had the Honour to receive your Grace's Letters; which I am ſure he will do very exactly and very faithfully; for he knows every thing that is done in this Country, and does not want Underſtanding.

I humbly beg the Continuance of your Grace's Goodneſs and Civilitys towards me; and be ſo juſt as to beleive that I will remain, while I live, with the utmoſt Eſteem, Attachment, and Reſpect,

My good Lord Duke,
Your Grace's moſt obedient, moſt oblidged,
Beaufort, Dec. 5. and moſt affectionate faithful humble Servant,
1745.

The Signature of this Letter was torn.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, The next Letter we beg Leave to produce, is a Letter from my Lord Lovat to his Son. My Lords, your Lordſhips have heard already of a Letter which was found in the Box, from the Son to the Father; to which this will appear to be an Anſwer. The Father's Letter we ſhall prove in the ſame Manner as we have done the others; and the Son's will be proved to be of his Hand-writing, and to have been in the Box, at the time it was examined and opened, in the Manner your Lordſhips have heard.

Mr. Att. Gen. Of whoſe Hand-writing is that Letter? [Shewing the Letter to the Witneſs.]
R. Fraſ. It is of my own Hand-writing.
Mr. Att. Gen. By whoſe Orders did you write it?
R. Fraſ. By my Lord Lovat's.
Mr. Att. Gen. Was it ſigned by my Lord Lovat?
R. Fraſ. It was not ſigned.
Mr. Att. Gen. Was it ever ſent by my Lord Lovat's Order?
R. Fraſ. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. To whom?
R. Fraſ. To the Maſter of Lovat.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat dictate it to you?
R. Fraſ. Yes, every Word of it.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did he order you to ſend it to the Maſter of Lovat?
R. Fraſ. Yes, he did.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did Lord Lovat frequently order Letters to be wrote, and order his Secretary to ſend them, without ſigning them?
R. Fraſ. Yes, my Lords, he did.
Mr. Att. Gen. Was not that generally to People the moſt intimate with him?
R. Fraſ. Yes, only to his Intimates.
Lord High Steward. Do you know any thing of the ſending of this Letter?
R. Fraſ. Yes.
Lord High Steward. By whom was it ſent?
R. Fraſ. By one of my Lord Lovat's Tenants.
L. H. S. Was it ſent at the ſame time with the Packet?
R. Fraſ. Yes, I believe it was; but I am not poſitive as to the preciſe Time it was ſent; it was either then, or a little after: If I was to read the Letter, I could tell. [The Witneſs having looked upon the Letter.]
L. H. S. Does that enable you to recollect when the Letter was ſent?
R. Fraſ. Yes, my Lords, it does; it was ſent at the ſame time with the other Letters that I ſpoke of.
L. H. S. With that Packet which has been mentioned?
R. Fraſ. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, This Letter conſiſts of two Pieces; one is a Poſtſcript: Therefore we beg Leave to aſk this Witneſs, Whether the Poſtſcript was wrote by him, and dictated by my Lord, and ſent at the ſame time with the other?
R. Fraſ. Yes, it was.

Then the Clerk read the Letter, No. X. at the Table: Which is as follows:

No. X.

My Deareſt Child,

I Received the Pleaſure of your Letter by the two Expreſſes that I ſent to you the firſt of this Month, which you forgot to mark the Date of. It gave me great Joy, my dear Simon, to know, that you are in perfect Health, and to ſee ſuch a handſome Letter of your own Write and Diction. But I muſt tell you, my dear Child, that you advance ſeverall Things in it that are not juſt, and that you cannot ſupport in Reaſon. In the firſt Place, your Reaſon for your not writeing to me before, ſince I made my Eſcape (though I accept of your Excuſe) was neither juſt nor relevant; for it was not to be ſuppoſed, that either Loudoun or the Preſident would be in Terms with me ſo ſoon, after having ſo ſignally affronted them: But, in the ſecond Place, it is impoſſible there could be any Terms 'twixt Lord Loudoun, the Preſident, and me, that ſhould keep you from writeing to me; no, if I ſhould be attainted: So your Reaſon for not writeing to me was ill-founded. As to your Advice, that comes immediately after it, in repreſenting to me, That if I could make my Peace with Loudoun and the Preſident, and ſave my Perſon and Eſtate, that you would content yourſelf with a thin Regiment: This Thought, my dear Child, was not at all digeſted, and entirely ignorant to my Circumſtances: For, in the firſt Place, Loudoun can no more ſave my Perſon and Eſtate, than any of your ſubaltern Officers can; nay, they cannot as much engage to make me free from Priſon for any Time: So that it would be Madneſs for me to make any Terms with them, but to ſpeak civilly, and to keep myſelf out of their Way. But the Fact is, my dear Child, which you forgot, or perhaps that I did not take Pains to inform you of it, That, above ſeven Years ago, I was one of thoſe that entered into a formal Aſſociation to venture our Lives and Fortunes to reſtore the King, and his Offspring; and we ſigned our mutual Engagements for this Purpoſe with our Hands and Seals, and ſent it to France to the Cardinall de Fleury, then Firſt Miniſter of France, by the Hands of Mr. William Drummond of Bochaldy. The Cardinall was ſo pleaſed with it, that he ſhewed our Engagements and Subſcriptions to the King his Maſter, and begged of his Majeſty to ſupport us: And the King deſired the Cardinall to aſſure us of his Protection, and that he would give us his Aſſiſtance and Succours to reſtore our King. When Mr. Drummond acquainted my own King of this Prooff of my Loyalty, and of my conſtant Zeal for his Perſon and Intereſt, from my younger Years till now, gave me evident Prooffs of his Goodneſs and Favours towards me ſince, as much as to any Subject. He gave Mr. Drummond a Commiſſion to carry to me of Generall of the Highlanders, which I have; and ſeverall Letters writt with the King's own Hand, that his Majeſty would pay all the Money I paid Fraſerdale, and his Creditors, for the Eſtate of Lovat; and, laſt of all, the King was ſo good as to give ſuch a ſingular Mark of his Favour to me, and to my Family, that he created me Duke of Fraſer, &c. and ſent me that Patent by William Drummond; of which I have ane authentick Copy, ſigned and counter-ſigned by the King. I would be a Monſter of Ingratitude, if this did not attach me to his Majeſty more than ever. Bochaldy, not thinking it ſafe to bring the Patent to Britain, left it with his Uncle, old Lochiel, at Bullen in France, who is now come over with Lord John Drummond his Collonell; and I hope he has taken my Patent along with him. I beg you may aſſure him of my moſt affectionate Reſpects. He and I always lived like two Brothers, and loved one another moſt dearly. I am ſure he ſtill retains affectionate Sentiments for me, as I do for him. I hope he will deliver you my Patent, or a good Account of it. So, my dear Child, ſince that Aſſociation, I made it my Buſineſs, where-ever I was, to promote the King's Intereſt, and to gain and engage faithfull Subjects to ſerve him; ſo that I have done more againſt this Government than would hang fifty Lords, and forfeit fifty Eſtates. I have therefore nothing for it now, but to promote every Thing that is for my dear Prince's Honour and Intereſt: And nothing made me ever ſpeak as much as a fair Word to Lord Loudoun, or the Preſident, but to endeavour to ſave my Perſon from Priſon, ſince I was not able to go to the Feild, and fight for my King; but, ſince that is over, and that I have no Safety from Priſon, but by being in Hills and Woods, and inacceſſible Places, my greateſt Deſire under the Sun is, that you ſhould make a good and handſome Figure in the Prince's Army; which I wiſh, and am as anxious to ſee done as yourſelf, and would do as much for it as I would do to ſave my Life, or keep myſelf from Priſon, which would be ſoon Death for me: And, as Loudoun told me the Day before I made my Eſcape, That he had as much to ſay againſt me as would hang all the Fraſers of my Clan, I have no Reaſon to hedge or diſſemble with any Man of the Government: So you may aſſure yourſelf, that I will put all Irons in the Fire to ſend you South, all the Men thats engaged with you, and as many more as I can get.

You

You are quite miſtaken, my dear Child, when you think, that your comeing North would not engage them to go South. I am ſure it would do much more than my Orders; for the Tenth Man would not go this Day at my Deſire, that would go firſt when you began this Work: However, I will be working at them all I can.

I am makeing up, with all the Heaſt poſſible, a Habitation for myſelf in the Houſe of Muily; for that Country is the ſtrongeſt Hold in Scotland; for I will make 100 good Men defend it againſt all Forces that King George can have in Scotland. Beſides, I ordered a Boat to be made, to carry me out and in to the Iſle of Muily, when I pleaſe; ſo that it is morally impracticable to attack me in that Country, where I am reſolved to go, if poſſible, next Week, if my Accommodation be finiſhed. I keep Farraline till I go out of the Country; for if he went away juſt now, when the People of the Aird are going South, and Simon, with ſome Men, out of this Country, I would be hunted like a Fox by Loudoun up and down the Country, which perhaps would coſt me my Life by Cold and Fatigue; ſo that I am reſolved to ſtay at my dear Gertuleg's Houſe, which I reckon my Home as much as if I was at Caſtle-Douny, till my Accommodation is made up at Glinſtraſarer.

I ſhall ſend you my fine Piſtols and Furniture, after I cauſe put them up in a new Portmantua; for it would be a Pity to ſpoil them; for they will be few ſo good in the Army. I wonder that you are ſo long without writeing to me; for you may be ſure that it's a Comfort for me to hear often from you; and when I am a Week without hearing, in the Situation that you are in now, you may beleive that I moſt be very uneaſie. Therefore, my dear Simon, for Chriſt's Sake, don't be a Week without writeing to me; and let me know how all Matters goes with you, and what Situation the Prince's Army is in, and write encourageing News, that may be ſhewn to your People.

I ſhall long much for the Return of this Expreſs; and I ever am, with great Affection,

My deareſt Simon,

January 14th, 1746. Your dutyfull Father.

P. S. I ſend you encloſed the Four Letters that you ſhould have carry'd with you from Caſtle-Douny, which, I hope, you will have Occaſion to deliver out of your own Hand. You may tell the P. when you deliver the Letter to him out of your own Hand, That your Father thought it the greateſt Misfortune of his Life, that his Sickneſs and Infirmitys deprived him of the Honour of attending his Royal Highneſs where-ever he went; and that his only Comfort now is, that he is capable to give his R. H. ſuch a Mark of his Zeal as to ſend you, and his Kindred, to venture your Lives for him; and that he himſelf is every Day expoſed to be made a Priſoner, and be ſent to London, to have his Head ſtruck off; ſince it can be eaſily proven againſt him, that he has done more againſt the Government than any one of his Rank in Brittain; and hopes, that ſince, by God's Help, he has made what may be called a miraculous Eſcape out of the Hands of his cruell Enemy, he will yet expoſe his Perſon, with his Sword in his Hand, to ſerve his R. H. and to do his Duty before his Eyes. You will make your Court and mine to Mr. Murray, as much as you can; he is a very pretty honeſt Fellow; and, I am very ſure, would be ready to ſerve us. And tell young Locheil, and John Roy, That I expect that they will make my Court, and yours, to his R. H. in every Shape; and that they both know the entire Truſt and Confidence I put in them.

I hope your Captain-Leivt. is come home by this Time; and it was very right to ſend him; for he is certainly one of the prettieſt Fellows of your Clan: Give my Service to him, and tell him, That I beg of him to remember all that I ſpoke to him about my Patent; and when you talk ſeriouſly with him about it, I entreat that you both put all the Irons in Fire you can, to make the Thing ſucceed. I aſk nothing of his Royal Highneſs, but to give his Countenance, and own publickly what his Father has done for me; which if he refuſe, I moſt keep to the Oath that I gave before the Duke of Perth, the Earl of Traquair, Locheil, and other Gentlemen, that firſt engaged in the preſent Project with me, that I would never draw my Sword till that was done. And I cannot ſuppoſe or imagin, that his R. H. will make the leaſt Scruple about it, ſince it is for his own Honour and Intereſt, as well as for that of my Family. I beg over and over again, my dear Child, to let me hear more often from you: I give you my affectionate Bleſſing: I pray God, and his Angells, that you may be preſerved in Life and Health till you come to my Age. Adieu, my deareſt Simon!

I need not tell you who the Bearer is; he is a very honeſt pretty Fellow; the natural Head of the M'Taviſhes. One of the Deſerters goes in Company with the Bearer, and the reſt of them will be up with you in a Day or two, in Company with John Dunchea's Son, and John, Thomas Gortmore's Son: They came all to me here, and were inſinuating Complaints againſt their Officers; but I would not hear them, as the ſettleing the Matters of your Regiment is your Province, not mine: But I promiſed them, that you would uſe them well; and that they would meet not only with all Manner of Juſtice, but with Clemency, as this was the firſt Fault: So I hope they won't fare the worſe that I recommend them to you. I beg you may diſpatch the Bearer, and ſend a Man with him here.

To the Honoble the Maſter of Lovat, commanding a Regiment of Fraſers, at Perth, or Stirling.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, It will now be neceſſary, that we ſhould give your Lordſhips an Account of the Son's Letter, and likewiſe of his Hand-writing; and therefore beg Leave to ask the Witneſs, Whether he was acquainted with the Hand-writing of the Maſter of Lovat?

R. Fraſer. Yes, I have ſeen him write frequently.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is that his Hand-writing, as you believe, or recollect?

R. Fraſ. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you ſeen him write?——R. Fraſ. Yes.

Lord High Steward. Have you often ſeen him write?—R. Fraſ. Yes.

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, We ſhall now beg Leave to call a Witneſs to prove where this Letter was found.

Captain Robert Duff called into Court.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Has your Lordſhip any Objection to Captain Duff being ſworn as a Witneſs?

Lord Lovat. No, none at all.

Captain Duff ſworn.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, We beg Leave to ask this Witneſs, Whether he was preſent on board the Furnace, when my Lord Lovat's ſtrong Box was opened?

Captain Duff. Yes, I was preſent.

The Letter was produced to the Witneſs.

Sir W. Yonge. Look upon that Paper, and acquaint my Lords, if that Paper was taken out of my Lord Lovat's Strong Box at that Time. Look it all over, and be poſitive, if you can.

Captain Duff looks over the Letter.

Captain Duff. I ſaw this Letter taken out of Lord Lovat's Strong Box.

Sir W. Yonge. Was that Letter taken out in the Preſence of the Lord Lovat?——Captain Duff. Yes, it was.

Sir W. Yonge. Did my Lord Lovat ſay any thing about that Letter at that Time? Or did any body elſe ſay any thing about it?

Captain Duff. I ſpoke to my Lord Lovat then, and told him, That I believed that Letter was not deſigned to fall into my Hands.

Sir W. Yonge. Did Lord Lovat make any Anſwer to you?

Captain Duff. My Lord Lovat made no Anſwer that I can remember.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, One Witneſs is enough to prove this Fact; but Campbell has alſo told your Lordſhips, That he took this Letter out of the Box.

Then the Letter, No. IX. was delivered in at the Table, and read by the Clerk, as follows:

No. IX.

This Letter is directed, To the Right Hon^ble Simon Lord Fraſer of Lovat.

Stratherick.

My Dr. Papa,

I Received this Day the Pleaſure of your Lop's Letter of the 1ſt. I'm very glad you have no Complaints of your Health, notwithſtanding the Fatigue you have of late undergone in your Eſcape from Inverneſs, which gave every body here great Joy. The Reaſon of my not writing your Lop by the Expreſs I ſent laſt was, that I did not know but you might be on Terms with Lord Loudon and the Preſident, after makeing your Eſcape.

I'm as ſorry at my bad Succeſs with the Commanders here, as your Lop can be; but there is no Help for it: Nor were they altogether to blame, as the Prince's ſudden Return to Scotland made it dangerous for them to take any Step of Conſequence, without his particular Orders; and theſe they had in a very few Days after I came to Perth; and the Orders were, That they ſhould all march directly to Sterling. This, your Lop ſees, put it out of their Power to march Northward: But as I ſaw your Lop's Safety, and the King's Intereſt, required an Expedition to the North, I left no Stone unturned to bring it about: I therefore immediately upon hearing of the Prince's being at Glaſgow, diſpatched my Captain-Lieutenant (who was of great Uſe in urging this Matter to the People at Perth) to Glaſgow, to negotiate the Affair there. He is not as yet returned; but I make no doubt, how ſoon the Affair at Sterling is ended, but a proper Body of Troops .... ordered to clear the North, and ſooner the Art ....an cannot bring it about.

As to your Lop's Conduct in the mean time, if I might give an Advice, it would be, not to loſe on both Sides: I am far from meaning by this, that you ſhould come to Perth; ſo far from it, that provided your Lop could make Conditions for your own Perſon and Eſtate, with L^d Loudon, and the Preſident, I ſhould be content with a thin Regiment; but, in caſe they have neither Authority or Inclination to give this, I humbly think you ſhould immediately come to a Reſolution, and put it in Execution: For, if your Lop's Clan do not all immediately join the Prince, the Cauſe will ſoon be found out. I would not much care if your Lop's Perſon and Eſtate were preſerv'd by their Stay; but it will be hard, if it does not better your Condition with the Government, when it muſt evidently make it worſe with the Prince.—I'm ſorry for the Opinion your Lop has of the Two Charles's: I realy think you wrong them; but, tho' they had all the Inclination in the World, your Lop knows, you always accuſd me of not being very ſubject to Advice. As to what Sr Archd. Grant writes of Inveralachie, I have all the Reaſon in the World to believe t is a very great Falſhood, and I'm ſurprized your Lop ſhould give any notice to it. As to my going to Sterling, if it was the People at Perth that were to command in that Expedition, your Lop ..... ry right, and I would be quite a Conver .... your Argument; but the Prince's poſitive Orders to us all, his comeing there himſelf to command us, and venture his Perſon with us, in my Opinion, quite alters the Caſe.——As to my going North, I know your Lop's Influence over your Clan too well, to think, that, where your Orders fail, my Preſence will have any Weight. I'm certain your Commands, tho' only intimate by your Officers, will do in a Day more than my Preſence wou'd in a Week; and, I'm perſuaded that your People will come up to a Man, if you order them; and, if you do not, that they will ſtay at home; ſo that their comeing, or not, entirely depends on your Lop. Beſides, my going North at this time ....u'd look a little odd, when the Prince is co .... Scotland, has ſent us his poſitive Orders, let us know, that he himſelf is to come and command us in Perſon, that I ſhould, at ſuch a critical Time, run home, would look ill; and the Pretext (as it would be called) of r .... ing Men, wou'd not ſcreen me from an Imputation your Lop, I'm ſure, would alwiſe wiſh me to ſhun. Theſe Reaſons, I dare ſay, convince your Lop, that my going North is not only unneceſſary, but very improper, at this time.

All your Lops Fr ... ds here join me in wiſhing, that your Lop may live live for many Years to serve your King and Country. (a) .... great Affection,

Your Lop's
Dutifull . . . .

FRASER.

Then the Lord Sandys moved to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament: And the Lord High Steward going back to his Chair, the House was adjourned accordingly: And then the Lords and others returned in the same Order as before.

The House being resumed in the Chamber of Parliament,

Ordered, That this House will proceed further in the Trial of Simon Lord Lovat on Monday next, in Westminster-Hall, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon: And

A Message was sent to the House of Commons, by Mr. Spicer and Mr. Edwards, to acquaint them therewith.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do take back the said Lord Lovat, and bring him again to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall, on Monday next, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Monday the 16th of March, 1746.

The FIFTH DAY.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon the Lords and others came from the Chamber of Parliament, in the same Order as on Monday last, into Westminster-Hall; where the Commons, and their Managers, were in the Seats prepared for them respectively, as before: And the Lords took their Places in the Court, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

Lord High Steward. The House is resumed. Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, and afterwards the following Proclamation:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Prisoner Simon Lord Lovat to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords to you directed.

The Deputy Governor of the Tower brought the Prisoner to the Bar, in the like Form as before; and then he kneeled down.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship may rise.

The Lord High Steward asked Leave to go down to the Table: And went accordingly.

Lord High Steward. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, You may proceed in your Evidence.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, We beg Leave to call Robert Fraser again.

Robert Fraser called into Court.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, He has been already sworn; and [Shewing the Witness a Letter] look upon that Letter; and acquaint their Lordships of whose Hand-writing it is.

R. Fras. It is mine; it was wrote by me.

Sir W. Yonge. By whose Order did you write it?

R. Fras. By my Lord Lovat's Order.

Sir W. Yonge. Was it dictated by my Lord Lovat?

R. Fras. Every Word of it.

Sir W. Yonge. Is it signed?

R. Fras. It is not signed.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you send that Letter to any body?

R. Fras. Yes; it was sent from Gortuleg to the Master of Lovat, at Inverness.

Sir W. Yonge. By whose Order did you send that Letter?

R. Fras. By my Lord Lovat's Order.

Then the Letter, No. XI. was delivered in, and read by the Clerk at the Table, as follows.

No. XI.

My deareſt Child,

Gortulegg came home last night, with Inveralachy's Brother, and the Two Sandy's, Fairfeild's Son, and mine: And I am glad to know, that you are in perfect Health; which, you may be sure, I wish the Continuance of. I am sure, for all Sandy's Reluctancy to come to this Country, he will be better pleased with it than any where else; for he has his Commerade, Gortuleg's Son, to travell up and down with him; and I shall not desire him stay ane Hour in the House but when he pleases.

My Cousin Mr. William Fraser tells me, That the Prince sent Notice to Sir Alexander Bennerman, by Sir John M'Donell, that he would go some of these Days, and veiw my Country of the Aird, and fish Salmon upon my River of Beauly: I do not much covet that great Honour at this time, as my House is quite out of Order, and that I am not at home myself, nor you: However, if the Prince takes the Fancy to go, you must offer to go along with him, and offer him a Glass of Wine, and any cold Meat you can get there. I shall send Sandy Doan over immediately, if you think that the Prince is to go: So I have ordered the glyd Post to be here precisely this night.

Mr. William Fraser says, That Sir Alexander Bennerman will not give his Answer to Sir John M'Donell, till he return, about the Prince's going to Beaufort; and that cannot be before Saturday Morning. So I beg, my deareſt Child, you may consider serriously of this, not to let us be affronted; for, after Sir Alexander, and other Gentlemen, were entertain'd at your House, if the Prince should go, and meet with no Reception, it will be ane Affront, and a Stain upon you and me while we breath: So, my deareſt Child, don't neglect this; for it is truely of greater Consequence to our Honour than you can imagine, tho' in itself it's but a Maggot: But, I fancy, since Cumberland is comeing so near, that those Fancys will be out of his Head. However, I beg you may not neglect to acquaint me (if it was by ane Express) when you are rightly informed, that the Prince is going there. I have been extreamly bad these Four Days past with a Fever and a Cough; but, I thank God, I am better since Yesterday Afternoon. I shall be glad to see you here, if you think it proper, for as short or as long a Time as you please. All in this Family offer you their Compliments: And I ever am, more than I can express,

March 20th. My deareſt Child,
1746. Your most affect^te and dutifull Father.

P. S. The Prince's Reason for going to my House is, to see a Salmon kill'd with the Rod, which he never saw before; and if proposes that Fancy, he must not be disappointed. I long to hear from you, by the glyd Post, some time this Night. I beg, my dear Child, you may send me any News you have from the East, and from the North, and from the South.

Lord Halifax. My Lords, I should be sorry to ask any Questions that might interrupt the Managers of the House of Commons in their Proceedings. I should likewise be sorry, that any Questions should be asked by me that should, in any degree, preclude the noble Lord at the Bar from any Defence he should think proper to make: But, my Lords, as the Answer, in Consequence of my Question, will thoroughly establish, or else greatly diminish the Credit which your Lordships may give to this Evidence; therefore I think it my Duty to ask, Whether, after the Writing of this Letter, my Lord Lovat did himself read the Letter, and approve of it? And I look upon it, this would be a necessary Question to ask, in regard to all the other Letters which have been, or shall be, produced.

R. Fraser. I never did write a Letter from my Lord Lovat, but I first made a Scraul, or a Draught of it; and whenever it was transcribed upon clean Paper, it was always read to my Lord Lovat.

Lord High Steward. Repeat what you said just now aloud.

R. Fras. I first made a Scraul or Draught of all the Letters that I wrote for his Lordship, and afterwards transcribed them upon gilt Paper, and then read them every Word to his Lordship. Sometimes my Lord read them himself, and sometimes I read them to him.

L. H. S. Upon your Oath, when you read any Letter to my Lord Lovat, after it had been written over fair, did you read it truly as it was written, Word for Word?

R. Fras. Yes, Word for Word.

Sir William Yonge produced another Letter to the Witness, and asked,

Sir W. Yonge. Look upon that Letter, and tell my Lords of whose Hand-writing it is.

R. Fras. It was written by my own Hand.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, We have done with this Witness for the present.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, would you now ask this Witness any farther Questions?

Lord Lovat. No; I hope to convince these Gentlemen, that no Footman should give Credit to his Evidence.

[Then the Witness withdrew.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, We beg that Mr. John Murray of Broughton, may be called in again.

Mr. Murray called into Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, he has been already sworn. We pray, my Lords, that this Witness may be shewn the Letter, No. III. that was read to your Lordships before, and that was proved to have been written by my Lord Lovat to Mr. Murray.

The Letter, No. III. was shewn to the Witness.

Mr. Attorney General. Do you remember ever to have seen that Letter before?

J. Murray. I am sorry to say, that I received this Letter at Inverness, in the End of February, or Beginning of March, by the Hands of Mr. Fraser of Gortuleg.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Murray says, He is sorry to have received it; but I desire to ask him, if he did in Fact receive it?

J. Mur. I did receive it, at Inverness.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, We pray, that the Letter written by the Pretender's Son to my Lord Lovat, may be shewn to Mr. Murray. The Use which we shall make of it, we shall explain to your Lordships by-and-bye.

The Letter, No. VI. was accordingly shewn to Mr. Murray.

Mr. Attorney Gen. Of whose Hand-writing is the Name at the Bottom of that Letter?

J. Murray. The whole Letter is written by the Pretender's Son himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. The whole Letter?

J. Mur. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Both the Body and the Subscription?

J. Mur. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is it directed to any body?

J. Mur. For the Lord Lovat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is that Direction also of the same Hand-writing?

J. Mur. The same Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know if that Letter was ever sent?

J. Mur. This Letter was delivered, together with the other Letters, to Hugh Fraser, at Glasgow.

Mr. Att. Gen. By whom was it delivered to him?

J. Mur. By me, to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it, or was it not, sent and delivered by the Direction of the Young Pretender?

J. Mur. It was by his Direction.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was it delivered to Hugh Fraser for?

J. Mur. It was delivered to him, to forward to my Lord Lovat.

Lord High Steward. Have you ever seen the Pretender's eldest Son write?

J. Mur. Very often.

(a) The Letter was torn where these Blanks are.

L. H. S. Upon that Knowledge you have of his Hand-writing, do you, upon your Oath, believe that Letter to be of his Hand-writing?

J. Murray. Yes; I was present in the Room when he wrote it.

Then the Witness was shewn another Letter by Sir William Yonge, No. VII.

Sir William Yonge. Who was that Letter wrote by?

J. Murray. This Letter was wrote by Cameron of Lochiel.

Sir W. Yonge. By whose Order was it wrote?

J. Murray. It was wrote by the Direction of the Young Pretender himself.

Sir W. Yonge. Was that Letter signed? and by whom?

J. Murray. The Letter was signed by Cameron of Lochiel, Mac Pherson of Clunie, and by myself.

Sir W. Yonge. To whom was that Letter directed? Or, is there any Direction or Address to it?

J. Murray. No; there is none.

Sir W. Yonge. To whom was it intended to be sent?

J. Murray. To my Lord Lovat.

Sir W. Yonge. Was it, or was it not, delivered to any body to be sent to my Lord?

J. Murray. Yes; it was delivered to Hugh Fraser.

Sir W. Yonge. At the same Time with the Letter from the Pretender's Son?

J. Murray. Yes; at the same Time, and in the same Packet.

Sir J. Strange. What is the Reason why it was not addressed?

J. Murray. The Reason why it was not addressed was, that Hugh Fraser asked, If there was a Patent granted by the Pretender to create my Lord Lovat a Duke. To which Lochiel answered, That, if there was any such Patent, it was in the Hands of his Father John Cameron, who was then at Dunblain; and therefore that Packet was not addressed, because it was not then known, whether there was such a Patent, or no: And it was left without any Direction, till Hugh Fraser should inquire, whether there was any Patent of Duke, or not.

Sir J. Strange. Are you acquainted with Cameron of Lochiel's Hand-writing, or not?

J. Murray. Perfectly well.

Sir J. Strange. Was you present when that Letter was written, or no?

J. Murray. There was none present but Cameron of Lochiel, Mac Pherson of Clunie, and I.

Sir J. Strange. Did you see them sign that Letter?

J. Murray. Yes; I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, I mentioned to your Lordships, That I would explain the Use intended to be made of these Two Letters. Your Lordships have observed, That, among the several Species of Treason charged by the Articles upon the Prisoner at the Bar, one of them is, His corresponding with the Pretender's Son, and likewise with Persons employed by him. My Lords, in order to shew a Correspondence between the Prisoner and the Pretender's Son, and the Persons named in that Letter, we have shewn in Evidence, That the Prisoner at the Bar had an Interview with Cameron of Lochiel, Mac Pherson of Clunie, and Mr. Murray; which is one Kind of Correspondence: And, my Lords, it is material to shew, that those Persons, with whom the noble Lord at the Bar thus corresponded, were Persons employed by the Pretender's Son, it being, by an Act of the 17th of his present Majesty, made expresly High-Treason to correspond with any Persons employed by the Pretender's Son. My Lords, the First Letter now mentioned is a Letter wrote by the Pretender's Son to my Lord Lovat; in which, your Lordships will find, he refers to another Letter, which is the Second Letter produced to your Lordships, as a Letter written by his Order, and containing his Sense. Your Lordships have heard from Mr. Murray, that the First Letter was written by the Pretender's Son, and that the Second was written by his Order; and that proves expresly, that the Persons by whom they were written, were Persons employed by the Pretender; and consequently, any Persons corresponding with them were guilty of High-Treason within the Meaning of the Act: We therefore pray, That the Letters may be read. We do not offer them as Letters received by my Lord Lovat, but as Letters written by Persons employed by the Pretender's Son. The First is proved to be written by the Pretender's Son himself, and the Second by his Direction.

Then the Letter, dated the Second of January 1746, signed Charles P. R. was delivered in, and read by the Clerk at the Table; as was also the other Letter of the same Date, from Cameron of Lochiel, Mac Pherson of Clunie, and Mr. Murray: Which said Letters are as follow:

No. VI.

Glascow, Jan.ye 2d, 1746.

I Have just now read a Letter written to you by Lochiel, Cluny, and Murray; and you may depend on its containing my true Sentiments, as much as if it was all writ with my own Hand. I shall only add to it, that you cannot do me either more Pleasure, or more Service, than by coming to join me out of hand; and then you need doubt as little as I do of our being perfectly satisfied with one another

Charles, P. R.

For the Lord Lovat.

No. VII.

My dear Lord,

YOU need not be surprised, from the Situation we have been in for some time past, that we have faln out of the Way of writeing; notwithstanding of which, our particular Love and Affection for your Lordship, and Family, as well as our sincere Attachment to our King and Countrey, seems to render itt absolutely necessary to give your Lordship the Trouble of this Letter.

We are no Strangers to the great Pain and Trouble your Lordship had taken to persuade Mac Leod and Sir Alexander to act that Part, which was so consistent with their Honour and Interest, and, if we may venture to say so, the very Being of their Familys; for your Lordship well knows, that, upon the falling or standing of the severall Highland Familys now engaged in this Affair, theirs equally depends: For, did we faill in our Attempt, and the Conqueror prove either so weak or wicked, as to endeavour the Extirpation of our Familys (which perhaps wou'd not prove so easy as they imagine), these Two Gentlemen wou'd probably be taken (upon some false Pretext) into the general Corps of Disaffected, with a View to make a clean Stage of the Whole: Or allowing, that, from the scandalous Activity of one, and shamefull Indolence of the other, they were spared; yet their distant and small Influence, in proportion to the Body of the Clans, wou'd necessarily render them insignificant to any Party, that might, from unforeseen Causes, afterwards appear.

Your Lordship's firm and steady Behaviour, in spite of all the underhand Dealings, as well as open Threats, of the Lord Loudon, and your Neighbour the President (who has rendered himself a Scandall to all Scotsmen, and a Nauseance to all Society), together with the early, noble and generous Appearance of the Master of Lovat in the Cause of his King and Countrey, has not only gain'd your Lordship the Admiration of this Island, but has settled the Affection and Friendship of the Prince for your Family upon a more firm and solide Foundation, than we dare venture to say, it was ever on with any of the Royall Family of Steuart, notwithstanding your Lordship's many heavy Sufferings in that Cause: And this my Lord we don't assure you from ourselves alone, but by his Royall Highness speciall and repeated Orders.

Now, my Lord, allow us to congratulate you upon your happy Escape from Inverness. Had it been any other, we could not possibly have given Credite to it, from the Circumstances of the Story; but knowing with what Address Lord Lovat has so often extricate himself from Difficulties, unsurmountable by the rest of Mankind, we cou'd not allow ourselves to form the leaste Doubt of the Truth of it, and are now only in Pain to think of the Fatigue you must have undergone, and the Danger your Health must have run, in so sudden a Change of your usuall Way of Liveing.

The glorious Retreat his Royall Highness made from within Fourscore Miles of London, upon Intelligence of the French being landed in Scotland, haveing ane Enemy within 20 Miles in Front, and Mr. Wade within 3 Days March of Lancaster in his Rear, plainly shows what a great and enterprising Mind is able to perform. The Unactivity of the Enemy in not harrassing the Royall Army, when so much in their Power, with the feeble and weak Attack they made upon our Rear near to Penrith, where they were most severely handled, makes it evident how easy a Game we wou'd have, did Scotsmen act with that Unanimity and Vigour, that made their Ancestors so famous over all Europe. From the present Situation of the Prince's Army on this Syde of Forth, who are all in the highest Spirits, the Numbers in the North already in Arms, the Victory Lord Louis Gordon has obtain'd over Mac Leod and his Adherents, the landing of a Body of French Troops, with a fine Train of Artillery, the Kings of France and Spain declareing the Prince their Ally, and taking him under their speciall Protection, the French Ambassador haveing taken on his publick Character; and, in fine, ane absolute Promise from the Court of France of a Descent of 15,000 Men in England, as by Letters received Eight-and-Forty Hours agoe from his Royall Highness the Duke of Albany and York, and from Cardinal Tencin, makes itt plain, that it now depends on us alone to restore the Royall Family to the Throne of their Ancestors, the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and Scotland to that Honour and Independency your Lordship has so long and ardently wish'd for; which last Article we are absolutely sure of, as Scotland, in the worst of Events, must be ours.

And now, my Lord, the only proper Means that appears to us, in common with all the Prince's Wellwishers, to bring this to the wished-for Issue, is your Lordship's openly appearing in Arms, and joining the Royall Standard; in which Case, we are certain, that there is not a Man beyond the Forth, however timorous or cautious (except some few who have already destined themselves to Perdition), but will appear with the greatest Alacrity and Chearfullness. But, not to take up too much of your Lordship's Time, what his Royall Highness above all Things wishes and desires is, to have your Lordship with him to take upon you the Command of the Army; for tho' the Prince knows, that your Lordship's Age makes it impossible for you to undergo the Drudgery Part of a Generall, yett he is sensible, that your Advice and Council will be of greater Value, than the Addition of several Thousand Men. Tho' your Lordship has your own Equipage, yett we are apt to believe, the Prince's Coach and Six (of which he himself makes no Use) will be as convenient a Voyture for your Lordship; and the French Ambassador, with Lord Pitsligo, who has been in itt all along, won't prove disagreeable Company.

In short, it is impossible for us to give the hundred Part of the Reasons, that makes us so sensible of the absolute Necessity of haveing your Lordship about the Prince's Person, which you will be fully satisfy'd of at Meeting.

This Moment Hugh Fraser is come here, and has given the Prince a Detail of your Lordship's Situation, and that of the Country, with the Proposall your Lordship sent to the Army at Perth; of which he approves exceedingly, and will To-morrow send Orders, by Express, to Lord John Drummond to meett him att Bannockburn, Saturday first, there to concert in what Shape it shall be putt in Execution, and to move 4 or 6 Piece of Cannon towards Blair-Castle without Delay: But of this your Lordship is most earnestly entreated not to mention one Word to any body, leaste the makeing it publick should procure the Escape of some Folks, who may otherwise be catch'd napping; and your Lordship is begg'd to cutt off all Intelligence from that Quarter.

We shall now only beg, that your Lordship give no Ear to any of the Storys spread in the North, as the Gazettes have not contained one Word of Truth in relation to us since we left Edin.; and do us the Justice to believe, that we are, with most sincere Regard, Attachment, and Esteem, wishing you many happy and prosperous new Years,

My dear Lord,

Glasgow, Janr. 2d, 1746. Your Lordship's most obedient, most faithfull, and most sincerely affectionate humble Serva...

The Signature of this Letter was torn off.

Mr. Attorney General.

Mr. Atterney General. My Lords, We have done with Mr. Murray.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Would you aſk any Queſtions of Mr. Murray?

Lord Lovat, My Lords, I did aſk your Lordſhips before, if I might have Liberty to croſs-examine the Witneſſes brought againſt me; and your Lordſhip told me, I might have an Opportunity of doing it, when I came to make my Defence.

L. H. S. Your Lordſhip miſunderſtood me: I did not ſay, that you would have an Opportunity of croſs-examining any of the Witneſſes produced againſt you, when you came to make your Defence; but that you was at Liberty, when the Witneſſes were produced, to aſk them ſuch Queſtions as you ſhould think proper; and that, when you came to your Defence, you might make ſuch Obſervations upon their Evidence as you ſhould think fit: But if your Lordſhip has a Mind to call any of thoſe Witneſſes in your Defence, which have been produced againſt you, I do not doubt but the Managers of the Houſe of Commons will take care that they ſhall attend.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, if the Noble Lord at the Bar will give notice over Night of any of our Witneſſes, that he thinks neceſſary to call in his Defence, we will take care that they ſhall be in the Way.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Would you now aſk any Queſtion of Mr. Murray?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I ſhall ſay nothing till I come to make my Defence, and then I ſhall hope to have an Opportunity to ſay what is juſt againſt theſe Witneſſes.

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, We now beg Leave to call Robert Fraſer again.

Robert Fraſer called into Court again.

Sir W. Yonge [ſhewing the Witneſs a Letter, No. XXI.] aſked, Look upon that Letter, and tell my Lords of whoſe Hand-writing it is?

R. Fraſer. It is mine.

Sir W. Yonge. By whoſe Order did you write it?

R. Fraſ. By my Lord Lovat's.

Sir W. Yonge. Did he dictate it to you?

R. Fraſ. Every Word.

Sir W. Yonge. Who is the Letter ſigned by?

R. Fraſ. By my Lord Lovat.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you ſee him ſign it?

R. Fraſ. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. To whom did he order it to be ſent?

R. Fraſ. To the Duke of Cumberland.

L. H. S. Was that Letter read over by my Lord Lovat, or was it read over by you to him, before it was ſent?

R. Fraſ. It was read over both by my Lord Lovat, and by me to him.

Then a Letter, ſigned Lovat, without any Date, was delivered in, and read by the Clerk at the Table, and is as follows:

No. XXI.

SIR,

THIS Letter is moſt humbly addreſs'd to your Royal Highneſs, by the very unfortunate Simon Lord Fraſer of Lovat.

I durſt not preſume to ſolicit or petition your Royal Highneſs for any Favour, if it was not very well known to the beſt People in this Country, attached to the Government, ſuch as Lord Preſident, &c. and by thoſe that frequented the Court at that Time, that I did more eſſentiall Service to your Royal Family, in ſuppreſſing the great Rebellion in the Year 1715, with the Hazard of my Life, and the Loſs of my only Brother, than any of my own Rank in Scotland: For which I had three Letters of Thanks from my Royal Maſter, by the Hands of the Earl of Stanhope, then Secretary of State; in which his Majeſty ſtrongly promiſes to give me ſuch Marks of his Favour, as would oblige all the Country to be faithfull to him thereafter. Indeed the gracious King was as good as his Word to me; for as ſoon as I arrived at Court, and was introduced to the King by the late Duke of Argyll, I became, by Degrees, to be as great a Favourite as was about Court, of a Scotſman: And I often carried your Royal Highneſs in my Arms, in the Parks of Kenſingtown and Hamptown-Court, to hold you up to your Royal Grandfather, that he might embrace you; for he was then very fond of you, and of the young Princeſſes.

Now, Sir, all I have to ſay in my preſent Circumſtances is, That if your Royal Highneſs will be pleaſed to extend your Goodneſs towards me, in the generous and compaſſionate Manner, in my preſent deplorable Situation, if I have the Honour to kiſs your Royal Highneſs Hands, I would eaſily demonſtrate to you, that I can do more Service to the King and Government, than the Deſtroying a hundred ſuch old and very infirm Men, like me, paſt Seventy (without the leaſt Uſe of my Legs or Knees) can be of Advantage in any Shape to the Government.

Your Royal Father, our preſent Sovereigne, was very kind to me. In the Year 1715, I preſented on my Knee to his Majeſtie a Petn, in favours of the Laird of M'Intoſh, to obtain a Noli Proſequi for him, which he moſt graciouſly granted, and he gave it to Charles Cathcart, then Groom of his Bed-Chamber, and ordered him to deliver it into my Hands, that I might give it to the Laird of M'Intoſh. This was but one Teſtimony of ſeverall Marks of Goodneſs his Majeſty was pleaſed to beſtow on me while the King was at Hanover: So I hope I ſhall feell, that the ſame compaſſionate Blood runs in your Royal Highneſs Veins.

Major-General Campbell told me, That he had the Honour to acquaint your Royal Highneſs, that he was ſending me to Fort William; and that he begg'd of your Royal Highneſs to order a Litter to be made for me, to carry me to Fort Auguſtus, as I am in ſuch a Condition, that I am not able to ſtand, walk, or ride. I am, with the utmoſt Submiſſion, and moſt profound Reſpect,

SIR,

Your Royal Highneſs moſt obedient,
And moſt faithfull humble Servant,
LOVAT.

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, We have done with this Witneſs.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Would your Lordſhip aſk him any Queſtions?

Lord Lovat. No.

[Then the Witneſs, by the Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, have you any other Witneſſes to produce?

Sir W. Yonge. No, my Lords, we have no more Witneſſes to produce.

Sir JOHN STRANGE.

My Lords,

THE Commons have now gone through all the Evidence they propoſe to lay before your Lordſhips, in Support of their Impeachment; and as that has unavoidably run this Cauſe into a great Length of Examination, they think it may not be improper to have the Whole that relates to the impeached Lord collected together, and preſented to your Lordſhips View, in as conciſe a Manner as the great Variety of Circumſtances that have attended this Caſe, will admit of.

This Province is aſſigned to me.

And we chooſe to enter upon it now, at the Cloſe of our Evidence, as the moſt fair and candid Way of Proceeding, with regard to the impeached Lord; For—ſhould the Commons reſerve the ſumming up, and obſerving upon their Evidence, to make a Part of the Reply (as they might do), the Noble Lord at the Bar (his Defence being then cloſed) might perhaps be under ſome Diſadvantage; whereas, in this Way of Proceeding, if any Miſtake ſhall be committed in Stating of the Evidence, or any Obſervations made upon it that the Caſe will not bear, an Opportunity is hereby given to the Party accuſed, to ſet it right.

My Lords, The Articles that have been read to your Lordſhips, contain Four diſtinct Charges of High-Treaſon.

The Firſt is, "The Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the "King."

The Second is, "The Levying War againſt the King in his Realm."

The Third is, "Correſponding with the Pretender to his Majeſty's "Crown."

And the Fourth is, "Correſponding with the Pretender's Son, and "others employed by him, knowing them to be ſo employed."

The Two firſt of theſe are declared to be Treaſon, by the expreſs Words of the Statute of 25th Edward III.

The Third is made Treaſon, by the 13th & 14th William III. cap. 3. the Words of which extend to the correſponding with the Pretender, by Letters, Meſſages, or otherwiſe.

The Fourth Species of Treaſon is againſt the Statute of 17th George II. cap. 39. which makes it Treaſon to correſpond with the Pretender's Son, or others employed by him, knowing them to be ſo employed.

As I have no Imagination that any Doubt can ariſe, whether, when the Matters of Fact are proved to your Lordſhips Satisfaction, the Caſe will not come within the Proviſions of theſe Laws, I ſhall forbear entering into any Argument upon them; and ſhall only ſay, That, although the Articles have charged the Firſt Sort of Treaſon, in the preciſe Words of the Statute of 25 E. III. which are, "Compaſſing and Imagining the "Death of the King," yet the Law does not require Evidence of actually accompliſhing ſo horrid a Crime; for that ſacred Life is ſo guarded, that the bare going about, or contriving ſo flagitious a Scheme, is ſufficient to conſtitute this great Offence, provided thoſe Purpoſes are manifeſted by Overt Acts.

And that, although Levying of War is a diſtinct Branch of High-Treaſon, yet it is alſo an Overt Act of the former Species, "That of Com-"paſſing and Imagining the Death of the King."

My Lords, in ſtating this Evidence to your Lordſhips, I can no way do it ſo intelligibly, as by following the Example of the learned Manager who opened the Nature of the Caſe, and divided it into Three diſtinct Periods of Time.

The Firſt Period contains the Behaviour of the impeached Lord, before the Landing of the Pretender's Son in Scotland, in the Month of July 1745.

The Second Period includes the Facts proved to have been committed by the Noble Lord at the Bar, from the Time of the Pretender's Son's Landing, to the Battle of Culloden.

And the Third Period relates to what happened afterwards, to the Time of my Lord Lovat's being ſent up, and committed to the Tower.

As to the Firſt Period of Time, your Lordſhips are pleaſed to obſerve, that our Evidence goes ſo far back as the Year 1719.

And, my Lords, we choſe to take it up there, becauſe, in the Noble Lord's Anſwer, he values himſelf much upon "Having given, in the "Year 1715, the ſtrongeſt Proofs of his Zeal for, and Attachment to his "late Majeſty, and the Succeſſion of the Crown in his illuſtrious Fami-"ly, againſt ſuch as had undertaken the Deſtruction of both: And now "laments his Misfortune, to have his Fidelity queſtioned, at the End of "his Days, when near worn out with Age and Infirmities; and to be "charged with intending the Subverſion of a Government he had, in the "Strength and Vigour of his Age, exerted his utmoſt Power and Ad-"dreſs to ſupport."

My Lords, I have faithfully rehearſed the Words of this Anſwer, which I think made it neceſſary for the Commons to ſhew, That the Noble Lord's engaging in the late Rebellion, was not the Effect of Dotage, or through the Conſtraint, or by the Impoſition of others; but proceeded from a long and deep-rooted Principle of Diſaffection to the Proteſtant Succeſſion, and of Attachment to the Cauſe of the Pretender.

To begin then, at the Year 1719:

Mr. Chevis, a near Neighbour of the impeached Lord, has ſworn, That the Noble Lord told him, that, in the Year 1719, when an Invaſion was attempted by Spain upon Scotland, and Lord Seaforth was raiſing his Men in favour of the Pretender, he (Lord Lovat) wrote a Letter to Lord Seaforth, to acquaint him, That Lord Lovat would join him with his Clan: That this Letter was delivered to Lord Seaforth, after it had been firſt

ſhewn

ſhewn to one Chiſholm of Knockford. This Chiſholm, it appears, informed the late Duke of Athol of the Contents of the Letter; and his Grace ſent up Notice of it to the Government. This came to my Lord Lovat's Ears, who was greatly alarmed at it; but your Lordſhips find he had ſoon the Dexterity to get up his Letter, upon Terms he had an Opportunity of making with Lady Seaforth: After which he ſhewed it in Confidence to a truſty Friend of his, who declared it to be a treaſonable Letter; and as ſuch, it was thrown into the Fire.

My Lords, I cannot help obſerving to your Lordſhips, that it appears from this Tranſaction, that the noble Lord was then contriving to commit Treaſon, and yet ſcreen himſelf from Puniſhment; for he declared, he had not ſigned the Letter; and therefore, if it had been forthcoming, it could not be fixed upon him.

In the Year 1737, your Lordſhips find him ſending a Meſſage, by Roy Stuart, to the Pretender at Rome, to aſſure him of his Fidelity, and to haſten his Patent that had been promiſed him for a Dukedom.

It has likewiſe appeared in Evidence, That he afterwards ſent another Meſſage of the ſame Nature by Drummond.

In the Year 1739, he appears to have propoſed an Invaſion to Drummond of Bochaldie, in favour of the Pretender, his lawful Sovereign (as he called him); and in whoſe Cauſe he then declared he was determined to live and die.—An Expreſſion your Lordſhips cannot but have obſerved occurs alſo in his Letters.

And the ſame Propoſal Mr. Chevis has proved was afterwards made by my Lord Lovat to Lochiel and Cluny M'Pherſon.

My Lords, I paſs over the poetical Performance between Roy Stuart and the Noble Lord, and go on to the Year 1740. About this time it was he declared to Mr. Chevis, that he had ſigned and ſealed an Aſſociation of the Highland Chiefs, in favour of the Pretender; and which Lord Lovat declared was ſent over to Cardinal Fleury.

My Lords, This material Part of our Evidence is ſo far confirmed, that Mr. Murray (the Pretender's Son's Secretary) has proved his hearing of it at Paris; and that it was alſo mentioned to him, at a private Audience he had of the Pretender's eldeſt Son, in France.

He has likewiſe proved what paſſed between M. Amelot and him, upon the Foot of ſuch an Aſſociation; and the Aſſurances given by that Court, of Encouragement and Support.

But, above all, your Lordſhips have heard it confirmed by a Paſſage, in a Letter of the noble Lord's to his Son, that was read at the Table; wherein he tells him, "That, above Seven years ago, he was one of "thoſe that entered into a formal Aſſociation, to venture their Lives and "Fortunes to reſtore the Pretender (by him called King) and his Off-"ſpring; which Engagement (he ſays) was ſigned with their Hands "and Seals, and ſent to France to Cardinal de Fleury, then Firſt Miniſter "at that Court; and was by him ſhewn to the King his Maſter, who "promiſed them his Aſſiſtance, and Succours, to reſtore their King.

"Since which (ſays he) I have made it my Buſineſs to promote the "King's Intereſt, and to gain and engage faithful Subjects to ſerve "him."

And, in his Letter to the Pretender's Son, he appeals to all who have come into that Country, who (he ſays) will do him the Juſtice to declare, "That he has always been the moſt zealous and moſt active "Partizan they had in the North of Scotland; and in that, he owns, "he did but his Duty." This he repeats, in his Letter to Lochiel; and boaſts himſelf to be "the Perſon who kept Life and Spirits in the Pretender's Affairs, more than any Man in the North."

In the Year 1742, your Lordſhips find him declaring he had got a Commiſſion to be Lieutenant-General of the Highlands, and a Patent of Duke from the Pretender; and which he ſaid he had merited by his Services to that Family.

This Declaration is proved by Mr. Chevis. The Talk of it, and ſeeing a Copy in a Deſk, ſuppoſed to be ſigned by the Pretender, is proved by Robert Fraſer. And Hugh Fraſer ſays, my Lord Lovat ſhewed it him.

Mr. Murray told your Lordſhips, he found my Lord Lovat expected the original Patent had been brought over; but Mr. Murray not being certain, that ſuch a Patent had ever paſſed, he ſent his Letters to Lord Lovat, without an Addreſs, but incloſed in a Packet, with other Papers: And this, he has told your Lordſhips To-day, was done for fear of committing a Miſtake, either by directing them to his Grace, or only to Lord Lovat.

This Affair of the Commiſſion and Patent is alſo confirmed by a Paſſage in the Letter to his Son, that I appealed to before; wherein he tells him, "That, in Proof of the Senſe his own King had of his Loyalty "and Zeal, he had ſent him ſuch a Commiſſion and Patent, beſides a Num-"ber of Letters under his own Hand; the Original of which Patent, he "tells his Son, was in Drummond's Hands; but he, Lord Lovat, had an "authentick Copy of it, ſigned and counterſigned by his King."

"Theſe Favours (he adds) had more than ever attached him to "that Intereſt; and he ſhould be a Monſter of Ingratitude if they had "not." And, in the Poſtſcript, he charges his Son to inquire for the Patent; adding, That "he aſked nothing of his Royal Highneſs (as he "calls the Pretender's Son) but to give his Countenance, and own pub-"lickly what his Father had done for him."

Your Lordſhips have likewiſe heard it proved, that, during all this time, the whole Turn of his Converſation was in favour of the Pretender.

He declared he had made an Alliance, by the Marriage of his Daughter, which added to his Strength, and would enable him to humble his Neighbours.

The Healths drank at his Table have been mentioned by the Witneſſes, particularly that execrable one propoſed by himſelf, of Confuſion to the White Horſe, and all their Generation.

The next Thing your Lordſhips heard of, were his Encomiums on the Pretender, whoſe Countenance he ſaid proclaimed him, to all Beholders, the rightful King.

There are likewiſe in Proof, his Exultations on the Taking of Oſtend, as laying open all the Coaſt of Flanders, and expoſing us to an Invaſion in the Compaſs of one Night, from the French, who, he declared, would carry all before them. And this we rely upon as a Circumſtance of great Malignity, when it is conſidered what Numbers of our Troops were then abroad, in the Cauſe of Liberty and Europe, and what a Situation our Power at home was in at that time.

Your Lordſhips have likewiſe heard his Declarations about the Reformation and the Revolution, and of the noble Lord's Scheme to get rid of both; which was to bring in the Pretender.

And as to Religion, his Declaration to Mr. Chevis was, That he believed there was no true Religion in the World but one; and that was the Church of Rome.

A very extraordinary Declaration this, to be made by one, who, by having had an Independent Company in the King's Service, and upon other Accounts, muſt have ſeemed (at leaſt) to have been of a different Opinion.

Thus circumſtanced, my Lords, and this Temper of Mind, was Lord Lovat in, at the Breaking out of the Rebellion, in the Summer of 1745:

Which is the Second Period of our Evidence.

And this Part of our Evidence, your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to remember, began with the early Notice it appeared my Lord Lovat had of the Pretender's Son's being landed in Scotland.

Upon the News of this, my Lords, he prepares immediately to ſupport him.

His Son, a Youth of about Nineteen Years old, either newly come home, or ſent for from the Univerſity on purpoſe, is appointed to head the Clan.

The Deſign of ſending him to travel is laid aſide.

A Propoſal made by thoſe who were willing to have kept the Son out of Rebellion, is (upon Conſideration) rejected by Lord Lovat, who, at the ſame time, declared, that his firſt Intention was to have headed the Clan himſelf; but that now his Son ſhould go, ſince others had diſappointed him, who he expected would have joined Forces with him.

And, in Conſequence of this, Orders are proved to have been given by my Lord Lovat for all Military Preparations.

My Lords, this Propoſal for the Son's travelling is proved by Hugh Fraſer, to have been made to, and rejected by the noble Lord; who alſo, in his Letter to Murray, makes uſe of theſe Words: "I have ſent (ſays "he) my eldeſt Son, the Hopes of my Family, and the Darling of my "Life, a Youth about Nineteen Years old, who was juſt going abroad "for his Studies and Education; I have ſent him (ſays he), inſtead of "this, to venture the laſt Drop of his Blood in the glorious Prince's "Service."

Hugh Fraſer has alſo proved his being charged with a verbal Meſſage to the Pretender's Son to the ſame Effect; and his being ſent back by Murray, with a Letter to Lord Lovat.

He has alſo proved, That, when he delivered the Letter, and told my Lord Lovat the true State of the Pretender's Affairs, which, he ſaid, were not very inviting, after ſo many regular Forces were come from Flanders, which the Rebels would not be able to encounter, my Lord's Declaration upon that Occaſion was, that "he had gone too far to go back;" and, for fear this News ſhould diſhearten his Son, he ordered Fraſer not to ſay a Word of it to him.

Before or about this time likewiſe, it was, that he received the Pretender's Manifeſto.

He orders his Son to read it aloud to the Company.

And when Mr. Chevis (who never went near him afterwards) was offering ſome Objection to it, my Lord Lovat told him, That he talked Treaſon; or it was Treaſon in him to object to the reading the Manifeſto.

Soon after this, your Lordſhips may recollect, it has appeared, that great Preparations were made for ſupporting the Cauſe of the Pretender.

Arms,—Colours,—Tents,—Powder, and Ball, are prepared, and laid in by Lord Lovat's Order.

His Arms and Creſt are painted, ſuperviſed, and approved by himſelf.

So eager is he, that his Son is upbraided for his Backwardneſs, and the Retainers of the Family are ſpoke to, to haſten him.

He thunders out his Anathemas againſt a Gentleman, who, he thinks, had diſappointed him, which if he had not done, he ſays, in his Letter to Lochiel, "he had ſo managed that Part of the North, that above "6000 Men had marched South to the Prince's Aſſiſtance; which he "(Lord Lovat) thought would much encourage his (the Pretender's "Son's) own loyal Party, and fright the Engliſh to his Obedience."

At this time likewiſe it was, that he wrote thoſe Letters to the Pretender's Son, and his Secretary, which were ſo audibly and diſtinctly read to your Lordſhips, that they ſtand in no need of a Repetition to make their Impreſſion.

In the next place, your Lordſhips find him magnifying the Skirmiſh at Preſton-Pans into a Victory not to be paralleled in Hiſtory; which, I may venture to ſay, was certainly calculated by my Lord for the Encouragement of his People.

When the late Earl of Cromertie's Men marched South, and paſſed by Caſtle-Downey, your Lordſhips obſerve him repining that they ſhould be firſt ready, and what a Shame it was they ſhould paſs by his Noſe.

He entertains the late Earl of Cromertie, and his Officers, then in Arms for the Pretender, and declaring, in my Lord's Hearing, they were going to aſſiſt the Pretender's Son.

And this (as it came out upon a noble Duke's Queſtion) was in a friendly, hoſpitable Manner, and not as a Perſon quartered on by Compulſion.

All this while his Men are gathering together.

There are Two Rendezvouſes of the Clan, and 700 Fraſers drawn up within half a Mile of his Houſe.

He offers (as it has been proved) Commiſſions to ſeveral Perſons;

Declares his Son was to be their Colonel:

Threats and Promiſes are made uſe of by him; and the Firy Croſs is carried about:

The diſtinguiſhing Mark of the Rebels, the White Cockade, is worn by the Officers in his Preſence:

He drinks to their Succeſs; and, in his Letter to the Pretender's Son, "begs of GOD to preſerve him, and give him Succeſs and Glory in all "his Enterprizes:"

He adviſes thoſe he is ſending forth not to let the Pretender's Son hazard his Perſon, by going into Engagements:

He propheſies Victory and Succeſs to him.

Let us all be thankful, that his Prophecies were not fulfilled!

All this while your Lordſhips find him balancing between Hopes and Fears:

He gives Orders, and contradicts them, either as our own Forces arrive, or there comes Aſſiſtance to the Rebels from France;

Inſomuch that his Son is at laſt forced, with Tears in his Eyes, to beg, "He may no longer be made a Fool or a Tool of;" but may then have ſuch Orders as the Father will ſtand by.

And then it was he directed the Clan to march; and ſaid, "Thoſe "were the Orders he would ſtand to."

And, to prove they marched by his Direction, I appeal to his Letter to the Pretender's Son; wherein he ſays, "I have ſent with my Son all "the principal Gentlemen, and Heads of Families of my Clan, with "800 of my common People." And the Words of his Letter to Mr. Murray are, "I have ſent my Son." He alſo tells his Son, in the Letter that has been read, that "he will put all Irons in the Fire to ſend "him Men: I will be working at them (ſays he) all I can."

His Friends and Dependents, however, were in doubt what to make of him, and whether it would be ſafe for them to exert themſelves, or not, ſuſpecting (and not without Cauſe), that he was keeping open a Back-door for himſelf; and therefore it was they alſo thought it neceſſary to call upon him to diſſemble no longer, but to take off the Maſk; which he performed before them, by pulling off his Hat, and laying it at his Feet, telling them "There it is then."

And, in the Letter addreſſed to him from the Pretender's Son, your Lordſhips muſt have obſerved a Jealouſy he had of him; for he is there preſſed to come and join him in Perſon; "and then (ſays the Letter-"Writer) you need doubt as little as I do of our being perfectly ſatis-"fied with one another."

In the Courſe of our Evidence, my Lords, it has appeared, That he was taken Priſoner by Lord Loudon, as fomenting the Rebellion; and his eſcaping afterwards has been proved.

He correſponds with his Son and Lochiel, when in Arms for, and employed by, the Pretender, knowing they were ſo employed; which is one of the Overt Acts of Treaſon laid in the Impeachment.

And what is the Game he is all the while playing againſt his Son? From firſt to laſt it is an Endeavour to avoid being fixed himſelf, and to throw it all upon his Son; that Son, whom he had, in a manner, forced into the Rebellion.

This appears by Robert Fraſer's Evidence relating to a Draught of a Letter to the Lord Preſident, charging the young Man with Obſtinacy, and forcing out the Clan againſt the Father's Inclination, or Power to controul him: Which when the Maſter had diſcovered, by accidentally going into the Secretary's Room, and inſiſting to ſee the Draught, which the Father had ordered he ſhould not, he declares (in great Reſentment of ſuch Uſage from his Father,) "That he would go himſelf to the Pre-"ſident, and put the Saddle upon the right Horſe. Good God! (ſays "the Maſter) how can he uſe me ſo!"

And the Diſpoſition of the Son is further proved by the Circumſtance of pulling the white Cockade out of his Hat, in the Father's Preſence, and throwing it into the Fire.

And this likewiſe was confirmed by the Evidence of Hugh Fraſer, who has told your Lordſhips, That, both from the publick and private Diſcourſe and Behaviour of the Maſter, he is ſatisfied he was better diſpoſed, than to have gone, of his own Accord, into the Rebellion.

To this I may add what fell from Chevis on his Croſs-Examination; who, when he was aſked by the noble Lord about a Plot to hang the Old One, and ſave the Son, declared to your Lordſhips, he never heard of any other than directly the Reverſe.

A Behaviour this from a Father to a Son, which I the leſs wonder at in the noble Lord, when I conſider he was at the ſame time forgetting that natural Allegiance, which he owed to the FATHER OF HIS PEOPLE.

There is one Circumſtance more upon this Head, which is, that, when he began to find his Majeſty's Forces were likely to be an Overmatch for the Rebels, he privately ſent out Hugh Fraſer to find what Terms he could get from Lord Loudon and the Preſident; and what might probably be the Conſequence to himſelf, if his Clan continued in Arms.

And this, my Lords, brings me to the glorious Action at Culloden;

A Battle which, the noble Lord declared, was raſhly entered upon;

Contrary to his Opinion; which was, That the Rebels ſhould have retired to the Mountains, where, he thought, the Duke's Horſe could not follow them, and where they might eaſily have ſubſiſted themſelves till they had received a Reinforcement of Troops and Money.

Upon this Occaſion, he pointed out the Diſtreſs ſuch a Conduct muſt have brought upon the King's Troops, and upon that great Commander, who, under the wiſe Precautions of his Majeſty, and by the good Providence of Almighty GOD, has proved to be the Deliverer of his Country.

Surely, my Lords, there is no Need for me to dwell any longer on that Period of Time, which includes the Rebellion.

The Third and laſt Period is what happened afterwards:

And this, my Lords, conſiſts of a great Number of Particulars, which have been proved at your Lordſhips Bar.

The Firſt thing your Lordſhips have heard of is, his perſonal Conference with the Pretender's Son on the Night of the Battle of Culloden.

The Excuſes made by the noble Lord to that Perſon, for not coming himſelf to join him, on account of his Age and Infirmities, have appeared in Evidence, and are to the ſame Effect with thoſe which have been read out of his Letters.

They are proved to have been, to outward Appearance, ſatisfactory to the Perſon, to whom theſe Excuſes were made; and your Lordſhips find the Parting between them was with mutual Embraces.

The next thing your Lordſhips have heard of, in the Courſe of our Evidence, is the Flight of the noble Lord, in order to avoid being taken by the King's Troops.

To this End, he retires into a Part of the Country, where, he imagined, it would be impoſſible for them to find him out, or harraſs him.

In ſuch a Place it is he had that Meeting with the Rebel Chiefs; on which Occaſion his Behaviour is very remarkable.

For it has appeared, that, at that Conſultation, he continued to be what, at other Times, he boaſted to have been, the Life and Spirit of the Party.

Who ſo forward to reaſſemble their ſcattered Forces as he?

It was he that declared they had no need to be afraid; for he did not doubt but Eight or Ten thouſand Highlanders might yet be raiſed to defend themſelves, either to get Terms from the Duke, or fight the Elector of Hanover's Troops; which was the Expreſſion he made uſe of.

In conſequence of this, it was then agreed to raiſe Men; and a Paper is drawn up for that Purpoſe. The noble Lord indeed avoided ſigning it himſelf, by deſiring Lochiel to vouch for his Son the Maſter's Proportion: But it is very obſervable, that when his Cunning ſuggeſted to him the Declaration, That he was a neutral Perſon, it preſently forſook him, or elſe he had not accompanied it with another Declaration, that denoted his repining at his not having joined the Pretender's Son on his firſt Landing.

This Agreement to raiſe Men is immediately followed by a Diſtribution of French Money for that Purpoſe; which Money, to the Amount of 35,000 Louidors, had been juſt received to ſupport the Rebels.

The Money indeed, that was intended to raiſe the Fraſers with, was not paid into the noble Lord's own Hands; but (the Maſter being abſent) it was delivered to a Servant that attended upon the noble Lord, and Part of it was by himſelf, ſoon after, ſent to his Son; which brings it home to my Lord Lovat as his own Act: It ſhews him privy to the Deſign for which it was advanced (which was treaſonable); and his own Hand is in the Tranſaction.

As this Money has appeared to have been ſent over to ſupport the Rebellion, and thoſe who joined in it, the noble Lord thought he had a Right to a Share of it; and therefore ſends to Murray for ſome of it, which he demanded, and received, for Twenty Days Pay of a Guard to attend his own Perſon, and defend him againſt the King's Troops, who were in Search of Rebels at that Time.

And when, ſoon after, his Son came to deſire he might be permitted to ſurrender himſelf to the Duke, he calls him a Perſon of a mean Spirit, and adviſes him againſt it; that Son who would have been contented with a thin Regiment, ſo the Father had been ſafe.

When taken, his Guilt immediately ſuggeſted to him, and he declares openly, That he expected to loſe his Head: He comforted himſelf, however, that his Eſtate was ſo ſettled, that it would be preſerved to his Family.

Your Lordſhips have likewiſe heard the Circumſtances that attended the Search of his Strong Box: When Papers were found in it, he declares in a jocular Way, that they would find no Treaſon in them: He continues in this Strain whilſt many private and immaterial Papers were reading; but, when the Letter from his Son (which has been read in Evidence) appeared, and he is aſked, Whether that came within his Deſcription, or was deſigned to be found there, he changes his Note, is ſurpriſed at its being found there, and agrees it was not in a proper Place.

After all this, I need only barely mention the Offers he made to merit his Life by Diſcoveries, and appeal to the Letter written by him to the Duke of Cumberland, juſt now read at the Table.—Thoſe muſt have proceeded from a Conſciouſneſs, that he had forfeited his Life before.

How the noble Lord will be able to reconcile all his ſoftening Inſinuations in his Letter to the Duke with what he before ſaid to Lochiel, wherein he declares, "He is reſolved to live and die in his King and Royal "Prince's Service; and that no Death the Government can invent can "leſſen his Zeal, or fright him from his Duty"—This I muſt leave to his Lordſhip; for, I own, it is paſt my Skill.

My Lords, I am very ready to acknowledge, that, in the Courſe of our Evidence, one of the Witneſſes has ſaid, That, by what he could obſerve, the noble Lord did not ſeem to be averſe to his preſent Majeſty; but his Reſentment, he ſaid, was againſt the Miniſtry, that had taken away his Company.

But how far that is agreeable to his Actions, Healths, and Declarations, that he was ready to join Kouli Kan, if he had come over, your Lordſhips will conſider.

And, as to his Objection to Mr. Murray's Evidence, as remaining an attainted Perſon, I will only ſay (that it may appear in this Tryal when it comes abroad into the World), That although Sir Thomas Armſtrong ſuffered upon the Notion, that a compulſory taking within the Year was not ſtrictly a Surrender; yet, in the Second Year of his preſent Majeſty's Reign, in the Caſe of one Roger Johnſon, who had been outlawed for Treaſon, and was taken within the Year allowed by the Statute, the then Attorney General, like a true Friend to the Liberty of the Subject, diſdained to inſiſt upon Armſtrong's Caſe; and the Court of King's Bench held it was immaterial, whether he came before them on a voluntary Surrender, or a Compulſory Caption, ſo long as it appeared the Man was there, and amenable to Juſtice within the Time: And, in Conſequence of this, the Man had his Trial, and was acquitted.

To apply this to our Witneſs, I need only obſerve, That it has appeared in Evidence, that his Time was not out till 12th July 1746, and he was committed Priſoner by the Lord Juſtice Clerk Fourteen Days before, and has ever ſince remained in Cuſtody, amenable to the Law. The Precedent, therefore, I have cited, is directly in the Point, and founded in the Juſtice and Equity of the Caſe; for a Man, who has a fixed Time given him to come in, ought not to be prejudiced by being taken up before.

Some Queſtions, my Lords, have been aſked our Witneſſes upon their Croſs-Examinations, and ſome Objections thrown out about Expectations of Mercy, which I do not ſee it is neceſſary to take Notice of at this Time: If they are relied upon by the noble Lord, in his Defence, the Reply will be the moſt proper Time to anſwer them; and to that I ſhall leave it.

All that now remains for me to do, in Diſcharge of the Commands I have been honoured with by the Commons, would be to take particular Notice of the Letters that have been read, and the Strength they communicate to the Evidence of the Witneſſes.

But, as I have attempted ſomething of this Nature as I went along, and they are alſo freſh in your Lordſhips Memory, it does not ſeem neceſſary to be making a ſeparate Head of them.

In Gratitude therefore to your Lordſhips, who have thus honoured me with your Attention, I forbear to deſcant any farther upon theſe Letters; and if, in this, I ſhall be thought by thoſe who ſent me hither, to have been remiſs in my Duty to them (to whom I own myſelf accountable), I ſhall humbly implore their Forgiveneſs for any Omiſſions I may have been guilty of in this Service.

This only I will ſay, upon the Letters, that whatever bodily Infirmities the noble Lord may labour under, yet whoever reads or hears thoſe Letters, and conſiders the Strength and Energy of the Expreſſions, dictated by himſelf, muſt agree with him in what he intimated to Sir Everard Fawkener, That the Faculties of his Mind were yet intire.

I have now done, my Lords, with ſtating the Evidence that has been given in Proof of the High-Treaſon charged in the Impeachment; and I ſhould abuſe your Lordſhips Patience, if (after this) I ſhould attempt to apply it particularly to the ſeveral Statutes I took Notice of in the Outſet.

Surely, my Lords, I may venture to ſay, that theſe Facts (if not anſwered by the noble Lord) muſt, in your Lordſhips Judgment, amount to a full Proof of all the High-Treaſon with which he is charged; and will abundantly juſtify me in alluding to that Expreſſion contained in the noble Lord's own Letter to his Son, wherein he boaſts "to have done "more againſt this Government than would hang Fifty Lords, and for-"feit Fifty Eſtates."

Thus, my Lords, have the Commons maintained their Impeachment, and ſupported it (as they think) with a Weight of Evidence ſuitable to the Dignity of their Interpoſition.

They think they have ſufficiently ſhewn your Lordſhips, that this unfortunate Lord was not fit to be truſted to bring his Clan about again, Et verſare dolos, as he offered to do. On the contrary, they think it appears, that they have properly ſingled him out, and brought him to this Bar, on their own Proſecution, here to receive your Lordſhips Judgment for the other Part of the Alternative pointed out by himſelf.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, have you any thing farther to offer in Support of your Impeachment?

Sir William Yonge. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons have cloſed what they have to offer by way of Evidence, and in Support of the Charge againſt you; and now is the Time for you to make your Defence, by making ſuch Obſervations as you ſhall think fit, upon the Evidence which has been given againſt you, and upon what they have offered, by way of Argument, to enforce it. Your Lordſhip may likewiſe open your own Evidence, which you have to offer, and call your Witneſſes, and purſue your own Method, as you ſhall think fit; provided it be agreeable to Law, and the Courſe of Proceeding in ſuch Caſes.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I have already told your Lordſhips ſeveral Times ſince I came here, that I was very weak and feeble, and really afflicted with a Diſtemper that made me almoſt incapable to appear here, if it had not been to ſhew my Obedience and Reſpect to your Lordſhips: And I now humbly beg, that ſince you are ſo good as to indulge me to ſay ſomething for myſelf, that you will give me Four or Five Days, at leaſt, to recover my Health a little, and to prepare my Evidence. And, my Lords, I have another Thing humbly to propoſe to your Lordſhips: There is an Evidence, a very material Evidence for me who is a Member of the Houſe of Commons: I would humbly beg that your Lordſhips would be pleaſed to take ſuch Methods as you ſhall think proper, to make him appear at the Bar, and give his Evidence, which is but Two or Three Words, whatever Day your Lordſhips pleaſe.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, as to what you have mentioned, Firſt, in aſking for Four or Five Days, to make your Defence, and prepare your Evidence, that is an Interruption of a Trial I have not known; but it is in the Judgment of the Lords what Time they will be pleaſed to give you. As to what your Lordſhip hath ſaid, in regard to a Member of the Houſe of Commons being a material Evidence for you, you muſt be adviſed by your Counſel (who are to adviſe you as to Matters of Law, and the proper Methods of Application) in what Manner you are to make Application for that Purpoſe.

Lord Lovat. My Lord, I will take your Lordſhip's Advice, and will do ſo; but it will be impoſſible for me to appear before you, except I am better in Health.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, have you any thing to offer, in relation to what my Lord Lovat has now ſaid?

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, Nothing, but to ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, when you will be pleaſed to proceed. My Lords, the Time that the Priſoner at the Bar has deſired is very extraordinary, and will be very inconvenient: But, my Lords, a reaſonable Time the Commons will have no Objection to.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I am at your Lordſhips Diſpoſal; I am a Priſoner here, and ſubmit entirely to your Lordſhips Determination, be it what it will.

The Lord Preſident moved to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament; and the Lord High Steward going back to his Chair, the Houſe was adjourned accordingly. And then the Lords, and others, returned in the ſame Order as before.

And the Houſe being reſumed in the Chamber of Parliament,

Ordered, That a Meſſage be ſent to the Houſe of Commons, by Mr. Sawyer and Mr. Mountague, to acquaint them, That the Lord Lovat having requeſted, that Normand M'Leod, Eſquire, a Member of their Houſe, might be examined as a Witneſs at his Trial, the Lords do deſire, that they will give Leave to the ſaid Normand M'Leod to be ſo examined at the ſaid Trial: And that their Lordſhips will proceed further thereupon, in Weſtminſter-Hall, on Wedneſday next, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do take back the ſaid Lord Lovat, and bring him again to the Bar of this Houſe in Weſtminſter-Hall, on Wedneſday next, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Wedneſday, the 18th Day of March, 1746.

The Sixth Day.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon the Lords and others came from the Chamber of Parliament, in the ſame Order as on the Firſt Day, into Weſtminſter-Hall, where the Commons and their Managers were in the Seats prepared for them reſpectively, as before. And the Lords took their Places in the Court, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

L. H. S. The Houſe is reſumed. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure, that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, and afterwards the following Proclamation:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Priſoner Simon Lord Lovat, to the Bar, purſuant to the Order of the Houſe of Lords to you directed.

The Deputy Governor of the Tower brought the Priſoner to the Bar, in the like Form as before; and then he kneeled down.

L. H. S. Your Lordſhip may riſe.

The Lord High Steward aſked Leave to go down to the Table: And went accordingly.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, your Lordſhip may now proceed to make your Defence.

The Priſoner then acquainted their Lordſhips with his great Age and Infirmities, which rendered him, as he alledged, incapable of ſpeaking what he had to offer; and that therefore he had put into Writing what he had conceived, and was adviſed to ſay on this Occaſion; and which he deſired their Lordſhips would be pleaſed to permit their Clerk to read at the Bar: And their Lordſhips permitting it, the ſame was read by the Clerk, as follows; viz.

My Lords,

IN my unhappy Situation, it is with the higheſt Pleaſure and Gratitude, that I return my Acknowledgements to your Lordſhips, for the Indulgence you have ſhewn me, during the Courſe of my long Tryal: And had I, my Lords, met with any Degree of Juſtice from thoſe who have appeared as Witneſſes againſt me, it would have been unneceſſary for me to have troubled your Lordſhips with any thing in my own Defence; but as there can be no Security againſt the Oaths of Perſons who are ſwayed by Malice, or intereſted by the Hopes of Life, and Fears of Puniſhment, it becomes neceſſary for me to trouble your Lordſhips with a few Obſervations: Firſt, As ariſing from the particular Circumſtances of my Caſe; and, Secondly, Upon the Nature of the Evidence that has been produced againſt me, and the Degree of Credibility which ſuch Sort of Evidence deſerves. With reſpect to the Firſt, my Lords, upon being ſerved with a Copy of the Articles of Impeachment, I immediately applied to your Lordſhips for an Order to bring up thoſe Witneſſes, whom I thought neceſſary for my Defence: And, conſidering the complicated Nature of the Treaſons charged upon me, and the great Period of Time they were intended to comprehend, it cannot ſurpriſe your Lordſhips, that my Liſt contained Sixty, or thereabouts. But, to my very great Misfortune, uncommon Methods have been uſed againſt me, to prevent their Attendance; The ordinary Judges have been diveſted of their Offices, and obliged to appoint others, who were recommended by the King's Officers to officiate for them: Nay, the ordinary Seats of Juſtice have been, in my particular Caſe, forſaken, and new Courts erected, to which Numbers have been forced under the ſevereſt Menaces, to attend as Witneſſes againſt me; whilſt all whom thoſe new Judges and Rulers, upon their Inquiſition, found might be ſerviceable to me in my Defence, have been overawed and intimidated; ſo that they durſt not attend my Tryal. Theſe, my Lords, are Facts as notorious in themſelves, as unprecedented in theſe Kingdoms; and Facts which I can inſtantly prove, to your Lordſhips Satisfaction, partly by Affidavits now in my Hands, and partly by Witneſſes of undoubted Credit, who have been brought Five hundred Miles from the Highlands of Scotland, with a View to be examined againſt me; and who, it is probable, have been laid aſide, leſt what I now take the Liberty to affirm to your Lordſhips, ſhould, upon their Examinations, have been made to appear.

My Lords, By theſe and ſuch-like Methods, have my Witneſſes been terrified from appearing; at leaſt, ſo very few have had the Reſolution to venture, that they ſcarcely deſerve to be named, and cannot be material for my Defence, without the Aſſiſtance of the others. I am therefore under the hard Neceſſity to forget yet a little longer the Inconveniencies of a cloſe and tedious Impriſonment, and to ſtifle that Deſire of Liberty which is ſo natural to me, for ſome longer time, till, by your Lordſhips effectual Interpoſition, I can command the Attendance of my Witneſſes; and, of Conſequence, juſtify my Innocence: For, if your Lordſhips conſider, that my very Words and Actions have been made the Subject of a critical Examination, from the Year 1719, my Caſe muſt appear extremely hard, and neceſſarily require a very circumſtantial Proof, by Examination of thoſe Perſons with whom I have had any Intercourſe, from that Period till now: But, if your Lordſhips ſhould inſtantly oblige me to proceed upon my Defence, unprepared as I am, I muſt ſubmit. Locked up a Priſoner in the Tower, I cannot make your Lordſhips Order effectual againſt the ſeveral Perſons in the Liſt I gave in to this Honourable Houſe; and to proceed to Tryal, whilſt I am under theſe Circumſtances, has the Appearance of ſo much Hardſhip, that I flatter myſelf it will move your Lordſhips effectually to interpoſe, and order ſome proper Method, by which my Witneſſes can be forced to attend; and not ſuffer a Peer of the Realm to be deſtroyed, becauſe he cannot work Impoſſibilities, or oblige me, like the Iſraelites of old, to make Brick without Straw. I muſt therefore humbly move, and inſiſt with your Lordſhips, not to introduce a Precedent in my Caſe, which may be attended with the worſt of Conſequences to any Lord who ſhall hereafter be brought to your Lordſhips Bar. And, indeed, my Lords, I ſay this not altogether out of a Regard to myſelf: I am now Fourſcore Years of Age, have ſuffered many Changes, and, thank my God, have no unbecoming Fear for any Thing I can yet ſuffer: I know, by the quick Advances and Frailties of old Age, that, in the Courſe of Nature, I am haſtening to my End; and, by the Favour of the Almighty, I have been long preparing for that great and ſolemn Change: But this, my Lords, may produce a Precedent that ſhall prove fatal to many of younger Years. And, ſurely, your Lordſhips muſt be convinced I have the greater Reaſon to inſiſt on this Demand, upon conſidering what I propoſe to lay before your Lordſhips, in the Second Place, namely, a few Obſervations upon the Nature of the Evidence, and the Credit that thoſe Witneſſes deſerve who have ſworn againſt me.

In general, your Lordſhips have undoubtedly perceived the high Improbability that runs through the whole of Chevis's Oath: He, my Lords, takes upon him to ſwear to Converſations as far back as the Year 1719; and mentions as if I was then engaged in Plots againſt his late Majeſty, at the very Time many of your Lordſhips know, and that it is notorious, I was highly in his Favour. It might, my Lords, carry the Air of Vanity for me to mention to your Lordſhips the many particular Services I was thought to have done his Majeſty in the Year 1715: But allow me, my Lords, to ſay, they were Services of ſuch a Nature, as made his Majeſty think me entitled to very diſtinguiſhing Marks of his Favour, as will appear by ſeveral Letters, which, by his Majeſty's Orders, I had the Honour to receive from the late Lord Stanhope, my great and very worthy Friend: So that, my Lords, Chevis's Accounts are even more than improbable; beſides, that the minute and particular Manner in which he ſwears to Circumſtances that have happened ſo long ago, muſt render his Teſtimony too ſuſpicious to be believed. And allow me to obſerve a very remarkable Circumſtance, That he has carefully avoided to name any one Man who was preſent at any one of thoſe Converſations, and could poſſibly have been brought to confront him, leſt the ſame Providence which detected the Elder, in the Caſe of Suſanna, might have detected Chevis. A farther Circumſtance your Lordſhips will alſo allow me to obſerve, That it is not to be ſuppoſed, that I, or any Man of Common Senſe, ſhould have talked ſo often, and ſo freely, upon a Subject of that delicate Nature, to a Perſon, who, if your Lordſhips can poſſibly believe himſelf, was always ſo openly and zealouſly affected to the preſent Eſtabliſhment. But can your Lordſhips yet conceive any good Opinion of a Perſon who voluntarily offers himſelf as an Evidence to little trifling Converſations, which the only Opportunity he had of hearing was his eating at my Table, when he muſt have ſtarved at his own, and periſhed for Cold, unleſs my Money had furniſhed him with Cloaths? In Evidence of this, I was, till very lately, poſſeſſed of many of his accepted Notes, for greater Sums than I am afraid he is yet able to pay, I having prevailed with a Friend to let me have Money upon them, to ſupply my preſent Wants; and I ſhould be ſorry if he ſhall ſuffer by his Friendſhip to me.

The next Three Evidences, who have appeared at your Lordſhips Bar againſt me, are thoſe infamous Fellows, who call themſelves Secretaries; the one, and on this Occaſion I name Murray, the moſt abandoned of Mankind, who, forgetting his Allegiance to his King and Country, has, according to his own Confeſſion, endeavoured to deſtroy both, like another Catiline, to patch up a broken Fortune upon the Ruin and Diſtreſs of his native Country; To-day ſtealing into France to enter into Engagements upon, your Lordſhips may believe, the moſt ſacred Oaths of Fidelity; ſoon after, like a ſanguinary Monſter, putting his Hand and Seal to a bloody Proclamation, full of Rewards for the apprehending the ſacred Perſon of his Majeſty; and, leſt the Cup of his Iniquity had not been filled, to ſum up all in one, impudently appears at your Lordſhips Bar, to betray thoſe very Secrets, which he confeſſed he had drawn from the Perſon he called his Lord, his Prince, and Maſter, under the ſtrongeſt Confidence. Your Lordſhips will perceive, I have yet forbore to mention the other Circumſtances of his having received, ſince the Battle of Culloden, 35,000 Louidors, which he yet expects to live and riot on; but, my Lords, who can conſider the Price of Blood and Treachery, and not beſtow that Sort of Pity, which Murray, the greateſt Criminal, the true Diſciple of his Maſter Iſcariot, calls for? One Thing more, my Lords, I cannot omit; and that is, to take ſome Notice of the indecent and ſcandalous Liberty the Wretch has attempted to take, by aſperſing a Number of very noble, worthy, and honourable Perſons, of whoſe Innocence your Lordſhips were ſo fully perſuaded, as to ſtop him in his Career, leſt, like one of Samſon's Foxes, he ſhould deſtroy ſome of the worthieſt Members of the Commonwealth. But if, after all that I have ſaid, your Lordſhips can pay the moſt diſtant Regard to this Secretary's Evidence, it is hard to determine how many of his Majeſty's other faithful Subjects may eſcape the licentious Liberty of his Impeachment; for let him once think, that, upon the Multiplicity of his Accuſations, his worthleſs Life depends, and there is no Reaſon to apprehend any of the moſt faithful Subjects can boaſt of a long Security. I will not, my Lords, trouble your Lordſhips much upon the Objections, to which my Counſel have ſpoke againſt the Competence of this Witneſs; but, if a Deſire of Life to ſo wicked a Perſon, who muſt be afraid to die, can be any Inducement to ſwear falſely, it is apprehended impoſſible any of your Lordſhips can give the leaſt Degree of Credit to the Oath of the Villain Secretary Murray.

My Lords, the next Secretary I chooſe to trouble your Lordſhips with, is Robert Fraſer, a Perſon who never had the good Fortune to be worth a Shilling, and whoſe Veracity and Truth never exceeded his Riches. He, my Lords, has taken upon him to ſwear to Letters wrote by himſelf, and many of them not pretended to have been ſigned by me: Others, my Lords, have neither Date or Direction; and no Sort of Proof has been attempted to be brought by the Managers, where, or in whoſe Cuſtody, they were ſaid to have been found. How weak an Evidence, therefore, this is to fix ſo heavy a Charge as High-Treaſon upon a Peer of this Realm, is humbly ſubmitted. But, my Lords, this Witneſs has alſo, to go through the whole Drudgery of Swearing, framed a very improbable and aukward Tale to your Lordſhips, of his having found, in a Writing-deſk in my Houſe, a Copy of a pretended Patent, creating me Duke of Fraſer, which, by-the-bye, the Managers have not offered to produce; and I muſt leave it with your Lordſhips, whether it is at all likely, that, if I had been poſſeſſed of ſuch a Patent, I ſhould have left it ſo carelеſly looſe; or that, if I had, this Witneſs ſhould have been the only Perſon in my numerous Family to have ſeen it; for I am not now ſpeaking of the Teſtimony of the other Witneſs Hugh Fraſer. My Lords, is it, or can your Lordſhips think it poſſible I could have had the Copy, and not have had the Original? The one was quite as eaſily ſent as the other; and your Lordſhips all know, that it is a mighty unuſual Thing to ſend Copies of Patents, where Dignities are intended to be conferred. As to the other Part of Robert Fraſer's Teſtimony, that relates to his writing for Arms, Powder, and Ball, I am perſuaded it cannot make the leaſt Impreſſion upon your Lordſhips: Firſt, Becauſe he has not depoſed to expreſs Quantities; and, ſecondly, That it might have been ſo eaſy for the Managers to have brought a poſitive Proof, had the Fact been true, by the Perſons from whom theſe Things were ſaid to have been bought; or, at leaſt, by thoſe who carried them to my Houſe, though indeed I can make no manner of Doubt, that had this Gentleman, Robert Fraſer, thought it material, he would have gone a little farther, and ſworn to that, as he is one of thoſe honeſt Gentlemen, whoſe Mouth ſeldom opens, but for their Tongues to lye.

My Lords, I muſt next trouble your Lordſhips with Hugh Fraſer, and again repeat a general Obſervation, That a Perſon, himſelf in the Rebellion, and who did, upon his Oath, declare at your Lordſhips Bar, That he would give no Evidence, except in Expectation of Life, cannot be reckoned an unſuſpected Witneſs; for, according to the Value which he ſhall ſet upon his own Life, muſt his Evidence be leſs or more hurtful to me; ſince, my Lords, Life is the Purchaſe, and his giving Evidence the only Price. He ſays, That I ſhewed him a Copy of the Patent; and yet, long after this pretended Time of ſhewing, he, my Lords, was the very Perſon to whom Murray declared, he knew nothing of ſuch a Patent. He was alſo the Perſon who received thoſe treaſonable Letters that have been read againſt me; and it is not pretended, that after this Interview with Murray at Glaſgow, I ever ſaw him, or had any Intercourſe with him, till I was brought to your Lordſhips Bar; nor is it laid to my Charge, that I ever received any of thoſe Letters or Commiſſions, which Fraſer is ſaid to have brought from Glaſgow. And here, my Lords, I muſt repeat the ſame Obſervation againſt Fraſer of Dunballoch, who was himſelf in the Rebellion; and therefore in like manner ſwearing away my Life to preſerve his own.

Many other Particulars, my Lords, I purpoſely omit, reſerving my Obſervations, till I ſhall have your Lordſhips Order to bring up my Witneſſes; and then, my Lords, I ſhall be able to falſify thoſe Particulars, and, indeed, the whole Subſtance of this heavy Charge againſt me.

I muſt, my Lords, beg your Lordſhips Pardon for taking up ſo much of your Time. I labour under ſo many Diſadvantages from old Age, and the Decay of the Faculties of the Mind, that it is no Wonder I ſhould make a bad Defence for myſelf, unaſſiſted either by Counſel or Sollicitor; and that ſo many great and eminent Perſons, ſkilled in the Laws, and Maſters of Ciceronian Eloquence, have appeared to manage the Proſecution againſt me. But I hope, in your Lordſhips Hands my old Life is ſafe; and that your Lordſhips, whoſe noble Blood is like ſo many Fountains, from whence iſſue Streams of Humanity, Juſtice, and Honour, will not, nay, cannot, find me guilty upon the Evidence of ſuch Witneſſes as have defiled your Bar, and have no other Method left to expiate their own Crimes, but by laying them upon me: For your Lordſhips muſt allow me to obſerve, that all the Witneſſes, except Sir Everard Fawkener, have both their Lives and Eſtates depending upon their giving ſuch Evidence as may convict me: And even as to Sir Everard, he has Judgment enough to know, that, ſhould I be acquitted, he would find it difficult to defend an Action at my Inſtance, for Reparation of uncommon Wrongs, and Acts of Violence, done by his Order upon my Eſtate, in cutting very valuable Woods, and appointing Receivers of my Rents; and conſequently he has too great an Intereſt in my Conviction, to be conſidered or received by your Lordſhips as an unexceptionable Witneſs.

My Lords, to me, who am no Lawyer, it appears extremely ſtrange and unreaſonable, that Socii Criminis ſhould be admitted Witneſſes before they are pardoned; but if it is true, that the Law of England differs in this reſpect from the Law and Uſage of all other Nations, I ſhould be glad to know, how that Difference has been introduced.—I take it, my Lords, for granted, that it is not by the Force of any Statute; for, I am ſure, the great Learning and Ingenuity of the Managers have omitted to mention none that concerns the Caſe of Treaſon; and, if it is by the Common Law, my Objection is entire, and can only be determined by your Lordſhips, as in this Caſe my Jury.

In ſome Sort of Felonies, my Lords, I remember to have often heard of Statutes which authoriſe a Proof of that Nature; but, in Treaſon, I never heard of one: And, indeed, the Neceſſity does by no means appear to me to be the ſame; 1ſt, Becauſe the one is not ſo common as the other; and 2dly, Becauſe there can be no Room to plead a Penury of Witneſſes in Treaſon, which is laid to my Charge: whereas there may in Felonies. Another ſtrong Conſideration will naturally occur to your Lordſhips, that the Revenge or Malice of Power cannot operate in Felonies; but may in Treaſon.

If, my Lords, I ſhould be told, It has been eſtabliſhed by Cuſtom, I muſt beg Leave to ſay, That, as it ſeems contrary to Juſtice and Reaſon to truſt to the Evidence, which an Accomplice unpardoned is to give, it is incapable of being hallowed by Cuſtom; ſince I am aſſured, that it is an eſtabliſhed Rule, That, unleſs a Cuſtom is reaſonable, and according to Juſtice, it is void.

But allow me, my Lords, to aſk, What Reaſon can be given, why theſe confeſſed Rebels have not been honoured with a Pardon previous to my Trial? If it is that the Government believe, in that Caſe, they would not ſwear the Truth, can the Wit of Man invent a ſtronger Argument why your Lordſhips, in equal Diffidence, ſhould not believe them when they they have no Pardon; for, if they are ſuch abandoned Villains (and, in Truth, my Lords, I believe them ſuch) as to perjure themſelves after a Pardon, when they can neither gain nor loſe by the Evidence they are to give; ſurely your Lordſhips ought not to truſt them, when their Lives depend upon giving ſuch Evidence as may convict me, who have yet the Honour to be a Brother Peer.

One thing more, my Lords, and I have done; and that is, Should this Sort of Proof be once eſtabliſhed, I may venture to ſay, that Delatores would become greater Nuiſances here than ever they were at Rome; and that all our noble and antient Families will be, by degrees, cut off, upon Pretence of Jacobite or Republican Plots; ſince the Hiſtory, my Lords, of all Ages ſhews, that Power can make Plots; and fatal Experience proves, that in every Age are Villains ready, like my Three Secretaries, to prove what Power ſhall hereafter dictate or expect.

Thus far I thought it my Duty, in Vindication of myſelf, to trouble your Lordſhips, and, without further treſpaſſing upon your Patience, freely ſubmit my Life, my Fortune, my Honours, and, what is deareſt of all, my Poſterity, to your Lordſhips.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Do you think fit to call any Witneſſes?

Lord Lovat. No, my Lords.

Mr. Sollicitor General.

My Lords,

THOUGH the noble Lord perſeveres in denying the Charge, yet, as he has called no Witneſſes, but reſts his Defence altogether upon Complaints, Obſervations, and Objections to the Force and Credibility of the Evidence againſt him, if I was to follow my own Inclination and Judgment, I ſhould think it unneceſſary to ſay any thing upon a Matter already ſufficiently underſtood.

But I am told by the Opinion of thoſe, whoſe Opinion is to me a Law, That I ſhall not do my Duty, nor perform the Part aſſigned me, unleſs I cloſe this ſolemn Trial, by calling back your Lordſhips Memory and Attention to the principal Grounds upon which we have proceeded; eſpecially as they have now been objected to as inſufficient, and complained of as ſetting an Example, which may be dangerous to Innocence hereafter.

The Gentlemen who manage this Proſecution have, in the Courſe of it, meant to do Juſtice to their Truſt in ſuch a manner, that the noble Lord at the Bar ſhould feel the Weight of Truth, but not of his Accuſers: And it is not to aggravate Guilt, or to preſs down the Load heavier upon him, that I am at this time commanded to ſpeak; but to ſatisfy your Lordſhips now, and the World hereafter, from the Nature of the Evidence by which this Accuſation has been ſupported, why no Part is attempted to be anſwered.

He has put your Lordſhips in mind, that the Law requires you, as his Judges, to be his Counſel; which is certainly true: And I am perſuaded, Compaſſion, inſeparable from noble Minds, has been ingenious to ſuggeſt to your Thoughts, Doubts and Objections, in favour of one ſtanding in that Place, who certainly labours under ſome Infirmities, and is allowed to defend himſelf by no other Tongue than his own.

If Scruples have ariſen in the Minds of any of your Lordſhips, they will gain Strength from that Conſideration; and the honeſt Prejudice you muſt feel from his Want of Aſſiſtance, may be of more Advantage to him, than the ableſt Aſſiſtance he could have had.

It is proper, therefore, it may even be neceſſary, to endeavour to ſet the Whole in ſuch a View, as may tend to obviate every Poſſibility of Doubt.

There are but Two Things for your Lordſhips Conſideration upon this Occaſion:

Firſt, Whether the Evidence given is a convincing and legal Proof of the Charge, if it be believed? And next, Whether there be any Reaſon to induce your Lordſhips not to believe it?

The only thing, in the Courſe of this Proceeding, which has not yet been done to ſatisfy your Lordſhips with regard to both theſe Points, is, to apply the particular Evidence that has been given to the principal Overt Acts laid in the Articles of Impeachment.

As this is the only thing which has not yet been done, it is the only thing which I ſhall attempt to do.

There are Three Kinds or Species of Treaſon, of which the noble Lord at the Bar ſtands accuſed by the Articles:

Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King:

Levying War againſt his Majeſty within the Realm;

And Correſponding, contrary to a late Act of Parliament.

The Two firſt are Treaſons, declared to be ſo by the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third.

Compaſſing or Imagining the Death of the King is an inward Thought, or Operation of the Mind; and therefore, as God alone can judge of Thoughts, becauſe He alone can know them, ſo, for this Kind of Treaſon, no Man can be convicted, unleſs he does ſome open Act, which proves the ſecret Intention of his Mind. It is not neceſſary, that the open Act ſhould have an immediate Tendency to take away the natural Life of the King; but any Deſign to ſubvert his Government, or to raiſe War againſt him, which may, in conſequence, draw on his Death, has been long ſettled to be an Overt Act of this Species of Treaſon.

In High Treaſon, for greater Security, the Law requires a formal, as well as convincing Proof; and therefore no Man can be found guilty of High Treaſon, which is not proved by the Teſtimony of Two Witneſſes. One, let his Credit be never ſo good, let him be ſupported by never ſo many Circumſtances, is not ſufficient.

But it is not neceſſary, that Two Witneſſes ſhould give Proof of the ſame Overt Acts: If they give Evidence in Proof of diſtinct Overt Acts, it is enough, provided they are Overt Acts of the ſame Species of Treaſon.

Having mentioned what legal Proof is required (for this was the Law before the 7th of King William, and is therefore applicable to the preſent Occaſion), I will ſtate the Overt Acts of each Species of Treaſon, whereof the noble Lord ſtands impeached; and apply the Evidence to them.

Of Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, the principal Overt Acts laid in the Articles are Three:

1ſt. That he conſpired, with ſeveral of the King's Subjects, to induce a Foreign Power (the French) to invade this Kingdom.

2d. That he correſponded with the Pretender, in order to dethrone the King, and, with that View, ſolicited, and accepted, a Commiſſion from him to be Lieutenant-General of the Highlands; and alſo ſolicited and obtained from him a Patent creating him Duke, as a Reward of his engaging in that Deſign.

3d. That he conſpired to raiſe War and Rebellion againſt his Majeſty within this Realm.

That Conſpiring with a Foreign Power to invade the Kingdom is an Overt Act of Compaſſing the Death of the King, cannot now be doubted.

As to the Proof:

Robert Chevis proves, That, in June 1739, he heard Lord Lovat propoſe to William Drummond of Bochaldie the Project of an Invaſion;

That, in 1740, he heard him ſay, There was an Aſſociation; and drank Succeſs to it.

Robert Fraſer proves a Letter of the 14th of January, 1746, from the noble Lord to his Son, to have been dictated by him, afterwards read over to him, approved of, and ſent; in which are theſe Words:

" I was one of thoſe that entered into a formal Aſſociation to venture " our Lives and Fortunes to reſtore the King, and his Offspring; and " we ſigned our mutual Engagements for this Purpoſe with our Hands " and Seals, and ſent it to France to the Cardinal de Fleury, " then Firſt Miniſter of France, by the Hands of Mr. William Drum- " mond of Bochaldie. The Cardinal was ſo pleaſed with it, that he " ſhewed our Engagements and Subſcriptions to the King his Maſter, " and begged of his Majeſty to ſupport us; and the King deſired the " Cardinal to aſſure us of his Protection and Aſſiſtance, and Succours to " reſtore our King."

Here are Two Witneſſes who give Evidence of that; which is direct Proof againſt the noble Lord of this Overt Act: But this direct Proof is ſtrengthened by general Evidence.

John Murray of Broughton proves, That ſuch an Aſſociation and Memorial was ſent to the Court of France; and that William Drummond of Bochaldie was the Perſon who carried it; he names all who ſigned it; he was himſelf carried by this Drummond of Bochaldie to Monſieur Amelot, and introduced as coming from thoſe, who ſigned, and ſent the Aſſociation and Memorial: He was received by Monſieur Amelot upon that Foot: He had an Anſwer from the French King to carry to thoſe from whom he came.

This general Evidence is again corroborated by that, which is poſitive Proof againſt the noble Lord.

In his Poſtſcript to the Letter I mentioned before, he ſays, If his Patent of Duke was refuſed, he would keep to the Oath that he gave to the Gentlemen who firſt engaged in the Project with him, that he would never draw his Sword till that was done. He mentions Three of the Perſons by Name who firſt engaged with him; ſo that the general Evidence is ſupported by this Poſtſcript, as to ſome of thoſe who ſigned the Aſſociation, and particularly as to Lord Lovat himſelf.

The Authenticity of this Letter and Poſtſcript don't reſt upon the poſitive Teſtimony of Robert Fraſer only; but is ſupported by the Letter from my Lord's Son, to which this is an Anſwer, proved to be the Hand-writing of the Son, and to have been found in my Lord's Cuſtody.

There are other Circumſtances which give Credit to the Proof of his having entered into the Aſſociation, which was ſent to France by William Drummond of Bochaldie.

In his Letter to Lochiel, he inquires after Mr. William Drummond, as the Man whom he loved, and who loved him beſt.

Robert Fraſer ſays, Lord Lovat told him, That his Patent was in the Hands of one Drummond in France.

And, in his Letter of the 14th of January to his Son, he ſays, The Patent was ſent by William Drummond, as a Reward of his having joined in the Aſſociation.

The Second Overt Act of this Species of Treaſon, which I mentioned, was,

That he correſponded with the Pretender, in order to dethrone the King, and, with that View, ſolicited and accepted a Commiſſion from him to be Lieutenant-General of the Highlands; and alſo ſolicited and obtained from him a Patent creating him Duke, as a Reward of his engaging in that Deſign.

Tho' Correſponding with the Pretender be made Treaſon by Act of Parliament, yet Correſponding, in order to diſturb the King's Government, is an Overt Act of Compaſſing the Death of the King; and ſo it is laid in the Articles.

As to the Proof of this Overt Act:

Robert Chevis heard him, in 1736, ſend a Meſſage by Roy Stewart to the Pretender, with Aſſurances of his Fidelity, and that he would live and die in his Cauſe; and charged Roy Stewart to expedite the ſending over his Commiſſion of Lieutenant-General, and Patent of Duke.

This is corroborated by Charles Stewart, who met Roy Stewart in 1736 at Boulogne, and was told by him, That he was going to Rome; and hoped for a Place under the Pretender, thro' Letters of Recommendation which he carried from Lord Lovat.

Robert Chevis was told by Lord Lovat in 1742, That he had got a Commiſſion of Lieutenant-General, and obtained a Patent.

Robert Fraſer ſaw at Gortuleg, among Lord Lovat's Papers, a Commiſſion from the Pretender, appointing him Lieutenant-General.

He ſaw the Copy of a Patent creating him Duke.

He was told by Lord Lovat, after his Eſcape from Lord Loudon, That his Patent of Duke was in the Hands of one Drummond in France.

Hugh Fraſer was told by Lord Lovat, That his Patent of Duke was in Lochiel's Hands; and, in November 1745, my Lord ſhewed him a Copy of the Patent.

In his Letter to John Murray of Broughton, he refers to his Couſin the Bearer (who was this Hugh Fraſer) about a Suit he had to make.

John Murray of Broughton ſays, Gortuleg explained this to relate to his Patent.

In his Letter to his Son, ſpeaking of the Pretender, he ſays,

" When he was acquainted with the Aſſociation, he gave Mr. Drum- " mond a Commiſſion to me of General of the Highlanders, which I have."

"Laſt of all, the King was ſo good as to give ſuch a ſingular Mark "of his Favour to me and my Family, that he created me Duke of "Fraſer, and ſent me that Patent by William Drummond; of which I "have a Copy."

The Original, he ſays, was left with old Lochiel.

In the Poſtſcript to this Letter, he ſays,

"Tell your Captain-Lieutenant (Hugh Fraſer) I beg of him to re-"member what I ſpoke to him about my Patent.——Put all Irons in "the Fire.——I aſk nothing of his Royal Highneſs, but to give his "Countenance, and own publickly what his Father has done for me; "which if he refuſe, I muſt keep to the Oath, &c. never to draw my "Sword till it was done."

This is corroborated by general Evidence given by Broughton, and Hugh Fraſer: They talked at Glaſgow about it: The Packet was not directed till Hugh Fraſer ſhould learn from old Lochiel, whether he had ſuch a Patent.

Of this Overt Act there is direct poſitive Evidence, by the Teſtimony of Three Witneſſes, Hugh Fraſer, Robert Chevis, and Robert Fraſer, ſupported by Two more, Charles Stewart, and John Murray of Broughton; and all the Circumſtances, which confirm the Authenticity of the Letters.

The Third Overt Act, which I mentioned, of this Species of Treaſon, was,

That he conſpired to raiſe War and Rebellion againſt his Majeſty, within this Realm.

In his Letter to the Pretender's Son, he ſays,

"None of your Servants but will do me the Juſtice to declare, that I "am, and always have been, the moſt zealous and active Partizan your "Royal Highneſs has in the North of Scotland."

In his Letter to John Murray: "For many years paſt I was the Life "and Spirit of the King's Affairs in theſe Countries," &c.

"I made it my only Buſineſs to encourage and keep up the Hearts of of the King's Friends."

In his Letter to his Son, he ſays, "Since that Aſſociation, I made it "my Buſineſs, wherever I was, to promote the King's Intereſt, and to "gain and encourage faithful Subjects to ſerve him: So that I have "done more againſt this Government than would hang Fifty Lords, and "forfeit Fifty Eſtates."

In the Poſtſcript, "It can be eaſily proved againſt him (your Father), "that he has done more againſt the Government than any one of his "Rank in Britain."

Hugh Fraſer proves, That he ſaid he thought of heading the Fraſers himſelf, as he believed Four or Five thouſand Men would have riſen; but that was diſappointed.

He ſent a Meſſage to the Young Pretender, by the Witneſs, That he had intended to have gone at the Head of Four or Five thouſand Men, to ſupport his Intereſt.

When the Witneſs gave him the true State on both Sides, he ſaid he had gone too far to go back.

In his Letter to Lochiel, he ſays, He had ſo managed the North, that 6000 Men would have marched South to join the Pretender, had not the Deſign been fruſtrated.

Robert Fraſer proves, That he made Excuſes to Lochiel, Keppoch, and others, for not having joined them publickly: That he made Excuſes, after the Battle, to the Young Pretender; and they both embraced.

This is ſtrengthened by general Evidence given by John Murray of Broughton, that, when the Young Pretender landed, a Meſſage was ſent to Lord Lovat by Doctor Cameron, and Gortuleg came from him.

And alſo by general Evidence given by Robert Fraſer, that, ſoon after the Pretender landed, one Cameron came to Lord Lovat, and Gortuleg went to the Young Pretender.

This is ſtrengthened too by moſt of his Letters; which imply a previous Concert, and Aſſurances given: They are full of Apologies for his not acting up to that, which, he ſeems conſcious, was expected from him.

His Wavering and Irreſolution ſpeak a Mind divided between former Engagements and preſent Fear.

At firſt, when he thought Four or Five thouſand Men would be raiſed, he intended to have headed them himſelf: When that Scheme was diſappointed, he neither would join the Rebels himſelf, nor ſend his Men. Upon the News of the Battle of Preſton-Pans, he reſolved his Son ſhould go.

When an Account came of the Landing of the Dutch Forces in England, he reſolves his Son ſhould ſtay, ſo as to give Occaſion to that Expreſſion of his, That one Day undid what another did.

At laſt, when Lord John Drummond landed in Scotland, with a Body of French Forces, and Aſſurances of powerful Succours from France, he returns to the Deſign of ſending his Son.

This Conduct, and Fluctuation of Counſels, ſhew he equally dreaded either breaking former Engagements, when the Attempt wore a Face of Succeſs; or keeping them, when it looked deſperate; and gives Credit and Strength to all the direct and poſitive Evidence, that the Caſe was ſo.

Thus this Overt Act is proved by the Teſtimony of Two Witneſſes, Robert and Hugh Fraſer, and ſupported by all the Circumſtances which confirm the Authenticity of the Letters.

The Second Species of Treaſon, whereof the noble Lord ſtands accuſed by the Articles, is, Levying War againſt the King within the Realm.

My Lords, Levying War, properly ſpeaking, and in the Nature of the thing, is itſelf an open Act, and may be laid as an open Act, of Compaſſing the Death of the King: It is impoſſible to conſider a Man as levying War, without having done ſome Act. In Treaſon there are no Acceſſaries; all who aſſiſt are Principals. Tho' a Man ſhould not himſelf appear in Arms, nor commit any Hoſtilities with his own Hands, yet if he voluntarily aids, in any Manner, thoſe who are in Arms, and commit Hoſtilities, he is guilty of levying War.

But tho' levying War be really an Act itſelf, to be proved by the Hoſtilities committed, or Aſſiſtance given; yet, as the Letter of the Statute of Edward III. requires the Four Kinds of Treaſon firſt mentioned in that Act to be made out by open Deed, Overt Acts are always laid of this Species of Treaſon, tho', generally, they are only Deſcriptions of the Manner of levying War.

In the preſent Caſe, the Articles have pointed out particularly the Manner in which the noble Lord is charged with having levied War. And of this Species of Treaſon there are Three Overt Acts laid:

Firſt, That he encouraged, by Meſſages and Letters, the Pretender's Son, and his Adherents, then in Arms, waging War againſt his Majeſty, within this Realm.

Hugh Fraſer proves, That he carried a Meſſage from Lord Lovat to the Young Pretender; the Purport of which your Lordſhips have heard.

Robert Fraſer proves his Letters to the Pretender, Lochiel, and John Murray of Broughton.

His Evidence, as to the Letter I laſt-mentioned, is ſupported by its appearing to be written in Anſwer to a Letter of the 31ſt of October, from Broughton; and Hugh Fraſer ſwears, he brought ſuch a Letter from John Murray of Broughton to Lord Lovat, was privy to the Contents, and gives an Account of them: And John Murray of Broughton proves, That he received this Letter from Gortuleg.

All theſe Letters are eſtabliſhed by the Poſtſcript to his Letter to his Son, of the 14th of January 1746; in which he ſays,

"I ſend you incloſed the Four Letters which you ſhould have carried "with you from Caſtle Downey: You may tell the Prince when you de-"liver the Letter to him."

The Authenticity of this is ſupported by his Son's Letter, to which this is an Anſwer.

So that, to this Overt Act, there are Two poſitive Witneſſes, Hugh and Robert Fraſer; beſides all the Circumſtances which give them Credit.

The Second Overt Act of this kind of Treaſon laid in the Articles, is,

That he ſent his Son, at the Head of an armed Force, to join the Young Pretender, and his Adherents, and aſſiſt them in the War they were then carrying on againſt his Majeſty, within the Realm.

Robert Fraſer proves, That Lord Lovat ſent Letters early to Two Heads of different Tribes of the Name, to prepare their Men, in order to join the Maſter of Lovat:

That he ordered Colours and Bell-Tents to be got ready:

That his Men were twice rendezvouſed juſt by his Houſe, with his Privity:

That he ordered the Witneſs to give them Gunpowder, and delivered him the Key of the Place where it was, for that Purpoſe:

That he furniſhed them with Bonnets, Shoes, and Shot.

His Letters to the Young Pretender, Lochiel, Broughton, and the Son himſelf, ſhew that he ſent his Son, and the Men he led.

Hugh Fraſer ſays, after his Return from the Preſident, Lord Lovat gave his Opinion, that his Son ſhould march with all Diſpatch:

That this was his final Opinion, and ſhould not be countermanded.

Robert Chevis proves, That my Lord offered him a Captain's Commiſſion.

Hugh Fraſer of Dumballoch ſays, Lord Lovat aſked him what Number of Men he could raiſe; and ſaid the Maſter was to head and raiſe them. —Declared he would ſend his Son and Clan—Wiſhed himſelf younger, that he might go and command the Men himſelf——Blamed his Son's Slowneſs in raiſing the Men——Promiſed Gratuities to the Wives and Children of thoſe who went South to the Pretender, and engaged to ſupport their Families in their Abſence.

W. Walker was preſent at Part of a Diſpute between Lord Lovat and his Son, who threw his Cockade into the Fire.

He heard Lord Lovat ſay to Fraſer of Byerfeild, "What would you "have me do? I am forcing my Son out, the Life of me."

Peter Fraſer of Balladrum proves, That when the Men were rendezvouſed, the Officers uſed to go to Lord Lovat, and he bid them go to his Son, their Colonel.

There are more; but I have already named Six Witneſſes to this Overt Act, whoſe Evidence is confirmed by a Variety of Circumſtances.

The Third and only other Overt Act of this kind of Treaſon, which I ſhall mention, is, That he conſpired with many Perſons in Arms, how to renew the Rebellion, when it was almoſt ſuppreſſed, and to raiſe Forces to keep it alive.

John Murray of Broughton proves, That Lord Lovat met at Mortligen, in the Iſland of Morar, Fifteen of the Chiefs of the Rebels:

That he ſaid 3000 Men would be ſufficient; and mentioned 400 Fraſers, as the Quota of his Son; and deſired Lochiel to anſwer for his Son.

John Farquhar proves, That he embraced Lochiel's Officers; and ſaid, He did not doubt their getting 7 or 8000 real honeſt Men, to fight the Elector of Hanover's Troops.

Charles Stewart proves, That 3 or 400 Fraſers were propoſed as his Son's Quota; and that he deſired Lochiel to anſwer for his Son.

All agree French Money was diſtributed for the Purpoſe of raiſing Men; and that 70 or 80 Louidors were given to a Man belonging to Lord Lovat, for the Fraſers.

John Murray of Broughton ſays, That Four or Five Days after, my Lord talked of ſending the Servant who had received the Money, to his Son with it.

So that, to this Overt Act, there are Three concurring Witneſſes.

The Third Head of Treaſon laid in the Articles, which is, knowingly correſponding with the eldeſt Son of the Pretender, and Perſons employed by him, contrary to the late Act of Parliament, I paſs over, becauſe the Evidence to ſupport that Part of the Charge is alſo Evidence upon the Two other kinds of Treaſon; and, as ſuch, it has already been taken notice of.

All this particular Proof is ſtrongly corroborated, if it wanted any Support, by a general Evidence of Guilt.

Lieutenant Dalrymple proves, That Lord Lovat, after he was taken, being aſked, how he came to be engaged, ſaid It was in Revenge for the Loſs of his Company.

David Campbell aſking how he came to be engaged in a thing of this Kind, at his Years, Lord Lovat ſaid, He had been diſobliged by taking away his Company.

Sir Everard Fawkener has told your Lordſhips, that he did not take Pains to deny his Guilt: That he put the Part he had acted upon Reſentment to the Miniſtry, for having taken away his Company:---That he ſaid, for the Sake of Revenge, he would have joined Kouli Kan, had he come.

His eſcaping after he was firſt apprehended, the Condition and Place in which he was taken, ſhew, that he thought his only Safety lay in Flight.

After he was taken, his Declarations to thoſe who took him; his Converſations with Sir Everard Fawkener, well knowing who he was, ſhew an abſolute Conviction, that the Part he had acted was too notorious to be diſſembled.

My Lords, This being the Nature and Strength of the Evidence, upon which the Caſe now in Judgment depends: from the Precedent which may be made upon this Occaſion, I little thought to have heard of Danger to Innocence hereafter.

If this were a doubtful Matter, if it were a meaſuring Caſt, the Commons had rather the Guilty ſhould eſcape, than run a riſk of the Innocent being condemned. When they accuſe, they deſire the Perſon accuſed may be convicted upon clear, ſatisfactory, and unanſwerable Proof, or not at all.

The noble Lord at the Bar has complained of many Hardſhips: Few are the Tryals in which ſuch a Complaint would be ſo little founded.

He had full Time to prepare for his Defence: At his own Requeſt he has been indulged with Adjournments during the Tryal: He has had all the Advantages of Aſſiſtance which could be given, or connived at.

I wiſh the inflexible Rule of Law, as it ſtill ſtands in Proſecutions of this Kind, could have allowed him to make his full Defence by others.

The Appearance of a Hardſhip would have been removed; but, as this Caſe is circumſtanced, the removing that Appearance would have helped the Proſecution much more than the Priſoner.

I ſpeak it feelingly, I had rather reply to the ableſt Advocate, than do what my Duty now requires of me. It is painful to the laſt Degree, to obſerve upon any thing which has dropped from himſelf; but ſome Notice muſt be taken.

He has laboured to prove, That no Credit ought to be given to the Witneſſes againſt him, becauſe many of them are Accomplices, and ſpeak from the Danger of their Situation.

I will allow, that the Hopes of Life, or the Fear of Death, may have induced ſome of them to give Evidence upon this Occaſion, but not a falſe Evidence.

The ſame Hope or Fear is a Security againſt that: When the Commons accuſe, and your Lordſhips ſit as Judges, what Expectation can they have but from their Ingenuity and Veracity? Should they be caught prevaricating, ſhould they be detected in a falſe Accuſation, deſperate were their Condition indeed.

But the noble Lord is miſinformed, when he ſays an Accomplice ought not to be believed at all, till he is pardoned: If ſo, he could not be examined. The utmoſt Force of the Objection is no more than a Circumſtance, to weigh in the Scale againſt his Credit; but then it muſt be balanced with the Matter of the Evidence, the Manner in which it is given, the Proof by which it is ſupported, and that by which it is contradicted.

The Matter here is probable and conſiſtent: Nothing of Conſequence reſts upon a ſingle Teſtimony: They who ſupport each other, firſt told their Stories ſeparately; have never ſince had an Opportunity of conferring; and therefore could not agree in a Fiction.---One perhaps firſt examined in London, another at Inverneſs, neither knowing what the other had, could, or would ſay, kept in ſeparate Cuſtodies ever ſince,---it is impoſſible they ſhould unite in the ſame Falſhood.

The Manner too in which they gave their Evidence, carried with it a Degree of Conviction: To inſtance in one, the Behaviour of Hugh Fraſer demonſtrated what he told your Lordſhips: He ſaid, if he had no Hopes of Mercy he would not have ſpoke at all; for if he ſubmitted to be examined, he muſt ſpeak religiouſly the Truth.

The viſible Agonies, and Anguiſh of Mind, under which he laboured; the Ingenuity with which he anſwered the preciſe Queſtion put to him, without ever going a Syllable beyond it; could not but force Belief to all he ſaid; and ſhewed he gave the Anſwer becauſe it was true, but wiſhed not to have given it upon this Occaſion.

When he firſt diſcovered what he knew, he has told your Lordſhips, that he thought himſelf in the Article of Death; and from what he then ſaid he never has varied ſince.

The Proof by which their Teſtimony is ſupported, I have already laid together in one View: To contradict them nothing is offered.

The noble Lord ſays, the Witneſſes who could clear him are not here: Though, in the Courſe of the Tryal, we heard of his having Witneſſes, and what they would prove; he has not had Time enough to bring them;---he complains of their having been prevented: As he has not Witneſſes enough, he won't call any.

Theſe are Pretexts; but he let fall the true Reaſon why he has no Witneſſes,---There is no making Brick without Straw;---There is no calling Witneſſes without Facts;---There is no making a Defence without Innocence;---There is no anſwering Evidence which is true.

He has not ſo much as ſuggeſted what theſe Witneſſes could prove, if they were here.

I will do him the Juſtice to believe, that, if he could with Truth, he would not now throw the whole upon the ſtiff-necked, headſtrong Diſobedience of his Son---That unhappy Boy is already attainted, and now actually in Cuſtody. Though he might have been made the Scapegoat, if he were out of Reach, yet, in his preſent Situation, I am ſure the noble Lord would not defend his own Life by loading this unfortunate Youth: Much leſs would he attempt ſuch a kind of Defence, contrary to Truth; for ſo it muſt be, if either the Priſoner himſelf, or our Evidence, is believed.

Would he call Witneſſes to prove the Letters which have been read to be forged?---Conſider how they are authenticated.---To ſome his Signature ſtill remains---He don't controvert its being like his Hand---The Bodies are wrote by Robert Fraſer.---A Letter, unqueſtionably ſigned and ſent by the noble Lord to his Royal Highneſs the Duke, was produced:---The Body is wrote by the ſame Robert Fraſer. The Signature to this, and the Signature which remains to the others, appear manifeſtly of the ſame Hand.

One of the moſt material Letters is an Anſwer to a Letter wrote by his Son.---That too muſt be a Forgery;---yet it was found in his own Cuſtody.---But the intrinſick Evidence of Authenticity is ſtill ſtronger.

If the Letters are forged, how come they to give the ſame Account of the Aſſociation, and mention the ſame Perſons concerned, as your Lordſhips have heard from the general Evidence?

If the general Evidence is a Fiction, how could the ſame Story get into theſe Letters?

If Robert Fraſer invented the Letters, how came Hugh Fraſer, and others, to give the ſame Account of the Patent and Commiſſion which is to be found in them? If the Patent and Commiſſion never were ſeen or heard of, how could they be put into forged Letters?---But Remarks are unneceſſary, where the Caſe is ſo plain.---I have ſaid thus much, to ſhew, that the noble Lord's alledging he wants Aſſiſtance, or has not his Witneſſes, may be of more Service to him; than any Aſſiſtance, or Witneſſes, he could have; and to ſhew, that the Commons have not taken upon themſelves this Proſecution, to lay the noble Lord at the Bar under any Diſadvantages, in his Defence. From the Witneſſes who have been examined, the Caſe muſt appear to your Lordſhips ſuch as no Advantages could have enabled him to get the better of. There are many Circumſtances which induced them to ſingle out this Proſecution; many Circumſtances of a publick, many of a peculiar Nature. I am almoſt tempted to mention ſome of them;-- but, in Part, they have occurred to your Lordſhips in the Courſe of the Examination; and I refrain, leſt I ſhould drop any thing that might tend to inflame.---Every thing of that ſort has, by every body, been carefully avoided upon this Occaſion.---That Ciceronian Eloquence, as he calls it, from Principles of Juſtice and Humanity, has not been uſed againſt him. Every Gentleman, who has ſpoke in this Tryal, has made it a Rule to himſelf, to urge nothing againſt the Priſoner but plain Facts, and poſitive Evidence, without Aggravation.---They have addreſſed themſelves to your Judgment, and not to your Paſſions. I dare ſay your Lordſhips have obſerved, that, though the Evidence given conſiſts of a Variety of Facts, ſome more directly affecting the noble Lord, others leſs, and ſome, perhaps, not affecting him at all, neither in the Summing up the Evidence, nor in what I have now troubled your Lordſhips with, has any thing been mentioned as direct Evidence againſt him, which is not ſo. Circumſtances which only tend to corroborate, have been mentioned in that Light; and Evidence which no way affects him, has not been repeated, or obſerved upon at all.

My Lords, The Whole is now before your Lordſhips: It is your Province to make the Concluſion which ought to be drawn from the Premiſes.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, The Abilities of the learned Manager who juſt now ſpoke, never appeared with greater Splendour than at this very Hour, when his Candour and Humanity has been joined to thoſe great Abilities which have already made him ſo conſpicuous, that I hope one Day to ſee him add Luſtre to the Dignity of the firſt Civil Employment in this Nation. My Lords, I obſerve one thing in the Defence of the noble Lord at the Bar; which, for the Sake of the Managers for the Repreſentatives of Great Britain, and out of the Regard that I have for their Conſtituents who deputed them, I think myſelf obliged to take Notice of.

My Lords, The noble Lord at the Bar, in his Defence, complains, I believe, very unjuſtly, of the Hardſhips he has ſuffered, in being deprived of his Witneſſes; and, at the ſame time, mentions, that there are Witneſſes of indiſputable Credit, who were brought up in order to be Witneſſes againſt him, but who have not been examined by the Managers, for Fear they ſhould, on their Croſs-Examination, ſupport thoſe Facts.

My Lords, I therefore now deſire, for the Honour of the Gentlemen who are Managers of this Proſecution, that the noble Lord at the Bar may be aſked, Whether he is now willing to have thoſe Witneſſes produced, and to have them aſked any Queſtions concerning that Matter?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, What has been taken Notice of by the noble Lord, and what is deſired by him, is extremely irregular, after the Managers have cloſed and ſummed up their Evidence; and the noble Priſoner had Liberty and Time given him, in the moſt indulgent Manner, to make his Defence in ſuch Way as he ſhould be adviſed. He was pleaſed to make a Speech to your Lordſhips, containing a great Variety of Facts, but declined producing any Witneſſes; and though called upon for that Purpoſe, thought proper to acquaint your Lordſhips, that he ſhould offer none to ſupport thoſe Facts which he had alledged: Your Lordſhips have, upon that Declaration, been pleaſed to proceed to hear the Managers Reply.

My learned Friend on my left Hand hath executed that Part with great Juſtice to the Commands of the Commons, and all that Tenderneſs to the noble Priſoner, which was conſiſtent with his Duty. Your Lordſhips have heard and felt the Weight of it.

The Proceedings are cloſed, and wait only for your Lordſhips Opinion. The Managers therefore are ſurpriſed to find the noble Lord now calling upon the Priſoner, to examine Witneſſes which he did not think proper himſelf to examine, after the fulleſt Opportunity of conſidering it. And it appears by his own Speech, he has had Correſpondence with his Witneſſes ſince they came up. The Managers therefore muſt inſiſt, that your Lordſhips will proceed to give your Opinion upon the Whole of the Evidence, which is now fully before you.

My Lords, I cannot but take Notice of the Method which the Priſoner at the Bar has taken, of reflecting upon this Proſecution, in his Speech. He has complained in a heavy Manner, and endeavoured to induce your Lordſhips to believe, that thoſe who have had the Conduct of this Proſecution, have been uſing undue Methods, either to get Witneſſes to ſupport support the Charge, or to prevent him from having any Witneſſes in his Defence. If the Priſoner at the Bar could have made out any thing of this Kind, your Lordſhips would certainly have heard it here, in Evidence; for his not doing it could not be out of Deference to the Commons, or to your Lordſhips, or to his Majeſty.

He has repreſented as if a new Method was taken, of erecting uncommon Courts of Juſtice, to compel ſome Witneſſes to give Evidence on one Side, and deter others from doing it on the other. My Lords, it is indecent to lay Reflections of this Kind before your Lordſhips, in this Manner. Is the noble Lord at the Bar now to ſay, I could have Evidence, if I had an Opportunity of producing it; and if your Lordſhips will give me Time, I will prove all that I have ſaid? My Lords, what has he been doing ever ſince the Articles were exhibited? Who are the Perſons he could now examine? Many of his Witneſſes, he has ſaid himſelf, are come up; has he made any Uſe of them? Have they been examined at your Lordſhips Bar? On the contrary, did not the Priſoner ſay, he would produce no Witneſſes? Yet, ſays he, I will reflect upon the Proceedings; and ſay, that I could have Witneſſes, if I had Leave and Time to produce them.

My Lords, a Priſoner who is tried for his Life, may think he has a Right to ſay any thing, how falſe, how unjuſt ſoever: But it is incumbent on your Lordſhips to prevent the Effect of ſuch Reflections, to do Juſtice to all Parties, to the Government, the Commons of Great Britain, and the Managers. The Priſoner ſeems to have Hopes, that your Lordſhips may be prevailed upon, by this Means, to believe, that there is ſome Truth in what he ſays. Your Lordſhips Indulgence now, of further Time, on this Pretence, would give ſome Colour to that Suggeſtion; and it will be imagined, that it was believed by your Lordſhips. I call upon the Priſoner himſelf, to declare, whether your Lordſhips did not indulge him with an Opportunity of calling any Witneſſes, even thoſe brought up on the Part of the Managers, on his giving them Notice for that Purpoſe? If your Lordſhips ſhould now, upon what has been ſaid by the noble Lord, which I do not doubt but he ſaid from the great Regard he has to Juſtice, and from his Compaſſion for a Perſon appearing in the Circumſtances of the Priſoner: I ſay, my Lords, if upon ſuch a Suggeſtion your Lordſhips ſhould now call again upon the Priſoner to produce his Witneſſes, it will be giving Credit to that falſe and injurious Inſinuation: And I hope your Lordſhips will not give Colour to imagine it was believed by You, by giving Leave to the Priſoner now to call Witneſſes for that Purpoſe.

Lord High Steward. Have you done with your Evidence on both Sides?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I am an unfit Perſon to ſay any thing after that great Man that has ſpoken laſt; but, ſince I am now upon my Tryal for my Life and Fortune, I muſt tell your Lordſhips what is really Fact, though, perhaps, it may not be pleaſing to that great Man, That there is not one Syllable of what he has ſaid true. My Lords, it is certain, that I got your Lordſhips Order for bringing up Sixty Witneſſes to this Place; and it is certain that I ſent a Gentleman, who was once allowed to be my Sollicitor; and, though I was robbed of my whole Money, and did not get a Farthing out of my Eſtate ſince I was taken Priſoner, yet I had Intereſt enough to get 500 l. from Mr. Roſs, which was given to this Man, to bring up my Witneſſes. My Lords, he came there to Inverneſs, and found all the Witneſſes that I had named to him were very ready to come up; but I was extremely ſurpriſed to find, that there was a new Court, beſides the Court of the Houſe of Peers, a little Depute of the Sheriffs, that took upon him to leave the common Place of Juſtice in the Tolbooth at Inverneſs, and to go to a private Place in the Suburbs, and there to erect ſuch Courts as he thought fit; and there he examined what Witneſſes he pleaſed; and thoſe which he thought Friends to me were ſome of them put into Priſon, others overawed and terrified, and others chaſed out of their Houſes, their Houſes burnt, and their Cattle taken away, and moſt of the reſt obliged to go to the Highlands, and threatened to be undone, if they came to be Evidence for me. My Lords, after my Friend, that was ſent to bring up my Witneſſes, uſed all his Endeavours, and offered to bear their Expences, and to keep them, he could not get them to come up, becauſe there was an Influence uſed by the General Officers in his Majeſty's Service, and Perſons ſent up and down the whole Country, to threaten Part of the Witneſſes, and to bribe others of them: So that, my Lords, though I am no Lawyer, nor Orator, as the learned Gentleman on my left Hand is, yet I heard from a very great Man, that this was a Precedent which never happened in Scotland, and, he believed, not in England; and he ſaid to me, That it was moſt certain the Lords would take notice of it, becauſe the Affront had been done to themſelves. My Lords, after I was arraigned before your Lordſhips, and that the Houſe of Commons had brought up Articles againſt me, that your Lordſhips would not allow any little Court of Inquiſition to go afterwards, and to judge my Cauſe, as it were, before your Lordſhips. Therefore, my Lords, it is ſimply impoſſible for me to make my Defence, while I am not allowed the Witneſſes that your Lordſhips ordered for me. That what I ſay myſelf is true, there are two Affidavits here of it, if your Lordſhips pleaſe to let them be read by the Clerk.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, By our Law, Affidavits cannot be read as Evidence upon a Tryal: You muſt call Witneſſes to prove the Facts. But I would aſk your Lordſhip the Name of that Agent, whom you ſent down into Scotland to bring up the Witneſſes, and who gave you this Information?

Lord Lovat. His Name is Hugh Fraſer.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, I muſt put your Lordſhip in mind, that you made Three Applications to the Houſe of Lords, by Petition, to put off your Tryal: The firſt was on the 19th of February, and the others on the 2d and 3d of March. One of thoſe Petitions was ſupported by an Affidavit made by one Hugh Fraſer: Was that the ſame Hugh Fraſer, whom you ſent, as your Agent, into Scotland?

Lord Lovat. Yes, my Lord, it was.

Lord High Steward. Then, my Lord, there is another Affidavit annexed to your Petition to put off the Tryal, on the 3d of March, which is the Affidavit of George Roſs. Now, in neither of theſe Petitions, though one of them is ſupported by the Affidavit of Hugh Fraſer, whom you admit to be the Perſon you ſent into Scotland to ſummon your Witneſſes, is there any Allegation of any undue Practices, or any Reſtraint upon your Witneſſes. How comes it to paſs, when this Hugh Fraſer came back from Scotland, and made an Affidavit to ſupport the Petition to put off your Tryal, that this Complaint was not made then?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, In the firſt place, it could not be done before, becauſe they went upon theſe Methods but juſt before Hugh Fraſer came up. I have a Miniſter of the Goſpel, a very honeſt and worthy Man, whom they deſigned to make an Evidence againſt me; and, I believe, he will tell the Truth upon the Subject of the Hardſhips done to my People, to keep them from coming up here to be Evidences; I mean my Tenants.

Mr. Noel.

My Lords,

I DID not intend to have troubled your Lordſhips at all, not finding the noble Lord at the Bar had, in his Defence, made it neceſſary for me to take any Part in the Reply; ſince what he has ſaid (if it had been more material than the Nature of it appears to be), he hath ſaid unſupported by any Evidence at all; and the noble Lord very well knows, that, in every Court of Juſtice, a Priſoner is not expected to make his Defence by what he thinks fit to ſay himſelf; but he muſt ſupport it by Evidence, or it can have no Weight in Anſwer to the Evidence produced to ſupport the Charge againſt him; and, my Lords, it was for that Reaſon that I did not trouble your Lordſhips in that Part of the Caſe, which hath been ſo amply, minutely, and accurately gone through by my learned Friend, who has ſpoken to it. But, ſince the noble Lord has irregularly mentioned ſeveral Matters ſince the Reply was cloſed, I ſhall take the Liberty to make ſome Obſervations upon what he has inſiſted upon.

My Lords, the noble Lord at the Bar has made it Matter of Complaint to your Lordſhips, as if particular Methods of Practice had been uſed, to prevent his Witneſſes coming up to appear in his Behalf. Your Lordſhips will give me Leave to ſay, that ſuch Allegations ought to be conſidered as the higheſt Injuſtice, when his Lordſhip has not called one ſingle Witneſs to the Truth of them, or to his own Defence. My Lords, this Affectation of ſaying Things, without ſupporting them by any Proof, after hearing the Reply of the Commons, and the ſumming up of the whole Proceeding, is a Method which was never known to be endured in any Proceeding by way of legal Tryal. My Lords, it is extremely eaſy for any noble Peer upon this Occaſion, when he ſtands to be tried for his Life, and has no Defence to make, nor no Witneſſes to produce; it is eaſy, I ſay, my Lords, to throw in Matters by way of Calumny; but your Lordſhips will not endure it, unleſs it is made at a proper Time, and ſupported by proper Evidence.

My Lords, I am the more ſurpriſed at this from the noble Lord at the Bar, becauſe, whatever he may think of it, this I will ſay, that I know of no Inſtance in any Caſe where a Priſoner has been more fairly dealt with, or uſed with more Candour and Humanity on the Part of thoſe, whoſe Buſineſs it is to make out the Charge againſt him, nor on the Part of thoſe, by whom he is to be tried: And it is the more extraordinay, becauſe, if I am not miſtaken, till this very Day, he has declared to your Lordſhips, that he had Numbers of Witneſſes ready to produce, who would falſify every Fact which has been alledged againſt him.

My Lords, I will take notice, now I am up, of another Objection made by the noble Lord to ſome of the Witneſſes that have been produced againſt him. My Lords, it is a known Objection; it has been often made, and as conſtantly over-ruled.

The noble Lord ſays, Some of the Witneſſes are Perſons intereſted; that they are criminal, as Accomplices in this Rebellion; and therefore ought not to be believed. Your Lordſhips will give me Leave to ſuggeſt, whether the laying down that as a Rule would not be of very ill Conſequence, and, in effect, ſecure the moſt wicked Offenders from all Poſſibility of Puniſhment and Juſtice. My Lords, it is from a Principle of right Reaſon, and abſolutely neceſſary to the Preſervation of Government, that thoſe who are concerned with them, ſhould have Liberty to do Juſtice to the Publick by their Teſtimony. It is ſo in all Caſes of Robbery, Murder, and other Felonies, and much more in Caſes of Treaſon, where the Whole is in Danger. My Lords, if this was not ſo, the very End of Government would fail in every Particular, if thoſe who are concerned, and beſt able to diſcover the Truth, are not allowed to give Teſtimony, for the ſake of preſerving the Nation. But, my Lords, in the preſent Caſe, I don't recollect any material Fact againſt the noble Lord at the Bar, but what has been proved by every Witneſs viva voce, and by every Letter that has been read, wherein not only his correſponding and treaſonable Engagements have been made appear, but he has expreſſed himſelf, almoſt in every Letter, as manifeſting the Glory he took, and Zeal he ſhewed, in that wicked Service, which he is proved to be engaged in to the laſt.

My Lords, we have nothing now to do, but to expect your Lordſhips Opinions upon the Evidence and Facts that have been laid before you; and in Contradiction to which, there is not one ſingle Evidence produced by the noble Lord.

Here the Priſoner offered to ſpeak.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, My Lords will be ready to hear every thing that you can offer, which is material for your Defence; but I muſt acquaint you, That the Commons, by the conſtant Rules of Proceeding in Caſes of this Kind, are intitled to the laſt Word.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I am far from blaming the Honourable Managers for the Commons, tho' they proſecute me with great Warmneſs, and eſpecially the Man at their Head, who was, ſome time ago, my Friend and Acquaintance. But, my Lords, whatever they were pleaſed to object againſt me, as I was forced to ſpeak for myſelf, I was obliged to anſwer; and my Lords, ſince I aſked the Favour of this Houſe to force up my Evidence in the Manner they thought fit, your Lordſhip ſaying, That no Affidavit was good upon the Subject, my Lords, I have Two very good Witneſſes, one a very Reverend Miniſter of the Goſpel, that will prove the moſt extreme Hardſhips that ever were impoſed in this Country, to hinder my Witneſſes from coming up to me; ſo that, if your Lordſhips do not, in your great Juſtice and Goodneſs, think it proper to order, in the Manner your Lordſhips pleaſe, to have my Witneſſes come up, I muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhips. You may do what you pleaſe.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, I particularly aſked your Lordſhip, Whether you would call any Witneſſes to prove what you alledged in your Defence: To which you anſwered, That you would not.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I would call Witneſſes upon no other Account than this that I have mentioned. I have Witneſſes to prove the Falſity of what has been ſaid by the Witneſſes againſt me; but, ſince I do not get Time to do that, I give it up.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordſhip does not attend to what I ſaid, which was, That I aſked you Two or Three times, Whether you would call any Witneſſes to prove any Part of your Defence: To which you ſaid, No. If you had any Witneſſes, why did you not call them at that Time?

Lord Lovat. This Miniſter was brought up as one of the Counter-Evidence. I told your Lordſhip, That I would call no Witneſſes that Day.

Lord High Steward. Is that Miniſter here?

Lord Lovat. He is here.

Lord High Steward. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, It is certainly an irregular Method, in which the noble Lord at the Bar would proceed, to call Witneſſes after the Reply; but I deſire to know of you, Whether you oppoſe my Lord Lovat's calling Witneſſes now?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, It is a Difficulty upon us, who are appointed Managers, to carry on this Proſecution, and would do it with all the Candour and Indulgence poſſible, to inſiſt, That the noble Lord, who is trying for his Life, ſhould not now be admitted to produce Witneſſes; but it is, perhaps, as difficult to know, how to diſpenſe with that which is the known Courſe and Method of Proceedings, merely becauſe the Priſoner, in an irregular and improper Manner, thinks fit to deſire it. The Managers do not oppoſe their being produced, from an Imagination that they would ſay any thing material for the noble Lord at the Bar; but, if your Lordſhips are to break through all Methods and Rules of Proceedings, your Lordſhips will conſider the Conſequence. The noble Lord at the Bar told your Lordſhips, That he did not intend to call any Witneſſes; and, upon that Foot, the Managers replied. He has now told you, That he would do it. But what is it that he would examine them to? Is it to make out any Part of his Defence to the Treaſon charged on him? That is not pretended; but to prove the Hardſhips he complains of, in being hindered from having his Witneſſes; and the noble Lord at the Bar wants your Lordſhips Order now for their coming. The Tendency of this, if it means any thing beſides Complaint, is to put off the Cauſe after it is heard; and, unleſs I had a greater Authority than I have at preſent, I cannot take upon myſelf, and I do not find that the reſt of the Gentlemen, who are Managers, can take upon them, to depart from the known eſtabliſhed Courſe of Proceeding, and to introduce a Precedent that may be of bad Conſequence. And, my Lords, I can hardly think, that the noble Lord at the Bar would inſiſt upon doing it, but becauſe he thought, that the Managers muſt inſiſt, that he ought not. There is nothing that has occurred now, that did not, muſt not, have occurred to him before; and when the Priſoner thought fit to declare to your Lordſhips, after having full Time allowed him for the matureſt Conſideration, and Counſel appointed for his Aſſiſtance, That he would not call any Witneſſes, you cannot but think ſuch Determination of his was upon the Advice that his Counſel gave him; and your Lordſhips will hardly think, that the noble Lord can, at preſent, thus unadviſedly determine to call any Witneſſes, which before, upon the Foot of the Advice he muſt be preſumed to have taken, he determined not to do, from any Expectation that they would be able to do him any real Service, but from Views of another Kind. The Managers therefore doubt not that your Lordſhips will proceed in this Caſe, as you would in any other, to conſider the Evidence, and give ſuch Judgment on the Whole, as your Lordſhips ſhall think moſt right and juſt.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I have often told your Lordſhips of the Infirmities that I labour under: I have often mentioned them to you; and the Want of Memory is the thing I regret moſt. I have been a Cripple theſe Four Years, and therefore not very capable to go to head Men in the Rebellion; yet I am much ſurpriſed to hear that Honourable Perſon, that is at the Head of the Law, and very deſervedly placed there, that he ſhould loſe his Memory in an Hour's Time. My Lords, the Reaſon is plain to your Lordſhips, why I did not adduce Witneſſes this Morning: The Reaſon was, becauſe I begged of your Lordſhips Time to bring my Witneſſes up from Scotland, that they might be produced to prove my Innocence; and the only Reaſon that I now deſire to call theſe two Witneſſes, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, is, that they may prove before that great Man ſuch Examples of extreme Hardſhips, as he will never find out in all his Law-Books.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, You mentioned but One Witneſs at firſt; and now you mention Two: Who is the other?

Lord Lovat. The Two are, Donald Fraſer and Alexander Fraſer.

Lord High Steward. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, Do you oppoſe my Lord Lovat's being admitted, though it is irregular, to call theſe Two Witneſſes?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, I think we cannot, conſiſtently with our Duty to the Commons, give up this Point, which would be attended with many dangerous Conſequences, the whole of which your Lordſhips may not now be able to foreſee, if a Man, when he has cloſed his Defence, and ſays, That he will examine no Witneſſes, and the Managers have replied, ſhould afterwards be admitted, on ſuch a Pretence as this, to examine Witneſſes.

Earl of Cholmondeley. My Lords, I am ſatisfied that the Manner, in which the noble Lord at the Bar deſires now to call his Witneſſes, is totally different from any Proceeding that I ever ſaw; but, as the accuſed Lord, in his Defence, has alledged ſeveral Hardſhips that he has undergone, in having his Witneſſes prevented from attending his Tryal, and as that contains the higheſt Reflection upon the Government, and thoſe who are employed under it, I would therefore deſire to know of the noble Lord at the Bar, Whether, upon the Speech that he offered at the Bar, as it contains Objections to the Credit and Weight of the Evidence, and Complaints of undue Practices; whether, upon thoſe Complaints, the noble Lord at the Bar deſires the Opinion of the Lords, whether they will give him further Time, in order to produce his Witneſſes?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I was fully determined never to examine any Witneſſes, when I found I was under ſuch Diſadvantages; and I humbly beg your Lordſhips Protection and Kindneſs to give me Time.

MR. SOLLICITOR GENERAL.

My Lords,

THE Matter now agitated is of the utmoſt Conſequence not only to the preſent, but to all future Proceedings of this Kind; and I doubt, whether it is yet thoroughly underſtood, in its full Extent.

The Witneſſes the noble Lord now propoſes to call, are not to his Defence, or in Support of his Innocence.

If they were, how irregular ſoever it may be to offer them now, in my Opinion, and, I dare ſay, the other Managers are of the ſame, I ſhould be for conſenting to their being called. We ſhould never contend, though in Strictneſs we might, that any Evidence of this Kind came too late to be heard.

But the Deſign of calling them, as now opened, is to ſhew, that, from ſome Obſtruction given to the bringing up his Witneſſes, his Tryal ought to be put off to an indefinite Time; and that he may have new Orders to ſummon and compel Witneſſes to come from Scotland. This we oppoſe, becauſe the Application intended to be ſupported by it cannot now be made.

The Speech made by my Lord conſiſted of Two Parts: Firſt, a Deſire to put off his Tryal indefinitely; and, if your Lordſhips ſhould not think fit to comply with this Deſire, then he reſted his Defence upon Obſervations, and Objections to the Force and Credibility of that Evidence which had been offered to prove his Accuſation.

In this he was very proper; for though a Perſon accuſed calls no Witneſſes, yet, if the Charge againſt him is not clearly made out by legal and credible Evidence, he ought to be acquitted. Being aſked, whether he had any Witneſſes to call, he declared he had none.

Had he deſired to take your Lordſhips Opinion, whether the Tryal ſhould not ſtay till he could ſend to Scotland for Witneſſes, we ſhould have oppoſed it. Your Lordſhips calling to the Managers to proceed, was a Determination, that you would not deliberate about ſtaying the Trial.

I own freely to your Lordſhips, the Reaſon why I did not take particular Notice of the noble Lord's Complaint, was, becauſe I underſtood it to be meant as an Artifice to palliate his not going into any Evidence: And I did not think it neceſſary, I did not care, to endeavour to wipe off from his Apology any Varniſh of this Kind with which he thought fit to colour it. One thing, had I thought of it, I would have taken notice of: He was pleaſed to ſay, that ſeveral Witneſſes, brought up in Support of the Proſecution, were not called by the Managers, becauſe they would have proved the Hardſhips he complains of. I can aſſure your Lordſhips, and every other Gentleman of the Committee will join in what I ſay, no one Witneſs was left unexamined for that Reaſon. It is true, more Perſons were brought up to be Witneſſes than we called; but the Reaſon of not calling them was, either becauſe we thought what they had to ſay not material enough; or elſe, becauſe they were liable to an Objection the noble Lord had made; which, whether well or ill founded, we did not care to give your Lordſhips the Trouble of diſputing.

In conſequence of what fell from your Lordſhips, we told the noble Lord, in the Courſe of the Tryal, that any Witneſs examined by us ſhould attend to be examined by him, if he deſired it, and would give Notice: We ſhould have done the ſame with regard to any Perſon brought up as a Witneſs, tho' not examined.

As to this whole Matter of Complaint, the Managers are intire Strangers to it. Nothing of that Kind has been done with their Privity or Knowledge.

And this brings me to the Point, Whether Witneſſes ſhall now be heard at this Time, to prove any ſuch Ground for putting off the Trial ſine Die.

We oppoſe it, becauſe, true or falſe, the Tryal cannot now be put off; and it would be a moſt dangerous Precedent, to go into an Ex parte Examination of ſuch collateral Matters. Hearing the Evidence ſuppoſes your Lordſhips can do ſomething in Conſequence of it: If you cannot, it would be irregular and improper to go into it.

Before your Lordſhips appoint the Time of Tryal you take into Conſideration the Nature of the Charge, and the Place where the Facts ariſe, in order to allow a reaſonable Time for Preparation, and bringing Witneſſes.

Your Lordſhips did ſo in the preſent Caſe; and, after weighing all Circumſtances, you appointed the 23d of February.

If, thro' any Accident, the Time fixed is too ſhort, your Lordſhips are always open to Applications, which muſt be ſupported by Evidence, to ſhew the Delay is not affected; that all due Diligence has been uſed; and that the Witneſſes are material, and expected to come within a certain Time.

Upon the Application of the noble Lord, your Lordſhips deferred this Tryal to the 5th of March.

Upon another Application by him, you deferred it to the 9th of March, the Day named in his Petition.

If he had any Ground ſufficient for deferring the Tryal longer, he ſhould have applied to your Lordſhips before it began; but, upon the Ground now mentioned, it could not have been deferred, even in that Way, becauſe it is plain, this Matter, whatever there be in it, was within his Knowledge, at the Time of the other Applications. Hugh Fraſer, his Agent, who went down, as his Lordſhip ſays, to bring up his Witneſſes, made an Affidavit, annexed to a Petition preſented by his Lordſhip on the 2d of March, for putting off the Tryal; and was called in, and examined at your Lordſhips Bar.

There was likewiſe an Affidavit annexed to his Lordſhip's Petition, preſented on the 3d of March; and not a Syllable of this Complaint ever ſuggeſted; which ſhews, that they thought no Streſs could be laid upon it;

it; and that it was not to be supported. In the Courſe of the Trial hitherto your Lordſhips have heard nothing of it; on the contrary, you have heard of his Witneſſes, and what they were to prove.

There is no Precedent of putting off a Trial indefinitely, after the Evidence for the Proſecution is cloſed; I dare ſay there never will be ſuch a Precedent. At ſooneſt this Trial could not come on again before the next Seſſion of Parliament.

We oppoſe the attempting to prove a Matter upon which your Lordſhips cannot now do any thing; but I deſire it may be underſtood, that we do not oppoſe, tho' it be at an improper Time, the calling any Witneſſes upon the Merits of his Defence, either to diſprove the Evidence againſt him, or to aſſert his own Innocence.

Then the Duke of Newcaſtle moved to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament: And the Lord High Steward going back to his Chair, the Houſe was adjourned accordingly: And then the Lords returned in the ſame Order as before.

After ſome Time, the Lords, and others, returned into Weſtminſter-Hall, in the ſame Order as uſual; and the Peers having taken their Places, and the Lord High Steward being ſeated in his Chair, the Houſe was reſumed.

Then Proclamation was made for Silence, as uſual.

L. H. S. Lieutenant of the Tower of London, take the Priſoner from the Bar; but you are not to take him away to the Tower yet.

Lord Lovat. If your Lordſhips would ſend me to the Highlands, I would not go to the Tower any more.

[The Priſoner was taken from the Bar accordingly.]

L. H. S. Your Lordſhips have heard and conſidered the Evidence in this Cauſe, and every thing that has been alledged by the Managers for the Houſe of Commons, and by the Priſoner. The ſolemn and eſtabliſhed Method of your Proceedings requires, that I ſhould aſk your Lordſhips Opinions ſeverally upon the Queſtion, Whether the noble Lord the Priſoner is Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands impeached, or Not Guilty; and that thoſe Opinions ſhould be given in the Abſence of the Priſoner. My Lords, this has always been your Rule; and after that is done, the Priſoner is to be brought to the Bar again, and to be acquainted by me with the Reſult of thoſe Opinions. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to proceed now to give your Opinions upon the Queſtion of Guilty, or Not Guilty?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Proclamation was then made for Silence, as before.

Then the Lord High Steward ſtood up uncovered; and, beginning with the youngeſt Peer, ſaid,

L. H. S. Henry Arthur Lord Herbert of Chirbury, What ſays your Lordſhip? Is Simon Lord Lovat Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands impeached, or Not Guilty?

Whereupon Henry Arthur Lord Herbert of Chirbury, ſtanding up in his Place uncovered, and laying his Right Hand upon his Breaſt, anſwered,

Lord Herbert. Guilty, upon my Honour.

In like Manner, the ſeveral Lords aftermentioned, being all that were preſent, being reſpectively aſked the ſame Queſtion, anſwered as followeth:

Samuel Lord Sandys. Guilty, upon my Honour.
Richard Lord Edgecumbe. Guilty, upon my Honour.

William Duke of Devonſhire, Lord Steward of his Majeſty's Houſhold. Guilty, upon my Honour.
Lionel Cranfield Duke of Dorſet, Lord Preſident of the Council. Guilty, upon my Honour.

Then the Lord High Steward laying his Right Hand upon his Breaſt, ſaid,

Lord High Steward. My Lords, I am of Opinion, That Simon Lord Lovat is Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands impeached, upon my Honour.

L. H. S. My Lords, There are One hundred and Seventeen of your Lordſhips preſent; and you have unanimouſly found, That Simon Lord Lovat is Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands impeached.

Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure, that he ſhould be brought to the Bar, and acquainted therewith?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Proclamation was made for Silence; and another Proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring the Priſoner to the Bar; which was done in the ſame Order as before: And then Proclamation was again made for Silence, as uſual.

L. H. S. Simon Lord Lovat, The Lords have conſidered the Charge of High-Treaſon, which has been brought againſt you by the Houſe of Commons: They have conſidered the Evidence, and all that has been offered to maintain the Charge: They have alſo conſidered every thing that has been alledged in your Lordſhip's Defence: And, upon the whole Matter, their Lordſhips have unanimouſly found, that you are guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof you ſtand impeached.

Lord Preſident. My Lords, I move your Lordſhips to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

The Houſe was accordingly adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament; and the Lords and others returned in the ſame Order as before.

And the Houſe being reſumed in the Chamber of Parliament,

Ordered, That this Houſe will proceed further, in order to the giving of Judgment againſt Simon Lord Lovat, To-morrow, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon, in Weſtminſter-Hall.—And

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons, by the former Meſſengers, to acquaint them therewith.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do take back Simon Lord Lovat, and bring him again to the Bar of this Houſe in Weſtminſter-Hall, To-morrow, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Thurſday the 19*th of* March, 1746.

The Seventh Day.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon the Lords and others came from the Chamber of Parliament, in the ſame Order as on the Firſt Day, into Weſtminſter-Hall; where the Commons, and their Managers, were in the Seats prepared for them reſpectively, as before: And the Lords took their Places in the Court, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

Lord High Steward. The Houſe is reſumed. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure, that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence as uſual, and afterwards the following Proclamation:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Priſoner Simon Lord Lovat to the Bar, purſuant to the Order of the Houſe of Lords to you directed.

The Deputy Governor of the Tower brought the Priſoner to the Bar, in the like Form as before; and then he kneeled down.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordſhip may riſe.

The Serjeant at Arms, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, made another Proclamation for Silence.

Lord High Steward. Simon Lord Lovat, When your Lordſhip was laſt at this Bar, I acquainted you, That your Peers had found you Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof you ſtand impeached, by means whereof you are convicted of that High Treaſon: And I am now to aſk your Lordſhip, What you have to ſay, Why Judgment of Death ſhould not paſs upon you, according to Law?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I am very ſorry I gave your Lordſhips ſo much Trouble in my Trial; and I give you a Million of Thanks for your being ſo good, in your Patience and Attendance, whilſt it laſted. I thought myſelf very much loaded by one Murray, who, your Lordſhips know, was the bittereſt Evidence there was againſt me. I have ſince ſuffered by another Mr. Murray, who, I muſt ſay with Pleaſure, is an Honour to his Country, and whoſe Eloquence and Learning is much beyond what is to be expreſſed by an ignorant Man like me. I heard him with Pleaſure, tho' it was againſt me. I have the Honour to be his Relation, tho' perhaps he neither knows it, nor values it. I wiſh, that his being born in the North may not hinder him from the Preferment that his Merit and Learning deſerves. Till that Gentleman ſpoke, your Lordſhips were inclined to grant my earneſt Requeſt, and allow me further Time to bring up Witneſſes to prove my Innocence; but, it ſeems, that has been over-ruled. All now that I have to ſay, is a little in Vindication of my own Character. I was pointed out by the Honourable Managers as a moſt inveterate Enemy of the Royal Family now upon the Throne, and the moſt zealouſly attached to a Family that is not like to come upon the Throne. My Lords, I humbly beg, that your Lordſhips will take notice, that my Attachment to the Family of Hanover is proved without Conteſt, after the great Services I have done. I was honoured by the King's Favour and Countenance, that made me ſo naturally and gratefully attached to his Perſon and Family; and as I was for Twelve Years in Germany, almoſt every Day in Converſation with his Majeſty and his Family, I thought it neceſſary to know the Hiſtory of his Family; and I read it very particularly; both the publick and private Hiſtory of it: And I muſt ſay, that ſince your Lordſhips, and this Nation in general, thought fit to have a King from Germany, you could not have choſe one from a more illuſtrious Houſe; ſo great, that ſeveral Emperors of Germany have been elected from out of that Family; and they always behaved with great Diſtinction, both in the Wars, and in their own Country. I will only give one Inſtance of that, which I had from my dear Maſter the late King's own Mouth (of glorious Memory). I heard him ſay this to the Emperor's Envoy, after the Siege of Belgrade, when the Envoy told him, That there were Forty thouſand Janiſſaries killed upon the Spot: "Why, ſays he to the Envoy, I ſhall be "very glad of it; but I know the Nature of thoſe Animals: If 40,000 "of them are killed at Night, in the very Place of thoſe that are killed "40,000 will riſe up the next Morning. I have had Experience of the "War with the Turks: I was with 6000 of my own Men, at the Siege "of Buda: And, I believe, they will do me the Juſtice to ſay, that both "I and my Men behaved as we ought to have done." This ſhews, my Lords, that I always had a true Notion of the Greatneſs and Illuſtration of the Family of Hanover. I gave ſignal Proofs of it in the Year 1715; and I beg your Lordſhips will indulge me to repeat a little of what paſſed at that Time, becauſe there are ſeveral Lords here that were not then born. My Lords, when I came into England, in the Year 1714, my Deſign was, that, with the Aſſiſtance of my Friends, the late Duke of Argyll, and the preſent Duke, I ſhould endeavour to get my Remiſſion, to go down into my own Country, to endeavour to recover my Fortune, and to ſerve the Government faithfully, in what I was able. In this Situation I was, when my Lord Marſhal ſet up the Pretender's Standard at Aberdeen. It did much alarm the Court. I was ſent for, and particularly ſpoken to by the Earl of Sunderland, and my Lord Townſhend, who were always my Friends. My Lords, this preſent Duke of Argyll was ſo generous, that he would follow his brother to Scotland, and expoſe his Life as a Volunteer; and he ſuffered by it; for at the Battle of Sheriff-Muir, he had a Ball went through his Side and Arm, and had almoſt loſt his Life, if it had not been by the extraordinary Skill and Diligence of one Mr. Mac Gill, a Surgeon, who attended him. When he went down, he told me, Dear Lovat, you muſt do your beſt for us now; and I deſire you may meet me in Badenoch, with all the Men you can get together; and I will gather all the Men I can in Argyllſhire, and meet you there. I went down on Horſeback, and he went down Poſt. Before I came to my own Country, I found that the Rebels were got together in vaſt Numbers; and as Inverneſs was the great Capital of all thoſe Parts, my Lord Marſhal reſolved to ſend 2000 Men to reinforce the Garriſon of Inverneſs, that it might not be ſurpriſed. The Mac Intoſhes and the Mac Donalds were gathered together, in order to go to Inverneſs. When I found it was impoſſible for the Earl of Ilay to come with his Men from Argyllſhire, I reſolved to diſtinguiſh myſelf, even though by a deſperate Stroke. I had gathered together 200 Men at Strathbraan; with theſe I marched to Inverneſs, and inveſted it. Sir John Mac Kenzie, the then Governor, had 1000 Men in the Town; ſo I found there was nothing for it but Boldneſs. I ſent a Meſſage, which, indeed, looked like a French Gaſconade, that I would blow him, and his Garriſon, and the Caſtle, and the ſtrong Steeple, into the Air, if they did not ſurrender to me before Ten o'Clock the next Day; though I had not Two Pounds of Powder. At the ſame time, I ſent a Party of Men, in which was a pretty Gentleman of Skill, one Captain Roſs, the Laird's Brother. Whether Sir John Mac Kenzie heard this Over-night, I can't tell; but he enquired, If I was fully reſolved to attack the Town. He told him poſitively, That I was. Says he, If Simon be there, he is a deſperate Fellow; I believe I muſt leave the Town to him: And accordingly, he run off that Night, with all his Men. This I did, my Lords, before any of the loyal Clans to this Government were raiſed. After this they were pleaſed to declare me General of the King's Forces there. When I got together near 2000 Men, of which 1000 were my own, I reſolved to attack Lord Seaforth, who was coming with 2500 Men, to join Sir John Mac Kenzie, at Inverneſs, or to fight any of the Rebels that ſhould meet him: He called them ſo. He ſtood his Ground till I came within Half a Mile of him. I drew up the little Army I had in pretty good Order, being an Officer for many Years before: And I can ſay to your Lordſhips, that, I believe, I am the oldeſt Officer in Commiſſion in Great Britain; for Fifty Years ago I was Captain of Grenadiers in King William's Army. They were the Sutherland Men, Lord Ray's Men, and ſome of the Grants and Monros: But when I came to march up the Hill, to attack Lord Seaforth, I had none followed me but the Monros. When they found I was come within Sight of them, they made a precipitate Retreat to a Bridge that was near them, over a River: And afterwards, by Lord Preſident's Advice, who was then in the Army, Lord Seaforth came, and ſubmitted to me, as General of King George's Forces, promiſing immediately to lay down his Arms; which he did. This Submiſſion was brought up, and ſhewn to the Miniſtry. I then went, and reduced the Duke of Gordon, who gave me the moſt ample Submiſſion I ever read, to the King; and Aſſurances of Fidelity to him and to the Government. That Submiſſion I likewiſe ſhewed; and, if they are not conſumed in my Houſe that was burnt, they are ſtill extant. My Lords, then I purſued the Rebels from Place to Place, and chaſed them from Hill to Hill. On this Expedition I loſt my only Brother, who was a very brave young Fellow; and I never left off purſuing the Rebels till the Rebellion was ſuppreſſed and extinguiſhed: So that I may fairly ſay, that I aſſiſted to keep the Crown upon the late King's Head, as much, if not more, than any one Man of my own Rank in Britain. I had then ſeveral Invitations to come to Court; and had Three Letters of Thanks from the King's Perſon, by the Hands of the great Earl Stanhope, who was Secretary of State then; in which he ſays, that he was ſo ſenſible of my extraordinary and ſignal Services, that he would, all his Life, give me ſuch Marks of his Favour, as wou'd oblige all the Country to be zealous and faithful to me. Upon this I came to Court; and I was not diſappointed. I believe there are Lords in this Houſe, I am ſure there are a great many yet alive, that know I was a particular Favourite of the late King's; I believe more than any one of my own Rank in Scotland. I remember my Lord Townſhend told me one Day, who was my particular Friend, That I was certainly a great Favourite of the King; and if all the Miniſtry ſhould join together to hurt me, that it was not in their Power to do it; and that he would do me all the Service he could; and ſaid, the King would not refuſe any thing he ſhould aſk for me: And the King, to my own certain Knowledge, reproached the Scotch Miniſtry, that I was not provided for. But that unhappy Nation has been always divided amongſt themſelves, between the Family of the Argylls, and that of the Montroſſes; ſo that they, knowing me to be a Relation and Partizan of the Family of Argyll, they never would do any thing for me. At laſt, the King ſaid, he muſt do it himſelf; and ſent for the Hanoverian Miniſter, and told him, That he muſt immediately fix upon a Way to give me a Penſion: At laſt, it was ordered by the King's particular Inſtruction, that I ſhould have a Letter, or Patent, for myſelf, for 300 l. a Year; which I enjoyed till now, for any thing I know. Then all the Engliſh Miniſters, every one of them, were my Friends; and they propoſed that I ſhould go into the Army. Lord Cadogan, who, in the Year 1716, went with an Army into Scotland, ſent for me; and deſired me to bring up 500 Men to Badenoch, to eſcort him to Inverneſs: Which I did. They gave out, that the Highlanders were to attack him in the Woods: But when they heard, that I was with him, with the beſt Part of my Clan, they did not think it proper to attack him. After Lord Cadogan came to Inverneſs he ſent for Sir Robert Munro, who was killed at the Battle of Falkirk: He called me into his Cloſet with him, and told me, We are now fully convinced, Lord Lovat, that it was you, and a few of the King's Friends that were joined to you, that ſubdued and ſuppreſſed the Rebellion, and extinguiſhed it; and that all that was wrote in the Gazette about Lord Sutherland, was all Romance. Now, I am ſo ſenſible of thoſe Services that you have done the Government, that, if you will join yourſelf to the Duke of Marlborough, to the Earl of

of Sunderland, and to me, that are thought the Favourites of the King, we will, in the firſt Place, immediately make you a Major-General: You ſhall have a Regiment of Foot, or Dragoons, and 3000 l. a Year Penſion, during your Life. My Lords, if I had accepted of that Offer, I had now had the beſt Eſtate in Scotland; and would have been fair for being one of the Field-Marſhals of England, being the oldeſt Officer: But, my Lords, the Condition was too ſevere; and I had rather never have any Being than be ungrateful. The late Duke of Argyll, I mean this Duke of Argyll's Father, who was one of the greateſt Men that has been in our Country for many Ages; he was a Father to me, and protected me as his own Child; he got me Two Remiſſions from King William; and, as he was carrying another Remiſſion in, to be ſigned by Queen Anne (King William, to my Misfortune, having died that Year), he found the Door ſhut; that is, he found that Three Men had turned out all King William's Friends, of whom he was one, and the Duke of Queensberry, and ſeveral others; and that ſhe brought in Two Families, the Duke of Hamilton, and the Marquis of Athol, whom ſhe made a Duke; and to pleaſe him, with whom my Family unfortunately had a Quarrel about an Eſtate; to pleaſe him, I ſay, ſhe put 2000*l.* upon my Head, which was 1000*l.* more than ever was uſual. So I told the Duke of Argyll, that I had nothing for it, but to go to Hanover, and there to live and die with Fidelity to the Duke of Hanover. He told me, that he was well aſſured, that the Duke of Hanover would be glad to receive me; but, as he was then declared the Proteſtant Heir, and that Succeſſion depended much upon the good Will of Queen Anne, he muſt, upon her Deſire, be obliged to ſend me back to England; and that he did not know a ſafe Way for me but to go to France, becauſe we were at War with them then. And that was the firſt thing, my Lords, that obliged me to go to France, which was the Foundation of my Misfortunes. Now, my Lords, after what I have told you, I muſt humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, whether you do not think it is improbable, that I ſhould be an Enemy to King George, and his Family: I, that received more Marks of Favour from the late King George than any Subject in the North; I, that got my Eſtate ſettled in his Time, both by the Houſe of Commons and Peers; I, that expected never to be out of Favour with the Government, being very zealous to promote any thing that was for the Good of it. My Lords, I commanded a Highland Company for Fifteen Years, as their Colonel: And the Country can teſtify, that there was no Depredation, Theft, or Robbery, committed there during that Time: I took Twenty-five Highland Robbers in the Highlands in one Night, and brought them all Priſoners to the Tolbooth of Inverneſs. I continued to act in the Manner that General Wade from time to time ordered me. I own I did not expect, that he, who reviewed my Company every Year, and called it the beſt Company that he ever ſaw in his Life—I muſt make the Lords laugh upon that Occaſion: He told me, that Mr. Pulteney, now Earl of Bath, ſaid, in the Houſe of Commons, that he knew old Lovat very well; that he would never have a Company but in his Pocket: And now I can tell him, That he did not ſpeak Truth. General Handaſide was preſent, and his Brother, who is a very pretty Gentleman, when he declared, that he never did ſee ſuch a fine Company in any Country that he was ever in: And he appealed to the Two Handaſides, and the other Officers that were there, whether it was not true; and they all agreed in it. So that, my Lords, after this, I very little expected, that, without ever blaming me, or imputing any Crime to me, my Commiſſion ſhould be broke; and not only ſo, but that I ſhould be ordered to keep 400 Men from it in the Country, to be put into another Company, to make up a Regiment that General Wade procured for his Favourite Colonel Durore. My Lords, I was certainly much out of Humour to ſee myſelf ſo uſed; but I never imputed it to the King, nor to his Prime Miniſter Sir Robert Walpole, afterwards Earl of Orford. And this is all the Grounds of my being out of Temper, or that they can lay hold of, to ſay I was againſt the Government. So, after what I have told your Lordſhips, and the Manner that I have been uſed, I hope your Lordſhips will not think I was capable of any malicious Deſign againſt the Government. And, indeed, it was a Loſs to the Government more than to me, that my Company was broke, becauſe, if I had commanded the Highland Company, as I did for Fifteen Years, the Country had been peaceable, and there had been no Rebellion.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, I muſt put your Lordſhip in mind of the Queſtion I aſked you, Whether you have any thing to offer in Arreſt of Judgment?

Lord Lovat. Whatever way I may be over-ruled, I will ſay, to my dying Hour, that I have met with the greateſt Hardſhips ever practiſed in Britain; and I ſtill inſiſt, that I ſhall get the Benefit that all Subjects have a Right to, of adducing Witneſſes, that may be for the Safety of their Lives and Intereſts.

L. H. S. Your Lordſhip has heard the Opinion of the Lords already.

Lord Preſident. I move your Lordſhips to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. S. This Houſe is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Then the Lords, and others, returned to the Chamber of Parliament, in the ſame Order they came down: And the Houſe being there reſumed,

The Proceeding entered in the Journal of the 19th of March, 1715, in relation to the Giving of Judgment againſt George Earl of Wintoun was read: Which being done,

Their Lordſhips were informed, That the Commons, with their Speaker, and the Mace, were at the Door: Whereupon they were called in: And Mr. Speaker, at the Bar, ſaid,

My Lords,

THE Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, in Parliament aſſembled, did, at this Bar, in the Name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, impeach Simon Lord Lovat of High Treaſon, and exhibited Articles againſt him, and have made good the ſame: I do therefore, in the Name of the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, in Parliament aſſembled, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, demand Judgment of your Lordſhips againſt Simon Lord Lovat for the ſaid High Treaſon.

And they being withdrawn,

Ordered, That, when Judgment ſhall be pronounced againſt the ſaid Lord Lovat, it be the ſame as was pronounced againſt the late Earl of Wintoun.

Then the Houſe was again adjourned into Weſtminſter-Hall: And the Peers, and others, went down in the ſame Order as before; and the Peers being in their Places, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair, and the Commons and their Managers in the Seats prepared for them reſpectively; the Houſe was reſumed: And the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, as uſual.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, As ſome Time has intervened ſince I laſt aſked you the Queſtion, Whether you had any thing to offer in Arreſt of Judgment, I am now to aſk you again, Whether you have any thing to ſay, why Judgment of Death ſhould not paſs upon you, according to Law?

Lord Lovat. No: I have ſaid all that I had to ſay; and beg your Lordſhips Pardon for the rude, long Diſcourſe I made to your Lordſhips. I had great need of my Couſin Murray's Eloquence for half an Hour, and then it would have been more agreeable.

Proclamation was made for Silence, as uſual.

Lord High Steward.

Simon Lord Lovat,

YOU have been impeached by the Commons of Great Britain, in Parliament aſſembled, of High-Treaſon, charged upon you by particular Articles, containing different Species, and various Overt Acts, of that Treaſon.

To theſe Articles your Lordſhip thought fit to put in an Anſwer, amounting to a general Plea of Not guilty to the Whole; and, after a long and impartial Trial, upon the cleareſt and moſt convincing Evidence, againſt which you offered no Defence by Witneſſes, your Peers have unanimouſly found you Guilty.

What remains is the diſagreeable, but unavoidable, Part of proceeding to that Judgment, which is the neceſſary Conſequence of ſuch atrocious Crimes. Happy had it been for your Lordſhip, if before you engaged in them, you had ſuffered the Terrors of that Conſequence to have their due Weight, when the ſacred Ties of your Allegiance, and your Oaths, were not ſtrong enough to reſtrain you.

In this Proceeding, the Zeal and dutiful Affection of the Commons to his Majeſty, and their Country, and the Juſtice of the Houſe of Peers, have ſhone forth in their full Luſtre. The Commons found your Lordſhip to be one of the principal Conſpirators, who contrived and carried on the late deteſtable Rebellion, to deſtroy our Religion and Liberties, and to ſubvert that Legal Settlement of the Crown in his Majeſty, and his Royal Family, under which alone we can live Free and Happy.

They rightly judged, that this, which is the common Cauſe of all the People of Great Britain, ought to be proſecuted by the United Voice of the People: That it became them to inveſtigate and lay open, in full Parliament, the Source of thoſe Calamities, which we have lately ſuffered, and the deep-laid and long-meditated Conſpiracy, in which your Lordſhip had ſo conſiderable and ſo flagitious a Part. They rightly judged, that no Judicature was equal to ſuch an important Proceeding, but this High Court, on whoſe Penetration and Juſtice they relied, and before whom, in this Great Aſſembly, Publick and Indubitable Satisfaction might be given.

Before your Conviction, I have ſpoken to your Lordſhip upon a Preſumption of your Innocence; but now I am bound, by the unanimous Deciſion of my Lords your Peers, to take the Evidence againſt you to be True, and to addreſs myſelf to you as a Guilty Perſon.

Your Lordſhip has, in your Anſwer, endeavoured to avail yourſelf of former Services to his late Majeſty and the Proteſtant Succeſſion, which you have this Day enlarged upon at the Bar. How unfortunate have you been in referring back to ſuch cancelled Merit, ſince thereby you have furniſhed an Opportunity to the Commons, to ſhew, for how long a Track of Time you have conceived and nurſed up this Treaſon in your Heart! Whatever your Pretences were, ſo infected was your Mind, and ſo forward your Zeal, in the Cauſe of that Pretender, whom you had then abjured, as to engage in that raſh and weak Attempt from Spain, in his late Majeſty's Reign. Yet, at or very near that Time, it appears, by the Evidence (out of which every Obſervation I will make ſhall naturally ariſe), you were ſolliciting or accepting Favours and Truſts from that very Government, which you had thus engaged to deſtroy. What Uſe did you make of thoſe Truſts? The Inſtance of Roy Stewart, now an Attainted Rebel, ſpeaks it too plainly. Whilſt you were Sheriff of the Shire of Inverneſs, the largeſt County in Scotland, and one of the greateſt Conſequence, you ſuffered that Criminal, in the Year 1736, to eſcape out of your publick Priſon; harboured him afterwards in your own Houſe; then charged him with Meſſages, and Aſſurances of Fidelity, to the Pretender; and to procure for you a Commiſſion of Lieutenant-General, and a mock Title of Honour, from that Pretended Prince.

If any thing could ſurpaſs this Treachery, it is the Aſſociation, which your Lordſhip ſigned and ſealed, together with Six other Perſons, and ſent to Rome and Paris, by Drummond of Bochaldie, in the Beginning of 1740. The Subſtance of this was, to aſſure the Pretender, whom you always called your lawful King, of your Readineſs to appear openly in Arms for his Service; and to ſollicit an Invaſion from France againſt your Native Country, to ſupport this deſperate Deſign.

It ſhould ſeem, by the Evidence, that the Foreign Enemies of Britain were leſs forward in this Meaſure to diſturb her, than her degenerate, Unnatural Sons. Whether that Reluctance proceeded from a Diſtruſt of ſo falſe a Sett of Men, or from a Conviction, that the Body of this Great People was not to be ſhaken in their Loyalty to a King, who poſſeſſes the Throne by the moſt Rightful Title, and governs them in Juſtice and Mercy, according to their Laws and Conſtitution; in either Caſe they they were in the Right. What Dependence could the Court of France have on a few abandoned Traitors? What Hopes could they entertain, that a general Infatuation would, on the ſudden, ſeize and delude a Brave, a Free, and a Happy People, to ſeek their own Slavery and Ruin?

From this Time till the Year 1743, the Conſpiracy lingered in its Progreſs, though great Efforts appear to have been made to render it more extenſive, and more formidable. Then it happened, as it always has happened, that when France ſaw ſuch an Enterprize, whether ſucceſsful or not, might be made a convenient Engine of her own Politicks, that Court ſet about an Invaſion in earneſt. Great Preparations were made, and ready at Dunkirk; but the Providence of God diſappointed them. To be capable of proving Tranſactions of this Kind by ſtrict Evidence in the Forms of Law, is not common, nor, in the Nature of the Thing, ordinarily to be expected. But this the Vigilance of the Commons has effectually done, to the Conviction of all well-intentioned Perſons, and to the Shame and Confuſion of thoſe, who, though they believed, and perhaps knew it themſelves, were induſtrious to propagate a pernicious Incredulity in others.

Thus the Commons have traced and brought down the Series of the Conſpiracy to the remarkable Æra of July, 1745, when the Eldeſt Son of the Pretender landed in Moidart, unſupported by any Foreign Troops, unattended, and almoſt alone.

The appearing Raſhneſs of this Attempt gave Riſe to ſome Apprehenſions, ſome Miſgivings, in the Breaſts of your Lordſhip, and your Fellow-Conſpirators, proceeding from a Concern, not for the King, or for your Country, but for your own private Intereſt and Safety. A French Invaſion had been long ſollicited; a French Force was depended on, to ſecure you againſt the juſt Vengeance of your Native Country; and the Failure of that damped your Hopes, and produced your Expreſſions of Diſappointment. However, ſuch was your Zeal, that, in this raſh Enterprize, your Lordſhip joined; not indeed perſonally (this you often excuſed, complaining of your Infirmities), but by Sending, or rather Forcing out your Clan; and committing every other Species of the blackeſt Treaſon, which the Articles of Impeachment have charged upon you.

Permit me to ſtop here a little, and lament the Condition of Part of this United Kingdom; happily United in Intereſts both Civil and Religious; happily United under the ſame Gracious Monarch, and the ſame Publick Policy: And yet the common People, in ſome of the remote Northern Counties, are ſtill kept in ſuch a State of Bondage to certain of their Fellow-Subjects, who, contrary to all Law, and every true Principle of Government, have erected themſelves into Petty Tyrants over them, as to be liable to be compelled into Rebellion againſt their Lawful Sovereign, under the Peril of Fire and Sword. Aſtoniſhing it is, that ſuch a dangerous Error in Government, ſuch a Remain of Barbariſm, ſhould have ſubſiſted ſo long in any Quarter of this Civilized, Well-governed Iſland: But, ſince ſuch is the Misfortune, let it be accounted one good Fruit of this Inquiry, that it has appeared in this ſolemn Manner. The Knowledge of the Diſeaſe ſhews the Way to the Cure; and it calls aloud for a Remedy.

This uſurped Power was audaciouſly made uſe of over your Clan. It is true, your Lordſhip's Activity in exerting it roſe and fell, in Proportion to the Appearances of the good or bad Succeſs of the Pretender's Cauſe; But, after the Advantage gained by the Rebels at Preſton-Pans, which you vainly called "A Victory not to be paralleled in Hiſtory," you thought it Time to throw off the Maſk; and, with leſs Caution, to eſpouſe a Party, which, you then hoped, might be eſpouſed with Impunity.

I forbear to enumerate the many Overt Acts of your Treaſon. It would be tedious to this Aſſembly, who have heard them ſo much better from the Witneſſes, and from the Recapitulation of the Managers. It would be grievous to your Lordſhip, if your Heart is, by this Time, touched with any Remorſe for your Guilt. But one Thing I cannot help obſerving upon,---the Excuſe you expreſly made for this traitorous Conduct, even after you were taken Priſoner; to which you have this Day artfully endeavoured to give a different Turn. Being aſked, How you could act ſuch a Part againſt a Government, from which you had received many Favours? Your Lordſhip's Anſwer was, "That it was in "Revenge to the Miniſtry, for their ill Uſage of you, in taking away "your Commiſſion of Captain of an Independent Company of High-"landers." An Excuſe almoſt as falſe as it was profligate. Falſe, becauſe ſome of your Treaſonable Practices were committed whilſt you were poſſeſſed of that very Commiſſion. Profligate it was, in the higheſt Degree. Is Allegiance no Duty? Are Oaths to His Majeſty, and His Government, no Obligation upon the Conſcience? Is Loyalty to our Lawful Sovereign, and the Love of our Country, to depend on the Enjoyment of extraordinary Favours and Emoluments, which no Man has a Right to; can, in the Nature of Things, be enjoyed but by a Few; and are in the Pleaſure of all Governments to confer or deny? A Perſon actuated by, and avowing, ſuch Principles as theſe, muſt be loſt to all Senſe of Virtue, and of Shame, and of every Natural, as well as Civil, Sanction of Society.

Sorry, very ſorry I am, to ſee this laſt Reflection ſo ſtrongly verified by the Proofs againſt your Lordſhip. It has appeared, that you uſed your Paternal Influence over your Eldeſt Son, a Youth not above the Age of Nineteen, to compel him to go into the Rebellion; and afterwards unnaturally endeavoured to caſt the Crime and Reproach of it upon him. If this be true, it is an Impiety which makes one tremble. It is the celebrated Saying of a wiſe Writer of Antiquity, and ſhews his perfect Knowledge of Human Nature, "That the Love of our Coun-"try includes all other Social Affections:" For we ſee, when that is gone, even the tendereſt of all Affections, the Parental, may be extinguiſhed with it.

I have ſaid theſe things, not with a View to aggravate your Lordſhip's Crimes, but, as becomes This Place, and This Occaſion, to rouſe your Mind, which, there is Reaſon to fear, may have been too much hardened, to a juſt and deep Senſe of your unhappy and dreadful Situation.

Were I to attempt this from Topicks of Religion, I ſhould be at a Loſs, whether to apply to you as a Proteſtant or a Papiſt. Your Open Profeſſion, your Solemn Oaths, and Publick Actions, ſpeak on one Side: But, if I am to believe the Evidence, your Private Diſcourſe and Declarations teſtify on the other. I will apply no Suppoſitions on this Head particularly to your Lordſhip; but from hence I would draw an inſtructive Leſſon, which well deſerves the ſerious Attention of this Whole Nation, of what important Conſequence it is, to preſerve not only the Name and outward Form of the Proteſtant Religion amongſt us, but the real Uniform Belief and Practice of it. Indifference to all Religion prepares Men for the External Profeſſion of any; and what may not That lead to? Give me Leave to affirm, before this Great Aſſembly, that, even abſtracted from Religious Conſiderations, the Proteſtant Religion ought to be held in the higheſt Reverence, as the ſureſt Barrier of our Civil Conſtitution. Eccleſiaſtical Uſurpation ſeldom fails to end in Civil Tyranny. The preſent Happy Settlement of the Crown is, in Truth, and not in Name only, THE PROTESTANT SUCCESSION. And the inviolable Preſervation of that Wiſe and Fundamental Law, made ſince the Revolution, whereby every Papiſt, or Perſon marrying a Papiſt, is abſolutely excluded from Inheriting to this Crown, will, in future Times, be a ſolid Security for our Poſterity, not only againſt the groundleſs and preſumptuous Claim of an Abjured Pretender, and his Deſcendants, but alſo to prevent this Kingdom from becoming a Province to ſome of the great Popiſh Powers, who have ſo long watched for the Deſtruction of our Liberties.

But, to return to your Lordſhip: Suffer me to exhort you, with great Earneſtneſs, and in great Charity, to deliberate ſeriouſly upon your own Caſe, and to deal impartially with your own Conſcience. If, according to the Evidence given at this Bar, you have led a Life of Craft, Diſſimulation, and Perfidy, conſider how that Scene has cloſed; what Deſolation you have thereby endeavoured to bring upon your Country; how fatally it has ended for yourſelf. Conſider, that the Sentence which I am obliged to pronounce, may ſoon ſend you to a Tribunal, where no Diſguiſe or Artifice can avail you.

The Sentence of the Law is, and this High Court doth adjudge;

"That you, Simon Lord Lovat, Return to the Priſon of the Tower,
"from whence you came; from thence you muſt be drawn to the "Place of Execution; when you come there, you muſt be Hanged
"by the Neck, but not till you are Dead; for you muſt be cut

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I hope your Lordſhips will not take it amiſs, that I ſhould let you know, though it be in a very barbarous Language, both the Affection I had for his late Majeſty, and the Service I did for him and his Family. And I muſt ſay, I have for that the Teſtimony of one of the King's Evidence, that I declared my Affection to his preſent Majeſty: And I have Reaſon ſo to do; for when he was Regent of theſe Kingdoms, and his Father was in Hanover, he was ſo good as to give me a Noli Proſequi for the great Laird of Mac Intoſh that was at the Battle of Preſton: And when I complained of the Hardſhips the Duke of Roxburgh put every Day upon me, in an Audience he was pleaſed to admit me to, in his Cloſet at Kenſington, he was ſo good as to ſay, that, if he was King, he would defend me againſt all my Enemies, not only the Duke of Roxburgh, but all my other Enemies. Now, my Lords, when a Man has but a very few Days, in Appearance, to live, what he ſays ſhould be relied upon, if there is not immediate Evidence to the contrary. I have ſhewn your Lordſhips my Eſteem for the illuſtrious Houſe of Hanover. I have ſhewn my Attachment for my dear Maſter the late King, and my Reſpect for his preſent Majeſty; and therefore all that I have further to ſay, is moſt humbly to implore your Lordſhips Interceſſion, and to recommend me to his Majeſty for Mercy.

Lord High Steward. Have you any thing further to offer?

Lord Lovat. Nothing, my Lords, but that I make the ſame Prayer to the Honourable the Members and Managers of the Houſe of Commons; and that, I hope, as they have been ſtout, they will be merciful.

Lord High Steward. Would you offer any thing further?

Lord Lovat. Nothing but to thank your Lordſhips for your Goodneſs to me. God bleſs you all, and I bid you an everlaſting Farewel. We ſhall not meet all in the ſame Place again, I am ſure of that.

Lord High Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower, Take the Priſoner from the Bar.

Which being done, Proclamation was made for Silence, as uſual.

Then the White Staff being delivered to the Lord High Steward by the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod, upon his Knee, his Grace ſtood up uncovered; and, holding the Staff in both his Hands, broke it in two, and declared that there was nothing farther to be done by virtue of the preſent Commiſſion, and pronounced the ſame to be diſſolved; and then leaving the Chair, came down to the Wool-Pack, and ſaid, Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Houſe was adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament; and the Lords and others returned in the ſame Order as they come down.

And the Priſoner was carried back to the Tower of London.

THE which Day compeared Patrick Haldane of Bearcrofts, Esq; his Majesty's Solicitor, and Advocate-Depute, and produced, in presence of the said Lords, a Writ of Recognizance, signed by his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, of Date the 23d Day of January last by-past, which was ordered to be read and recorded; and whereof the Tenor follows.

Middlesex and Westminster.

To wit; Be it remembered, That, upon the 23d of January, in the Twentieth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George II. King of Great Britain, &c. came before me, and acknowledged themselves to be severally indebted unto our said Sovereign Lord the King as follows, viz.

Archibald Stewart, of Edinburgh, Merchant, the Sum of £.	5000 0 0
David Scot, of Scotstarvet, in the Shire of Fife, Esq; the Sum of	2500 0 0
James Oswald, of Dunnikier, in the said Shire of Fife, Esq; the Sum of	2500 0 0
Alexander Campbel, of the Parish of Allhallows-Staining, London, Doctor of Physick, the Sum of	2500 0 0
James Baird, of Downing-street, in the Parish of St. Margaret's Westminster, Esq; the Sum of	2500 0 0

To be levied upon their several Goods and Chattels, Lands, Tenements and Hereditaments, by way of Recognizance, upon Condition, that if the said Archibald Stewart do personally appear before his Majesty's Court of Justiciary at Edinburgh, at the first Sitting of the said Court after the Twentieth Day of March next, then and there to answer to all such Matters as on his Majesty's Behalf shall be objected against him; and also appear from time to time when thereunto required, and not depart the said Court without Leave thereof; and, in the mean time, be of the good Behaviour, then this Recognizance to be void, or else to remain in full Force and Virtue. Signed

HOLLES NEWCASTLE.

Immediately after reading whereof, compeared the said Archibald Stewart, Merchant in Edinburgh, and judicially sisted himself in Court before the said Lords, in Terms of and agreeable to the said Writ of Recognizance, and humbly insisted, that thereby the Condition of the said Writ was fulfilled, and the same fell to be voided, and he dismissed, if there was no Person on his Majesty's Behalf ready to insist against him.

To which Mr. Patrick Haldane, his Majesty's Advocate-Depute, made Answer: That the Writ of Recognizance was not only for Mr. Stewart's Appearance this Day, but thereafter, from Time to Time, when thereto required; that, having only had occasion lately to see the said Writ, he was not just now ready to insist in any Matters on his Majesty's Behalf against the said Archibald Stewart, as therein mentioned; and moved their Lordships would appoint a farther Time for his Appearance again.

Mr. Stewart, without making any Reply, submitted his Case to the Court.

'The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the said 'Writ of Recognizance, and above Debate, they continue the Diet, 'for the said Archibald Stewart's Compearance, to Monday the eighth 'Day of June next, and ordain him to sist himself personally in Court 'that Day, without Prejudice to the Lord Advocate to insist against and 'prosecute the said Archibald Stewart sooner, in Behalf of his Majesty, 'if he shall see Cause.'

Lord Strichen Præses.

THE said Day, in obedience to the foregoing Order, compeared the said Archibald Stewart, and sisted himself in Court, when he and Messieurs Lockhart, Ferguson, Home and Stewart, Advocates, his Procurators, insisted, That, in obedience to the last Order of Court, in consequence of the Recognizance therein mentioned, he had appeared a second Time; that, as he pled first, so he now did, that the Condition of the said Writ of Recognizance was fulfilled; and that the same ought to be voided, and he dismissed, if there was no Person yet ready to insist against him on his Majesty's Behalf, which he had Reason to believe was the Case.

To which Mr. Patrick Haldane, his Majesty's Advocate-Depute, made Answer: That the Lord Advocate, who, at the last Diet, attended the Service of his Country in Parliament, was, contrary to Expectation, still detained, although he intended to have been in Scotland long before now, when he could and would have proceeded to bring Mr. Stewart to Trial in the ordinary Way: That, for his Part, as Advocate-Depute, he had no such Instructions as he could move in that Matter, either just now, or by a proper Process; and all he was instructed to ask of their Lordships, was a Delay of eight Days, which could be no Prejudice either to Mr. Stewart or his Cautioners, and against which Time he was pretty well assured his Majesty's Advocate would be present, and shew Cause why the Writ of Recognizance should continue, and satisfy Mr. Stewart how or when he would be brought to Trial.

It was replied for Mr. Stewart, that he expected, if there was any thing to be objected to him on behalf of his Majesty, considering the long Space of Time interveening betwixt this and his former Appearance, he would have been brought under some Prosecution for it ere now; that the Absence of my Lord Advocate, however necessary, and his Depute's not being properly instructed, was to Mr Stewart or his Cautioners nothing to the Purpose; that Mr. Stewart's Appearance, now and before, and nothing objected to him, was, as to his Cautioners, a Liberation of their Bail, which was so very great as must appear to be a Hardship if it should last any longer; and therefore craved that he might be dismist, and the Bond voided.

It was duplied by Mr. Haldane, that the Delay sought was so small, as plainly shewed that there was no Intention of putting a Hardship on any Person; and, without farther Argument, he doubted not but the Court would continue Mr. Stewart's farther Compearance, in Terms of, and agreeable to the Writ of Recognizance, 'till Monday next the 15th Instant.

'The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the above 'Debate, they continue the Diet for the said Archibald Stewart's farther 'Compearance to Monday the 15th Day of June Instant, and ordain 'him to sist himself personally in Court that Day, without Prejudice to 'the Lord Advocate to insist against and prosecute the said Archibald Stewart sooner,' if he shall see Cause.'

Lord Strichen Præses:

THE said Day compeared the said Archibald Stewart, in obedience to the last Order of Court, and sisted himself agreeable to his Writ of Recognizance, and craved the said Writ might be declared void; and he dismissed, in case the Lord Advocate was not yet ready to insist against him, as, if he was, he had at least got no Notice of it, nor so much as of any Time for his Trial.

The Lord Advocate thereupon appeared, and represented the former Delays were not owing to him, but, in some measure, to Mr. Stewart's own Friends, who applied to him at London for a Delay, 'till he should come to Scotland and be present himself; which truly was the Reason of his not raising and executing a criminal Process against Mr. Stewart to the last Diet he appeared. That, to shew his Lordship had no Inclination to give Mr. Stewart any unnecessary Delay, he now was ready to insist, and for that End gave in, and presented to the Lords, a Bill signed by him, craving Warrant for criminal Letters against the said Archibald Stewart, for the Crimes and Misdemeanours therein mentioned, and fixing the Diet for his Trial to the third of July next.

Thereafter Mr. Lockhart moved, in Behalf of the Cautioners for Mr. Stewart, that the Writ of Recognizance should be voided; and for Mr. Stewart, in place thereof, that he was willing to find new Bail for any Sum the Lords should appoint and judge reasonable, as the Bail he was presently under was by far too extravagant.

To which the Lord Advocate made answer: That the Writ of Recognizance, on which Mr. Stewart was liberate, was still in force, and behoved to continue, as the Cautioners and Mr. Stewart not only became bound that he should appear such a Day, but from Time to Time thereafter, as the Lords should appoint, and not to depart, without Leave, out of the Court; that this Bail was taken by, and given to one of the highest Authority, and that it must necessarily continue, agreeable to the said Writ, 'till he be dismissed.

Whereupon Mr. Stewart himself, and Mr. Elliot his Procurator, waved the Motion made by Mr. Lockhart anent renewing the Bail, and agreed that the former stand good, and he had no Objection why the next Diet of Compearance might not be the third of July next.

'The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the above 'Debate, they continue the Diet, for the said Archibald Stewart's farther 'Compearance, 'till Friday the third Day of July next to come.' Signed

ALEX. FRASER. I. P. D.

Upon the third of July the Diet was continued to the Tirteenth of that Month.

Lord Strichen Præſes.

Intran.

Archibald Stewart of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provoſt of the ſaid City, Pannel,

Indicted and accuſed at the Inſtance of William Grant of Preſtongrange, Eſq; his Majeſty's Advocate for his Majeſty's Intereſt, for the Crimes of Neglect of Duty, and Miſbehaviour in Offices and Places of publick Truſt, and the Violation of the Truſt and Duty of ſuch Offices, in manner at Length mentioned in the criminal Libel raiſed againſt him thereanent, making mention, That Whereas, by the Laws of this and all other well governed Realms, all Neglects of Duty, and Miſbehaviours of Perſons employed in Offices and Places of publick Truſt; and all Violations of the Truſt and Duty of ſuch Offices, are Crimes of a high Nature, and ſeverely puniſhable; and the public Juſtice of the Realm requireth a vigorous Proſecution of ſuch Offenders, eſpecially when ſuch Neglects of Duty and Miſbehaviours are incurred by the chief Magiſtrate of any great or conſiderable City, in a Time of publick Danger, and open Rebellion; and particularly by an Act made in the fourteenth Parliament of King James the Second of Scotland, Chapter ſeventy-ſixth, intitled, The Punition of negligent Officiars, 'It is ordained and determined, That if any of the King's Officiars or Sheriffs, 'Mayors, Bailies, Crowners, Serjeants, Provoſt of Burghs, and their 'Miniſters both to Land and to Burgh, be found faulty or negligent 'in the Execution of their Offices, and it may be lawfully proved on 'him, or notourly kend; if the ſaid Office pertains to him in Fie and 'Heritage, he ſhall tyne his Office, and the Profit thereof, for an Year 'and a Day, and to be puniſhed by the King in his Perſon and Goods 'after the Quantity of his Treſpaſs; and if his Office pertains to him 'not in Fie and Heritage, he ſhall tyne his Office for all the Times 'he has it, and to be puniſhed in his Perſon, after the Quantity of 'ſik Treſpaſs, at the King's Will.' Yet true it is and of Verity, That the ſaid Archibald Stewart of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Provoſt of the ſaid City, is guilty, Actor, or Art and Part of the ſaid Crimes, or one or other of them, aggravated as aforeſaid; In ſo far as he, being Lord Provoſt of the City of Edinburgh, in the Year One thouſand ſeven hundred and forty-five, when a moſt bold, deſperate, wicked, and unprovoked Rebellion was raiſed and carried on againſt his Majeſty within this Realm, by a large Body of armed Traytors, headed by the eldeſt Son of the Pretender to his Crown, and aſſiſted with Troops and Money from his Enemies abroad, and, at ſuch a Juncture, it being his Duty, as the chief Magiſtrate of the ſaid City, and the King's Lieutenant therein, having Authority to command the military Force of whatever Kind within the City, to have exerted himſelf with Fidelity, Vigilance and Zeal, for oppoſing the Progreſs of the Rebellion by all lawful Methods in his Power, and particularly for preſerving the City intruſted to his Care from falling under the Power of the Rebels, or becoming a Prey to them, he, the ſaid Archibald Stewart, was groſly faulty or negligent in the Execution of his ſaid Office and Duty on ſo important an Occaſion, in manifeſt Violation of the Truſt and Duty of his Office: and particularly was thus guilty on the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Days of September, in the Year of our Lord One thouſand ſeven hundred and forty-five, and upon ſeveral other Days and Times in the ſaid Month of September, and the Month of Auguſt preceding, within the ſaid City of Edinburgh, where he was reſident for the Time. And moreover, the ſaid Archibald Stewart was not only faulty or negligent in the Execution of his Office, and notoriouſly known to have been ſuch, but was guilty of Malverſations and counteracting the Duty of his Office, in ſuch an Exigency, in many Inſtances, and particularly, amongſt others, in theſe following: Firſt, That whereas the Preſervation of the City of Edinburgh, from falling into the Hands of the Rebels, was of great Importance to that City itſelf, and to the King and the Kingdom in general, and the Care of it eſpecially incumbent on the Lord Provoſt for the Time being, and ought to have been looked after with the utmoſt Attention, Zeal and Vigour, in ſuch an Exigency, as when the Rebels got to the Southward of the Body of the King's Troops under the Command of Sir John Cope, of which Advices came to Edinburgh in the latter End of Auguſt One thouſand ſeven hundred and forty-five, from which there was Reaſon to fear that the Taking of that City would be attempted by the Rebels, and to hope that the King's Army might ſoon after come to its Relief: Yet, in theſe Circumſtances, he, the ſaid Archibald Stewart, then chief Magiſtrate, and ſole military Governor of that City, did nothing of his own accord towards providing effectually for the Defence thereof; and, on the contrary, every Meaſure for that Purpoſe propoſed, and preſſed by the honeſt Zeal of the then Magiſtrates and Council, and of many of the Citizens and Inhabitants, inſtead of being heartily encouraged and promoted by him the Provoſt, were by him thwarted and retarded, or elſe abſolutely refuſed or declined; and in this Manner it was that he received a Propoſition made to him in the latter End of Auguſt One thouſand ſeven hundred and forty-five, for raiſing a Regiment of one thouſand Men, by voluntary Subſcription, for Defence of the City; againſt which he formed Objections on account of the Expence, and affected Doubts concerning the Legality thereof. And, Secondly, He treated in like manner another Application made to him in the Beginning of September One thouſand ſeven hundred and forty-five, by a Number of Gentlemen or Citizens, for Leave to aſſociate themſelves under his chief Command, as Volunteers, for the Defence of the City, and Service of the Government; and, after his Objections to the Legality of that Meaſure were over-ruled, he would not ſuffer it to be publiſhed or given out that he heartily approved, but barely that he acquieſced in that Meaſure; and yet his Reluctancy or Averſion to it, or Uneaſineſs under it, continued to diſcover itſelf on frequent Occaſions, and particularly by the cold, if not the rude Manner in which he behaved towards thoſe Volunteers, conſiſting of a Number of very reſpectable Gentlemen and Burgeſſes, when he went to a publick Meeting of them, in the New Church Iſle of Edinburgh, to name their Captains. Thirdly, That, in like manner, through the Miſbehaviour of the ſaid Archibald Stewart, when certain Repairs of the City Walls, and other Works for making it defenſible for ſome Time, againſt an Enemy who had no Artillery, and were very unſkilful in making Sieges, had been propoſed and adviſed, amongſt others, by the now deceaſt and famous Mr. Colin Mac Laurin, Profeſſor of Mathematicks in the College of Edinburgh, and were ordered by the Council of the City of Edinburgh to be made, the Execution whereof was chiefly incumbent on the Lord Provoſt for the Time being, yet the ſame was carried on very ſlowly and imperfectly, notwithſtanding frequent Remonſtrances and Complaints made by divers of the faithful and zealous Inhabitants; and, as late as Sunday the Fifteenth of September One thouſand ſeven hundred and forty-five, when the Rebels were marching to, and were come within a few Miles of the City of Edinburgh, he the ſaid Archibald Stewart refuſed to give Orders for loading the Cannon planted upon the City Walls, and, about the ſame Time, he refuſed to apply for ſome of the Sailors from on Board one of the King's Ships of War for managing of thoſe Cannon, when he could not otherways be provided of fit Perſons to act as Gunners. Fourthly, That, about the ſame Time, he the ſaid Archibald Stewart refuſed to liſten to, or to follow ſeveral ſalutary Propoſitions that were made and preſſed by well-affected Inhabitants, for the greater Safety and better Defence of the City; ſuch as, that the Trained Bands, conſiſting of a promiſcuous Number of Burgeſſes, whereof many were known to be diſaffected, ſhould be laid aſide, as had been practiſed during the Rebellion in the Year One thouſand ſeven hundred and fifteen, and that Arms ſhould only be truſted in the Hands of ſuch as were known to be well-affected, and that a general Search for Arms ſhould be made within the City, and that a Number of the ableſt bodied Men of the Tradeſmen's Servants ſhould be employed and armed for aſſiſting to defend the City when it ſhould be attacked, upon the Encouragement of a Guinea to be given to each of them; towards defraying which Expence an Offer was made to the ſaid Archibald Stewart, on the Part of the Volunteers, to have raiſed or advanced the ſum of Five hundred Pounds Sterling. Fifthly, That the ſaid Archibald Stewart miſbehaved himſelf in like manner, in reſpect of the Succours that were brought at the Time aforeſaid from the Country in the Neighbourhood of Edinburgh, conſiſting of Numbers of well-affected and zealous Subjects, under the Conduct of Gentlemen of known Loyalty and good Affection, who came and voluntarily offered their Service to aſſiſt in defending the City of Edinburgh, without any Fee or Reward, upon that dangerous and preſſing Occaſion, the Approach of the Rebels to that City; but theſe very ſeaſonable and laudable Offers were by the ſaid Archibald Stewart very coldly received and ill-treated: For Inſtance, he propoſed to Sir Robert Dickſon of Invereſk, who came to Edinburgh upon Sunday the fifteenth Day of September One thouſand ſeven hundred and forty-five, from Muſſelburgh, with about One hundred and fifty Volunteers, to offer their Services for the Purpoſes aforeſaid, that theſe Men ſhould inliſt themſelves for three Months as Soldiers in the Edinburgh Regiment; a Propoſition which, inſtead of being calculated ſincerely to provide for the better Defence of the City, could be no otherways received by thoſe Volunteers, than as an Inſult and Diſcouragement to their Zeal, who, being Tradeſmen or Huſbandmen, did not mean to leave their Occupations, and inliſt themſelves as Soldiers for Hire, but had bravely offered to ſerve gratis in the then preſent Exigency, which could not laſt above a few Days, before the End of which the City of Edinburgh muſt either have been relieved or ſurrendered. Sixthly, That, on the Morning of Monday the Sixteenth of September One thouſand ſeven hundred and forty-five, the ſaid Archibald Stewart received a Meſſage from the Camp of the Rebels, by Andrew Alves, Writer to the Signet, importing, that the City of Edinburgh would be ill treated by them, unleſs it ſhould be readily or ſpeedily ſurrendered; being a Meſſage to the ſame Effect with that contained in a Letter from the Pretender's Son, bearing Date from his Camp that ſame Day, addreſſed, For the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh, and which Letter was thereafter that ſame Day delivered; and yet he the ſaid Archibald Stewart did not immediately commit the ſaid Andrew Alves to Priſon, for bringing or delivering to him ſuch Meſſage, neither did he give Notice to any other of the King's Officers, Civil or Military, that he had received ſuch Meſſage. Seventhly, That upon the ſame Monday, the Sixteenth of September One thouſand ſeven hundred and forty-five, about three of the Clock in the Afternoon, he received a Petition from certain of the Inhabitants of the City who oppoſed the Defence thereof, and inſiſted to have a general Meeting called of all the principal Inhabitants, to conſult what was proper to be done, and he accordingly held and preſided in a Meeting in the New Church Iſle in the Afternoon of that ſame Day, upon the ringing of the Fire-Bell, which was the appointed Signal for the Volunteers to repair to their Alarm-Poſt; the Conſequence of which was, that few or none of thoſe Volunteers, who conſiſted of a Number of the moſt ſubſtantial and beſt affected Burgeſſes, were or could be preſent at that general Meeting: In which Meeting, as every one who had a mind got Acceſs, there were Numbers of Perſons preſent of known Diſaffection to his Majeſty's Government; and thus, by ill Deſign upon their Part, and by the Timidity of others who were thus aſſembled in a tumultuous Manner, and a very improper Council with which to take Meaſures in a Time of immediate and preſſing Danger, the general Cry was given for ſurrendering the City, and giving up all Thoughts of making a Defence: And the ſaid Archibald Stewart thus held and took the Senſe of this Meeting, notwithſtanding that before he went to it, it was very well known that the Rebels were ill armed, and that an Offer had been made to him, in Aid of the other Forces with which the City was provided, to ſend one hundred out of two Regiments of Dragoons in the King's Service, or as many of the Dragoons of thoſe

thoſe Regiments as he ſhould deſire, to aſſiſt in defending the City; but he refuſed to give his Conſent or Authority for receiving any of theſe Dragoons, though he had requeſted ſuch Party of Dragoons, about an Hour or two before in that ſame Day, by a Writing under his Hand, addreſſed to Lieutenant General Joſhua Gueſt, then in the Caſtle of Edinburgh. And moreover, at this Meeting there was brought in and delivered to the ſaid Archibald Stewart, the Letter above-mentioned from the Pretender's Son; immediately, or ſoon after the receiving whereof, that Meeting was diſmiſſed, and he, with others of the Magiſtrates and Council, withdrew to the Council-Chamber, where (which is the eighth Article charged upon him the ſaid Archibald Stewart) he cauſed or ſuffered the ſaid Letter from the Pretender's Son to be publickly read, and moved or agreed that an Anſwer ſhould be given to it; which was accordingly ſent, firſt by one, and then by another Deputation from the Council: All which Intercourſe was in him the ſaid Archibald Stewart, then Lord Provoſt, the more criminal, that any Danger or Neceſſity that might be alledged, in order to avoid the ſame being puniſhable as High-Treaſon, was owing in great Meaſure to his own Backwardneſs to diſcharge his Duty, by taking all the proper Precautions againſt ſuch Danger, with that Fidelity and Vigour which he owed, by his Allegiance and his Station, to the City of Edinburgh, and to the King and Kingdom. Ninthly, That all this while he the ſaid Archibald Stewart refuſed or neglected, though frequently applied to for that Purpoſe, to give any Orders to the Volunteers of the City of Edinburgh, who had been long ſtanding upon the Street under Arms, how or in what Manner they ſhould diſpoſe of themſelves, and employ theſe Arms, or how they ſhould diſpoſe of the Arms, if they were not to be uſed or employed for the Defence of the City, for which they had been firſt taken up; and, upon ſuch his Refuſal or Neglect, the ſaid Volunteers took and executed the Reſolution to carry back their Arms to the Magazine in the Caſtle of Edinburgh, in order to prevent the ſame from falling into the Hands of the Rebels. Tenthly, That, on the Evening of the ſame Monday the ſixteenth of September One Thouſand ſeven Hundred and Forty-five, he the ſaid Archibald Stewart refuſed or declined to give his Licence or Authority for a Party ſent by the ſaid Lieutenant-General Gueſt, or by Lieutenant-General George Preſton, Governor of the Caſtle of Edinburgh, to remove or ſpike up the Cannon that were then planted upon the City-Walls; and, about the ſame Time, he the ſaid Archibald Stewart gave Orders to Thomas Dalziel, one of the Captains of the City-Guard of Edinburgh, whoſe Turn it was to be on Duty that Night, to keep Guard with the uſual Complement in peaceable Times, of One-third of the City-Guard, or Company, and no more; and, about the ſame Time, he the ſaid Archibald Stewart gave Orders to the Parties of the Trained-Bands of the City of Edinburgh, who had been upon Guard at the ſeveral Gates of the City, to quit their Poſts, and to diſpoſe of their Arms in the Parliament-Houſe, or ſome other Place or Places, where they muſt be expoſed to fall into the Hands of the Rebels, as ſoon as they ſhould enter or become Maſters of the City. And, Eleventhly, In the ſame Evening of the ſixteenth of September, One Thouſand ſeven Hundred and Forty-five, it was propoſed and urged in Council, where the ſaid Archibald Stewart was preſent, and preſided, That the whole City Arms, being in Number about twelve hundred Firelocks and Bayonets, ſhould be lodged and ſecured within the Caſtle of Edinburgh, in order to prevent their falling into the Hands of the Rebels; but he the ſaid Archibald Stewart refuſed or declined to give any Order for that Purpoſe, neither in Fact were the City-Arms ſo lodged and ſecured, but were ſeized by the Rebels upon their entering the City the Day following, who came to Edinburgh ſo imperfectly armed, that the Supply of Arms which they thus received, appears to have been one principal Cauſe of the Diſaſter that befel the King's Forces near Preſton-Pans, on the twenty-firſt Day of the ſame Month of September, One Thouſand ſeven Hundred and Forty-five. And, laſtly, By Occaſion or Means of the ſeveral Inſtances above-recited, and other Inſtances during the Time above-mentioned, upon one or other of the Days of the Months of Auguſt or September, One Thouſand ſeven Hundred and Forty-five, of the Miſbehaviour of the ſaid Archibald Stewart within the City of Edinburgh, of which he was then Lord Provoſt, it came to be very notoriouſly known, that he was highly faulty and negligent in the Execution of his Office, and to be farther violently ſuſpected and believed, amongſt the King's faithful Subjects in that City, that he the ſaid Archibald Stewart was ſecretly in the Intereſt of the Pretender, by reaſon of the Uniformity of his Behaviour from the Beginning to the End of theſe Tranſactions, diſcovering a conſtant Unwillingneſs or Backwardneſs to provide for, or heartily proſecute the Meaſures that were in a Manner forced upon him, in order to the Defence of that City, at a Time when, if he had obſerved a contrary Conduct, there was at leaſt a high Probability, that the City might have been preſerved from falling into the Hands of the Rebels: And in Fact the ſame did fall into their Hands, in a very ſtrange and ſuſpicious Manner, by a Party of the Rebels entering the City at the Netherbow Port, early in the Morning of Tueſday the ſeventeenth of September, One thouſand ſeven Hundred and Forty-five, when that Port was guarded with nothing more than a Serjeant's Command of the City-Guard, and was opened to ſuffer a Hackney-Coach to go out, which had juſt returned from bringing back the ſecond Deputation ſent by the ſaid Archibald Stewart, and other Magiſtrates and Councillors of Edinburgh, to the Pretender's Son: All which Misfortunes were, in great Meaſure, owing to the Miſconduct of the ſaid Archibald Stewart, and ſerved to bring a heavy Calamity on the City of Edinburgh, and the Kingdom in general; at leaſt, at the Time and Place aforeſaid, he, the ſaid Archibald Stewart, being Lord Provoſt of the City of Edinburgh, was highly faulty or negligent in the Execution of his Office, at a Time of publick Danger and open Rebellion againſt his Majeſty. And for proving that the ſaid Archibald Stewart was guilty as aforeſaid, there would be produced againſt him, by Way of Evidence, beſides very credible Witneſſes, certain Documents in Writing, which ſhould be lodged in the Hands of the Clerks to the Court of Juſticiary, that he might ſee the ſame, and whereof a Liſt ſhould be delivered to him, along with the Liſt of Witneſſes to be adduced againſt him. All which enormous Neglects of Duty, and Miſbehaviours, or Part thereof, or his being Art and Part of the ſame, being found proven againſt the ſaid Archibald Stewart by the Verdict of an Aſſize, before the Lords Juſtice-General, Juſtice-Clerk, and Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, he, the ſaid Archibald Stewart, ought to be puniſhed with the Pains of Law, to the Terror of others to be guilty of the like in Time coming.

INFORMATION for his MAJESTY'S ADVOCATE for his Majeſty's Intereſt, Purſuer,

AGAINST

ARCHIBALD STEWART of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provoſt of the ſaid City, Pannel or Defender.

THE Libel, at the Purſuer's Inſtance, againſt Mr. Stewart, late Lord Provoſt of the City of Edinburgh, charges him the Pannel with being guilty of very high Crimes and Miſdemeanours, in having many ways acted contrary to his Duty, when he was chief Magiſtrate of the City of Edinburgh, in the Months of Auguſt and September 1745, a Time of publick Danger and open Rebellion, headed by the eldeſt Son of the Pretender to his Majeſty's Crown, aſſiſted with Troops and Money from his Majeſty's Enemies abroad; at which Juncture the Pannel, by his Miſbehaviour, ſuffered the City of Edinburgh, with the Cannon and Arms therein, as well as other Supplies of various Sorts, to fall into the Hands of the Rebels, in manifeſt Violation of the Truſt and Duty of his Office. This is the general Charge againſt the Pannel, which is in the Libel more particularly ſpecified, by a Deduction of many particular Inſtances of Miſbehaviour alledged againſt him in Support of that general Charge, which Particulars it is unneceſſary here to repeat; but for them the Purſuer begs Leave to refer to the Libel itſelf.

The Pannel having been duly ſerved with a Copy of this Libel, did firſt of all, in purſuance of the late Act of Parliament for aboliſhing the heritable Juriſdictions in Scotland, &c. give in to the Clerk of Court, the Day before his Trial was to come on, ſigned by one of his Counſel, his Account of the Facts relating to the Matters charged upon him, together with the Heads of certain Objections and Defences which he makes to the Libel, and therein ſays, 'That he is not guilty of all or any of the Ne'glects or Miſbehaviours laid to his Charge, and that there is no Ground 'for ſuppoſing him diſaffected to the Government, but much to the con'trary; and, in particular, he avers, that his Conduct, upon Occaſion 'and at the Time of the late Rebellion, will, upon Proof, afford the 'ſtrongeſt Evidence of his real Attachment to the Government;' and farther ſays, upon the ſeveral Matters charged againſt him,

In the firſt Article, 'That he thwarted no Meaſures that were pro'poſed that ſeemed legal and expedient; that where any Doubts or Diffi'culties occurred, either as to the Legality or Expediency of any Parti'cular propoſed, ſome of which ſeemed rather to be intended as a Snare, 'he delivered his Opinion with a becoming Freedom, ſubmitted his Rea'ſons to the Council or Committee, and heartily went into whatever 'they reſolved, after taking Advice, in Points of greateſt Importance, 'with thoſe who bore the higheſt Offices, both Civil and Military, that 'were at the Time in this Town.'

As to the ſecond Article of the Indictment, Mr. Stewart ſays, 'That 'the Propoſal made for aſſociating a Body of Volunteers was a Point of 'ſo much Delicacy, as muſt juſtify him for deſiring Advice as to the Le'gality of what was thereby propoſed. That ſo ſoon as the Magiſtrates 'found they could ſafely go into the Propoſal, the Lord Provoſt readily 'acquieſced, and ſhewed a Willingneſs to have it carried into Execution; 'and that, upon every Occaſion, he behaved towards them with the ut'moſt Civility.'

As to the third Article, 'The Magiſtrates of Edinburgh, with the reſt 'of a Committee appointed by the Council to provide for the Defence of 'the Town, readily liſtened, and chearfully received every Propoſal that 'appeared calculated for the Defence of the Town, in which nothing 'was by them delayed; and the Execution of theſe Matters was com-

'mitted

'mitted to proper Persons, chosen and appointed for that Purpose by the 'Council and Committee.' He does farther say, 'That the Guns were 'charged in the proper time, and all Endeavours used to supply the 'Town with proper Gunners.'

The Provost does in like manner say, 'That what is loosely charged 'in this Article of the Indictment, of his having refused the Proposals 'of those who were zealously affected, is not well understood: Every 'Conversation was freighted with a Proposal, many of them contra-'dictory, and some of them from sinister Motives; such particularly was 'the Proposal mentioned in this Article, which, if sincerely meant, 'ought to have been proposed in Council, which never was done.'

As to the fifth Article, 'The Provost thinks he behaved kindly to 'every Man who came, or pretended that he came, to the Assistance of 'the Town; and denies the Instance charged in the Libel, nor can he 'imagine that it was, or can be presumed an Affront, although he had 'offered the putting Sir Robert Dickson's Volunteers in the Way of re-'ceiving Pay, supposing that to have been the Fact.'

As to the sixth Article, 'Mr. Stewart apprehends there can be no 'Crime in it; for he did communicate the Message by Mr. Alves, im-'mediately after he received it, to the Gentlemen of the Council, who 'were of Opinion, that the Message delivered by Mr. Alves ought not 'to be divulged, for fear of intimidating the Inhabitants; and soon 'after he waited of the then Lord Advocate, to impart that Affair, and 'get his Advice what ought to be done, and, conform to the Advice 'then given, committed the said Andrew Alves, so soon as he under-'stood that it was lawful and proper, and there was no criminal De-'lay in committing him.'

As to the seventh Article, 'Mr. Stewart says, That the Meeting in 'the New Church Isle was not in consequence of any Petition delivered 'him by the Inhabitants, which Petition was never once under Consi-'deration of the Committee, nor did he order the Alarm-Bell to be rung 'to convocate the Inhabitants. Denies that he ever refused to admit 'any Dragoons into the Town; but, on the contrary, he expressed a 'Willingness to receive them, providing they were sent.'

As to the eighth Article, 'Mr. Stewart refuses that he received or 'gave Orders to read any Letters from the Pretender, or that he gave 'Orders in consequence of any such Letter; any Deputation that might 'have been sent, was the Effect of the Fears of the Inhabitants, who 'had more of the Government of the Town at that time than the Ma-'gistrates.'

As to the ninth Article, 'The Volunteers carried their Arms to the 'Castle without applying to Mr. Stewart for his Orders, and before he 'understood the Town to be in a defenceless State.'

As to the tenth Article, Mr. Stewart says, 'That it was the Sense of 'the Committee the Provost should give no Orders; and he believes it will 'appear, that the Messenger from Mr. Guest was told he was at Liberty 'to spike up the Cannon, if the General thought proper; nay, he far-'ther believes the Messenger was farther told, that he should be shewn 'where the Cannon were. Mr. Stewart does not remember that Captain 'Dalziel was ordered to have but a Third of his Guard on Duty, but 'believes that the whole Guard at that time were not in a Condition to 'do Duty, after the Fatigue they had previously undergone; the Inha-'bitants had before this time resolved not to stand upon their Defence; 'the Provost remembers nothing of the Orders said to have been given 'to the Trained-Bands, but believes the contrary will be proven.'

As to the eleventh Article, the Provost repeats the first Part of his Answer to the preceding Article, and says, 'That if any of the City-'Arms fell into the Hands of the Rebels, it must have proceeded from 'various unavoidable Causes, but cannot be imputed to any Fault of 'Mr. Stewart.'

As to the twelfth Article, 'Mr. Stewart is confident there must appear, 'upon his Part, a zealous Attachment to the Interest of the Govern-'ment, by the Uniformity of his Conduct from the Commencement of 'the Rebellion, until the Time that the Town fell unhappily into the 'Rebels Hands; for such is and must be the natural Construction of 'his unwearied Application to every Part of his Duty, and upon con-'sidering the Proposals made by him in Council, with the Directions 'given to those that acted under him.'

From this Account of the Provost's Conduct, in relation to the Matters charged upon him, his Defences against the Libel are:

'1*mo*. That the Whole of the Charge is laid in a Manner too loose 'and general to be past to the Knowledge of an Assize.'

'2*do*. That the Facts therein contained are either misrepresented, or 'in their Nature not criminal.'

'3*tio*. That no Error in point of Judgment, if any thing of that 'kind shall appear, ought to be made the Foundation of a criminal Pro-'secution, especially that he was only one of a Committee, and acted 'by their Direction.'

Before the Pursuer proceed to recite the Arguments that were offered on behalf of the Pannel, in Support of these Defences, when the Trial came on in the Court of Justiciary on Monday the 13th current, together with the Replies made on the Part of the Pursuer to these Defences, he shall here, for the better understanding of the true Merits of the Case, first of all briefly set forth, without any Argument, the principal Facts which occurred at and about the Time libelled, such as he believes can be proved to be true, either by Authentick Writings, or by parole Evidence.

[23d August 1745. Council Record.] The Lord Provost produced in Council a Letter from one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, by Direction of the Lords Justices, bearing Date 13th August 1745, giving him Notice, 'That they had received Intelligence that the Pre-'tender's Son was already landed, or intended to land in Scotland, and 'recommending it to him the Lord Provost to exert his Care and Vigi-'lance on this Occasion, and make use of such Precautions as he should 'judge necessary for preserving the publick Peace within the City of 'Edinburgh.' And produced also a Copy of his Answer to that Letter, bearing Date 17th of August, promising, inter alia, 'not to sit down in 'Security, but to keep a watchful Eye, in order to prevent, as far as 'possible, every thing that might disturb the Peace of this City;' of which Answer the Council approved.

The same Day the Council resolved to levy and raise the Number of thirty Centinels to be added to the City-Guard, and recommended to the Lord Provost and Magistrates to direct and ordain the Captains and Sub-alterns of the Trained-Bands to make up full Lists of the Persons be-longing to their several Companies, and to report the same to the Ma-gistrates against Wednesday then next.

At the same time another Order was made, for directing the Constables of the City, to make out Lists of all the Inhabitants and Residenters within their several Bounds and Districts, and that they be diligent in inquiring and finding out what Strangers may happen, from Time to Time, to come within this City, and lodge within their several Districts; and that all Inn-keepers, Stablers, and others, who lodge and entertain Strangers, should from Time to Time, and as oft as any Strangers shall lodge with them, give in to the Captain of the City-Guard, a Note of their Names and Designations at their Arrival, and of the Time of their Departure from thence, and order the Captain of the Guard to re-port to the Magistrates in Writing, every Morning, Lists of the Parti-culars that should be delivered in to them by the Inhabitants.

[Tuesday, 27th August 1745.] These Resolutions were reported by the Lord Provost, and the other Magistrates, with the Conveener of the Trades, to a Meeting of substantial and well-affected Burgesses, which it had been proposed to summon to give Advice on the present Occasion. This Proposal was made to the Lord Provost on the Saturday preceding, being the 24th of that Month, by a Citizen of Edinburgh, who had been some time a Magistrate, and had been commissioned by other well-affect-ed Citizens to propose such Meeting to the Provost, as had been for-merly practised on important Occasions, and which he represented as what they judged necessary at this Time, in order to take Measures for putting the City in a Posture of Defence. This Proposition the Provost received at first with a Sneer or Laugh; but, upon the other's pressing him, as being the Opinion and the Wish of many substantial Burgesses, and what had been formerly practised on the like Occasion, the Provost at last consented that there should be such Meeting, but said it could not be that Day, being Saturday, as many of the Burghers would be out of Town; and accordingly it was not held till the Tuesday following.

At this Meeting, which was held in the New Church Isle at Five o'Clock in the Afternoon, consisting of a great Number of the most re-spectful Burgesses, of undoubted Loyalty to his Majesty, they unani-mously approved of the Steps already taken, and offered their Advice as to the farther Steps to be taken, and particularly 'That the City should 'be forthwith put in a Posture of Defence, and a Body of Men raised 'and armed for the Defence thereof and the Service of the Government.' The former of these could be of little Use without the latter; and to the latter the Provost objected, that the same would be treasonable or illegal, without special Warrant from the Crown. They replied, That if a War-rant was necessary, That might be applied for and obtained. Then the Provost said, That, supposing they should get a Warrant, he doubted much if Money could be raised by Subscription for paying them. To which last Objection it was answered by some Citizens of considerable Wealth and Credit there present, That they were ready to undertake and oblige them-selves to find Money to pay a Regiment for three Months. Upon this it was resolved, that a Committee should be named, out of the Council and of the other Burgesses, to consult with and take the Advice of the Lord Justice-Clerk, and such of the other Judges as could be found in Town, and his Majesty's Advocate and Solicitor, with regard to what farther Steps the Magistrates and Council and Community could legally take for preserving the Peace of the City, and contributing to defeat the Designs of the Rebels; and next Day the Council named their Com-mittee accordingly; the Result of which was, that Application was made to his Majesty, in order to remove all Doubts, for his special War-rant and Licence to raise such Regiment.

[Saturday, August 31*st*, 1745.] Advice was received at Edinburgh, that Sir John Cope, with the Troops under his Command, instead of march-ing directly to the Rebels, as he had proposed, and was expected, had, upon his March at Dalwinnie, the Place where the Fort-Augustus and In-verness Roads meet, marched foreward towards Inverness, whereby the Rebels were now got to the southward of the King's Army, when there was no Force left to oppose their marching southward where they should think fit, which gave no small Alarm to the Cities of Edinburgh and Glasgow, and all the Country to the southward of the Rivers or Friths of Forth and Clyde.

[Monday, September 2.] The Council of Edinburgh ordered the Town-Guard to be augmented to the full Number of 126 Men, Officers, Ser-jeants, and Drums included.

[Eodem die. The deceast Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'The Accounts 'from the North becoming more and more unfavourable, above twenty 'Gentlemen of known good Affection to his Majesty and the Govern-'ment, met at Mrs. Clark's Tavern, and agreed to apply to the Lord 'Provost, that he would give Orders for putting the Town in as good a 'State of Defence as possible with all Expedition. It was complained 'of in this Meeting, that an Application which had been made the 'Week before to his Lordship had not met with due Encouragement, 'but that the Persons who waited on his Lordship, and their Zeal, 'had been ridiculed, and made the Subject of insipid Jokes. The 'Company (however) resolved, that, whatever Discouragements they 'might meet with from those whose Duty it was to have animated 'them, they should meet frequently, and promote, to the utmost of 'their Power, whatever may tend to the Defence of the Town: 'In the mean time they appointed two of their Number, a 'Gentleman who had formerly been a Baily, and Mr. Mac Laurin, to 'wait on the Provost next Morning, with a general Instruction to beg 'he would see to the Defence of the Town, and offer their Assistance; 'and three particular Instructions, first, That he would order making 'Moulds for Bullets, it having been found on Trial that all in the Shops 'had been bought up of late by Cadies, (or Link Boys) who had been 'sent for them. 2*dly*. That the Sluice of the North Loch, by which the 'Water issues from it, should be shut and secured, that it might fill up. '3*dly*. That they should propose to his Lordship the making a Distinction 'betwixt the Inhabitants of known good Affection, and such as were 'suspected, when he came to intrust them with the Town's Arms,

and

'and take proper Meaſures that the City ſhould not be in Danger from 'within, as (had been taken) in 1715.

'Lord Provoſt did give a ſatisfactory Anſwer to the two firſt of theſe, but 'as to the third, he did not give the Satisfaction deſired; but, after a good 'deal of Reaſoning, he ſaid, That, if the Town came to be attacked, he 'would ſo far make a Diſtinction as to intruſt the Town's Arms with 'the moſt ſubſtantial Burghers; he ſaid, That, if a thouſand Men had a 'mind to get into this Town, he could not ſee how he could hinder 'them. In anſwer to this, the Number of Trades-Lads in Edinburgh, of 'the Gentlemen who would aſſociate to ſave the Town, the Unſkilfulneſs 'the Highlanders had always ſhewn in attacking Stone-Walls, their 'Want of Artillery, and being ill-armed, with the Aſſiſtance that would 'be got from the Dragoons, in all Probability, were urged: It was inſiſt-'ed, our doing ſomething was requiſite to ſave the Reputation of the 'Town, to divert the Enemy from coming this Way, and to raiſe a Spirit 'in the Country.'

'To this he anſwered, That, to pretend to do when we could do little, 'was to expoſe us to Ridicule. Other diſcouraging Expreſſions were 'uſed; but, at the End, he ſaid he would be glad of Advice from ſenſible 'Burghers, and have regard to it.'

[Thurſday, Sept. 5th.] 'Little material paſt till September the 5th, 'when the ſame Company, with ſome Addition of other Gentlemen, met 'at the ſame Place; and now the Danger appearing more imminent, 'they entered into an Aſſociation, as Volunteers, to ſerve for the Defence 'of the City at the Hazard of their Lives and Fortunes, under the Di-'rection of the Lord Provoſt. This was ſigned by all preſent, and by a 'hundred before Twelve the next Day. They appointed ſome of their 'Number to preſent this to the Lord Provoſt, to deſire they might be al-'lowed to chuſe their Officers, and that he would apply to General Gueſt 'for Arms to them: They were likewiſe ordered to intreat that the Pa-'rapet of the Town-Wall might be cleared, which, in many Places, had 'been ſtopt up with Stone and Lime to prevent ſmuggling; that Stairs 'ſhould be made for getting up to it at proper Diſtances; that Cannon 'ſhould be got from the Ships to be placed on the Flanks and Gates.'

This Spirit for putting the Town in a Poſture of Defence was ſo generally prevalent amongſt the well-affected, and even the leaſt warlike Part of the Inhabitants, that, of this Date, a Repreſentation to the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Council, was ſigned by the Principal and Profeſſor of Divinity, and Twelve more of the Miniſters of the City of Edinburgh, of whom the total Number is Sixteen, ſo that three only were abſent or wanting; which Repreſentation ſets forth, that they have ſeen and conſidered a Petition to their Lordſhip and Honours, ſubſcribed by a conſiderable Number of the Inhabitants of this City, well-affected to his Majeſty's Perſon and Government, praying, that the City may be put in a proper Poſture of Defence againſt the common Enemy; that they, the Miniſters of Edinburgh, judged it their Duty to teſtify their hearty Approbation of ſuch Deſign, and their firm Reſolution to promote the ſame in their Sphere and Station, and thereby engage chearfully to contribute for defraying the neceſſary Expence with their Fellow-Citizens.

The Miniſters were as good as their Word as to this Article; for, out of their moderate Stipends, they joined in ſubſcribing for the Pay of one hundred Men out of the thouſand propoſed to be raiſed.

The Lord Provoſt, however, found alſo conſiderable Difficulties as to the Legality of this Meaſure, which was preſſed upon him, of raiſing the Volunteers, and did not give way to it until he had firſt one ſigned Opinion of his Majeſty's Advocate and Sollicitor, 'That it was lawful for the 'Magiſtrates to authorize the Subſcribers, and other well-affected Inha-'bitants, to take up Arms in Defence of the City, and Support of the Go-'vernment.' And the Provoſt, it ſeems, not being fully ſatisfied with this Opinion, there was ſubjoined to it, and ſigned by the ſame Gentlemen, a farther Opinion, [Eodem die, Sept. 6th] 'That it was lawful, and 'not treaſonable, for the Magiſtrates to comply with the Deſire of the 'ſaid Petition of the Volunteers.'

[Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] The Lord Provoſt declared now, and always afterwards, 'That he would inſiſt on the Privileges of his Office, 'and did not leave the Nomination of the Officers to the Volunteers, but 'allowed them to make up a Liſt of 30 or 40, or more, from which he 'would chuſe them. He walked with ſome of the Magiſtrates and Vo-'lunteers about a Part of the Town-Wall; he then ſaid, he could not 'ſee but if two thouſand Men had a mind to get into the Town, they 'muſt ſucceed; after looking at a Part of the Wall, he deſired Mr. 'Mac Laurin, one of the Volunteers, to take the Trouble to make a Plan 'of it; which he promiſed to do.

'It was thought proper to draw up an Article of News concerning this 'Aſſociation, to encourage others to join, and rouze the lethargick Spirit 'of the Country: After it was written, it was thought decent and dutiful 'to ſhew it to the Provoſt; the Words, That this Propoſal was accepted by 'the Lord Provoſt, were altered by him; he would have it, that the Lord 'Provoſt acquieſced in this Propoſal. This Alteration was much regretted 'by thoſe who were ſincerely zealous in this Cauſe, being ſenſible, that, 'in ſo critical a Time, more than acquieſcing was requiſite in the Ma-'giſtrates, to animate the Burghers, and foreſeeing, as it happened, that 'the Trades would not be warm when the Magiſtrates were ſo cool. The 'Volunteers however ſoon roſe to 400. The Expences of the Works 'propoſed were much talked and complained of, at this Time and af-'terwards.'

[Saturday, Sept. 7th.] The Lord Provoſt moved in Council, that an Addreſs ſhould be drawn up and preſented to his Majeſty, which was unanimouſly agreed to; and accordingly a very dutiful Addreſs was made out and ſigned; and that ſame Day it was reſolved in Council to authoriſe the Magiſtrates and Conveener to employ Perſons, with all poſſible Speed, to put the City in a Poſture of Defence, and particularly the Walls thereof.

[Eodem die, Sept. 7th, Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'The Plan of the 'Wall was made ready, and preſented to the Council at Six o'Clock; the 'weak Places were pointed out, and what was moſt neceſſary to be done 'propoſed. The Lord Provoſt deſired an Eſtimate might be made of the 'Expence; but it was anſwered, That it could not eaſily be done, and 'would require Time. It was propoſed the Flanks ſhould be firſt taken 'care of, as the Time which the Rebels would take to come to Edin-'burgh was uncertain; that the doing as much as we could did not hin-'der the capitulating, if neceſſary; that there was a double Chance for 'Relief, either from Sir John Cope, or the Dutch, ſo that holding out one 'Day or two might ſave the Town; but that Diſpatch was neceſſary 'above all things, and all the Workmen that could be got ought to be 'employed.'

[Sunday, Sept. 8th. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'The Workmen clear-'ed a Part of the Parapet; but the Number was very ſmall for this Day, 'and indeed for the whole Week, till September 15th. Of this Complaints 'were made every Night, but to little, or no Purpoſe; ſometimes there 'were only two Dozen, when there ought to have been as many Hun-'dreds; for now the Rebels were at Perth. It was found that the Para-'pet, when cleared, was too narrow in ſeveral Places, and that it was ne-'ceſſary to add to it by Scaffolding. This was done in ſome Places, but 'ſo few Men were employed, that in others it was not executed.'

[Monday, Sept. 9th. Council Record.] The Lord Provoſt produced in Council a Sign-Manual from his Majeſty, addreſſed to the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates, and Town-Council of Edinburgh, reciting: 'That it had 'been repreſented to his Majeſty, that the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates, 'Town-Council, Burgeſſes, and others of the City of Edinburgh, from 'their great Loyalty and Affection to his Perſon and Govern-'ment, were at this Juncture willing and ready to raiſe and maintain, at 'their own proper Charge and Expence, by voluntary Subſcription and 'Contribution, one thouſand Foot for the Defence of the ſaid City and 'the Support of his Government, and that they were deſirous of obtaining 'his Royal Licence and Authority for the ſame: His Majeſty does grant 'the ſame accordingly; and does farther ordain and command, that the 'ſaid one thouſand Men ſhall be under the Direction of the Lord Pro-'voſt, Magiſtrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh.'

This Warrant having been read and conſidered by the Magiſtrates and Council, 'They appointed, as a Committee, the preſent and old Ma-'giſtrates, Conveener, Deacons Lauder and Porteous, or any five of 'them, the Lord Provoſt being always one; and, in caſe of his Ab-'ſence, any Nine of them to be a Quorum, to conſider what is moſt pro-'per to be done upon this Occaſion, for levying the ſaid 1000 Foot, 'and particularly to take in the Subſcriptions of ſuch of the Inhabitants 'as are willing to contribute for levying and maintaining the ſaid 1000 'Foot, with their proper Officers to be named, for the Purpoſes men-'tioned in the ſaid Sign-Manual, for the Space of three Months after 'they ſhall be ſo inliſted; as alſo to conſider what is proper to be done 'farther for the Safety of the City, and for Support of the Government; 'which Committee ſhall meet at the Goldſmiths Hall twice each Day, at 'the Hours of Eleven in the Forenoon, and Four in the Afternoon; and 'recommended to the ſaid Committee to keep a Book, into which all their 'Proceedings and Actings ſhall be regularly ingroſſed, to the end the ſame 'may be reported to the Council from Time to Time.

'And the Magiſtrates and Council nominate and appoint the Lord 'Provoſt to be Colonel and Commander of the ſaid 1000 Foot, with 'Power to his Lordſhip to conduct and direct them, and the other Of-'ficers who ſhall be named to command under him, as the Council ſhall 'think proper, or as the Exigencies of Matters ſhall require.'

[Eodem die, Sept. 9th. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'The Work went on 'but ſlowly; ſome of the Embrazures in the Flanks for the Cannon, and 'in the Curtain for the Muſqueteers, were opened.'

[Eodem die.] 'A Letter was delivered to the Lord Provoſt, ſigned by 'three old Provoſts, Drummond, Mac Aulay, Oſburn; and three old Bailies, 'Nimmo, Blackwood, Wilſon; on Behalf of themſelves and the other Vo-'lunteers, praying his Lordſhip to apply to the Commander in Chief for '200 Stand of Arms; and that he would appoint a Place where the 'Volunteers might be inſtructed in the Uſe of the Firelock and Bayonet.'

[Sept. 10th. Council Record.] 'The Council appointed Allan Burns, late 'of the Lord Rothes's Regiment, to be Adjutant to the 1000 Foot com-'manded by the Lord Provoſt, which were now levying, and recom-'mended to his Lordſhip to find out proper Perſons to be Officers, to 'command each hundred Men under his Lordſhip.

[Eodem die. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'A Scheme of what was moſt 'neceſſary to be done was drawn up by a Volunteer above-mentioned, 'and ſhewn to General Gueſt, and at his Deſire to an old Officer of the 'Dragoons; being approved by him, it was preſented to the Lord Provoſt. 'It was inſiſted, that a high Houſe, which rakes a Part of the Wall near 'the Potter-Row Port, ſhould be poſſeſſed by a Party, and a Communica-'tion made from the Wall to the Houſe, to relieve or bring off the Men as 'Occaſion might require; but this, ſo much inſiſted on, was not yielded 'till September 16th, when Captain Murray approved of it; and then, 'though it was begun, there was not Time to finiſh it.

'Unhappily at this Time the Elections of their Deacons ſo much em-'ployed the Trades, that few came to work on the Wall; and it never 'appeared, that, after repeated Complaints, proper Authority was em-'ployed to oblige them to work in this Time of the greateſt Danger.'

The Lord Provoſt reported, That he had procured from General Gueſt an Order to David Lyon, Store-Keeper of the Caſtle, to deliver to his Lordſhip, or his Order, upon Receipt, two hundred Muſkets, Bayonets, and Cartouch-Boxes, and the like Number of Flints, with one Barrel of Powder, and an equal Proportion of Ball, which are to be diſtributed among the Gentlemen Volunteers.

The Council alſo authorized the Bailies of Petter-Row and Portsburgh to give Receipts for ſixty Stand of Arms, to be by them diſtributed amongſt the Inhabitants on proper Receipts.

The Council appointed the reſpective Deacons to make Choice of ſix Perſons out of each of their Incorporations, to be given in to the Council on Friday next, that, out of the ſame Liſts of ſix, three may be choſen by the Council, to the Effect the Corporations may elect their ſeveral Deacons for the Year enſuing.

[Eodem Die. Sept. 11*th.*] The Committee above-mentioned, appointed by the Council on the 9th, met for the first Time, the Lord Provoſt preſent, when they gave their Opinion concerning ſome Things to be done for the Reparation of the Walls, that the ſame ſhould be forthwith executed ſo far as hitherto undone.

[Eodem Die. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal] 'Some Cannon were got 'from Ships; and it having been earneſtly recommended to the Lord 'Provoſt, that ſome Hand Granadoes ſhould be got, and the City-Guard 'and Volunteers taught to uſe them, a Meſſage was ſent to the General, 'and by him to the Caſtle; but it was anſwered, That they had not 'above two hundred, and could not ſpare them. Afterwards, however, 'one of the Volunteers, ſurpriſed that there ſhould be ſo few in ſuch a 'Garriſon, ſo well provided with Stores, made a Viſit to the Caſtle, 'and was told by the Store-Keeper, that he had five times that Num-'ber, and was deſired to tell the Provoſt, that he had a hundred at his 'Service, if he had a mind for them. The Meſſage was delivered, but 'the Granadoes never appeared. We found twenty-three that had lien 'in a Cheſt ſince 1715, in the Town's Armoury, but they were never 'examined.

'A Ditch that had been ordered at Wallace's Tower, had been carried 'on right for ſome time, but was afterwards, by ſome Miſtake, or bad 'Advice, caſt on the wrong Side of the Dyke. This Day this was ſtopt, 'and a Remedy propoſed, but not executed for want of Time.

'[September 12. A. M.] The Committee above named, came to ſome 'farther Reſolutions about fortifying the City-Walls, and, inter alia, 'recommended to Mr. Mac Laurin to go along with the Tradeſmen to 'explain the tenth Article of his Memorial, in relation to the putting 'the Wall at Leith-Wynd in a better Poſture of Defence.'

[Committee's Record.] In purſuance of the Lord Provoſt's Recommendation, the Committee reſolved, That it be recommended to ſome of the City-Guard, Edinburgh Regiment, and Gentlemen Volunteers, that they do learn the Exerciſe of throwing the Hand-Granadoes.

'[Eodem Die. P. M.] The Committee reſolve, That the Council 'ſhould invite thoſe who have any Quantities of Grain at Leith, or other 'Parts near to the Town, to bring the ſame into this City, to be lodged 'in the City's Granaries, to be kept therein from the Enemy, Rent-free.'

'[September 13. Council Record.] The Provoſt reported, That, on the '12th current, he had given Receipt to the Store-Keeper of the Caſtle 'for a hundred Muſkets, Bayonets, and Cartouch-Boxes, with half a 'Barrel of Powder, and Ball in proportion, for the Uſe of the Volunteers 'of this City; and alſo that he had given Receipt for two hundred 'Stand of more Arms to the Uſe of the City's Regiment.

'The Proceedings of the Committee for levying the City-Regiment, 'and forwarding the neceſſary Steps to be taken for the Safety and De-'fence of the Place, named the 9th current, were read over, and una-'nimouſly approved by the Council, which recommended to the Com-'mittee to continue in their Diligence.'

The Council then proceeded to make the ſhort Leets for the Election of new Deacons; after which there is nothing entered in the Council Record, 'till the 18th of September, the Day after the Rebels got Poſſeſſion of the Town, when there were ſome Proceedings relating to the annual Election, which did not take effect.

[Eodem Die. Minutes of the Committee.] 'The Lord Provoſt, and other 'Members of the Committee preſent, recommended to Bailie Robert 'Baillie, and his Committee upon the publick Works, and ſuch of this 'Committee as pleaſed to attend, or any three of them, Bailie Baillie 'being always one, to ſee the whole Particulars contained in the former 'Minutes fully executed, without Loſs of Time, and to take the Advice 'and Direction of ſuch proper Perſons without Doors, as they ſhall 'judge neceſſary for executing the whole Particulars: with Power to 'the ſaid Committee to preſs ſuch Workmen as ſhall be judged pro-'per for compleating the whole Works before ſpecified.

'[September 13. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] The Day of the Election 'of the Deacons there was very little done on the Wall; the Deacons could 'not be got; ſome Houſes in St. Mary's Wynd, that had large Windows 'into the Town, were ſhewn to ſome Magiſtrates, and afterwards to the 'Provoſt: but no Orders were given about them. This Day the Car-'riages of the Cannon were examined, and any neceſſary Reparation 'ordered.

'[Saturday, September 14*th, Committee Record.*] The Lord Provoſt in 'the Committee reported, That he had this Day ſigned an Order for 'Payment of 1000 l. Sterling to the Receiver General, to Account of the 'Ceſs due by the City.

'The Committee reſolve, That the Ceſs Books, and thoſe by which 'the Annuity and Poor's Money is collected, ſhall be tranſported from 'the ſeveral Collectors Offices to the Caſtle of Edinburgh for Preſerva-'tion; and the Provoſt wrote a Letter to General Preſton, the Governor 'of the Caſtle, praying him to receive the ſaid Books, and keep them for 'the Uſe of the City.'

This is the laſt Entry made in the Regiſter of the Proceedings of this Committee, which does not appear to have met again after this Saturday the 14th.

'[Eodem Die. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] Little Work on the Walls 'and Scaffoldings, the Cannon were all proved and the Shot got ready.

'[Sept. 15. dit. Journal.] The Lord Provoſt brought Captain Murray 'to Town to give his Advice, and, not 'till this Day, he ordered ſome 'Works within the Gates, which were begun immediately. There were 'more Men employed this Day than ever before; and every body ſeemed 'to exert themſelves: But the Lord Provoſt having never named the 'Field-Officers to the Volunteers, they were now nine independent Com-'panies; and, upon a Motion to go out with Colonel Gardner, they 'unhappily divided in Opinion, which produced ſome Heat amongſt 'them. A moſt unlucky Signal was pitched on to call them to their 'Arms, the ringing of the Fire-Bell, which never fails to raiſe a Pan-'nick in Edinburgh. This happened in time of divine Service; the 'Churches diſmiſſed in Confuſion and Terror: And this was the firſt 'Appearance of Feat in the Place: This Signal ought not to have been 'propoſed or allowed by the Magiſtrates at ſuch a Time, the Rebels not 'being far from us.

'This Day moſt of the Cannon were carried to the Flanks, and in 'this as much Regard as poſſible was had to the weakeſt Places; ſo that 'there were three on St. Mary's Wynd, which raked it. About Six, one 'of the Volunteers, with the Chief of the Bombardiers, came to the 'Provoſt, to have an Order to load them; he kept them waiting till 'Eight, and then deſired another to ſign the Order for him. They 'begun, though in the Night; but, after they came to the Briſto Port, 'they were obliged to wait from Half an Hour after Ten, till near One, 'for want of a Centinel to place on the loaded Gun, though they ſent 'Meſſages for Centinels to the Guard and Council. This put a Stop 'to their Progreſs that Night; the Guns were all loaded with ſmall 'Shot, and, as they flanked the Curtains and Gates, it was the more 'dangerous to leave them without Centinels during all that Time, while 'the reſt of the Wall was guarded, and, All is well, was heard go round 'regularly; there were no Centinels from Briſto Port to the Weſt Port, 'but one or two below.'

On the Evening of this 15th of September, when the Rebels were within a few Miles of the City, and it was apprehended that they might have come up to it during that Night, it was reſolved at a Meeting with the Lord Provoſt, and others of the Council, with the Captains of the Volunteers, That 700 Men ſhould be upon Duty all Night, to guard the Walls all round the Town, who were to conſiſt of 400 Trained Bands, 40 of the new Regiment, 100 Volunteers, 90 Seceders, 40 Dalkeith Volunteers, 30 Exciſe-Officers.

[Monday, September 16. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'The Works 'went on chearfully till Four or Five at Night; a Work was thrown 'up to defend the Paſs to Mountreſay, ſome Gates were ſhut up, 'ſome more Cannon were got, and carried to the Baſtions and Gates; 'we were told that only five Gunners were got at One o'Clock, but 'were promiſed that Pains ſhould be taken to get more.

'Betwixt Two and Three o'Clock, ſome Burghers were ſaid to be 'carrying about for Subſcriptions a Petition to the Magiſtrates, praying 'the Town ſhould capitulate. The Alarm being great at the Weſt Port, 'the Guns there were loaded, and the other Works preſſed on, ſo that 'they were almoſt finiſhed, when an Account came, that a Meeting in 'the New Church had agreed to capitulate. One of the Volunteers 'called for the Provoſt, to know what was to be done to the Cannon; but 'was told, that his Lordſhip had not Time to ſpeak to him. The Call 'of, All is well, did not go round the Wall this Night as the former, 'and the Town ſeemed to be quite off its Defence; the Volunteers 'delivered their Arms into the Caſtle.'

Here Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal ends, which is all in his own Hand-Writing; and, as he was himſelf a Volunteer, and ſerved the Town as a chief Engineer, to deviſe and direct the Methods of fortifying the ſame; as he was a Perſon of great and eminent Abilities, of excellent Judgment as well as great Learning, and of perfect Probity and Veracity; as he had Opportunity to know all the Facts which he relates, and which he ſet down in Writing recently after they happened, with great Diſtinctneſs and Preciſion; and as the Purſuer has reaſon to believe that his Relation will be confirmed by the Teſtimony of living Witneſſes, he has choſen, in this Deduction of the Facts, in order to make the Charge and the Defence better underſtood, to make uſe of the very Words of Profeſſor Mac Laurin, as the moſt accurate and genuine Relation of the Facts that could be made, ſo far as he goes.

The Events of Monday the 16th, when, after ſo much Preparation for a Defence, the City of Edinburgh was in effect ſurrendered, and opened its Gates to the Rebels, were various, and deſerve to be more minutely recited. In the Morning of that Day Provoſt Stewart received a Meſſage from the Camp of the Rebels, which was delivered to him by Andrew Alves, Writer to the Signet, importing, That the City of Edinburgh would be ill-treated by them, unleſs it ſhould be readily or ſpeedily ſurrendered. Upon receiving which, the Provoſt did not commit the ſaid Andrew Alves to Priſon, neither did he give Notice of this Incident to any other of the King's Officers, Civil or Military, nor did he ſo much as adviſe or charge Mr. Alves to forbear repeating or relating that Meſſage of his in the Town, who went directly from the Provoſt to the Street, and repeated his Story to a Circle of People who came round him, amongſt whom one Gentleman adviſed Mr. Alves to go and tell what he had been relating to his Majeſty's Advocate; upon his doing which, the Advocate adviſed the Lord Provoſt to commit Mr. Alves to Priſon, which was now done too late to prevent the diſcloſing or ſpreading the threatening Meſſage which he had brought.

About Two o'Clock in the Afternoon of that Day, a Petition was ſet on foot, which was put into the Lord Provoſt's Hands about Three, addreſſed to the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Council, and intitled, Repreſentation of the under-ſubſcribing Inhabitants of the City of Edinburgh, and it is ſigned by 48 Perſons, ſetting forth, 'That being deeply affected 'with a Senſe of the great Danger to which the City is preſently ex-'poſed, by a rebellious Army marching up thereto in order to attack it, 'and being, at the ſame time, ſenſible of our Inability to make ſuch a 'Defence as with any Probability may defeat their Deſign of entering 'the ſame, without endangering the Lives and Properties of the Inha-'bitants, and expoſing the City to Rapine and Plunder, in the Event 'of our being obliged to ſurrender, and that there is but ſmall, if any 'Proſpect of Aſſiſtance from the Military; therefore praying them, who 'are the Governors of the City, that, before they came to any Reſolu-'tion, either of defending or giving up the Town, they will call a 'Meeting of all the principal Inhabitants and Heritors at preſent in the 'Place, to conſult with them what is proper to be done in an Affair of 'ſo great Importance.'

About the very time that this Petition was going forward, a Letter was ſigned by the Lord Provoſt, together with his Majeſty's Advocate and Sollicitor, addreſſed to the honourable Lieutenant-General Gueſt, in the Words following. 'Edinburgh, 16th September 1745. Sir, We are of 'Opinion, that it would be for his Majeſty's Service, that one hundred 'of the Dragoons ſhould be ordered in to the Town of Edinburgh, to aſ-'ſiſt in defending this Town.'

A little after this, and betwixt the Hours of Three and Four of the Afternoon of this Day, Mr. Walter Greſet was ſent by the Lord Juſtice-Clerk to the Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh, to know whether he the Provoſt intended to defend the Town or not, to preſs the Defence thereof, and to

to assure him, that, if he resolved to defend it, not only the 100 Dragoons he had applied for, but as many more as he pleased to desire, should forthwith be ordered in to his Assistance. Mr. Groset, in his Way to Edinburgh, met the Lord Advocate coming from the Town, and having acquainted him with the Message Lord Justice-Clerk had sent by him Groset to the Provost, he the Advocate approved thereof, and desired Mr. Groset to make all possible Haste in delivering the same, and getting the Provost's Answer.

Mr. Groset found the Lord Provost in the Goldsmiths-Hall, delivered to him the above Message, and insisted for a direct Answer, and that, to prevent Mistakes, the same might be put in Writing; which, after some Conversation on the Subject, the Provost gave him in Writing, directed to the Lord Advocate and the Lord Justice-Clerk, in the following Words: 'You know the Councils I was Witness to: Was I to desire 'his Majesty's Troops to come into the Town now, I might be upbraid-'ed, after that, for having laid a Snare for his Majesty's Forces; should 'I refuse them, I may afterwards be accused for tamely delivering up the 'Town of Edinburgh: I desire your Lordships to be explicit, and tell me 'whether it is your Opinion or not they should come in; and send your 'Orders in Writing.'

Upon Mr. Groset's receiving this Answer, he told the Lord Provost, that he had already assured him, that it was the Lord Justice-Clerk's Opinion, that the Town should be defended, and that therefore he must answer for the Consequences of this unnecessary Delay; and as for the Lord Advocate's Opinion, That had already been given in Writing an Hour or two before, when he, along with the Lord Provost himself, had signed a Letter to General Guest, requesting 100 Dragoons to assist in defending the City.

About Four o'Clock in the Afternoon, that is, about an Hour after the Petition above-recited was presented to the Lord Provost, praying for a general Meeting of the Inhabitants, to consult or deliberate with the Magistrates and Council, whether to defend or give up the Town; such Meeting was accordingly held in the New Church Isle, the Lord Provost being in the Chair, and presiding.

At this Meeting there happened to be present some of the Reverend Ministers of the City of Edinburgh, and some other Persons of known good Affection to his Majesty and his Government, according to whose Observation, the far greater Part of the Persons there assembled were reputed of a quite contrary Character; and indeed it was impracticable, at this Meeting, to gather the true Sense of the Citizens in general, supposing it had been now seasonable or fit to deliberate in a popular Assembly, whether to give up or pursue the Defence of the City, for which hitherto so many Preparations had been making, because the greater Part of the most substantial and well-affected Burgesses, who were in Arms as Volunteers, had no Notice of this Meeting, or the Intent of it, and could not possibly attend it, being at that very Time under Arms with their respective Officers, waiting for Orders from the Lord Provost or Colonel, in what Manner they should be disposed of, or act for the Defence of the City.

At the Meeting thus assembled, and thus composed, the general Cry was for giving up the City without making any Defence; and the Reverend Mr. Logan Minister, and others, who attempted to speak in Opposition to this Measure, were borne down with Clamour and Noise.

During this Meeting Mr. Lindsay, Deputy Secretary of War, came with a Message from General Guest to the Lord Provost, upon the General's hearing the Rumour that there was a Meeting of the Inhabitants to deliberate about giving up the Town to the Rebels, to ask the Provost if he continued to be of Opinion that the Dragoons should come into the Town. To which the Provost answered, That he would neither bid nor forbid them, but that the General might do what he thought proper. Upon which Mr. Lindsay very naturally asked him, how he came to scruple about giving Directions concerning the Dragoons, when he had an Hour or two before sent a written Request to the General to obtain them. To which the Provost answered, That he had only signed that Request at the Desire of the Lord Advocate.

Towards the Close of this general Meeting, there was brought into it, in a Manner that appeared somewhat mysterious, being handed in from the Door, from one Person to another, in the Crowd, a Letter addressed, For the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town-Council of Edinburgh, signed Charles P. R. bearing Date, From our Camp this 16th September, 1745, and in the following Words:

'Being now in a Condition to make our Way into the Capital of his 'Majesty's ancient Kingdom of Scotland, we hereby summon you to re-'ceive us, as you are in Duty bound to do; and, in order to it, we 'hereby require you, upon Receipt of this, to summon the Town-council, 'and take proper Measures in it for securing the Peace and Quiet of the 'City, which we are very desirous to protect: But if you suffer any of 'the Usurper's Troops to enter the Town, or any of the Cannon, Arms, 'or Ammunition now in it, whether belonging to the Publick, or to 'private Persons, to be carried off, we shall take it as a Breach of your 'Duty, and a heinous Offence against the King and us, and shall resent 'it accordingly. We promise to preserve all the Rights and Liberties of 'the City, and the particular Property of every one of his Majesty's Sub-'jects: But if any Opposition be made to us, we cannot answer for the 'Consequences, being firmly resolved at any Rate to enter the City; and, 'in that Case, if any of the Inhabitants are found in Arms against us, 'they must not expect to be treated as Prisoners of War.'

This Letter was not read out in the general Meeting in the Church; for, as soon as the Subscription to the same was read, the Meeting broke up, and the Lord Provost, with the Members of Council there present, returned to their Council-Chamber, where this Letter was again produced and read; after which it was moved, or agreed to by the Provost, that an Answer should be sent to it, which was accordingly sent, first by one, and then by another Deputation from the Council, who went out to the Camp of the Pretender's Son, who was then about two Miles to the South-West of the City, upon the Water of Leith, in the Parish of Collington. The Return, brought in Writing, to the first of these Deputations, was in the Words following: 'His R. H. the Prince Regent thinks his 'Manifesto, and the King his Father's Declaration already published, are 'a sufficient Capitulation for all his Majesty's Subjects to accept of with 'Joy. His present Demands are, to be received into the City as the Son 'and Representative of the King his Father, and obeyed as such when 'he is there. His R. H. supposes, that since the Receipt of his Letter 'to the Provost, no Arms or Ammunition have been suffered to be car-'ried off or concealed, and will expect a particular Account of all Things 'of that Nature. Lastly, He expects a positive Answer to this before 'Two o'Clock in the Morning, otherwise he will think himself obliged 'to take Measures conform. At Gray's-Mill, 16th September, 1745. 'By his Highness's Command,

'(Signed) J. MURRAY.'

It is proper here to observe, that after the first Deputation was sent out to the Camp of the Pretender's Son, Notice was brought to the Lord Provost, and the others assembled with him in the Council-Chamber, that Sir John Cope, with the Troops under his Command, was arrived off Dunbar. This News was brought by Mr. Walter Groset, who brought the original Letters from Dunbar, giving Notice of this Event, together with a Letter from the Lord Advocate, who was then at Musselburgh, certifying, that these were the original Letters. All these Mr. Groset delivered to the Lord Provost in the Council-Chamber; upon perusing which the Provost said, This News had come too late, for they had come to a Resolution to capitulate, and had sent a Deputation to the Camp of the Rebels for that Purpose, and shewed to Mr. Groset the Letter above-recited from the Pretender's Son, as the Occasion of that Resolution. Mr. Groset then proposed to send after the Deputies to bring them back; and for that Purpose another Member of the Council was accordingly sent, but he did not overtake them.

About this Time Mr. Drummond and Mr. Mac Aulay, Captains of the Volunteers, and who had been both formerly Provosts of Edinburgh, (as the former now is) upon hearing of Sir John Cope's Arrival, came to the Council-House, and insisted that the Defence of the Town should be now resumed, as there was so near a Prospect of their obtaining Relief, and proposed the ringing of the Alarm-Bell, as a Signal to bring every Body back to their Posts.

To this the Provost answered, That he must be careful of the Blood of the Inhabitants; and that, as certain of their Number had been sent out as Deputies to treat, should they be in the Hands of the Rebels whilst the Alarm-Bell was rung, they, the Deputies, might be ill used by the Rebels; and also urged the former Objections, of the Difficulty and Danger of defending the Town. To this Mr. Groset replied, That he knew the Situation of the Town so well, and the Condition of those who were to come against it, who had no Cannon and few Arms, that he would undertake to be one of Fifty that should defend the weakest Place of it, 'till the Troops should come to their Relief. To which one of the Council assenting, the Lord Provost seemed to give Way to the Resolution of defending the Town, provided General Guest would agree to let them have from the Castle what Arms should be wanted. This Mr. Groset undertook to procure, and went directly, accompanied by Provost Coutts, one of the Council, to General Guest in the Castle; who told him for Answer, That he was glad the Provost had come to a Resolution to defend the Town, who might depend upon the utmost Assistance that he the General could give them; and that as soon as the City Arms should be put into proper Hands for that Purpose, what farther Arms were wanting should be ready to be delivered to them from the Castle.

Upon their Return to the Provost, and reporting the General's Answer, Mr. Groset was told, 'That as the Person who had been sent to bring 'back the Deputies had not overtaken them, the Provost and Council, 'as they had entered upon a Treaty, had come to a Resolution not to 'defend the Town.'

It was then proposed and insisted on, that the Cannon and Arms should be delivered into the Castle. For Answer to which the Provost referred to the Letter from the Pretender's Son, and observed the Danger which the Town would incur, if they should remove their Arms. To which Provost Drummond replied, That if they, by giving up the Town, assisted the Rebels with Arms to fight against the King's Troops, would not they, upon retaking the Town, be apt to look upon the Inhabitants as Enemies, and use them accordingly?

After Receipt of the above Answer to the first Deputation, the Council agreed to send out a second Deputation, in order, if possible, to gain some more Time. The Answer to which second was also brought in Writing, though not signed, as the former was, and in the following Words: 'His Royal Highness has already given all the Assurances he can, that 'he intends to exact nothing of the City in general, nor of any in parti-'cular, but what his Character of Regent entitles him to: This he re-'peats, and renews his Summons to the Magistrates to receive him as 'such.'

This second Deputation returned to Edinburgh early in the Morning of Tuesday the 17th of September, in a Hackney-Coach, which entered the City at the West Port, and set down the Deputies at Mrs. Clark's Tavern, where the Lord Provost and others of the Council were waiting for them, to receive their Report, and then the Coach drove down the Street towards the Cannongate; and at the Netherbow Port, which was then kept by a Serjeant's Command of the City-Guard, the Gate was opened to let out the Hackney-Coach, and a Body of Rebels, who were waiting without the Gate, headed by Sullivan and Lochiel, rushed in at the Gate, and became at once Masters of this Capital.

The Rebels, immediately after their becoming Masters of the City, seized all the Cannon, Arms, and Ammunition belonging to it; and the Day following, being Wednesday the 18th, they issued a Proclamation, requiring all Persons in the Shire of Edinburgh, forthwith to deliver up, at the Palace of Holy-Rood-House, all the Arms and Ammunition they had in their Custody, on Pain of being treated as Rebels. And on Thursday the 19th, they sent a Message in Writing to the City of Edinburgh, requiring, on Pain of military Execution, that one thousand Tents, two thousand Targets, six thousand Pairs of Shoes, and a proportional Number of Water Cantines, should be furnished to their Army against the 23d, and promising Payment as soon as the present Troubles should be over. All which were accordingly furnished; and for that Purpose a Tax laid upon the Inhabitants of 2*s.* 6*d.* upon each Pound of their real Rent, within the City, Cannongate, and Leith.

Thus was the City of Edinburgh, which had, in their Address to the King of the 7th of this very Month, said with great Truth, 'That this City 'hath

'hath always diſtinguiſhed itſelf by a firm and ſteddy Attachment to 'Revolution and Whig Principles, and a hearty Abhorrence of all 'Popiſh and arbitrary Government: and particularly, that, during the 'Rebellion in the Year 1715, their Zeal for his late Majeſty was 'equalled by few, and ſurpaſſed by none; and, at the ſame Time, 'aſſured his preſent Majeſty, that, at this Time, they would ſtand by 'him with their Lives and Fortunes, and employ every Power they were 'poſſeſſed of, and all the Means his Majeſty ſhould put in their Hands, 'to diſappoint the Attempts of France and the Pretender.' This City, which had given ſo many Reaſons to expect better Things of it, was, after mighty Preparations for a vigorous Defence, thus poorly delivered up, without ſtriking one Blow, to an half-armed Rabble, at a Time when the King's Army was within a Day's March of the City, to the great Diſcredit and Reproach of the City itſelf, in the Eyes of the World, who were ignorant of the particular Circumſtances and Cauſes of ſo ſtrange an Appearance, to the hearty Grief and Sorrow of all its well-affected Inhabitants, who are by far the greater Part of them, to the Triumph of the Pretender's Son and his Adherents, to the Ruin of many unfortunate Perſons, who, by this Appearance of Succeſs, were encouraged to engage in the Rebellion, to the real and high Detriment, not of the City itſelf only, but of the Publick; the Rebels, by this Capture, having been there furniſhed with Arms, Tents, and Proviſions of all Kinds, which contributed chiefly to their obtaining the Victory at Preſton Pans a few Days after; and that again, to the Continuance and farther Progreſs of the Rebellion, to the immenſe Addition to the Expence of the Publick, the great Interruption of Commerce and Credit, the Progreſs of his Majeſty's Enemies abroad, and the Interruption of the internal Tranquillity of this Kingdom, until that was happily reſtored by the Conduct and Succeſs of his Royal Highneſs the Duke.

It was natural for all the World, at firſt Sight, to lay the Blame of an Event, which has brought on and contributed to ſo many and great Miſchiefs, principally on the Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh for the Time, being the chief Magiſtrate and Governor of the City; and the Queſtion now brought to Trial is, Whether he was, or was not guilty or culpable in his Deportment in that high Office, during the Tranſactions libelled, and above more particularly recited? The Libel charges, That he was guilty of groſs Neglect of Duty, and Miſbehaviour in his Office on that Occaſion; and whether he was or not, muſt depend upon a due Compariſon of the Duty of his Office, with his actual Behaviour, to ſee how far the one comes up to the other, and wherein he was alledged to be deficient; and to have counteracted his Duty, the Libel fairly and particularly ſets forth, and thereby gives him the better Opportunity to clear himſelf, if he be able.

Upon the Libel being read in Court on the 13th current, and the Pannel being aſked by the Court, as uſual, what he had to ſay for himſelf, he ſaid, in effect, that he was not guilty, and that his Conduct, upon the Occaſion libelled, had been agreeable to his Duty; and then left it to his Counſel to offer and make good his Defence at large; of whom five were accordingly heard at great Length, and the Subſtance of their Arguments, as far as the Purſuer could obſerve and recollect them, was as follows.

They took Notice that the Pannel had already ſuffered very great Hardſhips by his long Confinement, for the Space of fourteen Months, without being brought to Trial, which, to a Man engaged, as he is, in conſiderable Trade and Buſineſs, they ſaid was a Puniſhment greater than he merited, ſuppoſing all that is alledged in this Libel were true. They ſaid, that the Source of this hard Uſage was the Malice of certain Enemies of the Pannel in the City of Edinburgh, who, in order to ruin his Credit and Intereſt in this City, had ſet themſelves to find Fault with his Conduct during the Rebellion, had induſtriouſly miſrepreſented that Conduct, and raiſed a popular Clamour againſt him, which, having reached the Seat of Government, had produced the Severities he has already met with.

That he was however now glad of an Opportunity of having his Conduct brought to Trial by the certain Teſt of judicial Evidence, hoping that he would now be declared innocent upon Examination, who, by popular Clamour, had been pronounced guilty without Examination.

At the ſame Time it was alſo urged, though not very conſiſtently with this laſt Declaration, that the Pannel could not competently be brought to Trial at all in this Court upon this Libel; that the particular Statute of King James the Second, upon which it is laid, was almoſt three hundred Years old, and was gone into Diſuetude; that, whilſt it was in force, it was never meant to concern any more than the Behaviour of Magiſtrates in their judicial Capacity, or ordinary Adminiſtration on ſuch Occaſions as commonly or yearly occur, but never to concern the extraordinary Office of Magiſtrates in Time of War or open Rebellion, when it may be very incident to them to err or commit Miſtakes, as many an honeſt Burgeſs may be very well qualified to diſcharge the Duty of Provoſt, or other Magiſtrate of his Burgh, in quiet and peaceable Times, from whom it cannot be expected, that, in ſuch an Exigency as an open Rebellion, he ſhould be able to act the Part of an expert military Commander or Governor of a Town, and that the Deportment of the Provoſt on ſuch Occaſion, could not be tried at all at common Law; that it was an improper Queſtion to be tried by a Jury, who might very properly try a ſingle Iſſue, as whether a Man was guilty of Murder, Robbery, or the like, but very unfit to give Judgment upon a Series of Facts relating to the Deportment of a Provoſt, whether it was or was not agreeable to his Duty; and therefore it was ſaid, that the only competent Method, by the Conſtitution of this Kingdom, for trying and puniſhing Treſpaſſes ſuch as thoſe alledged in this Libel, was by the Authority of the Legiſlature itſelf, in ſuch Manner as had been practiſed in the Caſe of Alexander Wilſon, who had been Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh at the Time of the Murder of Captain John Porteous.

It was farther ſaid, by way of more particular Anſwer to the Matters charged in this Libel, that the ſame contained nothing criminal; that, as to the firſt Article, concerning the raiſing of the Edinburgh Regiment, it was no Crime in the Provoſt to entertain a Doubt concerning the Legality thereof, and to heſitate to commit what he apprehended might have been treaſonable, and that he was juſtified in his Doubt by the ableſt Advice given for applying for his Majeſty's ſpecial Warrant, which was accordingly obtained.

That, as to the ſecond, concerning the Volunteers, he had the ſame Reaſon to doubt concerning the Legality of that Meaſure, and it was no Crime in him that he could not perceive any Difference betwixt authorizing a Body of armed Men who were to ſerve without Pay, and another Body who were to receive Pay; or that the one might be authorized without his Majeſty's ſpecial Warrant, which had been adviſed to be neceſſary or proper in reſpect of the other; that, more particularly, as to this Article, the Provoſt had Reaſon to take Offence, that the Meaſure was ſo far concerted and carried on by the Volunteers, as that they brought him a Petition, ſigned by ninety or a hundred Perſons, without his Privity, or previouſly conſulting with him: This he had Reaſon to conſider as a deſigned Neglect and Inſult upon him; and yet, as ſoon as he was adviſed that the Thing might be lawfully done, he gave way to it; and it was a very ſlender Circumſtance to be charged as a Crime, that he choſe to have it ſaid that he acquieſced in that Meaſure, rather than that he heartily approved it, or that he ſhould be charged with a Defect of Civility or good Manners towards theſe Volunteers.

As to the Third, concerning the Repairs of the City Walls, it was obſerved in general, That the Provoſt was not the ſole Perſon anſwerable for any Slowneſs or Defect of Care and Diligence in this reſpect, though he had been ſingled out, and made the ſole Object of this Proſecution. He was but one of many, who behoved to act by the Authority of his Council, and of the Committee appointed to take the ſpecial Direction of what concerned the Defence of the City; and that all his Conduct was agreeable to the Senſe of theſe two Bodies, and approved by them, and without them he could do nothing; for that the King's Warrant concerning the Regiment, being addreſſed to the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Council, and having ordered that the Regiment ſhould be under the Direction of them all, and the Council having appointed a Committee for that Purpoſe, and to conſider what farther ſhould be done for the Safety of the City, the Provoſt was thus limited in the legal Exerciſe of the known Duty of his Office; that, however, the Committee, whereof he was one, had given the neceſſary Orders for the Repairs, and Warrants for impreſſing Workmen for that Purpoſe; that the Cannon upon the Walls were actually loaded on Sunday the 15th, and Applications were made to procure Gunners for managing them.

To the fourth Article it was ſaid, That no Propoſition could be accepted or rejected by the Provoſt alone, but by the whole Council; that as to the Propoſition in the Article mentioned concerning the Trained Bands, of the purging that Body of diſaffected or ſuſpected Perſons, it was true that the Provoſt was averſe to it, and choſe rather to undergo any Hazard, than take upon him to fix ſuch Mark of Infamy upon a Number of his Fellow-Citizens, without any certain Ground of Charge againſt them.

To the fifth Article, That here again the Pannel was charged with Defect of Civility or good Manners (a very unuſual Point of Ditty); and that ſuppoſing the Fact true, of the Converſation with Sir Robert Dickſon, it was not unreaſonable, nor could juſtly give Offence, for the Provoſt to propoſe ſuch Method for finding Subſiſtence to the ordinary Men, as inliſting them in the Edinburgh Regiment, which would alſo be a Means to inſure their Attendance and Service for a limited Time, ſo as they might not be at Liberty to withdraw at Pleaſure, and this perhaps when the City ſhould be under the moſt preſſing Exigency.

To the ſixth, That the only Thing here imputed to the Pannel as an Offence, was his not immediately committing Andrew Alves to Priſon, the doing which might have been of bad Conſequence, to deter others from bringing Intelligence to the Provoſt concerning the Rebels or their Deſigns; and that at beſt it was not a very clear Caſe, that it was at all lawful or competent to commit Mr. Alves for only repeating to the Provoſt what the Rebels had ſaid to him, when they ſeized him and made him their Priſoner; that his receiving the Meſſage, or hearing what Mr. Alves ſaid, could be no Crime; and, as ſoon as he heard it, he repaired to the Council-Chamber, then held in the Goldſmiths Hall, where he imparted this Piece of Intelligence to ſome others of the Council, who agreed that it ſhould be concealed, leſt it ſhould intimidate the Inhabitants that, however, ſoon after, the Lord Provoſt ſaw the Lord Advocate, and, in purſuance of his Advice, actually committed Mr. Alves.

To the ſeventh and eighth Articles it was ſaid, That Monday the 16th of September 1745. was a Day of univerſal Diſtraction in the City of Edinburgh; that the two Regiments of Dragoons of Hamilton and Gardner, who, with the whole City-Guard, had been poſted at the Coltbridge, a Mile Weſt from Edinburgh, about three Afternoon, retreated, and paſt by the North Side of the Town, Eaſtward, which greatly heightened the Pannick of the Citizens, being thus abandoned by the only military Force they had in their Neighbourhood, and no News of Sir John Cope or his Army was now come, and at the ſame Time the chief civil Officers of the Crown had left the City; and yet, in this Situation, the Lord Provoſt, in the Goldſmiths Hall, where many of the Council and other Inhabitants were aſſembled, declared himſelf ready to act his Part for the Defence of the Town; but that he was now ſeconded by few: But at this Juncture, one Mr. Groſet arrived, and delivered a Meſſage to the Provoſt, that he ſhould ſend for, or conſent to receive a Party of Dragoons; at which he, the Provoſt, was ſurpriſed, having been preſent the Night before at a Council of War, where it was reſolved to be improper to bring any of the Dragoons into the City; upon which he gave his Anſwer in Writing to that Meſſage, which is above recited: That the Inhabitants, anxious to know the Reſolutions of the Council, preſſed into the Room in a Crowd; and then Somebody elſe, not the Provoſt, propoſed to adjourn to the New-Church Iſle; that, on the Way thither, a Gentleman on Horſeback told loudly, that the Rebels were near eight thouſand ſtrong, which ſtill heightened the Pannick; that yet, in the New-Church Iſle, the Lord Provoſt ſpoke as he had in the Council-Room, declaring himſelf ready, if the Citizens were ſo diſpoſed, to do his Part for Defence of the City; that at this Meeting, the Letter from the Pretender's Son was brought in, to the Reading of which he, the Provoſt, objected, and thereupon returned with his Council to the Goldſmiths Hall.

That the Inhabitants had now the Direction of Affairs in their Hands, and they were governed by their Fears and Terrors; that the higher Civil

Officers

Officers of the Crown being gone, the Magiſtrates ſent to their own Aſſeſſors for Advice; but they alſo were all gone, excepting one, who declined giving any explicit Opinion on ſuch high Matters; upon which the Letter was read, and found to be to the ſame Purpoſe with Alves's Meſſage, and then they thought themſelves under an unavoidable Neceſſity to ſend out a Deputation, in order to procure a Delay, and gain ſome Time for the expected Relief to come.

To the ninth and tenth it was ſaid, That the Defence of the Town was now given up as impracticable; and that upon ſerious Deliberation it was the unanimous Opinion of the Council, that no direct Order ſhould be given by the Lord Provoſt concerning the Arms of the Volunteers, or the Cannon upon the City-Walls, for fear of incenſing the lawleſs Multitude of Rebels to put their Threats in Execution.

The ſame Anſwer was given to the eleventh Article relating to the City-Arms, to which there was now added, and not till now, a Matter of Fact never formerly alledged by the Pannel; neither in his Examination before the Committee of the Privy-Council, on the 7th December 1745, nor in the ſigned Anſwers returned by him to his Libel, and it muſt appear very ſtrange, if it was true, that the moſt plauſible Anſwer he had to make to this very heavy Article ſhould never have been once mentioned till now, being, that he the Provoſt could prove that he ſent a Meſſage to General Gueſt, propoſing that he ſhould ſend a Party of Soldiers to take away the City-Arms and carry them up to the Caſtle.

Upon the twelfth Article it was ſaid, That the Opinion of the Citizens of Edinburgh, or any Number of them, concerning the Pannel, could afford no Evidence that he was actually guilty; and that, upon the whole, the Surrender of the City was owing to a Train of unavoidable Accidents, for which he the Provoſt was not blameable.

Notice was alſo taken more than once, by the Pannel's Counſel, that he himſelf had a very large Property, conſiſting of a Stock of Wines, lying in his Cellars at Leith, which would be expoſed to the Diſcretion of the Rebels in caſe of their coming to Edinburgh; but the Concluſion drawn from this Fact was not, to the Purſuer's Obſervation, diſtinctly ſpoke out or explained by his Counſel; ſo that the Purſuer is ſtill at a Loſs to know what Uſe was meant to be made of that Obſervation, whether by way of Argument to evince the Sincerity of Mr. Stewart, in deſiring to keep the Rebels at a Diſtance, that his own moveable Eſtate, of ſo great Value, might not come under their Power; or if it was meant to be offered by way of Excuſe for him, that he was afraid of giving offence to the Rebels, by oppoſing them with Vigour and Zeal, becauſe they might have it in their Power to hurt him deeply in his private Fortune or Effects; and therefore the Purſuer muſt leave it to them to explain their own Meaning or Intent, in alledging and inſiſting on this Matter of Fact.

It was farther obſerved for the Pannel, though not very conſiſtently with the Allegation, that there was nothing material relevant or criminal charged upon him in theſe Articles; that the Charge therein contained, if it amounted to any Crime at all, was no leſs than that of High-Treaſon; for that ſuch, no doubt, it was, if he purſued Meaſures that had no other Tendency than to betray the City, whereof he was chief Magiſtrate, into the Hands of the Rebels: It would have been this Crime in caſe the Provoſt had acted with that ill Intention, which is the eſſential Requiſite to render the Actions of Men at all criminal or puniſhable; and if the Provoſt had no ſuch Intention, then, ſuppoſing he had committed ſeveral Errors in his Conduct, theſe were no more than Errors in Judgment, and ſuch Miſtakes in Matters prudential, in difficult and dangerous Times, when a Magiſtrate muſt act one Way or other, ought never to be imputed to him as a Crime; for though the Part he chuſes do not prove ſucceſsful, the oppoſite Conduct might have been no more ſo, and, in that Caſe, that very oppoſite Conduct might, with the ſame Facility, have been laid hold of as the Ground of a Proſecution: For Example, if he had brought in the Dragoons into the City, and theſe afterwards had fallen into the Hands of the Rebels; or, ſuppoſe he had found Means to ſuppreſs the threatening Letter from the Pretender's Son, and the Inhabitants had ſtood to their Defence, and yet the Town had been ſtormed, and the Rebels had then cut the Throats of the Inhabitants, ſuppoſing he had eſcaped the Maſſacre, it is eaſy to imagine what a heavy Charge might have been formed againſt him, as having been the Author or Cauſe of ſuch Calamities: And therefore, ſince his Conduct is not alledged to have been directly treaſonable, it proceeded at worſt from Miſtake, or Errors in Judgment, which is no Crime at all that is puniſhable by the Law in a free Country, ſuch as this is.

It was farther obſerved, that the Pannel was not ſo much as charged in the Libel with Diſaffection to his Majeſty's Government; and that however the Facts libelled might be apt to make ſome Impreſſion, in maintaining a Charge of that Sort, they could not be combined or laid together to an End or Purpoſe that was not directly libelled; that the Facts alledged in the Libel might indeed amount to a Proof of this Propoſition, that the Provoſt was in his Judgment averſe to the Meaſure of defending the City of Edinburgh, as a thing that was impracticable, and therefore not eligible or prudent to be attempted; and it was contended, that this was not even an Error in Judgment, for that he was in the right in being of that Opinion, for that the City of Edinburgh is no ſtrong or fortified Place; and though it is ſurrounded by an old Wall, and a Lake upon one Side, and that the Rebels had no Artillery, it had been very practicable for them to have made their Way into the Town; they might have blown up the Gates, or a Part of the Wall, with Gun-Powder, or have ſet Fire to the Houſes on the Weſt-Side of St. Mary's Wynd, that enter from without, and yet are a Part of, and adjoining to the Town.

All this was, ſo far as the Purſuer could obſerve or recollect, the Subſtance of what was urged by the ſeveral Counſel for the Pannel in his Defence; and in reply to theſe Things, it was, and is now, on behalf of his Majeſty, and for the publick Intereſt, obſerved as follows:

It is admitted for the Purſuer, that the Counſel for the Pannel have rightly obſerved, that the Facts charged upon him, if it had been charged that they were done doloſe & malo animo, of ſet Purpoſe or Deſign, to have put the City of Edinburgh into the Hands of the Rebels, would have amounted to High-Treaſon; for the Lord Hale ſays, in his Pleas. of the Crown, Vol. I. p. 168. 'If a Captain, or other Officer that hath the Cuſtody of any of the King's Caſtles or Garriſons, ſhall treacherouſly, by 'Combination with the King's Enemies, or by Bribery, or for Reward, 'deliver them up, this is Adherence to the King's Enemies.'

And again, p. 169. he ſays, 'The Truth is, if it were delivered up by 'Bribery or Treachery, it might be Treaſon: But if delivered up upon 'Cowardice or Imprudence, without any Treachery, though it were an 'Offence againſt the Laws of War, and the Party ſubject to a Sentence 'of Death by Martial Law; yet it is not Treaſon by the Common Law, 'unleſs it was done by Treachery.'

And if the Pannel, without being engaged in the Intereſt of the Pretender, or without receiving any direct Bribe from him or his Adherents, did even ſuffer himſelf to be moved by the Fear of their hurting his private Property in his Wine-Cellars at Leith, to neglect or counteract any Part of his Duty as Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh, this was at leaſt bordering extremely near upon High-Treaſon.

The Atrocity and the Nature of High-Treaſon is excellently deſcribed in the Digeſts of the Civil Law, in the Title Ad legem Juliam majeſtatis, l. 1. in theſe Words: Proximum ſacrilegio crimen eſt, quod majeſtatis dicitur, § 1. majeſtatis autem crimen illud eſt, quod adverſus populum Romanum, vel adverſus ſecuritatem ejus committitur, quo tenetur is, cujus operâ, dolo malo, concilium initum erat,—quo armati homines cum telis lapidibuſve in urbe ſint, conveniantve adverſus rempublicam; locave occupentur, vel templa; quove cœtus conventuſve fiat, hominеſve ad ſeditionem convocentur:——Quove quis contra rempublicam arma ferat: quique hoſtibus populi Romani nuncium literaſve miſerit, ſignumve dederit, feceritve dolo malo, quo hoſtes populi Romani concilio juventur adverſus Rempublicam.

It is true, that, in this Deſcription, the dolus malus, or the ill Deſign, is an eſſential Ingredient; and it is in general true concerning all Crimes, as it is well expreſſed in the Reſcript of the Emperor Hadrian, l. 14. ad legem Corneliam de ſicariis,—in maleficiis voluntas ſpectatur, non exitus: But the voluntas, or the dolus malus, is to be gathered from the Facts by the Judgment of the Court or the Jury, by whom the Party is tried, againſt whom the Facts are charged, which may very poſſibly have proceeded from a treaſonable Deſign againſt the Crown or the Publick.

The King, however, may, if he be ſo graciouſly pleaſed, wave the inſiſting againſt a Criminal for the higheſt Crime with which he may be poſſibly chargeable; ſo the Lord Hale, p. 374. 'All Treaſon is Miſpriſion of 'Treaſon and more; and therefore, he that is aſſiſting to a Treaſon, may 'be indicted of Miſpriſion of Treaſon, if the King pleaſe.' Stanf. P. C. 37. 6. Co. P. C. 36. 2 R. III. 10. 6.

'The Judgment in Caſe of Miſpriſion of Treaſon, is Loſs of the Pro'fits of his Lands during his Life, Forfeiture of Goods, and Impriſon'ment during Life.'

And the ſame Lord Hale, p. 143. reports 'a Caſe, where there was a 'Conſultation of the Judges, where he was preſent, in the Year 1675. 'relating to the Weavers in and about London, being offended at the En'gine-Looms for making of Ribbons, who roſe in great Numbers to de'ſtroy thoſe Engines in different Counties, and did Damage to the Value 'of ſeveral Thouſand Pounds.

'Five of the Judges ſeemed to be of Opinion, that this was Treaſon 'within the Act 25th Edward III. upon the Clauſe of levying War 'againſt the King; or at leaſt upon the Clauſe of the Statute of the 13th 'Charles II. Chap. 1.

'The other five Judges were not ſatisfied that this was Treaſon with'in either of theſe Statutes.

'Many of them therefore concluded, that if Mr. Attorney ſhould think 'fit to proceed as for a Treaſon, the Matter might be ſpecially found, and 'ſo left to farther Advice——

'Upon the Concluſion of this Debate,—Mr. Attorney, upon Conſider'ation of the whole Matter, it ſeems, thought fit to proceed for a Riot, 'and cauſed many of them to be indicted for Riots, for which they were 'convicted, and had great Fines ſet upon them, and were committed in 'Execution, and adjudged to ſtand upon the Pillory.'

In the preſent Caſe, the Doubt is not concerning the Tendency of the Facts charged upon this Pannel, namely, That it was to give up the City of Edinburgh, the Capital of North-Britain, not to the King's Enemies only, but to a Pretender to his Crown; and the Doubt is only, quo animo this was done, whether with a treaſonable Intent, or through Cowardice, or Negligence, or Imprudence; and this might have been left to the Jury to judge, in caſe he had been charged with High-Treaſon. It is therefore one ſignal Inſtance of the Mildneſs and Benignity of his Majeſty's Government, that the Purſuer has been ordered to proſecute this Pannel, 'not for High-Treaſon, but for a High Miſdemeanour, in hav'ing many Ways acted contrary to his Duty, and thereby ſuffered the 'City of Edinburgh, with the Cannon, Arms, Ammunition, and Provi'ſions, to fall into the Hands of the Rebels;' and when the Pannel's own Counſel are ſenſible that the Facts charged upon him are ſuch, as, at leaſt, border ſo near upon High-Treaſon, and might have been charged as ſuch, they cannot be permitted at the ſame Time to plead, or, at leaſt, they ought not to be liſtened to when they plead, that the Facts here charged have no Relevancy in them, or do not amount to any Crime or Offence whatſoever.

The other Obſervations above recited were extremely groundleſs, That this Libel does not charge the Pannel with Diſaffection to the Government, and that the Opinion of the well-affected Citizens, mentioned in the 12th Article, That he was ſecretly in the Intereſt of the Pretender, cannot infer his being actually guilty of any Crime whatever, for Diſaffection is not the Name of a Crime known in the Law; no Man can be tried for that Diſpoſition of his Mind, but for the Effects which it produces; and, if the Facts here charged had been alledged to have been done by the Pannel through Diſaffection to his Majeſty and his Government, that would have been in Reality, or in Effect, a Charge of High-Treaſon, which was not the Thing intended in the preſent Caſe.

And as for the other Remark, it was far from the Meaning of the Purſuer to alledge, that any Man can be puniſhed merely for the Opinion of others concerning him: But that Fact is mentioned in the Libel for this Reaſon, That, when the main Queſtion, moved by this Trial, is, Whether the

the Pannel was, or was not culpable or negligent in the Execution of his Office as Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh, during the Rebellion, it is a Fact or Circumſtance ſtrongly tending to evince that he was ſo guilty, if it be true that the whole Tenor of his Behaviour was ſuch, as to induce a general Suſpicion or Belief amongſt the well-affected Inhabitants, that their Provoſt was ſecretly in the Intereſt of the Pretender; for, whether they were or were not in the right in that Suſpicion or Belief, they, being ſo immediately and ſo deeply intereſted, could not fail to be conſtantly attentive to the Conduct of their Provoſt; and, if that was ſuch as produced in them ſuch Apprehenſion or Belief, that very Thing is one Demonſtration, ſuppoſing that they carried their Concluſion too far, that his Conduct was not ſuch as became a faithful, vigilant, and zealous Magiſtrate upon that Occaſion.

The Nature of the Office of Lord Provoſt of the City of Edinburgh is well known to this Court. It is partly the ſame that belongs to the chief Magiſtrate of every Royal Burgh in the Kingdom, and partly ariſes from the particular Grants to the City of Edinburgh; they are Sheriffs within themſelves; the Lord Provoſt is the High Sheriff, and, of late Years, as well as formerly, has acted as ſuch, and tried Cauſes even capital, and the Bailies are, ex officio, his Deputy Sheriffs.

The Lord Provoſt is the King's Lieutenant within the City, he is Colonel of the City-Guard by the Act of Parliament authoriſing that, and he is chief Commander of the City Trained-Bands or Militia; and this very Provoſt claimed, and was allowed to be the Colonel of the Volunteers, and was by the Council declared to be Colonel of the Edinburgh Regiment of 1000 Men, that was to be raiſed and paid by the voluntary Subſcriptions of the Inhabitants: In ſhort, the whole military Power within the City was in him, and the chief executive Power, in all Reſpects.

Neither is it true, that the Order in the King's Sign-Manual for the Regiment, that the ſame ſhould be under the Direction of the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates, and Council of Edinburgh, was either intended, or had the Effect to derogate in the leaſt from the legal Powers and Privileges of the Lord Provoſt; that Warrant was granted on the Application of the whole Council of Edinburgh, the Regiment was to be maintained by them and their Fellow-Citizens, the End propoſed by it was the Defence of his Majeſty's Government, but more eſpecially the Preſervation of the City of Edinburgh againſt the Rebels; it was therefore very properly and graciouſly declared, that this Regiment ſhould be under the Direction of the Magiſtrates and Council of Edinburgh; that is, it ſhould not be withdrawn from the immediate Service of that City, or ſent elſewhere, like the reſt of his Majeſty's Troops, at the Diſcretion of his Generals, where it might be of Uſe for his Service, without the Conſent of the Magiſtrates and Council of Edinburgh. But this did not hinder the Lord Provoſt from being, according to the Conſtitution of the City, the Colonel or chief Commander of that Regiment, as well as of all the other Military Force within the City. It cannot be ſuppoſed to have been the Senſe of his Majeſty's Order, that the whole Town-Council, conſiſting of thirty-three Perſons, ſhould act the Part of a Colonel, or have the immediate Command of a Regiment; the utmoſt Effect that Order could have, was, that the whole Council ſhould have Power to give general Orders as to the Manner of employing the Regiment, ſuch as every Prince or State are daily known to give to the Generals or Commanders of their Armies, who are not the leſs veſted with the Powers of Commanders, that they are ſubject to ſuch Direction or Controul.

Neither is it true, that the Appointment of a Committee, in the Terms above-recited, was an Obſtruction or Hindrance to the Provoſt's acting in the Manner that the Libel requires of him, unleſs he can ſay, which he has not done, nor can do by any Thing that appears on Record, that either the Council or the Committee reſiſted his Will, or that they oppoſed or over-ruled him, by Majority of Voices, in any one Thing that he propoſed to be done towards the Preſervation of the City.

His Station, therefore, gave him Power ſufficient, and rendered it his Duty to be the chief Perſon to deviſe, order, and execute every Thing that was proper for preſerving his own City from the Rebels; and, if the Facts be true that are in this Libel charged, it is left to the Judgment of this Court, whether his Conduct was agreeable to his Duty; or if he was not, on the contrary, faulty or negligent in the Execution of his Office, and guilty of manifold Miſbehaviours in it on the Occaſion libelled.

That Occaſion called for the moſt earneſt, vigilant, and active Diſcharge of the Duty of chief Magiſtrate, veſted with ſuch Powers as he had; and, to illuſtrate this, the Purſuer begs Leave to quote a Paſſage from a learned Author, Ærodii rerum ab omni antiquitate judicatarum pandectæ, in the Title, De officio præfecti vigilum, whereof the Rubrick is in theſe Words: Negligentiam, in iis qui ad ſummum reipublicæ pertinent, eſſe capitalem, cap. 1. M. Militius, Cn. Lolius, L. Sextilius, triumviri nocturni, cùm incendii arcendi cauſâ, quod Romæ in ſacra via exortum eſſet, cum hamis & dolabris, omnique familiâ publicâ evocati, tardius adveniſſent: à tribuno plebis die dictâ ad populum, damnati ſunt: leves ob cauſas, inquit Valerius: ſed diſciplina neceſſaria.

Idem ferè apud nos, ſenatûs judicio, cùm adhuc illic eſſemus advocati, Gabaſtoni, præfecto vigilum, accidit: qui vocatus ad ſedandam ſcholarium de ſuo prato ſeditionem, non veniſſet. Nam indignum eſſe, qui, ut excubet reipublicæ, ab omnibus aliis muneribus excuſatur, & præſens vice eſt abſentis: is in tanta neceſſitati, ubi minima mora ſummi momenti eſt, ſegnem, tardum ac negligentem ſe prabeat, aut (quòd minus quoque eſt ferendum) contumacem.——Et quando omnibus viribus opus eſt, nulla cauſa, nulla excuſatio proficit.

Cap. 2. P. Bilius quoque triumvir nocturnus, à P. Aquilio, tribuno plebis accuſatus, quòd vigilias negligentiùs circumiſſet, populi judicio concidit. Nam quod levius ſit in aliis cauſis: in his, ut in re militari, capitale eſſe. Quia puncto ſæpe temporis, maximarum rerum occaſiones amittuntur: neque in hujuſmodi his errare fas eſt, aut dicere, Non putabam.

It was upon the ſame Principles that are here ſet forth, and followed in Practice in the Roman Republick, as well as the French Monarchy, that our old Statute 1457, in the Libel recited, was made, for the Punition of negligent Officiars, and namely, 'Provoſts of Burghs, and others, 'who ſhould be found faulty and negligent in the Execution of their Offi-'ces, and it may be lawfully proved on them, or notoriouſly known;' but with this Difference indeed, that every Offence of this Kind is not made capital, as mitiores pœnæ nobis ſemper placuere, 'but only that they be 'puniſhed, in their Perſons and Goods, after the Quantity of their 'Treſpaſs, at the King's Will.' This is ſuch a Statute as hardly enacts any thing poſitive, or other than what is included in the Common Law of this and all other civilized Nations, and therefore never can go into Diſuetude. And it ſeems unneceſſary to offer any Anſwer to the groundleſs Diſtinction advanced by the Pannel's Counſel, betwixt the Duty of a Provoſt, or other Magiſtrate, upon common or ordinary, and extraordinary Occaſions, there is neither Law nor Reaſon for that Diſtinction. No Man ſhould undertake the Office of a Pilot, who can only hold the Helm in his Hand in ſerene Weather, and is incapable to do his Duty when a Storm riſes. And the Allegation of this Diſtinction ill becomes the Pannel, who is a Gentleman by Birth and Education, and, as ſuch, ſuperior to the ordinary Rank of Burgeſſes, who may be, and often are raiſed to the Office of chief Magiſtrates.

Such, for Inſtance, was the Character of Provoſt Wilſon, a Brewer in Edinburgh, who was Lord Provoſt of that City when Captain Porteous was murdered, who, upon the ſame Principles that are above-mentioned, was puniſhed by an Act of the 10th of his Majeſty, merely for being faulty or negligent in the Execution of his Office; for the Act recites the Murder of Captain Porteous, 'And that, for ſome Time before the committing the 'ſaid Murder and Riot, it was commonly reported in the ſaid City of 'Edinburgh, that ſome ſuch atrocious Fact would be attempted, which, by 'proper Care in the Magiſtrates, Citizens and Inhabitants of the ſaid City, 'might have been prevented; notwithſtanding which, Alexander Wilſon, Pro-'voſt of the ſaid City, and then actually reſident therein, and fully appriſed 'of the ſaid wicked Deſign, did not take any Precautions to prevent the 'ſaid Murder and Riot, nor uſe the proper or neceſſary Means to ſup-'preſs the ſame, or to preſerve the Peace of the ſaid City, or, after the 'Perpetration of the ſaid Fact, to diſcover, apprehend, or ſecure the 'Authors, Actors or Abettors thereof, in manifeſt Violation of the Truſt 'and Duty of his Office of Chief Magiſtrate of the ſaid City.——And 'to the End that the ſaid enormous Miſbehaviours and Neglects of Duty 'may not go unpuniſhed, and that other Perſons may not preſume, 'through Hopes of Impunity, to be guilty of the like for the future, it 'is enacted, that the ſaid Alexander Wilſon be diſabled from holding any 'Office of Magiſtracy, &c.'

Here the Conviction by the Parliament itſelf proceeds altogether upon Negatives, or Neglects of Duty in the Provoſt or chief Magiſtrate, upon a very ſingular and extraordinary Occaſion; and ſo far it is a Precedent in point to the preſent Caſe, which in other reſpects appears to be vaſtly more atrocious than what Provoſt Wilſon was guilty of, who, it ſeems, did not give Credit to the Reports that were current before that extraordinary Attempt was made, and ſuffered himſelf to be ſurpriſed and diſconcerted, when the Mob was ſuddenly raiſed which committed that Murder; inſtead of which, here was long Warning, and many Precautions ſeemingly taken by the Provoſt, heartily intended by many of the Citizens, to avert Evil of a much higher Nature, tending to overthrow the Conſtitution and Eſtabliſhment of this united Kingdom.

It appears quite unneceſſary to anſwer the Allegation offered for the Pannel from this Precedent, which has ſurely not the leaſt Tendency to prove, that the Offence, which was here puniſhed by the Legiſlature itſelf, was no ways puniſhable by the Common Law, or the general Statutes of this Realm.

And as little can it avail the Pannel to enter now into an Argument upon the Expediency of the Reſolution in general, of putting the City of Edinburgh in a Poſture of Defence againſt the Rebels; for though it be true, that before any Reſolution was taken upon this Queſtion, it was very lawful and competent for the Lord Provoſt to declare his Opinion, if it was ſuch, for the Negative; yet, after it was a Reſolution formed by the Council of the City, with the Conſent and Approbation of the moſt conſiderable Citizens of all Ranks, many of whom had previouſly ſollicited that ſuch Meaſures ſhould be taken; and after he, the Lord Provoſt, had ſeemingly concurred, and given way to the general Senſe of the Citizens, as well as of the Council, it ſurely then became his Duty as the firſt Magiſtrate, who had the chief executive Power in his Hands, to exert himſelf, bona fide, for the Execution of the general Meaſure that had been thus reſolved; for better indeed had it been never to attempt ſuch Defence, than not to go through with it until actually overpowered by ſuperior Force; or that, to the great Expence and Diſcredit of the City, after many Preparations to provide a Force for its Defence, and Application to the Crown, which was readily granted, for a Warrant to authorize the Regiment, and to the Inhabitants for a Subſcription to pay it, which was filled up with great Alacrity, and many of the chief of them preſſed for Leave to venture their Perſons, as well as contribute their Money for the Cauſe which they had ſo much at Heart, when, to furniſh Arms, the King's Arſenal in the Caſtle was at their Command, and a conſiderable Force aſſembled, that the Provoſt ſhould ſo manage Matters, as that the Defence ſhould be thrown up juſt at the Time that it became needful to make uſe of all theſe Preparations.

This will require ſome better Excuſe, than that the Provoſt, in his private Opinion, was averſe to the Meaſure in general of defending the City, or that he was afraid of provoking the Rebels to rob his Wine-Cellars at Leith, (if that be meant by taking notice of his great Property there) for it is certain the Provoſt profeſſed to concur with the general Senſe of the City, to provide for and reſolve to make a Defence; and, even upon Monday the 16th of September, in the Afternoon, in the Council-Chamber, and at the general Meeting in the New-Church, it has been alledged, as a Part of his Defence, that he ſtill declared ſtoutly for adhering to that Reſolution; and in theſe Circumſtances, for his Counſel to ſay for him, by way of Apology for his Conduct in the Articles libelled, that the ſame proceeds from, or is to be accounted for, by his diſapproving in his Judgment of the general Meaſure of making any Defence, and offering Reaſons now in ſupport of the Juſtice of that Opinion, inſtead of excuſing him, is in reality to accuſe him very deeply of acting all along with a Duplicity, which muſt have been highly criminal, profeſſing to concur in the Execution of a Meaſure, which which in his Heart he disliked, and, as the Execution of it chiefly belonged to him in virtue of his Office, managing that in such a Manner as to defeat the Design.

As to that Design itself, the most sanguine Promoters of it never pretended to maintain that the City of Edinburgh was capable of holding out a regular or a long Siege; the very Number of the Inhabitants, and the Mouths to be fed, must render this impracticable; but, as the Circumstance which exposed them to be at all visited by the Rebels, was the Misfortune of Sir John Cope's getting to the Northward of the Rebel Army in the Highlands, and as he was known to be returning from Inverness, through the low Country, along the Eastern Coast, and as other Succours were daily expected from Holland, it was very reasonably concluded, that the Pressure upon the City of Edinburgh could be but of short Endurance, and that, very possibly, keeping out the Rebels a single Day might save the City altogether from falling into their Hands; and the Event in a great measure justified the Expectation; for, upon the Evening of Monday the 16th September, when the first Deputies were sent out by the Provost and others to the Rebels Camp, to treat about the Surrender demanded by the Letter from the Pretender's Son, those Deputies had not yet reached that Camp, when authentick Advice came, that Sir John Cope, with his Army, was arrived at Dunbar, which is but twenty Miles from Edinburgh: A very signal Instance of the Truth of what is said in the Passage above quoted from Ærodius, Quòd puncto sæpe temporis maximarum rerum occasiones amittuntur.

What then was the Occasion, or whence arose the Necessity that obliged the Pannel, on the Afternoon of Monday the 16th September, to abandon the Defence of the City, for which so many Preparations had been made and continued till this very Hour, and when, though the Enemy was at hand, there was all the Reason in the World to believe that Succour and Relief from the King's Troops was not far off, as the Event that very Evening accordingly proved, by the actual Arrival of Sir John Cope off Dunbar, and authentick Notice thereof being sent to Edinburgh at the Juncture of Time already mentioned.

The Answer to these Questions made for the Pannel, in the Debate upon his Libel, have been, 'That, on the Afternoon of this Monday, 'the 16th of September 1745. the City of Edinburgh was in great Consternation, occasioned by the Approach of the Rebels, and the threatening Messages sent from them, by the Retreat of the Dragoons from 'Coltbridge, and the withdrawing of the Civil Officers of the Crown 'from the City; that, in these Circumstances, the general Cry of the 'Inhabitants, at a publick Meeting assembled, was for abandoning the 'Defence of the City; after which the Fears of the Inhabitants was the 'governing Principle, the Multitude had the Power in their Hands, and 'there was no longer any Regard paid to Magistrates or legal Authority.'

But to this it is replied, That the Retreat of the Dragoons the Pursuer does not take upon him to approve or justify; very possibly it was made sooner and farther than it was necessary, though it cannot be said that the two Regiments of Dragoons, with the City-Guard of Edinburgh, if the whole Rebel Army had come up to them, ill armed as it was, would have been a Match for such a Superiority of Numbers: But when the Resolution was taken to defend the City of Edinburgh, they did not, nor could reckon upon these two Regiments of Dragoons, as what they could rely upon, or promise themselves to be always attending for their Assistance; and when the Defence of the City was abandoned, they were no farther removed than Musselburgh, which is but four Miles off, and an Offer was made to the Lord Provost to bring them back, or any Number of them he should desire, to assist in the Defence of the City.

That the withdrawing of the Civil Officers could afford no just Cause for abandoning that Defence; the Lord Justice-Clerk had only gone from Edinburgh that Day about Noon, to dine at his own House about three Miles off, and was returning in the Afternoon to the City, when he got Notice by the Way, that the Rebels were by that Time at the West Port of the City, which was not true, but afforded a very just Reason for his returning to his own House; and though the Lord Advocate at this Time also withdrew from the City, and went as far East as Musselburgh, yet, before he left the Town, he had concurred with the Provost and the Sollicitor, in procuring an Order from General Guest, for one hundred Dragoons to march into the City, to encourage and support the loyal Inhabitants in Defence of the Town. And he renewed his Advice by Mr. Groset, whom he met going into the City in the Afternoon, with a Message from the Lord Justice-Clerk relating to those Dragoons. And of what use could a single Civil Officer be in the Case of a Siege? Or, to what purpose should he shut himself up within the Walls, and expose himself, in case of the Town's being taken, to become a Prisoner in the Hands of the Rebels?

And as for the affrighted Multitude, who are said to have got the Government into their Hands, it was the Fault of the Lord Provost if he permitted this to be: None of the Forces under his Command were withdrawn, and he had still at least twelve hundred well-armed Men under his Command, the Walls of the City repaired and planted with Cannon, and the Castle and its Garrison ready to assist him: And, in this Situation, why did he suffer himself to be despoiled of his Authority, or to be governed by the real, or by the affected Terrors of the timorous, or of the disaffected Multitude? Why did he give way to a general Meeting, in the Church, of an Assembly so composed? Why did he not tell them that the City had already taken its Measures and its Resolution to stand upon its Defence, and order all who did not chuse to depart the City, or to act in its Defence, to repair to their respective Houses, and keep within Doors? He had still the legal Authority in him, and the Means in his Hands to make that to be respected, when he had so great a Body of Men in Arms under his Command.

In these Circumstances, the Methods he pursued demonstrated the End which he had in View, namely, to deliver up, instead of defending the City; for, in order to justify himself in abandoning that Defence, he ought to have gone another Way to work, than to assemble a promiscuous Multitude in the Church, exclusive of the Volunteers. If there was truly any Change of Circumstances occurred, that made it reasonable now to lay aside Thoughts of that Defence which had been so long provided for and pursued, he should have summoned a Council of the same, or the like Persons with those who had first contributed to the Resolutions of making any Defence at all, that is, his own Fellow-Magistrates and Councillors, with the Chief Officers of the Volunteers and Trained-Bands, and deliberated with them upon the supposed Change of Circumstances; and if, in such Council, it had been debated and resolved, by Plurality of Voices, to be now impracticable, or inexpedient to persist any longer in the Measure formerly concerted, of defending the City, that Resolution might have justified or acquitted him; but nothing of this Kind is alledged, and thereby he has taken the whole upon himself. He consulted with a disaffected Multitude, as some of the Persons present in it, of undoubted Credit, say it was: And there is no Record of any Resolution of the Town-Council, or of the Committee abovementioned, of Monday the 16th of September, when this Change of Measures was brought about, nor any Record of the Council after Friday the 13th, before the Rebels entered the City, nor of the Committee after Saturday the 14th.

As for the particular Facts or Articles charged upon the Pannel, the Pursuer has Reason to believe he can prove every one of them; but he now says, that neither the separate Relevancy, nor the Proof of every one of them, is essential to the Conclusion of this Libel, whereof the general Scope and Averment is, That the Pannel, at the Time and upon the Occasion libelled, was faulty and negligent, or guilty of Malversation in the Discharge of his Duty; and, for making out this, particular Articles are specified: And altho' every one of these shall not appear separately material, or shall not be proved, it is no Matter, if enough be proved to make out or support the general Charge.

The Case is of the same Nature as if a civil Action were brought, for Instance, for removing a suspected Tutor by the Kindred of the Infant, in order to which a Number of Articles of Misbehaviour were alledged in the Libel; in which Case, tho' some of these Articles should not be proved, or well accounted for by the Defender, yet, if any Number should be made good and accounted for, the general Allegation of the Libel would be proved, and the Pursuers behoved to prevail in the Conclusion of their Action.

At the same time, to touch briefly at the particular Articles, it is replied to the Answer to the first, That it is not the Pannel's Doubt concerning the Point of Law that is charged as a Crime, but his urging that Doubt, inter alia, demonstrates his Backwardness to pursue any Measures for Defence of the City, for the Doubt itself was extremely groundless. There are sundry old Laws against private Leagues or Bonds among the Subjects, which have nothing to do with the present Case; but the only Law, upon which the Pannel's Objection, that it would have been High-Treason to arm without Authority from the Crown, can be founded, is the 5th Act of the Restoration Parliament 1661, intitled, Act asserting his Majesty's Royal Prerogative in the Militia, and in making Peace and War, &c. which Act declares, 'That it is and shall be 'High-Treason to the Subjects of this Kingdom, or any Number of 'them more or less, upon any Ground or Pretext whatsoever, to rise, 'or continue in Arms, to maintain any Forts, Strengths or Garrisons, to 'make Peace or War, or to make any Treaties or Leagues with foreign 'Princes or Estates, or among themselves, without his Majesty's special 'Authority and Approbation first interposed thereto.'

Now, in the first place, whilst this Act continued in force, it surely could never be meant to comprehend the Case of the King's Subjects being called out, by the Magistrates acting under his Authority, to take Arms for his Service; for Instance, if the Militia of any County should be called out by the High Sheriff, or Lord Lieutenant, to resist a foreign Enemy, or a domestick Rebel: And the chief Magistrate of a Burgh, within his District, has the like Power to the Sheriff, or Lord Lieutenant, to defend the Burgh over which he presides.

But, 2*dly*. This Act, upon which the Doubt is singly founded, is repealed by the Act of the 7th of Queen Anne, Chap. 21. which provides, That nothing shall thereafter be High-Treason in Scotland, but what is such in England. And farther provides concerning certain Crimes therein mentioned, viz. Theft in landed Men, Murder under Trust, Fire-raising and Assassination, which were declared to be Treason by particular Statutes in Scotland, shall hereafter be adjudged and deemed to be capital Offences. But concerning the Fact which is made Treason by this Act 1661, no such Provision is made.

The Pursuer's Replies concerning the other Articles are already in Substance made in the foregoing Argument, and he shall not prolong this Paper to go through them minutely, and shall only farther observe, That, as to the new Defence offered to the eleventh Article, concerning the City-Arms, that though it comes with a bad Grace to be now for the first Time proposed, the Pursuer does not oppose the Pannel's being allowed to prove this Allegation, and all other Facts and Circumstances that have been by him alledged for his Vindication or Defence against the Charge contained in this Libel.

In respect whereof, &c. WILL. GRANT.

INFORMATION for ARCHIBALD STEWART, of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provost of the said City, Pannel or Defendant,

AGAINST

His MAJESTY'S ADVOCATE for his Majesty's Interest, Pursuer.

BEFORE entering upon the Objections to the Relevancy of this Libel, it may not be improper, first of all, to lay before the Court a genuine and succinct Account of every Fact and Circumstance which any way concerns the Conduct of the Pannel, or can give any Light to form a Judgment of it during the Period mentioned in the Libel.

Upon the 17th of August 1745, the Pannel, then Lord Provost of the City of Edinburgh, had the Honour to receive a Letter from the Marquis of Tweeddale, one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State of the 13th current, acquainting him, 'That their Excellencies the Lords 'Justices, having received Intelligence, that the Pretender's Son was 'already landed, or intended to land in Scotland, had recommended it to him

'him to give Notice to the Provoſt thereof, that he might exert his Care 'and Vigilance on this Occaſion, and make uſe of ſuch Precautions as he 'ſhould judge neceſſary for preſerving the publick Peace within the 'Bounds of his Juriſdiction.

To this Letter the Lord Provoſt wrote an Anſwer on the 17th, as follows: 'It is with Pleaſure I aſſure your Lordſhip, that this Town 'was never better affected, nor more peaceable than at preſent. Nothing 'ſhall be neglected on my Part to preſerve People in their Duty to-'wards their King and their Country; and we truſt in God that no 'threatened Dangers ſhall ever reach us; at the ſame Time, we are not 'to ſit down in Security, but will keep a watchful Eye, in order to 'prevent, as far as it is in our Power, every thing that may diſturb the 'Peace of this Place.'

The above Letter was laid before the Magiſtrates when it came to Hand, and the Anſwer was approved of by the Town-Council, at a Meeting on the 23d of Auguſt, and, in purſuance of theſe Reſolutions taken by the Lord Provoſt and Council, the following Orders were forthwith iſſued.

Auguſt 23. Orders were given to levy and raiſe thirty Centinels to be added to the City-Guard, agreeable to the Powers given them by Act of Parliament, and to provide them with Clothing and all other Neceſſaries.

Recommended to the Lord Provoſt and Magiſtrates to direct the Captains and Officers of the Trained-Bands, forthwith to make up full Liſts of all the Perſons belonging to their ſeveral Companies, and to report the ſame to the Magiſtrates againſt Saturday next; and that the Captains warn and premoniſh them all to be ready, in caſe of any Diſturbance, to appear with their beſt Arms, upon an Hour's Warning, at the ordinary Places of Rendezvous.

Orders were given for directing the Conſtables of the City to make out full and ample Liſts of all the Inhabitants and Reſidenters within their Diſtricts, and report the ſame to the Magiſtrates; and to be diligent in inquiring and finding out what Strangers may happen from time to time to come within the City, and lodge within their ſeveral Diſtricts.

Orders for a Proclamation, requiring and ordaining all Inn-Keepers, Strangers, and others, who lodge and entertain Strangers, from time to time, and as oft as any Stranger ſhall lodge with them, to give in to the Captain of the City-Guard a Note of their Names and Deſignations at their Arrival; and of the Time of their Departure, under a Penalty for each Tranſgreſſion; and the Captains of the Guard ordered duly to report to the Magiſtrates, in Writing, every Morning, Liſts of the Particulars that ſhould be delivered in to them by the Inhabitants.

Theſe Orders, moſt of which proceeded upon Motions made by the Lord Provoſt, were all agreed to by the Magiſtrates and Council, and ſigned by him in their Preſence; and Care was taken of the due and punctual Execution of them all, without any Loſs of Time.

The next Day, being Saturday, Auguſt 24th, it was ſuggeſted to the Lord Provoſt that it might be fit to call a general Meeting of the Inhabitants, to conſider what was to be done on this Occaſion; to which he agreed, and communicated the Propoſal to the Council at their next Meeting on Monday, Auguſt 26. who alſo approved of it; and accordingly the Meeting was ordered, and the moſt ſubſtantial and well-affected Burgeſſes were invited to aſſiſt with their Counſel and Advice; and at the Meeting, which could not be convened ſooner than next Day, Auguſt 27. the above Reſolutions and Orders were reported to them by the Lord Provoſt; and the Meeting 'unanimouſly approved thereof, and gave his 'Lordſhip and the Council their hearty Thanks for the wiſe and pru-'dent Meaſures they had already taken; and, farther, offered it as their 'Advice to the Magiſtrates and Council, to name ſome of their own 'Number, and ſuch other of the Burgeſſes as they ſhould think fit, as 'a joint Committee to conſult with and take the Advice of the Lord 'Juſtice-Clerk, Lord Advocate, Mr. Sollicitor, and ſuch of the Lords 'of Seſſion as can be found in Town, with regard to what farther Steps 'the Magiſtrates, Council and Community can legally take for preſerv-'ing the Peace of the City, and contributing to defeat the dangerous 'and wicked Deſigns of the Enemies to his ſacred Majeſty, his Royal 'Family, and preſent happy Conſtitution.

Auguſt 28. The Committee were accordingly named by the Council next Day, and that very Evening met with the King's Counſel, and ſuch of the Judges as were in Town, at the Lord Juſtice-Clerk's Houſe, where it was propoſed, that a Regiment of a thouſand Men ſhould be levied for the Defence of the Town, and Service of the Government, to be ſubſiſted, for three Months, on the Charges of ſuch of the Inhabitants as were willing to ſign an Aſſociation for that Purpoſe. And as it had been, for ſome time, a general Subject of Converſation and Debate without Doors, how far it was legal to levy ſuch Regiment without a ſpecial Order from his Majeſty, the Opinion of the learned and honourable Perſons preſent was aſked upon this Point, and they all agreed, that it could not be legally done without his Majeſty's Warrant. Upon which it was reſolved that the Lord Advocate ſhould make Application for ſuch Warrant; and that, in the mean Time, Trial ſhould be made of the Inclinations of the Inhabitants to concur in this Meaſure, how ſoon the Warrant ſhould be obtained from his Majeſty.

Auguſt 30. The Lord Provoſt and Magiſtrates were employed in receiving Propoſals for putting the Town in a Poſture of Defence; and the Lord Provoſt wrote Letters to the Magiſtrates of Boroughs, and Miniſters, for about the Diſtance of fourteen Miles round the City, begging that they would ſend as early Intelligence as poſſible, by Expreſs on Horſeback, of any Bodies of armed Men they could diſcover marching towards this City.

Auguſt 31. About the ſame time many different Orders were given by the Lord Provoſt to proper Perſons, with a View to put the Town in a Poſture of Defence, which were afterwards executed, particularly for clearing the Town Wall, building Stairs to get up to the Wall, making Communications from one Place to another, raiſing a Work at Wallace's Tower, to prevent the Communication by the Back of the Caſtle. This laſt Work had been directed at firſt in a very proper Manner by Bailie Robert Baillie, Overſeer of the publick Works for this Year; but Bailie Gavin Hamilton afterwards ſtopt it, and gave a different Direction, by which that Work was for ſome time retarded.

Monday, September 2. The Lord Provoſt ſigned an Order in Council for augmenting the Town-Guard to the Number of 126 Men.

September 3. Bailie James Stewart and Mr. Colin Mac Laurin applied to the Lord Provoſt, with a Meſſage from ſome Gentlemen who had met the Evening before, deſiring in general that he would ſee to the Defence of the Town; and particularly, firſt, That he would order Moulds to be made for caſting Bullets. 2dly, That the Sluices of the North-Loch ſhould be filled up. And, 3dly, That a Diſtinction ſhould be made betwixt the Inhabitants of known good Affection and others, before he came to intruſt them with the Town's Arms.

The Lord Provoſt agreed to the firſt two Propoſals, and ordered the immediate Execution of them; but as to the third, he demurred. He obſerved to them the Inconvenience of making Diſtinctions amongſt Inhabitants upon bare Suſpicions, eſpecially about the Time of an approaching Election, when Parties were forming, which would lead them to ſpread Calumnies againſt one another upon By-Views; that this might occaſion Heats and Diſſentions dangerous to the Peace of the Town, and even ſtrengthen the Diſaffected by combining them together; that, where any real Ground of Complaint could be condeſcended, he was ready, not only to exclude ſuch Perſons from ſerving in the Trained-Bands, but alſo to oblige them to find Security for their good Behaviour. After this Reaſoning the Gentlemen did not inſiſt farther upon that Part of their Propoſal, nor lay it before the Council, who were the proper Judges of the Expediency of ſuch Meaſures, had they thought it fit to be inſiſted on.

September 4. The Lord Provoſt met with the ſame two Gentlemen, and ſeveral other Burgeſſes, in a Tavern, and, after a good deal of Converſation upon the ſeveral Expedients propoſed for Defence of the Town, he deſired they would digeſt their Propoſals, and give them in, in Writing, which he would either immediately comply with, or give them an Anſwer in Writing. This they ſeemed chearfully to agree to, and promiſed to give him in their Propoſals, but never did it.

September 6. Some of the ſame Gentlemen preſented to the Provoſt a Petition ſigned by about 80 or 90 of the Inhabitants, offering to ſerve as Volunteers for Defence of the City againſt any Attack, and particularly in contributing to erect the neceſſary and proper Barricado's for defending the Ports and ſeveral Avenues to the City, and praying that the City-Wall might be inſtantly repaired, and Stairs put up, &c. to appoint proper Places of Rendezvous, furniſh them with neceſſary Arms, and allow them to name their Officers.

The Provoſt told the Gentlemen who had met with him two Days before, That, after what had paſt at that Meeting, he expected they would have communicated to him their Intentions, as they promiſed; but he never would mind any perſonal Neglect in a Matter where the publick Safety was concerned, and therefore ſhould take care to preſent their Petition to the Magiſtrates without Delay, and return their Anſwer.

September 7. He did accordingly order a Meeting of the Magiſtrates to be ſummoned againſt Eleven next Forenoon; and, that there might be no unneceſſary Delay from any Doubtfulneſs concerning the Legality of this Meaſure, the Provoſt adviſed with the Lord Advocate upon that Point in his Way to the Meeting; and, having got his and the Sollicitor's Opinion of the Lawfulneſs of it, he forthwith met with the Magiſtrates, and laid the Petition and Opinion before them; upon which they chearfully approved of the Propoſal, and applauded the Zeal of the Petitioners.

Immediately after the Provoſt went to the Volunteers, who were met in the New Church Iſle, and told them their Petition was to be complied with in every Particular, except the Nomination of their Officers: But, notwithſtanding that did of Right belong to him, yet, as he wiſhed of all Things they might have ſuch Officers as they inclined to obey, if they would give him a Liſt of 20 or 30 of their Number, he would confine his Nomination to that Liſt. They complied. He named ſix of the fitteſt Perſons in the Liſt for Captains, with whom they were highly pleaſed, and he left the Nomination of the Subalterns to themſelves, for which they returned him Thanks.

The ſame Day the Lord Provoſt moved in Council, that an Addreſs ſhould be drawn up and preſented to his Majeſty, which was unanimouſly agreed to; and a dutiful Addreſs was accordingly drawn out, approven and ſigned; after which it was reſolved, 'To authorize the Magiſtrates 'and Conveener to employ Perſons with all poſſible Speed to put the 'City in a Poſture of Defence, and particularly the Walls thereof.'

In conſequence of this, Workmen were immediately ſent for, and the Lord Provoſt ordered them forthwith to fall to work, under the Direction of Mr. Mac Laurin, and to work Night and Day, Sundays not excepted, till all was finiſhed, and gave Warrants for impreſſing Workmen.

September 8. The Provoſt, of his own Accord, ordered all the Powder that was in the Town's Magazine to be carried to the Caſtle; which was ſo punctually executed, that he behoved afterwards to take from the Caſtle what was neceſſary for the Service of the Town.

About the ſame Time he wrote an Order to Robert Davidſon, Tackſman of the Meal-Market, to clean out the Granaries, and provide Meal.

September 9. This Morning the Provoſt having occaſionally heard that his Majeſty's Sign-Manual, authorizing to levy the Regiment propoſed, had come the Day before to the Lord Advocate's Hand, he went and waited on his Lordſhip, and, upon receiving the Sign-Manual, he immediately called a Council, and produced the ſame, which was addreſſed to the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh; and recites, 'That it had been repreſented to his Majeſty, that the Lord 'Provoſt, Magiſtrates, Town-Council, Burgeſſes, and others of his 'City of Edinburgh, from the great Loyalty and Affection to his Perſon and Government, were at this Juncture willing and ready to raiſe 'and maintain, at their own proper Charge and Expence, by voluntary Subſcription and Contribution, One thouſand Foot for the Defence of the ſaid City, and the Support of his Government; and they 'were deſirous of obtaining his Royal Licence and Authority for the 'ſame: His Majeſty therefore, repoſing intire Truſt and Confidence 'in the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Town-Council of his ſaid City, 'did thereby authorize and impower them to raiſe, form and diſcipline 'One thouſand Foot to be employed for the Purpoſes above mentioned; 'and his Majeſty did thereby farther order and command, that the ſaid 'One thouſand Men ſhall be under the Direction of the Lord Provoſt, 'Magiſtrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh: For the doing whereof 'this ſhall be a ſufficient Warrant.'

As by this Warrant the Direction of the Regiment was placed in the Magiſtrates and Town-Council, ſo, as ſoon as it was read, they took the Direction into their own Hands, 'and appointed, as a Committee, 'the preſent and old Magiſtrates, Conveener, Deacons Lauder and Por- 'teous, or any five of them, the Lord Provoſt being always one, and, in 'caſe of his Abſence, any Nine of them, to be a Quorum, to conſider 'what is moſt proper to be done upon this Occaſion for levying the ſaid 'Thouſand Foot; and particularly to take in the Subſcription of ſuch 'of the Inhabitants as are willing to contribute for levying and main-'taining the ſaid Thouſand Foot, with their proper Officers, to be named 'for the Purpoſes mentioned in the ſaid Sign-Manual, for the Space of three 'Months after they ſhall be ſo inliſted; as alſo to conſider what is proper 'farther to be done for the Safety of this City, and for Support of the 'Government; which Committee ſhall meet at the Goldſmiths-Hall, 'twice each Day, at the Hours of Eleven in the Forenoon, and Four in 'the Afternoon; and recommended to the ſaid Committee, to keep a 'Book, into which all their Proceedings and Actings ſhall be regularly 'ingroſſed, to the end the ſame may be reported to the Council from 'Time to Time.'

At the ſame Time, the Council 'ordered the Serjeants, Corporals and 'Drums of the City-Guard to beat up for Volunteers to compleat the 'Thouſand Foot; and they nominated the Lord Provoſt to be Colonel 'and Commander of the ſaid Thouſand Foot, with Power to him to 'conduct and direct them, and the other Officers who ſhall be named to 'command under him, as the Council ſhall think proper, or as the Exi-'gencies of Matters ſhall require.'

And the Lord Provoſt ſhewed his chearful Concurrence in this Meaſure, by a Subſcription far beyond any other that was made to this Regiment.

September 10 to 13. From this Day, to the 13th of September, there are daily Proceedings of the Council and Committee above named, who went on with all Diligence in raiſing the Men, taking in Subſcriptions, providing Arms, Grain, and other Neceſſaries, and doing every thing that was judged proper for putting the Town in a Poſture of Defence. It is unneceſſary to trouble the Lords with reciting minutely every Particular which appears to this Purpoſe from the Records of the Council, and the Minutes of the Committee, which regularly met for carrying on the Buſineſs intruſted to them; and the Lord Provoſt appears, by their Minutes, to have been preſent at every Sederunt.

The Pannel is deſirous to abridge the Trouble of the Court, in reading a long Story, as much as poſſible; and therefore ſhall but juſt mention a few of the many Inſtances of his Care and Concern in carrying on the general Meaſure now reſolved on, for the Defence of the Town, about this Period.

That whenever any Complaints were made of the Slowneſs of the Workmen, that they were not going on with that Diligence they ought, the Lord Provoſt ſeverely reprimanded them, and gave freſh Warrants to preſs Men and Carts, with ſtrict Orders to loſe no Time.

That Bailie Robert Baillie, who had the Inſpection of the publick Works, with his Committee, were ordered to ſee that every thing was done that was neceſſary for the Defence and Preſervation of the Town; and he had the Charge of impreſſing Workmen and Carts, and exerciſing all the Authority that was neceſſary for carrying on the publick Works with the utmoſt Diſpatch.

That the Provoſt, on the 10th of September, wrote a Letter to Captain John Dalrymple, and alſo applied to Captain James Murray, to take upon them the Command of the Volunteers: But they both refuſed to accept of a Command of Men who had not been accuſtomed to military Diſcipline.

That the Provoſt moved in the Committee, to recommend to ſome of the City-Guard, Edinburgh Regiment, and Gentlemen Volunteers, that they ſhould learn the Exerciſe of throwing the Hand-Granadoes.

That, in order to preſerve the publick Money from falling into the Hands of the Rebels, the Provoſt called a Council, and propoſed, that what was owing of the King's Ceſs ſhould be paid up to the Receiver-General, though it had not been paid by the Inhabitants to the Collector; and for that Purpoſe the Provoſt forthwith ſigned an Order on the Caſh Accompt for 1000 l. Sterling, payable to the Receiver-General, to Account of the Ceſs due by the City, which was delivered to the Receiver-General.

September 13. That the Proceedings of the Committee for levying the City's Regiment, and forewarding the neceſſary Steps to be taken for the Safety and Defence of the Place, were read over in Preſence of, and conſidered by the Council, and unanimouſly approven of, and the Council recommended to the Committee to continue in their Diligence.

September 14. Notice having come to Town this Morning, that the Rebels had paſſed the Forth ſome Miles above Stirling, and were directing their March towards Edinburgh, and Colonel Gairdner's Dragoons were retiring before them, the Lord Juſtice-Clerk ſent a Meſſage to the Provoſt, deſiring he would meet with him, and ſome Lords and Gentlemen of the Army, and others, whom he was to bring from the Country, in order to concert what was to be done in this Exigence. The Provoſt immediately went to Lord Juſtice-Clerk's Houſe, and told his Lordſhip he was ſenſible how much he ſtood in need of ſuch Advice; that he would always be ready to follow it, and would be ſure to attend them whenever called for.

He went on ſtill in doing every thing that could be thought of as neceſſary to provide for the Defence of the Place. He ſigned a Warrant this Day, along with Lord Somerville as Juſtice of Peace, to preſs Men and Carts for carrying Sand and other Materials to the Ramparts and Works about the Walls, which was accordingly executed; and alſo to bring in Hay, Corn, and Proviſions into the Town, and John Walker and William Mercer were ſent to Leith for that Purpoſe.

This Day alſo the Provoſt ordered twenty-four Men to attend Captain Bryden in mounting the Cannon upon the Walls;

And granted Warrant to bring into the Town all the Ladders, Arms and Ammunition, which were in the Cannongate, Potter-Row, and other Suburbs adjacent to the Town, that they might not be ſeized by the Rebels.

Sunday, September 15. We are now come to Sunday the 15th of September; and as the Proceedings of this Day, and the next, are greatly miſrepreſented, as well as curtailed in the Purſuer's Information, it is neceſſary to be a little more particular in reciting them.

Upon Sunday Morning, when the Committee were met in the Goldſmiths-Hall, a Gentleman came with a Meſſage from General Gueſt, to acquaint them, that when it was propoſed, at a Meeting at his Houſe, to order Hamilton's Regiment of Dragoons to join Gairdner's, and make a Stand againſt the Rebels, the General made a Difficulty, in regard he had no Body of Foot to ſuſtain them. Upon which a Captain of the Volunteers undertook, that, at leaſt, two hundred and fifty of theſe Gentlemen would be ready to march upon any Service the General would order them; he believed more would, but he could anſwer for two hundred and fifty, providing the Provoſt would allow Fifty of the Town-Guard to go along with them; and the Gentleman deſired to know if the Provoſt would conſent.

On firſt hearing of this Propoſal, the Provoſt had ſome Difficulty to part with the Town-Guard, as being the Body of Men he could moſt depend upon, in caſe of any Occaſion, to defend the Town; on which Bailie Robert Baillie ſaid, he thought fifty of the Town-Guard could not be better employed than in ſupporting ſo many of the Volunteers, if they marched out; and inſtantly the Provoſt, upon Recollection, agreed, and anſwered, 'Mr. Baillie, you are in the right; in place of 'Fifty, they ſhall have the whole Town-Guard, and as many of the 'Edinburgh Regiment as are capable of doing Service.'

The Provoſt immediately went down in a Coach, along with the Gentleman who had brought the Meſſage, and told the General the Reſolution of the Committee as to ſending out the Town-Guard and the Edinburgh Regiment; upon which the General ſent Orders to Hamilton's Regiment to march through the Town and join Colonel Gairdner's.

The Provoſt came up to Town from the General's in a Coach, along with Provoſt Drummond, the firſt Captain of the Volunteers, and by the Way met two of their Officers, who came into the Coach, and told them, they were ſure the Volunteers would not comply with the Meaſure propoſed, and that they were now ſeparated, and had gone home.

The Provoſt aſked Mr. Drummond what would be the beſt Signal to bring the Volunteers together? He ſaid they had only two, three Guns from the Caſtle, or ringing the Alarm-Bell. The firſt, ſays the Provoſt, is not in our Power, as the Caſtle is ſhut; and the other, in Time of divine Service, may alarm the Town. No help for it, ſays Mr. Drummond, the Bell muſt be rung.

The Bell was accordingly rung, which alarmed the People, and made them leave the Church. The Volunteers conveened in the Lawn-Market, and huzza'd Hamilton's Dragoons as they paſt along. Their Officers applied to the Provoſt, and aſked if he had ordered them to go out and join the Dragoons? He told them, he had no Power to order them any where out of Town; but he had conſented, that as many as were inclined ſhould go out with the Town-Guard and Edinburgh Regiment, to ſuſtain the Dragoons in oppoſing the Rebels. The Meaſure was generally not liked by the Volunteers, and was imputed to the Provoſt as if he had been the firſt Propoſer, as one of their Officers told him with a good deal of Warmth.

After many Expoſtulations among themſelves, at laſt Mr. Drummond marched up on the Head of his Company, and ſome others followed. They went the Length of the Weſt Port and then returned.

Two of their Officers went foreward to ſtop the Town-Guard and Edinburgh Regiment, who had marched on to ſuſtain the Dragoons, and found them between the Coltbridge and Brucehill: But the Provoſt being informed of this, ſent Orders that the City Regiment and Town-Guard ſhould march foreward, and take their Orders from the commanding Officer. General Gueſt, when he heard of the Return of the Volunteers, was vexed at the Diſappointment, and ſaid, if he had expected it, he would not have ordered Hamilton's Regiment to go out to join the other in Defence of the Town.

The Provoſt ſent up Mr. Stewart, chief Conſtable, to the Caſtle, with a ſigned Order for a Number of Matches for the Uſe of the Cannon mounted on the Town-Walls, which were accordingly delivered, and brought down to the Goldſmiths-Hall.

The Provoſt conveened the Trained-Bands under their proper Colours and Officers, and gave them Notice to hold themſelves in Readineſs upon a Minute's Warning, and three Companies of them were ordered to mount Guard.

He alſo ordered the Conſtables to ſearch Houſes, of which there was any Suſpicion, for Arms and treaſonable Papers.

This Afternoon Brigadier Fowkes came to Town, and the Provoſt was called in the Evening to Lord Juſtice-Clerk's, where Lord Advocate, General Gueſt, Brigadier Fowkes, and ſeveral other Gentlemen of the Army were preſent. A Propoſal was made, that the Dragoons might be brought into Town, with a View to give them ſome Reſt and Refreſhment, and have their Horſes fed on the Street: But after the Thing was debated among the Gentlemen of the Military, who conſidered that the Avenues of the Town might be taken Poſſeſſion of by the Rebels, the Streets barricadoed, and the Houſes lined, and that the Dragoons might very probably, by this Means, fall into the Hands of the Rebels, it was agreed to be a Thing not to be attempted.

From this the Provoſt went along with Major Cochran, Captain Murray, Provoſt Drummond, and others, to the Houſe of Mrs. Clark Vintner, where a Diſpoſition was made of the ſeveral Corps of armed Men into different Quarters of the Town, particular Guards aſſigned them, and Places for their Alarm-Poſt condeſcended on, where each of them ſhould appear on the proper Signals; Copies of which were given to the commanding Officers of the different Corps.

This Afternoon the Provoſt met with Sir Robert Dickſon upon the Street, who had come in with a conſiderable Number of Volunteers; he received him with great Civility, as both his perſonal Character and Errand deſerved; immediately gave Orders that his Men ſhould be lodged in the Kirk, and that a ſufficient Quantity of Bread and Ale ſhould be carried there for a Refreſhment to them without Delay.

About this Time Meſſages were ſent to the Caſtle and Leith, to procure Gunners for loading the Cannon. Mr. Gueſt could afford us none out of the Caſtle; Bailie Set made ſearch over all Leith, aſſiſted by David Dryburgh, Charles and Alexander Sheriffs, and ſent us up what could be found found there; Application was alſo made to the Urſilla Man of War, and the Anſwer returned, That the Captain could ſend none.

By Orders from the Lord Provoſt, the great Guns upon the Walls were begun to be charged on Sunday Evening, and the Gunners employed continued to charge them till Two o'Clock next Morning.

The Provoſt this Evening ſent up an Officer of the Town-Guard to beg the General would order a Signal to be put up in the Caſtle, to diſcover the Road the Rebels ſhould take to Edinburgh, that Meaſures might be taken to turn the whole Force as much as poſſible to that Side; and an Anſwer was returned, That his Requeſt ſhould be complied with.

All this Sunday Evening, from Seven to Twelve, the Provoſt was conſtantly employed, either in the Goldſmiths-Hall, or at the different Guards of the Town, converſing with the Military Men about Orders, or with the Captains of the Trained-Bands. At Twelve at Night he began the grand Round, which laſted till about Four o'Clock in the Morning.

Monday, September 16. Having gone home for an Hour or two, he was upon the Streets again at Six in the Morning, reviewing the Barricadoes that were making at the Ports, and ſuperintending the other publick Works about the Town.

At Nine o'Clock, He ordered Bread and Ale to be carried out to the Dragoons; and upon Mr. Fowkes's applying to him for the Town-Guard and Edinburgh Regiment to be ſent out to join the Dragoons, he immediately ordered them to parade in the Parliament-Cloſe, and march out, which they did.

He next gave orders that Mutton, Beef, &c. ſhould be bought, and boiled in all the Taverns in Town, for the Uſe of the Dragoons; and went through ſeveral of the Taverns with Mr. Baillie and Mr. Hamilton, and gave Directions thereanent.

Being informed by Colonel Clayton, that the Proviſions firſt ſent out were not ſufficient, he expreſſed his Diſpleaſure that his firſt Orders had not been fully obeyed, ſent to the Bakers and Brewers, and cauſed preſt Carts to carry out Proviſions.

Betwixt Ten and Eleven o'Clock, When ſitting in a Cloſet in the Coffee-Houſe with Commiſſary Leſlie, Andrew Alves came in to them, and ſaid, That, in his Way to Town, he happened to ride near the Rebels; that the Duke of Perth knew him, and ordered him to come nearer; and upon hearing he was going to Edinburgh, ſaid, I underſtand the Provoſt and Magiſtrates are making great Preparations againſt us, but we are reſolved to pay them a Viſit; if they will keep their Arms in their Poſſeſſion, and allow us to come peaceably into Town, they ſhall be civilly dealt with; if not, they muſt lay their Account with Military Execution, or Words to that Purpoſe: And turning to a young Man he called the Prince, he aſked him, Whether or not that was his Pleaſure? Which the other ſeemed to aſſent to. The Provoſt ſaid, 'Mr. Alves, this is a very extraordinary Meſſage; but they will find we are not to be intimidated by 'Threats.'

The Provoſt went immediately over to the Goldſmiths-Hall, and acquainted two Gentlemen of the Committee of what Mr. Alves had ſaid, and conſulted with them what was proper to be done. They were of Opinion it was moſt proper to neglect it, and take no Step that might publiſh to the Inhabitants the Threatning they had received.

The Provoſt, after reviewing ſome of the Works about the Town, on his Return to the Street, was informed, that Andrew Alves had adventured to repeat to others what had paſſed betwixt him and the Rebels; upon which he went ſtraight to the Lord Advocate to aſk his Advice, where he found Mr. Alves; and, by the Advocate's Advice, he ſigned a Warrant for committing him.

Monday, September 16*th, Afternoon about Three o'Clock*, The Provoſt being then in Mrs. Wilſon's, was called out from the Company by Mr. Baillie and Mr. Farreſt, who acquainted him, that a Petition to the Magiſtrates was handing about among the Inhabitants, deſiring they might be conſulted upon what was proper to be done upon this Juncture. At this the Provoſt was ſurpriſed, as well as vexed: However, as ſoon as he came out to go to the Goldſmiths-Hall, he was met by a great Crowd of Inhabitants, who delivered to him the Petition, which is produced in Proceſs, praying, 'That the Magiſtrates, before they came to any Reſolution, 'either of defending or giving up the Town, would call a Meeting of all 'the principal Inhabitants and Heritors, at preſent in the Place, to con-'ſult with them what is proper to be done in an Affair of ſo great Im-'portance.' Upon this the Provoſt immediately went to the Goldſmiths-Hall; they followed him, and endeavoured to crowd in: Upon which he was provoked, and aſked, If they meant to inforce their Petition by Numbers; begged they would be gone, and leave it to the Magiſtrates, who were to conſider what was moſt expedient to be done with reſpect to the Place; and immediately he cauſed the Drum to go about, and order the Inhabitants to retire from the Streets, who were all in an Uproar upon hearing that the Dragoons had retreated from the Rebels.

The Provoſt, in his Way to the Ports, met with the Lord Advocate and Sollicitor, who aſked him, If he did not think 100 Dragoons might be of Uſe to be brought into the Town; and he agreeing that they might, the Advocate aſked him to ſign a Letter in Conjunction with him and the Sollicitor, to General Gueſt, to ſend in 100 Dragoons; which the Provoſt immediately did, and then went on to ſee the Gates barricadoed.

After the Gates were barricadoed, he ordered Mr. Stewart the Conſtable to mount the Walls, and look out for the Dragoons; and ſo ſoon as he ſhould ſee them come near the Walls, to open the Gates and let them in: He had before provided a large Quantity of Hay for the Uſe of their Horſes.

As he was returning up the Weſtbow, a Citizen of very conſiderable Subſtance, and undoubted Loyalty, came to him, and ſaid, 'He applied to 'him in Name of himſelf, and many of the moſt conſiderable Citizens, 'to expoſtulate and beg, that the Defence of the Town might not be in-'ſiſted on, which could only tend to expoſe the Lives of the Citizens.' To which the Provoſt anſwered, 'That his Requeſt could not be granted.'

In returning to the Goldſmiths-Hall, the Provoſt gave Captain Hamilton Orders with reſpect to the City-Guard, 20 of them to remain at the Weſt Port, 20 to go to Briſto Port, 20 to the Netherbow, and 40 of them to remain in the Guard, to move to any Place where they ſhould be moſt needed, which was allowed to be a very proper Diſpoſition.

During all the Way in his Return, the Cries of the People were heard on every Side, 'What, would he have them all murdered, by defending 'the Town after the Dragoons had run away?' And other Words to that Purpoſe.

As ſoon as he was returned to the Hall, where the Committee was met, he ſent Bailie Hamilton, Robert Baillie, and John Forreſt, for the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, Lord Advocate, and the Sollicitor, to beg they would come and aſſiſt them with their Counſel, ſaying, He chuſed to be determined only by their Advice. They returned, and reported that they had all gone out of Town.

The Provoſt expreſſed great Concern when he found himſelf deſtitute of the Advice he moſt relied upon at ſo critical a Juncture, and then deſired that the Officers of the Army ſhould be ſent for, and the Officers of the Volunteers who were conveened at their Poſts by the ringing of the Alarm-Bell: Moſt of the Captains, and ſome other Officers of the Volunteers came; but no other Military Men were found in Town, except Captain James Murray and Major Cochran. The Lord Provoſt addreſſed himſelf to them, and ſaid, 'That, for his Part, he was willing to en-'counter any Danger for the Defence of the Town: He hoped the In-'habitants would do their Duty, and hoped the Enemy might be kept 'out until Aſſiſtance ſhould come to their Relief; and aſked Mr. Murray 'what was his Opinion?' Who ſaid, he pitied him, but was at a Loſs what Advice to give: And being farther preſſed by the Provoſt, he anſwered, That if the Volunteers, Trained-Bands, and other armed Men within the Town, were diſpoſed to do their utmoſt, he believed they might make a good Defence; but if they were not diſpoſed to fight, he would adviſe the ſending the Government's Arms to the Caſtle.

The Provoſt ſaid, 'He hoped thoſe Gentlemen who had undertaken 'the Defence of the Town, would not now abandon it when the Danger 'drew near, but remember what Expence the Town had been at, what 'Aſſurance they had given to his Majeſty, and what they had promiſed 'to perform, when the Danger was at a greater Diſtance.' He then aſked all the Captains and Officers of the Volunteers that were preſent, what he could expect from them? One ſaid, he did not find any Diſpoſition in his Men to fight: Another told, That there did not remain fifteen of the Company to which he belonged; but as he had promiſed to riſque his Life in Defence of the Town, he would ſtill do it; though he was ſure not five of the fifteen would follow him: And others of them declined to make any Anſwer at all.

About this Time Walter Groſet came into the Goldſmiths-Hall, and he ſaid he was ſent by the Lord Juſtice-Clerk and Lord Advocate, to deſire the Provoſt would ſend an Order to General Fowkes to bring the Dragoons into Town. To which he anſwered, That he was ſurpriſed at the Meſſage, after what had paſſed the Night before; that he would ſign no Order, as he had no Power over the Dragoons; but if they pleaſed to ſend them in, they ſhould be made very welcome, and we ſhould join them in Defence of the Town.

Mr. Groſet ſaid, That the Lord Advocate and Juſtice-Clerk thought it proper that the Provoſt ſhould ſign the Order. To which he anſwered, That he did not chuſe to make himſelf accountable for the Dragoons, after what he had heard in the Lord Juſtice-Clerk's laſt Night; but thought it more proper that they ſhould ſend their Orders, if they had altered their Way of Thinking about that Matter. Mr. Groſet deſired to have the Provoſt's Anſwer in Writing, with which he readily complied.

About this Time the Fears of the Inhabitants had brought a great Crowd into the Goldſmiths-Hall, and about the Door of it, who all cried out againſt the Madneſs of defending the Town, when all the Officers Civil and Military had left it, which ſhewed they underſtood it could not be defended. The Crowd ſtill increaſing, a Member of the Council propoſed they ſhould go to the New Kirk Iſle, as they were like to be ſmothered in that narrow Place: Upon which the Lord Provoſt left the Hall, and went out to the Parliament-Cloſe, where great Numbers came up to him, remonſtrating, in the ſtrongeſt Terms, againſt attempting any Defence, which could have no other Effect, but to expoſe them to Military Execution.

The Provoſt did all he could to reanimate the People; but when he was talking to them, Mr. Cunningham of Gairdner's Dragoons came up to him on Horſeback, with a Meſſage from Lieutenant-Colonel Whitney, deſiring he would order the Dragoons Baggage to be forthwith ſent out to them, becauſe they were going to Haddington; that they found they had been greatly deceived in the Number of the Rebels; for now they computed them to be near Eight Thouſand. This Account, which was given by Mr. Cunningham in the Hearing of the Crowd, did greatly contribute to increaſe the Terror of the Inhabitants, who were heard crying every where, What a Madneſs it was to pretend to ſtand out againſt ſuch a Number.

The Provoſt expoſtulated with them in the New Kirk Iſle, 'That he 'hoped they would not now abandon the Defence of the Town; that he 'was ready to concur in it to the utmoſt of his Power, and expected the 'Danger would not be ſo great as ſome Men's Fears made it.' But upon this ſuch a Noiſe was raiſed, that nothing could be heard but a general Cry for giving up the Town, not above two or three of the whole Multitude preſent appearing to be of a different Opinion.

About this Time a Letter was thrown in, directed to the Lord Provoſt and Magiſtrates, which was opened by Walter Orrock; and when he told it was ſigned by Charles P. R. the Provoſt ſtopt him, and ſaid, he would not witneſs the reading ſuch a Letter: Upon which many calling out to read, he ſaid he had been too long there, and with Difficulty got to the Door, and returned to the Goldſmiths-Hall, where the Magiſtrates alſo came, and a great Number of the Inhabitants, and immediately they ſent to conveen the Town's Aſſeſſors; but only one of the four was to be found: They aſked his Opinion what was to be done with reſpect to the Letter, and whether it ſhould be read? But he having declined to give any Opinion, and the Inhabitants expreſſing the utmoſt Uneaſineſs both within and without Doors, the Letter was read without any Authority from the Provoſt, and contained a Threatening of their higheſt Reſentment, in caſe any Oppoſition was made to their Entry, or that any of the Cannon or Arms were allowed to be carried off.

After

After this nothing was to be heard but loud Cries againſt a fruitleſs Oppoſition, and againſt Delivery up of the Town's Arms to the Caſtle, which, it was ſaid, would occaſion Deſtruction to the City; and many in the Hall inſiſted that a Deputation ſhould be ſent out, to beg that Hoſtilities might not be commenced againſt the City, until they had Time to deliberate what Anſwer they ſhould return; and, as it was believed the Enemy was at the Gates, the Deputation was immediately hurried away, viz. Bailies Gavin Hamilton, John Yetts, David Inglis, and Conveener Norrie.

The Volunteers in the mean time did, without applying to the Lord Provoſt for Orders or Directions, of their own Accord, take a Reſolution to give up their Arms to the Caſtle, which they forthwith executed, and thereby diſmiſt themſelves from the Service.

One of their principal Officers, whoſe Zeal or Bravery was never at any time called in queſtion, upon his Return from the Caſtle, was met on the Street by a Gentleman, who told him, the Rebels were not near ſo numerous or formidable as they had imagined, and that it would be a Shame to ſurrender the Town to them. But the Officer anſwered, It might be ſo, but it could not now be helped; that Information had come too late.

And, ſome Hours before, another Gentleman of the ſame Corps had ſent a Meſſage to his Wife, begging her not to be under any Fear about him, for the Town was to be given up.

At this Time a Meſſage came from the Caſtle, by Robert Griffith a Gunner, deſiring that the Cannon on the Town-Walls might be nailed up. It was the Opinion of the Committee, that the Provoſt ſhould give no Orders in theſe Matters, after what had paſt; but he told the Meſſenger, that Mr. Gueſt was at Liberty to do what he thought beſt for the Service of the Government, and nothing hindered him to ſpike up the Cannon, if he thought fit: And he was alſo told, that the Town-Officers would ſhew him where the Cannon were, for that Purpoſe.

About the ſame time the Adjutant of the City Regiment wanted to know what ſhould be done with the Arms under his Care; and was told, that it was not thought proper the Provoſt ſhould give Orders thereanent; that the Council was afraid the City might ſuffer from the Cruelty of the Rebels, and even that they themſelves might ſuffer from the Populace, if ſuch Orders were given; but, at the ſame time, that the Soldiers of the new-levied Regiment, poſſeſt of thoſe Arms, ſhould be privately acquainted to return them to the Caſtle; and by this means the whole Arms of the City-Regiment were returned, except thoſe of the Men upon Guard.

But it was not practicable to get the Arms of the Trained-Bands conveyed to the Caſtle in this Manner. Theſe Arms were in poſſeſſion of the ſubſtantial Burgeſſes and Houſholders of the Town, who conſidered them as their own Property, having been bought with their own Money when admitted Burgeſſes: And as moſt of them had not only their Wives and Children, but the greateſt Part of their Subſtance within the Town, they would not conſent to expoſe all that is dear to them to the Rage of an incenſed Enemy, for the ſake of keeping thoſe Arms out of their Hands, eſpecially as they were in themſelves of very little Value, being generally old Guns without Bayonets, bought at Half-a-Crown or three Shillings a-piece, more for Shew than Uſe, as they were never otherways employed than at a Birth-Day Parade.

But, of little Value as they were, the Provoſt was deſirous, if poſſible, they ſhould be ſaved out of the Hands of the Rebels; and as neither he nor the Council were able of themſelves to compel the Inhabitants to part with them, he thought of the only Expedient that could be taken in ſuch a Caſe, which was, to ſend a Meſſage to the Caſtle to inform Mr. Gueſt of the Situation of the Town, and the general Conſternation of the Inhabitants, and to beg that he would ſend a Party down to take up their Arms, as the Council was not at liberty to give Orders, for fear of the Conſequences with regard to the Town. This Meſſage was delivered to General Gueſt, but was not complied with.

From the Goldſmiths-Hall the Committee went to the Council-Houſe, and were alarmed with the Cry, that the Rebels had broke into the Town. This was owing to the Fright of a Party of Dragoons, who guarded their Baggage at the Netherbow Port, and when the Port was opened to let out the Baggage, a great Crowd burſt in, which the Dragoons imagined were the Rebels, and rode off as hard as they could, in great Terror, to the Caſtle.

Upon this Alarm the Commandant put the Provoſt in mind of the Threatning ſent to the Town, that every Man who was found in Arms ſhould be put to death; and aſked the Provoſt what the Trained-Bands ſhould do at the Weigh-Houſe and Weſt Port, when the Rebels had already burſt in at the other End of the Town? The only Anſwer any Man alive could give, in ſuch Circumſtances, was, they ſhould quit their Arms to avoid being maſſacred.

After this Alarm was over, Mr. Groſet arrived with Accounts that Sir John Cope had been ſeen off Dunbar, and, as the Wind was unfavourable for bringing them up the Frith, it was thought he would land that Night at Dunbar, and might ſoon come to their Relief. Upon which Bailie James Mansfield was immediately diſpatched to call back the Deputies, and a Town Officer was alſo ſent to run the ſhorteſt Way and ſtop them; but neither could overtake them.

It being now again reſolved, upon this Proſpect of Relief, to put the Town in a State of Defence, Mr. Groſet, and Mr. Lindſay Secretary at War, went up to the Caſtle along with Provoſt Coutts, and acquainted the General with the good News of Sir John Cope's Arrival, and aſked if he would think it proper to order the Dragoons back for the Defence of the City, and whether he would deliver back the Arms that had been returned to the Caſtle. General Gueſt's Anſwer was, That he did not think it for his Majeſty's Service to order the Dragoons back to Edinburgh, it being more fit they ſhould join Sir John Cope's ſmall Army: That the Gentlemen of the Council might put the Burghers Arms into the beſt Hands; and if, thereafter, the Lord Provoſt ſhould find a Diſpoſition in the Inhabitants to defend the Town, he might let him know: And added, that he would ſend down a Meſſage to the Serjeant that was nailing up the Cannon on the Walls, to ſtop him.

After the Gentlemen had returned from the Caſtle, it was propoſed in Council, by a Captain of the Volunteers, that the Alarm-Bell ſhould be rung: But it was objected by ſome of the Members, that nothing of that Kind ought to be done till the Deputies were returned, leſt the Rebels, who were apprehended to be very near, ſhould thereby be enraged, and make them ſuffer for it. One of the Reverend Miniſters of the City, who had been moſt active and zealous in the Service of the Government, and ſome other well-affected Burgeſſes, agreed in this Opinion; and all of them were poſitive that nothing could be done for Defence of the City, unleſs the Dragoons were brought back: Upon which Mr. Groſet roſe up, and ſaid he would go and endeavour to bring them back; and Provoſt Drummond and he went off upon that Errand, but did not again return.

Mr. Lindſay, the Secretary at War, aſked the Lord Provoſt, if he would ſend an Order to General Gueſt to re-deliver the Arms which had been ſent up to the Caſtle. Had the Provoſt been capable of any Degree of the bad Intention the Purſuer would now ſuppoſe, it was eaſy to comply with this Requeſt, for one-tenth Part of thoſe Arms would have been of more Value to the Rebels, than the whole Arms that were in the Hands of the Burghers: But, as his conſtant Intention was to bring no Arms or Ammunition from the Caſtle, but as there was neceſſary Occaſion for them, leſt they ſhould fall into the Hands of the Rebels, ſo, agreeably to his Intention, he anſwered Mr. Lindſay, 'That, before he gave 'ſuch Orders, he behoved to ſee a better Diſpoſition in the Inhabitants 'to Defend the City.'

For, ſince the Alarm of the Rebels burſting into the Town, moſt of the Inhabitants, dreading the Execution of their Threats againſt ſuch as ſhould be found in Arms, had quitted their Arms and gone home.

The Gentlemen who had gone to the Rebel Camp returned, and brought their Anſwer, requiring the City to receive their Prince as Prince Regent, and that no Arms or Ammunition ſhould be ſuffered to be carried off or concealed; and demanding an Anſwer againſt Two o'Clock in the Morning, their Camp being then at Gray's Mill, about two Miles diſtant from the City. After receiving this Anſwer, the Gentlemen of the Council, with ſome other Citizens, continued together deliberating what was to be done, till Two o'Clock in the Morning, many of them expecting Relief from the Dragoons, which Provoſt Drummond and Mr. Groſet had been ſent ſome time before to bring back, if poſſible, to their Aſſiſtance.

When the Clock ſtruck Two, and no Relief came, it was propoſed to ſend a ſecond Deputation, in order to gain a further Time, which was unanimouſly agreed to; and Bailie Robert Baillie, Provoſt Coutts, with two or three other Councillors, were ſent off to beg a Delay till nine or ten o'Clock, by reaſon the Burghers were all in Bed, and could not be conveened for ſeveral Hours: At the ſame time they were authorized by the Provoſt to ſay, 'That he would rather die than comply with the 'Condition of receiving their Prince as Regent of Scotland.'

Meſſages were at the ſame time ſent to the principal Inhabitants and Citizens, to come and meet with the Council, and concert what was proper to be done; but few of them had come, when the Deputies returned with an Anſwer much to the ſame Purpoſe with the former; and ſoon after Notice was brought, that a Part of the Rebel Army had ruſhed in at the Netherbow Port, and made themſelves Maſters of the City Guard, who had been ſo harraſſed with the extraordinary Duty all the preceding Week, and by being out under Arms for two Days before along with the Dragoons, that they were hardly fit to do any Duty, far leſs able to oppoſe an Army of Rebels, who were numerous and hardy enough to defeat a regular diſciplined Body of the King's Forces a few Days after.

From the above Narrative, which is in every Particular ſtrictly agreeable to the Fact as it happened, it appears in what manner this City had the Misfortune to fall into the Poſſeſſion of the Rebels, after all poſſible Care taken by the Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Council, to prevent it. Some of them indeed were of Opinion, as well as many other of the wiſeſt and beſt-affected Citizens in the Town, that the Scheme of defending the City, againſt an Attack, was in itſelf impracticable. The old Walls are hardly ſufficient to keep out ſmuggled Goods, but by no means able to endure any Siege or Attack: Beſides, there were ſo many other obvious Ways the Town might be forced to ſurrender, by throwing in Fire, burning the Houſes which adjoin to the Town in ſome Places where there is no Wall, cutting the Water-Pipes, which would ſtarve the Town in a Day, &c. that a great many well-affected Burgeſſes thought the beſt thing could be done for the Service of the Government, was to diſpoſe of any thing that could be of uſe to the Rebels, and leave the Gates of the City open.

But, though this was the Opinion of the Provoſt, as well as many of the Council and moſt ſubſtantial Citizens, yet, when the other Scheme was reſolved, the Provoſt exerted all the Vigilance he was capable of to make it effectual, as appears from the Circumſtances above related. He ſpent his whole Time in the publick Service, from Six o'Clock in the Morning to Twelve at Night, ſometimes till Four next Morning, going about viewing the publick Works, giving Orders, adviſing Expedients, taking and deſiring to have the beſt Advice: And, at laſt, when the Thing came to the Puſh, he was aſhamed to ſee many, who had appeared keen for the Scheme in the Beginning, unwilling to carry it to the laſt Execution; and that, in general, the Inhabitants were ſo terrified by the frightful Notion they had got of the Rebels, that he could find no Concurrence to make an Oppoſition, and keep out the City, not even from thoſe who had firſt taken Arms in its Defence. He expreſſed his Sentiments in as ſtrong a Manner in time of Danger, as the Proſecutors can now declaim at Eaſe, of the Reproach it would be to the City to be ſurrendered without Defence, after all the Preparations that had been made, and the Aſſurances they had given his Majeſty to that Purpoſe; and declared himſelf ready to mount the Walls with the ſmalleſt Number of Men that could ſupport him: But the Terror they were in from the Cruelty of the Rebels, and the little Proſpect they had of making an effectual Defence, without farther Aſſiſtance than they had within the Town, prevailed over his Expoſtulations, and rendered his Deſign abortive, which he was willing to have proſecuted at the Hazard of his Life.

the moſt extreme Hardſhips that ever were impoſed in this Country, to hinder my Witneſſes from coming up to me; ſo that, if your Lordſhips do not, in your great Juſtice and Goodneſs, think it proper to order, in the Manner your Lordſhips pleaſe, to have my Witneſſes come up, I muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhips. You may do what you pleaſe.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, I particularly aſked your Lordſhip, Whether you would call any Witneſſes to prove what you alledged in your Defence: To which you anſwered, That you would not.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I would call Witneſſes upon no other Account than this that I have mentioned. I have Witneſſes to prove the Falſity of what has been ſaid by the Witneſſes againſt me; but, ſince I do not get Time to do that, I give it up.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordſhip does not attend to what I ſaid, which was, That I aſked you Two or Three times, Whether you would call any Witneſſes to prove any Part of your Defence: To which you ſaid, No. If you had any Witneſſes, why did you not call them at that Time?

Lord Lovat. This Miniſter was brought up as one of the Counter-Evidence. I told your Lordſhip, That I would call no Witneſſes that Day.

Lord High Steward. Is that Miniſter here?

Lord Lovat. He is here.

Lord High Steward. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, It is certainly an irregular Method, in which the noble Lord at the Bar would proceed, to call Witneſſes after the Reply; but I deſire to know of you, Whether you oppoſe my Lord Lovat's calling Witneſſes now?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, It is a Difficulty upon us, who are appointed Managers, to carry on this Proſecution, and would do it with all the Candour and Indulgence poſſible, to inſiſt, That the noble Lord, who is trying for his Life, ſhould not now be admitted to produce Witneſſes; but it is, perhaps, as difficult to know, how to diſpenſe with that which is the known Courſe and Method of Proceedings, merely becauſe the Priſoner, in an irregular and improper Manner, thinks fit to deſire it. The Managers do not oppoſe their being produced, from an Imagination that they would ſay any thing material for the noble Lord at the Bar; but, if your Lordſhips are to break through all Methods and Rules of Proceedings, your Lordſhips will conſider the Conſequence. The noble Lord at the Bar told your Lordſhips, That he did not intend to call any Witneſſes; and, upon that Foot, the Managers replied. He has now told you, That he would do it. But what is it that he would examine them to? Is it to make out any Part of his Defence to the Treaſon charged on him? That is not pretended; but to prove the Hardſhips he complains of, in being hindered from having his Witneſſes; and the noble Lord at the Bar wants your Lordſhips Order now for their coming. The Tendency of this, if it means any thing beſides Complaint, is to put off the Cauſe after it is heard; and, unleſs I had a greater Authority than I have at preſent, I cannot take upon myſelf, and I do not find that the reſt of the Gentlemen, who are Managers, can take upon them, to depart from the known eſtabliſhed Courſe of Proceeding, and to introduce a Precedent that may be of bad Conſequence. And, my Lords, I can hardly think, that the noble Lord at the Bar would inſiſt upon doing it, but becauſe he thought, that the Managers muſt inſiſt, that he ought not. There is nothing that has occurred now, that did not, muſt not, have occurred to him before; and when the Priſoner thought fit to declare to your Lordſhips, after having full Time allowed him for the matureſt Conſideration, and Counſel appointed for his Aſſiſtance, That he would not call any Witneſſes, you cannot but think ſuch Determination of his was upon the Advice that his Counſel gave him; and your Lordſhips will hardly think, that the noble Lord can, at preſent, thus unadviſedly determine to call any Witneſſes, which before, upon the Foot of the Advice he muſt be preſumed to have taken, he determined not to do, from any Expectation that they would be able to do him any real Service, but from Views of another Kind. The Managers therefore doubt not that your Lordſhips will proceed in this Caſe, as you would in any other, to conſider the Evidence, and give ſuch Judgment on the Whole, as your Lordſhips ſhall think moſt right and juſt.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I have often told your Lordſhips of the Infirmities that I labour under: I have often mentioned them to you; and the Want of Memory is the thing I regret moſt. I have been a Cripple theſe Four Years, and therefore not very capable to go to head Men in the Rebellion; yet I am much ſurpriſed to hear that Honourable Perſon, that is at the Head of the Law, and very deſervedly placed there, that he ſhould loſe his Memory in an Hour's Time. My Lords, the Reaſon is plain to your Lordſhips, why I did not adduce Witneſſes this Morning: The Reaſon was, becauſe I begged of your Lordſhips Time to bring my Witneſſes up from Scotland, that they might be produced to prove my Innocence; and the only Reaſon that I now deſire to call theſe two Witneſſes, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, is, that they may prove before that great Man ſuch Examples of extreme Hardſhips, as he will never find out in all his Law-Books.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, You mentioned but One Witneſs at firſt; and now you mention Two: Who is the other?

Lord Lovat. The Two are, Donald Fraſer and Alexander Fraſer.

Lord High Steward. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, Do you oppoſe my Lord Lovat's being admitted, though it is irregular, to call theſe Two Witneſſes?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, I think we cannot, conſiſtently with our Duty to the Commons, give up this Point, which would be attended with many dangerous Conſequences, the whole of which your Lordſhips may not now be able to foreſee, if a Man, when he has cloſed his Defence, and ſays, That he will examine no Witneſſes, and the Managers have replied, ſhould afterwards be admitted, on ſuch a Pretence as this, to examine Witneſſes.

Earl of Cholmondeley. My Lords, I am ſatisfied that the Manner, in which the noble Lord at the Bar deſires now to call his Witneſſes, is totally different from any Proceeding that I ever ſaw; but, as the accuſed Lord, in his Defence, has alledged ſeveral Hardſhips that he has undergone, in having his Witneſſes prevented from attending his Tryal, and as that contains the higheſt Reflection upon the Government, and thoſe who are employed under it, I would therefore deſire to know of the noble Lord at the Bar, Whether, upon the Speech that he offered at the Bar, as it contains Objections to the Credit and Weight of the Evidence, and Complaints of undue Practices; whether, upon theſe Complaints, the noble Lord at the Bar deſires the Opinion of the Lords, whether they will give him further Time, in order to produce his Witneſſes?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I was fully determined never to examine any Witneſſes, when I found I was under ſuch Diſadvantages; and I humbly beg your Lordſhips Protection and Kindneſs to give me Time.

MR. SOLLICITOR GENERAL.

My Lords,

THE Matter now agitated is of the utmoſt Conſequence not only to the preſent, but to all future Proceedings of this Kind; and I doubt, whether it is yet thoroughly underſtood, in its full Extent.

The Witneſſes the noble Lord now propoſes to call, are not to his Defence, or in Support of his Innocence.

If they were, how irregular ſoever it may be to offer them now, in my Opinion, and, I dare ſay, the other Managers are of the ſame, I ſhould be for conſenting to their being called. We ſhould never contend, though in Strictneſs we might, that any Evidence of this Kind came too late to be heard.

But the Deſign of calling them, as now opened, is to ſhew, that, from ſome Obſtruction given to the bringing up his Witneſſes, his Tryal ought to be put off to an indefinite Time; and that he may have new Orders to ſummon and compel Witneſſes to come from Scotland. This we oppoſe, becauſe the Application intended to be ſupported by it cannot now be made.

The Speech made by my Lord conſiſted of Two Parts: Firſt, a Deſire to put off his Tryal indefinitely; and, if your Lordſhips ſhould not think fit to comply with this Deſire, then he reſted his Defence upon Obſervations, and Objections to the Force and Credibility of that Evidence which had been offered to prove his Accuſation.

In this he was very proper; for though a Perſon accuſed calls no Witneſſes, yet, if the Charge againſt him is not clearly made out by legal and credible Evidence, he ought to be acquitted. Being aſked, whether he had any Witneſſes to call, he declared he had none.

Had he deſired to take your Lordſhips Opinion, whether the Tryal ſhould not ſtay till he could ſend to Scotland for Witneſſes, we ſhould have oppoſed it. Your Lordſhips calling to the Managers to proceed, was a Determination, that you would not deliberate about ſtaying the Trial.

I own freely to your Lordſhips, the Reaſon why I did not take particular Notice of the noble Lord's Complaint, was, becauſe I underſtood it to be meant as an Artifice to palliate his not going into any Evidence: And I did not think it neceſſary, I did not care, to endeavour to wipe off from his Apology any Varniſh of this Kind with which he thought fit to colour it. One thing, had I thought of it, I would have taken notice of: He was pleaſed to ſay, that ſeveral Witneſſes, brought up in Support of the Proſecution, were not called by the Managers, becauſe they would have proved the Hardſhips he complains of. I can aſſure your Lordſhips, and every other Gentleman of the Committee will join in what I ſay, no one Witneſs was left unexamined for that Reaſon. It is true, more Perſons were brought up to be Witneſſes than we called; but the Reaſon of not calling them was, either becauſe we thought what they had to ſay not material enough; or elſe, becauſe they were liable to an Objection the noble Lord had made; which, whether well or ill founded, we did not care to give your Lordſhips the Trouble of diſputing.

In conſequence of what fell from your Lordſhips, we told the noble Lord, in the Courſe of the Tryal, that any Witneſs examined by us ſhould attend to be examined by him, if he deſired it, and would give Notice: We ſhould have done the ſame with regard to any Perſon brought up as a Witneſs, tho' not examined.

As to this whole Matter of Complaint, the Managers are intire Strangers to it. Nothing of that Kind has been done with their Privity or Knowledge.

And this brings me to the Point, Whether Witneſſes ſhall now be heard at this Time, to prove any ſuch Ground for putting off the Trial ſine Die.

We oppoſe it, becauſe, true or falſe, the Tryal cannot now be put off; and it would be a moſt dangerous Precedent, to go into an Ex parte Examination of ſuch collateral Matters. Hearing the Evidence ſuppoſes your Lordſhips can do ſomething in Conſequence of it: If you cannot, it would be irregular and improper to go into it.

Before your Lordſhips appoint the Time of Tryal you take into Conſideration the Nature of the Charge, and the Place where the Facts ariſe, in order to allow a reaſonable Time for Preparation, and bringing Witneſſes.

Your Lordſhips did ſo in the preſent Caſe; and, after weighing all Circumſtances, you appointed the 23d of February.

If, thro' any Accident, the Time fixed is too ſhort, your Lordſhips are always open to Applications, which muſt be ſupported by Evidence, to ſhew the Delay is not affected; that all due Diligence has been uſed; and that the Witneſſes are material, and expected to come within a certain Time.

Upon the Application of the noble Lord, your Lordſhips deferred this Tryal to the 5th of March.

Upon another Application by him, you deferred it to the 9th of March, the Day named in his Petition.

If he had any Ground ſufficient for deferring the Tryal longer, he ſhould have applied to your Lordſhips before it began; but, upon the Ground now mentioned, it could not have been deferred, even in that Way, becauſe it is plain, this Matter, whatever there be in it, was within his Knowledge, at the Time of the other Applications. Hugh Fraſer, his Agent, who went down, as his Lordſhip ſays, to bring up his Witneſſes, made an Affidavit, annexed to a Petition preſented by his Lordſhip on the 2d of March, for putting off the Tryal; and was called in, and examined at your Lordſhips Bar.

There was likewiſe an Affidavit annexed to his Lordſhip's Petition, preſented on the 3d of March; and not a Syllable of this Complaint ever ſuggeſted; which ſhews, that they thought no Streſs could be laid upon it;

it; and that it was not to be supported. In the Courſe of the Trial hitherto your Lordſhips have heard nothing of it; on the contrary, you have heard of his Witneſſes, and what they were to prove.

There is no Precedent of putting off a Trial indefinitely, after the Evidence for the Proſecution is cloſed; I dare ſay there never will be ſuch a Precedent. At ſooneſt this Trial could not come on again before the next Seſſion of Parliament.

We oppoſe the attempting to prove a Matter upon which your Lordſhips cannot now do any thing; but I deſire it may be underſtood, that we do not oppoſe, tho' it be at an improper Time, the calling any Witneſſes upon the Merits of his Defence, either to diſprove the Evidence againſt him, or to aſſert his own Innocence.

Then the Duke of Newcaſtle moved to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament: And the Lord High Steward going back to his Chair, the Houſe was adjourned accordingly: And then the Lords returned in the ſame Order as before.

After ſome Time, the Lords, and others, returned into Weſtminſter-Hall, in the ſame Order as uſual; and the Peers having taken their Places, and the Lord High Steward being ſeated in his Chair, the Houſe was reſumed.

Then Proclamation was made for Silence, as uſual.

L. H. S. Lieutenant of the Tower of London, take the Priſoner from the Bar; but you are not to take him away to the Tower yet.

Lord Lovat. If your Lordſhips would ſend me to the Highlands, I would not go to the Tower any more.

[The Priſoner was taken from the Bar accordingly.]

L. H. S. Your Lordſhips have heard and conſidered the Evidence in this Cauſe, and every thing that has been alledged by the Managers for the Houſe of Commons, and by the Priſoner. The ſolemn and eſtabliſhed Method of your Proceedings requires, that I ſhould aſk your Lordſhips Opinions ſeverally upon the Queſtion, Whether the noble Lord the Priſoner is Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands impeached, or Not Guilty; and that thoſe Opinions ſhould be given in the Abſence of the Priſoner. My Lords, this has always been your Rule; and after that is done, the Priſoner is to be brought to the Bar again, and to be acquainted by me with the Reſult of thoſe Opinions. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to proceed now to give your Opinions upon the Queſtion of Guilty, or Not Guilty?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Proclamation was then made for Silence, as before.

Then the Lord High Steward ſtood up uncovered; and, beginning with the youngeſt Peer, ſaid,

L. H. S. Henry Arthur Lord Herbert of Chirbury, What ſays your Lordſhip? Is Simon Lord Lovat Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands impeached, or Not Guilty?

Whereupon Henry Arthur Lord Herbert of Chirbury, ſtanding up in his Place uncovered, and laying his Right Hand upon his Breaſt, anſwered,

Lord Herbert. Guilty, upon my Honour.

In like Manner, the ſeveral Lords aftermentioned, being all that were preſent, being reſpectively aſked the ſame Queſtion, anſwered as followeth:

Samuel Lord Sandys. Guilty, upon my Honour.
Richard Lord Edgecumbe. Guilty, upon my Honour.

Then the Lord High Steward laying his Right Hand upon his Breaſt, ſaid,

Lord High Steward. My Lords, I am of Opinion, That Simon Lord Lovat is Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands impeached, upon my Honour.

L. H. S. My Lords, There are One hundred and Seventeen of your Lordſhips preſent; and you have unanimouſly found, That Simon Lord Lovat is Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands impeached.

Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure, that he ſhould be brought to the Bar, and acquainted therewith?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Proclamation was made for Silence; and another Proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring the Priſoner to the Bar; which was done in the ſame Order as before: And then Proclamation was again made for Silence, as uſual.

L. H. S. Simon Lord Lovat, The Lords have conſidered the Charge of High-Treaſon, which has been brought againſt you by the Houſe of Commons: They have conſidered the Evidence, and all that has been offered to maintain the Charge: They have alſo conſidered every thing that has been alledged in your Lordſhip's Defence: And, upon the whole Matter, their Lordſhips have unanimouſly found, that you are guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof you ſtand impeached.

Lord Preſident. My Lords, I move your Lordſhips to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

The Houſe was accordingly adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament; and the Lords and others returned in the ſame Order as before.

And the Houſe being reſumed in the Chamber of Parliament,

Ordered, That this Houſe will proceed further, in order to the giving of Judgment againſt Simon Lord Lovat, To-morrow, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon, in Weſtminſter-Hall.—And

A Meſſage was ſent to the Houſe of Commons, by the former Meſſengers, to acquaint them therewith.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do take back Simon Lord Lovat, and bring him again to the Bar of this Houſe in Weſtminſter-Hall, To-morrow, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Thurſday the 19*th of* March, 1746.

The Seventh Day.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon the Lords and others came from the Chamber of Parliament, in the ſame Order as on the Firſt Day, into Weſtminſter-Hall; where the Commons, and their Managers, were in the Seats prepared for them reſpectively, as before: And the Lords took their Places in the Court, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

Lord High Steward. The Houſe is reſumed. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure, that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence as uſual, and afterwards the following Proclamation:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Priſoner Simon Lord Lovat to the Bar, purſuant to the Order of the Houſe of Lords to you directed.

The Deputy Governor of the Tower brought the Priſoner to the Bar, in the like Form as before; and then he kneeled down.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordſhip may riſe.

The Serjeant at Arms, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, made another Proclamation for Silence.

Lord High Steward. Simon Lord Lovat, When your Lordſhip was laſt at this Bar, I acquainted you, That your Peers had found you Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof you ſtand impeached, by means whereof you are convicted of that High Treaſon: And I am now to aſk your Lordſhip, What you have to ſay, Why Judgment of Death ſhould not paſs upon you, according to Law?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I am very ſorry I gave your Lordſhips ſo much Trouble in my Trial; and I give you a Million of Thanks for your being ſo good, in your Patience and Attendance, whilſt it laſted. I thought myſelf very much loaded by one Murray, who, your Lordſhips know, was the bittereſt Evidence there was againſt me. I have ſince ſuffered by another Mr. Murray, who, I muſt ſay with Pleaſure, is an Honour to his Country, and whoſe Eloquence and Learning is much beyond what is to be expreſſed by an ignorant Man like me. I heard him with Pleaſure, tho' it was againſt me. I have the Honour to be his Relation, tho' perhaps he neither knows it, nor values it. I wiſh, that his being born in the North may not hinder him from the Preferment that his Merit and Learning deſerves. Till that Gentleman ſpoke, your Lordſhips were inclined to grant my earneſt Requeſt, and allow me further Time to bring up Witneſſes to prove my Innocence; but, it ſeems, that has been over-ruled. All now that I have to ſay, is a little in Vindication of my own Character. I was pointed out by the Honourable Managers as a moſt inveterate Enemy of the Royal Family now upon the Throne, and the moſt zealouſly attached to a Family that is not like to come upon the Throne. My Lords, I humbly beg, that your Lordſhips will take notice, that my Attachment to the Family of Hanover is proved without Conteſt, after the great Services I have done. I was honoured by the King's Favour and Countenance, that made me ſo naturally and gratefully attached to his Perſon and Family; and as I was for Twelve Years in Germany, almoſt every Day in Converſation with his Majeſty and his Family, I thought it neceſſary to know the Hiſtory of his Family; and I read it very particularly; both the publick and private Hiſtory of it: And I muſt ſay, that ſince your Lordſhips, and this Nation in general, thought fit to have a King from Germany, you could not have choſe one from a more illuſtrious Houſe; ſo great, that ſeveral Emperors of Germany have been elected from out of that Family; and they always behaved with great Diſtinction, both in the Wars, and in their own Country. I will only give one Inſtance of that, which I had from my dear Maſter the late King's own Mouth (of glorious Memory). I heard him ſay this to the Emperor's Envoy, after the Siege of Belgrade, when the Envoy told him, That there were Forty thouſand Janiſſaries killed upon the Spot: "Why, ſays he to the Envoy, I ſhall be "very glad of it; but I know the Nature of thoſe Animals: If 40,000 "of them are killed at Night, in the very Place of thoſe that are killed "40,000 will riſe up the next Morning. I have had Experience of the "War with the Turks: I was with 6000 of my own Men, at the Siege "of Buda: And, I believe, they will do me the Juſtice to ſay, that both "I and my Men behaved as we ought to have done." This ſhews, my Lords, that I always had a true Notion of the Greatneſs and Illuſtration of the Family of Hanover. I gave ſignal Proofs of it in the Year 1715; and I beg your Lordſhips will indulge me to repeat a little of what paſſed at that Time, becauſe there are ſeveral Lords here that were not then born. My Lords, when I came into England, in the Year 1714, my Deſign was, that, with the Aſſiſtance of my Friends, the late Duke of Argyll, and the preſent Duke, I ſhould endeavour to get my Remiſſion, to go down into my own Country, to endeavour to recover my Fortune, and to ſerve the Government faithfully, in what I was able. In this Situation I was, when my Lord Marſhal ſet up the Pretender's Standard at Aberdeen. It did much alarm the Court. I was ſent for, and particularly ſpoken to by the Earl of Sunderland, and my Lord Townſhend, who were always my Friends. My Lords, this preſent Duke of Argyll was ſo generous, that he would follow his brother to Scotland, and expoſe his Life as a Volunteer; and he ſuffered by it; for at the Battle of Sheriff-Muir, he had a Ball went through his Side and Arm, and had almoſt loſt his Life, if it had not been by the extraordinary Skill and Diligence of one Mr. Mac Gill, a Surgeon, who attended him. When he went down, he told me, Dear Lovat, you muſt do your beſt for us now; and I deſire you may meet me in Badenoch, with all the Men you can get together; and I will gather all the Men I can in Argyllſhire, and meet you there. I went down on Horſeback, and he went down Poſt. Before I came to my own Country, I found that the Rebels were got together in vaſt Numbers; and as Inverneſs was the great Capital of all thoſe Parts, my Lord Marſhal reſolved to ſend 2000 Men to reinforce the Garriſon of Inverneſs, that it might not be ſurpriſed. The Mac Leods and the Mac Donalds were gathered together, in order to go to Inverneſs. When I found it was impoſſible for the Earl of Ilay to come with his Men from Argyllſhire, I reſolved to diſtinguiſh myſelf, even though by a deſperate Stroke. I had gathered together 200 Men at Strathardle; with theſe I marched to Inverneſs, and inveſted it. Sir John Mac Kenzie, the then Governor, had 1000 Men in the Town; ſo I found there was nothing for it but Boldneſs. I ſent a Meſſage, which, indeed, looked like a French Gaſconade, that I would blow him, and his Garriſon, and the Caſtle, and the ſtrong Steeple, into the Air, if they did not ſurrender to me before Ten o'Clock the next Day; though I had not Two Pounds of Powder. At the ſame time, I ſent a Party of Men, in which was a pretty Gentleman of Skill, one Captain Roſs, the Laird's Brother. Whether Sir John Mac Kenzie heard this Over-night, I can't tell; but he enquired, If I was fully reſolved to attack the Town. He told him poſitively, That I was. Says he, If Simon be there, he is a deſperate Fellow; I believe I muſt leave the Town to him: And accordingly, he run off that Night, with all his Men. This I did, my Lords, before any of the loyal Clans to this Government were raiſed. After this they were pleaſed to declare me General of the King's Forces there. When I got together near 2000 Men, of which 1000 were my own, I reſolved to attack Lord Seaforth, who was coming with 2500 Men, to join Sir John Mac Kenzie, at Inverneſs, or to fight any of the Rebels that ſhould meet him: He called them ſo. He ſtood his Ground till I came within Half a Mile of him. I drew up the little Army I had in pretty good Order, being an Officer for many Years before: And I can ſay to your Lordſhips, that, I believe, I am the oldeſt Officer in Commiſſion in Great Britain; for Fifty Years ago I was Captain of Grenadiers in King William's Army. They were the Sutherland Men, Lord Ray's Men, and ſome of the Grants and Monros: But when I came to march up the Hill, to attack Lord Seaforth, I had none followed me but the Munros. When they found I was come within Sight of them, they made a precipitate Retreat to a Bridge that was near them, over a River: And afterwards, by Lord Preſident's Advice, who was then in the Army, Lord Seaforth came, and ſubmitted to me, as General of King George's Forces, promiſing immediately to lay down his Arms; which he did. This Submiſſion was brought up, and ſhewn to the Miniſtry. I then went, and reduced the Duke of Gordon, who gave me the moſt ample Submiſſion I ever read, to the King; and Aſſurances of Fidelity to him and to the Government. That Submiſſion I likewiſe ſhewed; and, if they are not conſumed in my Houſe that was burnt, they are ſtill extant. My Lords, then I purſued the Rebels from Place to Place, and chaſed them from Hill to Hill. On this Expedition I loſt my only Brother, who was a very brave young Fellow; and I never left off purſuing the Rebels till the Rebellion was ſuppreſſed and extinguiſhed: So that I may fairly ſay, that I aſſiſted to keep the Crown upon the late King's Head, as much, if not more, than any one Man of my own Rank in Britain. I had then ſeveral Invitations to come to Court; and had Three Letters of Thanks from the King's Perſon, by the Hands of the great Earl Stanhope, who was Secretary of State then; in which he ſays, that he was ſo ſenſible of my extraordinary and ſignal Services, that he would, all his Life, give me ſuch Marks of his Favour, as wou'd oblige all the Country to be zealous and faithful to me. Upon this I came to Court; and I was not diſappointed. I believe there are Lords in this Houſe, I am ſure there are a great many yet alive, that know I was a particular Favourite of the late King's; I believe more than any one of my own Rank in Scotland. I remember my Lord Townſhend told me one Day, who was my particular Friend, That I was certainly a great Favourite of the King; and if all the Miniſtry ſhould join together to hurt me, that it was not in their Power to do it; and that he would do me all the Service he could; and ſaid, the King would not refuſe any thing he ſhould aſk for me: And the King, to my own certain Knowledge, reproached the Scotch Miniſtry, that I was not provided for. But that unhappy Nation has been always divided amongſt themſelves, between the Family of the Argylls, and that of the Montroſſes; ſo that they, knowing me to be a Relation and Partizan of the Family of Argyll, they never would do any thing for me. At laſt, the King ſaid, he muſt do it himſelf; and ſent for the Hanoverian Miniſter, and told him, That he muſt immediately fix upon a Way to give me a Penſion: At laſt, it was ordered by the King's particular Inſtruction, that I ſhould have a Letter, or Patent, for myſelf, for 300 l. a Year; which I enjoyed till now, for any thing I know. Then all the Engliſh Miniſters, every one of them, were my Friends; and they propoſed that I ſhould go into the Army. Lord Cadogan, who, in the Year 1716, went with an Army into Scotland, ſent for me; and deſired me to bring up 500 Men to Badenoch, to eſcort him to Inverneſs: Which I did. They gave out, that the Highlanders were to attack him in the Woods: But when they heard, that I was with him, with the beſt Part of my Clan, they did not think it proper to attack him. After Lord Cadogan came to Inverneſs he ſent for Sir Robert Munro, who was killed at the Battle of Falkirk: He called me into his Cloſet with him, and told me, We are now fully convinced, Lord Lovat, that it was you, and a few of the King's Friends that were joined to you, that ſubdued and ſuppreſſed the Rebellion, and extinguiſhed it; and that all that was wrote in the Gazette about Lord Sutherland, was all Romance. Now, I am ſo ſenſible of thoſe Services that you have done the Government, that, if you will join yourſelf to the Duke of Marlborough, to the Earl of

of Sunderland, and to me, that are thought the Favourites of the King, we will, in the firſt Place, immediately make you a Major-General: You ſhall have a Regiment of Foot, or Dragoons, and 3000 l. a Year Penſion, during your Life. My Lords, if I had accepted of that Offer, I had now had the beſt Eſtate in Scotland; and would have been fair for being one of the Field-Marſhals of England, being the oldeſt Officer: But, my Lords, the Condition was too ſevere; and I had rather never have any Being than be ungrateful. The late Duke of Argyll, I mean this Duke of Argyll's Father, who was one of the greateſt Men that has been in our Country for many Ages; he was a Father to me, and protected me as his own Child; he got me Two Remiſſions from King William; and, as he was carrying another Remiſſion in, to be ſigned by Queen Anne (King William, to my Misfortune, having died that Year), he found the Door ſhut; that is, he found that Three Men had turned out all King William's Friends, of whom he was one, and the Duke of Queensberry, and ſeveral others; and that ſhe brought in Two Families, the Duke of Hamilton, and the Marquis of Athol, whom ſhe made a Duke; and to pleaſe him, with whom my Family unfortunately had a Quarrel about an Eſtate; to pleaſe him, I ſay, ſhe put 2000*l.* upon my Head, which was 1000*l.* more than ever was uſual. So I told the Duke of Argyll, that I had nothing for it, but to go to Hanover, and there to live and die with Fidelity to the Duke of Hanover. He told me, that he was well aſſured, that the Duke of Hanover would be glad to receive me; but, as he was then declared the Proteſtant Heir, and that Succeſſion depended much upon the good Will of Queen Anne, he muſt, upon her Deſire, be obliged to ſend me back to England; and that he did not know a ſafe Way for me but to go to France, becauſe we were at War with them then. And that was the firſt thing, my Lords, that obliged me to go to France, which was the Foundation of my Misfortunes. Now, my Lords, after what I have told you, I muſt humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhips, whether you do not think it is improbable, that I ſhould be an Enemy to King George, and his Family: I, that received more Marks of Favour from the late King George than any Subject in the North; I, that got my Eſtate ſettled in his Time, both by the Houſe of Commons and Peers; I, that expected never to be out of Favour with the Government, being very zealous to promote any thing that was for the Good of it. My Lords, I commanded a Highland Company for Fifteen Years, as their Colonel: And the Country can teſtify, that there was no Depredation, Theft, or Robbery, committed there during that Time: I took Twenty-five Highland Robbers in the Highlands in one Night, and brought them all Priſoners to the Tolbooth of Inverneſs. I continued to act in the Manner that General Wade from time to time ordered me. I own I did not expect, that he, who reviewed my Company every Year, and called it the beſt Company that he ever ſaw in his Life—I muſt make the Lords laugh upon that Occaſion: He told me, that Mr. Pulteney, now Earl of Bath, ſaid, in the Houſe of Commons, that he knew old Lovat very well; that he would never have a Company but in his Pocket: And now I can tell him, That he did not ſpeak Truth. General Handaſide was preſent, and his Brother, who is a very pretty Gentleman, when he declared, that he never did ſee ſuch a fine Company in any Country that he was ever in: And he appealed to the Two Handaſides, and the other Officers that were there, whether it was not true; and they all agreed in it. So that, my Lords, after this, I very little expected, that, without ever blaming me, or imputing any Crime to me, my Commiſſion ſhould be broke; and not only ſo, but that I ſhould be ordered to keep 400 Men from it in the Country, to be put into another Company, to make up a Regiment that General Wade procured for his Favourite Colonel Durore. My Lords, I was certainly much out of Humour to ſee myſelf ſo uſed; but I never imputed it to the King, nor to his Prime Miniſter Sir Robert Walpole, afterwards Earl of Orford. And this is all the Grounds of my being out of Temper, or that they can lay hold of, to ſay I was againſt the Government. So, after what I have told your Lordſhips, and the Manner that I have been uſed, I hope your Lordſhips will not think I was capable of any malicious Deſign againſt the Government. And, indeed, it was a Loſs to the Government more than to me, that my Company was broke, becauſe, if I had commanded the Highland Company, as I did for Fifteen Years, the Country had been peaceable, and there had been no Rebellion.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, I muſt put your Lordſhip in mind of the Queſtion I aſked you, Whether you have any thing to offer in Arreſt of Judgment?

Lord Lovat. Whatever way I may be over-ruled, I will ſay, to my dying Hour, that I have met with the greateſt Hardſhips ever practiſed in Britain; and I ſtill inſiſt, that I ſhall get the Benefit that all Subjects have a Right to, of adducing Witneſſes, that may be for the Safety of their Lives and Intereſts.

L. H. S. Your Lordſhip has heard the Opinion of the Lords already.

Lord Preſident. I move your Lordſhips to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. S. This Houſe is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Then the Lords, and others, returned to the Chamber of Parliament, in the ſame Order they came down: And the Houſe being there reſumed,

The Proceeding entered in the Journal of the 19th of March, 1715, in relation to the Giving of Judgment againſt George Earl of Wintoun was read: Which being done,

Their Lordſhips were informed, That the Commons, with their Speaker, and the Mace, were at the Door: Whereupon they were called in: And Mr. Speaker, at the Bar, ſaid,

My Lords,

THE Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, in Parliament aſſembled, did, at this Bar, in the Name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, impeach Simon Lord Lovat of High Treaſon, and exhibited Articles againſt him, and have made good the ſame: I do therefore, in the Name of the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, in Parliament aſſembled, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, demand Judgment of your Lordſhips againſt Simon Lord Lovat for the ſaid High Treaſon.

And they being withdrawn,

Ordered, That, when Judgment ſhall be pronounced againſt the ſaid Lord Lovat, it be the ſame as was pronounced againſt the late Earl of Wintoun.

Then the Houſe was again adjourned into Weſtminſter-Hall: And the Peers, and others, went down in the ſame Order as before; and the Peers being in their Places, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair, and the Commons and their Managers in the Seats prepared for them reſpectively; the Houſe was reſumed: And the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, as uſual.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, As ſome Time has intervened ſince I laſt aſked you the Queſtion, Whether you had any thing to offer in Arreſt of Judgment, I am now to aſk you again, Whether you have any thing to ſay, why Judgment of Death ſhould not paſs upon you, according to Law?

Lord Lovat. No: I have ſaid all that I had to ſay; and beg your Lordſhips Pardon for the rude, long Diſcourſe I made to your Lordſhips. I had great need of my Couſin Murray's Eloquence for half an Hour, and then it would have been more agreeable.

Proclamation was made for Silence, as uſual.

Lord High Steward.

Simon Lord Lovat,

YOU have been impeached by the Commons of Great Britain, in Parliament aſſembled, of High-Treaſon, charged upon you by particular Articles, containing different Species, and various Overt Acts, of that Treaſon.

To theſe Articles your Lordſhip thought fit to put in an Anſwer, amounting to a general Plea of Not guilty to the Whole; and, after a long and impartial Trial, upon the cleareſt and moſt convincing Evidence, againſt which you offered no Defence by Witneſſes, your Peers have unanimouſly found you Guilty.

What remains is the diſagreeable, but unavoidable, Part of proceeding to that Judgment, which is the neceſſary Conſequence of ſuch atrocious Crimes. Happy had it been for your Lordſhip, if before you engaged in them, you had ſuffered the Terrors of that Conſequence to have their due Weight, when the ſacred Ties of your Allegiance, and your Oaths, were not ſtrong enough to reſtrain you.

In this Proceeding, the Zeal and dutiful Affection of the Commons to his Majeſty, and their Country, and the Juſtice of the Houſe of Peers, have ſhone forth in their full Luſtre. The Commons found your Lordſhip to be one of the principal Conſpirators, who contrived and carried on the late deteſtable Rebellion, to deſtroy our Religion and Liberties, and to ſubvert that Legal Settlement of the Crown in his Majeſty, and his Royal Family, under which alone we can live Free and Happy.

They rightly judged, that this, which is the common Cauſe of all the People of Great Britain, ought to be proſecuted by the United Voice of the People: That it became them to inveſtigate and lay open, in full Parliament, the Source of thoſe Calamities, which we have lately ſuffered, and the deep-laid and long-meditated Conſpiracy, in which your Lordſhip had ſo conſiderable and ſo flagitious a Part. They rightly judged, that no Judicature was equal to ſuch an important Proceeding, but this High Court, on whoſe Penetration and Juſtice they relied, and before whom, in this Great Aſſembly, Publick and Indubitable Satisfaction might be given.

Before your Conviction, I have ſpoken to your Lordſhip upon a Preſumption of your Innocence; but now I am bound, by the unanimous Deciſion of my Lords your Peers, to take the Evidence againſt you to be True, and to addreſs myſelf to you as a Guilty Perſon.

Your Lordſhip has, in your Anſwer, endeavoured to avail yourſelf of former Services to his late Majeſty and the Proteſtant Succeſſion, which you have this Day enlarged upon at the Bar. How unfortunate have you been in referring back to ſuch cancelled Merit, ſince thereby you have furniſhed an Opportunity to the Commons, to ſhew, for how long a Track of Time you have conceived and nurſed up this Treaſon in your Heart! Whatever your Pretences were, ſo infected was your Mind, and ſo forward your Zeal, in the Cauſe of that Pretender, whom you had then abjured, as to engage in that raſh and weak Attempt from Spain, in his late Majeſty's Reign. Yet, at or very near that Time, it appears, by the Evidence (out of which every Obſervation I will make ſhall naturally ariſe), you were ſolliciting or accepting Favours and Truſts from that very Government, which you had thus engaged to deſtroy. What Uſe did you make of thoſe Truſts? The Inſtance of Roy Stewart, now an Attainted Rebel, ſpeaks it too plainly. Whilſt you were Sheriff of the Shire of Inverneſs, the largeſt County in Scotland, and one of the greateſt Conſequence, you ſuffered that Criminal, in the Year 1736, to eſcape out of your publick Priſon; harboured him afterwards in your own Houſe; then charged him with Meſſages, and Aſſurances of Fidelity, to the Pretender; and to procure for you a Commiſſion of Lieutenant-General, and a mock Title of Honour, from that Pretended Prince.

If any thing could ſurpaſs this Treachery, it is the Aſſociation, which your Lordſhip ſigned and ſealed, together with Six other Perſons, and ſent to Rome and Paris, by Drummond of Bochaldie, in the Beginning of 1740. The Subſtance of this was, to aſſure the Pretender, whom you always called your lawful King, of your Readineſs to appear openly in Arms for his Service; and to ſollicit an Invaſion from France againſt your Native Country, to ſupport this deſperate Deſign.

It ſhould ſeem, by the Evidence, that the Foreign Enemies of Britain were leſs forward in this Meaſure to diſturb her, than her degenerate, Unnatural Sons. Whether that Reluctance proceeded from a Diſtruſt of ſo falſe a Sett of Men, or from a Conviction, that the Body of this Great People was not to be ſhaken in their Loyalty to a King, who poſſeſſes the Throne by the moſt Rightful Title, and governs them in Juſtice and Mercy, according to their Laws and Conſtitution; in either Caſe they

they were in the Right. What Dependence could the Court of France have on a few abandoned Traitors? What Hopes could they entertain, that a general Infatuation would, on the ſudden, ſeize and delude a Brave, a Free, and a Happy People, to ſeek their own Slavery and Ruin?

From this Time till the Year 1743, the Conſpiracy lingered in its Progreſs, though great Efforts appear to have been made to render it more extenſive, and more formidable. Then it happened, as it always has happened, that when France ſaw ſuch an Enterprize, whether ſucceſsful or not, might be made a convenient Engine of her own Politicks, that Court ſet about an Invaſion in earneſt. Great Preparations were made, and ready at Dunkirk; but the Providence of God diſappointed them. To be capable of proving Tranſactions of this Kind by ſtrict Evidence in the Forms of Law, is not common, nor, in the Nature of the Thing, ordinarily to be expected. But this the Vigilance of the Commons has effectually done, to the Conviction of all well-intentioned Perſons, and to the Shame and Confuſion of thoſe, who, though they believed, and perhaps knew it themſelves, were induſtrious to propagate a pernicious Incredulity in others.

Thus the Commons have traced and brought down the Series of the Conſpiracy to the remarkable Æra of July, 1745, when the Eldeſt Son of the Pretender landed in Moidart, unſupported by any Foreign Troops, unattended, and almoſt alone.

The appearing Raſhneſs of this Attempt gave Riſe to ſome Apprehenſions, ſome Miſgivings, in the Breaſts of your Lordſhip, and your Fellow-Conſpirators, proceeding from a Concern, not for the King, or for your Country, but for your own private Intereſt and Safety. A French Invaſion had been long ſollicited; a French Force was depended on, to ſecure you againſt the juſt Vengeance of your Native Country; and the Failure of that damped your Hopes, and produced your Expreſſions of Diſappointment. However, ſuch was your Zeal, that, in this raſh Enterprize, your Lordſhip joined; not indeed perſonally (this you often excuſed, complaining of your Infirmities), but by Sending, or rather Forcing out your Clan; and committing every other Species of the blackeſt Treaſon, which the Articles of Impeachment have charged upon you.

Permit me to ſtop here a little, and lament the Condition of Part of this United Kingdom; happily United in Intereſts both Civil and Religious; happily United under the ſame Gracious Monarch, and the ſame Publick Policy: And yet the common People, in ſome of the remote Northern Counties, are ſtill kept in ſuch a State of Bondage to certain of their Fellow-Subjects, who, contrary to all Law, and every true Principle of Government, have erected themſelves into Petty Tyrants over them, as to be liable to be compelled into Rebellion againſt their Lawful Sovereign, under the Peril of Fire and Sword. Aſtoniſhing it is, that ſuch a dangerous Error in Government, ſuch a Remain of Barbariſm, ſhould have ſubſiſted ſo long in any Quarter of this Civilized, Well-governed Iſland: But, ſince ſuch is the Misfortune, let it be accounted one good Fruit of this Inquiry, that it has appeared in this ſolemn Manner. The Knowledge of the Diſeaſe ſhews the Way to the Cure; and it calls aloud for a Remedy.

This uſurped Power was audaciouſly made uſe of over your Clan. It is true, your Lordſhip's Activity in exerting it roſe and fell, in Proportion to the Appearances of the good or bad Succeſs of the Pretender's Cauſe; But, after the Advantage gained by the Rebels at Preſton-Pans, which you vainly called "A Victory not to be paralleled in Hiſtory," you thought it Time to throw off the Maſk; and, with leſs Caution, to eſpouſe a Party, which, you then hoped, might be eſpouſed with Impunity.

I forbear to enumerate the many Overt Acts of your Treaſon. It would be tedious to this Aſſembly, who have heard them ſo much better from the Witneſſes, and from the Recapitulation of the Managers. It would be grievous to your Lordſhip, if your Heart is, by this Time, touched with any Remorſe for your Guilt. But one Thing I cannot help obſerving upon,---the Excuſe you expreſly made for this traitorous Conduct, even after you were taken Priſoner; to which you have this Day artfully endeavoured to give a different Turn. Being aſked, How you could act ſuch a Part againſt a Government, from which you had received many Favours? Your Lordſhip's Anſwer was, "That it was in "Revenge to the Miniſtry, for their ill Uſage of you, in taking away "your Commiſſion of Captain of an Independent Company of High-"landers." An Excuſe almoſt as falſe as it was profligate. Falſe, becauſe ſome of your Treaſonable Practices were committed whilſt you were poſſeſſed of that very Commiſſion. Profligate it was, in the higheſt Degree. Is Allegiance no Duty? Are Oaths to His Majeſty, and His Government, no Obligation upon the Conſcience? Is Loyalty to our Lawful Sovereign, and the Love of our Country, to depend on the Enjoyment of extraordinary Favours and Emoluments, which no Man has a Right to; can, in the Nature of Things, be enjoyed but by a Few; and are in the Pleaſure of all Governments to confer or deny? A Perſon actuated by, and avowing, ſuch Principles as theſe, muſt be loſt to all Senſe of Virtue, and of Shame, and of every Natural, as well as Civil, Sanction of Society.

Sorry, very ſorry I am, to ſee this laſt Reflection ſo ſtrongly verified by the Proofs againſt your Lordſhip. It has appeared, that you uſed your Paternal Influence over your Eldeſt Son, a Youth not above the Age of Nineteen, to compel him to go into the Rebellion; and afterwards unnaturally endeavoured to caſt the Crime and Reproach of it upon him. If this be true, it is an Impiety which makes one tremble. It is the celebrated Saying of a wiſe Writer of Antiquity, and ſhews his perfect Knowledge of Human Nature, "That the Love of our Coun-"try includes all other Social Affections:" For we ſee, when that is gone, even the tendereſt of all Affections, the Parental, may be extinguiſhed with it.

I have ſaid theſe things, not with a View to aggravate your Lordſhip's Crimes, but, as becomes This Place, and This Occaſion, to rouſe your Mind, which, there is Reaſon to fear, may have been too much hardened, to a juſt and deep Senſe of your unhappy and dreadful Situation.

Were I to attempt this from Topicks of Religion, I ſhould be at a Loſs, whether to apply to you as a Proteſtant or a Papiſt. Your Open Profeſſion, your Solemn Oaths, and Publick Actions, ſpeak on one Side: But, if I am to believe the Evidence, your Private Diſcourſe and Declarations teſtify on the other. I will apply no Suppoſitions on this Head particularly to your Lordſhip; but from hence I would draw an inſtructive Leſſon, which well deſerves the ſerious Attention of this Whole Nation, of what important Conſequence it is, to preſerve not only the Name and outward Form of the Proteſtant Religion amongſt us, but the real Uniform Belief and Practice of it. Indifference to all Religion prepares Men for the External Profeſſion of any; and what may not That lead to? Give me Leave to affirm, before this Great Aſſembly, that, even abſtracted from Religious Conſiderations, the Proteſtant Religion ought to be held in the higheſt Reverence, as the ſureſt Barrier of our Civil Conſtitution. Eccleſiaſtical Uſurpation ſeldom fails to end in Civil Tyranny. The preſent Happy Settlement of the Crown is, in Truth, and not in Name only, THE PROTESTANT SUCCESSION. And the inviolable Preſervation of that Wiſe and Fundamental Law, made ſince the Revolution, whereby every Papiſt, or Perſon marrying a Papiſt, is abſolutely excluded from Inheriting to this Crown, will, in future Times, be a ſolid Security for our Poſterity, not only againſt the groundleſs and preſumptuous Claim of an Abjured Pretender, and his Deſcendants, but alſo to prevent this Kingdom from becoming a Province to ſome of the great Popiſh Powers, who have ſo long watched for the Deſtruction of our Liberties.

But, to return to your Lordſhip: Suffer me to exhort you, with great Earneſtneſs, and in great Charity, to deliberate ſeriouſly upon your own Caſe, and to deal impartially with your own Conſcience. If, according to the Evidence given at this Bar, you have led a Life of Craft, Diſſimulation, and Perfidy, conſider how that Scene has cloſed; what Deſolation you have thereby endeavoured to bring upon your Country; how fatally it has ended for yourſelf. Conſider, that the Sentence which I am obliged to pronounce, may ſoon ſend you to a Tribunal, where no Diſguiſe or Artifice can avail you.

The Sentence of the Law is, and this High Court doth adjudge;

"That you, Simon Lord Lovat, Return to the Priſon of the Tower,
"from whence you came; from thence you muſt be drawn to the "Place of Execution; when you come there, you muſt be Hanged
"by the Neck, but not till you are Dead; for you muſt be cut
"down Alive; then your Bowels muſt be taken out, and burnt
"before your Face; then your Head moſt be ſevered from your "Body, and your Body divided into Four Quarters; and theſe
"muſt be at the King's Diſpoſal."

And God Almighty be merciful to your Soul!

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I hope your Lordſhips will not take it amiſs, that I ſhould let you know, though it be in a very barbarous Language, both the Affection I had for his late Majeſty, and the Service I did for him and his Family. And I muſt ſay, I have for that the Teſtimony of one of the King's Evidence, that I declared my Affection to his preſent Majeſty: And I have Reaſon ſo to do; for when he was Regent of theſe Kingdoms, and his Father was in Hanover, he was ſo good as to give me a Noli Proſiqui for the great Laird of Mac Intoſh that was at the Battle of Preſton: And when I complained of the Hardſhips the Duke of Roxburgh put every Day upon me, in an Audience he was pleaſed to admit me to, in his Cloſet at Kenſington, he was ſo good as to ſay, that, if he was King, he would defend me againſt all my Enemies, not only the Duke of Roxburgh, but all my other Enemies. Now, my Lords, when a Man has but a very few Days, in Appearance, to live, what he ſays ſhould be relied upon, if there is not immediate Evidence to the contrary. I have ſhewn your Lordſhips my Eſteem for the illuſtrious Houſe of Hanover. I have ſhewn my Attachment for my dear Maſter the late King, and my Reſpect for his preſent Majeſty; and therefore all that I have further to ſay, is moſt humbly to implore your Lordſhips Interceſſion, and to recommend me to his Majeſty for Mercy.

Lord High Steward. Have you any thing further to offer?

Lord Lovat. Nothing, my Lords, but that I make the ſame Prayer to the Honourable the Members and Managers of the Houſe of Commons; and that, I hope, as they have been ſtout, they will be merciful.

Lord High Steward. Would you offer any thing further?

Lord Lovat. Nothing but to thank your Lordſhips for your Goodneſs to me. God bleſs you all, and I bid you an everlaſting Farewel. We ſhall not meet all in the ſame Place again, I am ſure of that.

Lord High Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower, Take the Priſoner from the Bar.

Which being done, Proclamation was made for Silence, as uſual.

Then the White Staff being delivered to the Lord High Steward by the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod, upon his Knee, his Grace ſtood up uncovered; and, holding the Staff in both his Hands, broke it in two, and declared that there was nothing farther to be done by virtue of the preſent Commiſſion, and pronounced the ſame to be diſſolved; and then leaving the Chair, came down to the Wool-Pack, and ſaid, Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Houſe was adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament; and the Lords and others returned in the ſame Order as they come down.

And the Priſoner was carried back to the Tower of London.

THE which Day compeared Patrick Haldane of Bearcrofts, Esq; his Majesty's Solicitor, and Advocate-Depute, and produced, in presence of the said Lords, a Writ of Recognizance, signed by his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, of Date the 23d Day of January last by-past, which was ordered to be read and recorded; and whereof the Tenor follows.

Middlesex and Westminster.

To wit; Be it remembered, That, upon the 23d of January, in the Twentieth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George II. King of Great Britain, &c. came before me, and acknowledged themselves to be severally indebted unto our said Sovereign Lord the King as follows, viz.

Archibald Stewart, of Edinburgh, Merchant, the Sum of £.	5000 0 0
David Scot, of Scotstarvet, in the Shire of Fife, Esq; the Sum of	2500 0 0
James Oswald, of Dunnikier, in the said Shire of Fife, Esq; the Sum of —— —— ——	2500 0 0
Alexander Campbel, of the Parish of Allhallows-Staining, London, Doctor of Physick, the Sum of ——	2500 0 0
James Baird, of Downing-street, in the Parish of St. Margaret's Westminster, Esq; the Sum of —— ——	2500 0 0

To be levied upon their several Goods and Chattels, Lands, Tenements and Hereditaments, by way of Recognizance, upon Condition, that if the said Archibald Stewart do personally appear before his Majesty's Court of Justiciary at Edinburgh, at the first Sitting of the said Court after the Twentieth Day of March next, then and there to answer to all such Matters as on his Majesty's Behalf shall be objected against him; and also appear from time to time when thereunto required, and not depart the said Court without Leave thereof; and, in the mean time, be of the good Behaviour, then this Recognizance to be void, or else to remain in full Force and Virtue. Signed

HOLLES NEWCASTLE.

Immediately after reading whereof, compeared the said Archibald Stewart, Merchant in Edinburgh, and judicially sisted himself in Court before the said Lords, in Terms of and agreeable to the said Writ of Recognizance, and humbly insisted, that thereby the Condition of the said Writ was fulfilled, and the same fell to be voided, and he dismissed, if there was no Person on his Majesty's Behalf ready to insist against him.

To which Mr. Patrick Haldane, his Majesty's Advocate-Depute, made Answer: That the Writ of Recognizance was not only for Mr. Stewart's Appearance this Day, but thereafter, from Time to Time, when thereto required; that, having only had occasion lately to see the said Writ, he was not just now ready to insist in any Matters on his Majesty's Behalf against the said Archibald Stewart, as therein mentioned; and moved their Lordships would appoint a farther Time for his Appearance again.

Mr. Stewart, without making any Reply, submitted his Case to the Court.

'The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the said 'Writ of Recognizance, and above Debate, they continue the Diet, 'for the said Archibald Stewart's Compearance, to Monday the eighth 'Day of June next, and ordain him to sist himself personally in Court 'that Day, without Prejudice to the Lord Advocate to insist against and 'prosecute the said Archibald Stewart sooner, in Behalf of his Majesty, 'if he shall see Cause.'

Lord Strichen Præses.

THE said Day, in obedience to the foregoing Order, compeared the said Archibald Stewart, and sisted himself in Court, when he and Messieurs Lockhart, Ferguson, Home and Stewart, Advocates, his Procurators, insisted, That, in obedience to the last Order of Court, in consequence of the Recognizance therein mentioned, he had appeared a second Time; that, as he pled first, so he now did, that the Condition of the said Writ of Recognizance was fulfilled; and that the same ought to be voided, and he dismissed, if there was no Person yet ready to insist against him on his Majesty's Behalf, which he had Reason to believe was the Case.

To which Mr. Patrick Haldane, his Majesty's Advocate-Depute, made Answer: That the Lord Advocate, who, at the last Diet, attended the Service of his Country in Parliament, was, contrary to Expectation, still detained, although he intended to have been in Scotland long before now, when he could and would have proceeded to bring Mr. Stewart to Trial in the ordinary Way: That, for his Part, as Advocate-Depute, he had no such Instructions as he could move in that Matter, either just now, or by a proper Process; and all he was instructed to ask of their Lordships, was a Delay of eight Days, which could be no Prejudice either to Mr. Stewart or his Cautioners, and against which Time he was pretty well assured his Majesty's Advocate would be present, and shew Cause why the Writ of Recognizance should continue, and satisfy Mr. Stewart how or when he would be brought to Trial.

It was replied for Mr. Stewart, that he expected, if there was any thing to be objected to him on behalf of his Majesty, considering the long Space of Time interveening betwixt this and his former Appearance, he would have been brought under some Prosecution for it ere now; that the Absence of my Lord Advocate, however necessary, and his Depute's not being properly instructed, was to Mr Stewart or his Cautioners nothing to the Purpose; that Mr. Stewart's Appearance, now and before, and nothing objected to him, was, as to his Cautioners, a Liberation of their Bail, which was so very great as must appear to be a Hardship if it should last any longer; and therefore craved that he might be dismist, and the Bond voided.

It was duplied by Mr. Haldane, that the Delay sought was so small, as plainly shewed that there was no Intention of putting a Hardship on any Person; and, without farther Argument, he doubted not but the Court would continue Mr. Stewart's farther Compearance, in Terms of, and agreeable to the Writ of Recognizance, 'till Monday next the 15th Instant.

'The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the above 'Debate, they continue the Diet for the said Archibald Stewart's farther 'Compearance to Monday the 15th Day of June Instant, and ordain 'him to sist himself personally in Court that Day, without Prejudice to 'the Lord Advocate to insist against and prosecute the said Archibald Stewart sooner, if he shall see Cause.'

Lord Strichen Præses.

THE said Day compeared the said Archibald Stewart, in obedience to the last Order of Court, and sisted himself agreeable to his Writ of Recognizance, and craved the said Writ might be declared void; and he dismissed, in case the Lord Advocate was not yet ready to insist against him, as, if he was, he had at least got no Notice of it, nor so much as of any Time for his Trial.

The Lord Advocate thereupon appeared, and represented the former Delays were not owing to him, but, in some measure, to Mr. Stewart's own Friends, who applied to him at London for a Delay, 'till he should come to Scotland and be present himself; which truly was the Reason of his not raising and executing a criminal Process against Mr. Stewart to the last Diet he appeared. That, to shew his Lordship had no Inclination to give Mr. Stewart any unnecessary Delay, he now was ready to insist, and for that End gave in, and presented to the Lords, a Bill signed by him, craving Warrant for criminal Letters against the said Archibald Stewart, for the Crimes and Misdemeanours therein mentioned, and fixing the Diet for his Trial to the third of July next.

Thereafter Mr. Lockhart moved, in Behalf of the Cautioners for Mr. Stewart, that the Writ of Recognizance should be voided; and for Mr. Stewart, in place thereof, that he was willing to find new Bail for any Sum the Lords should appoint and judge reasonable, as the Bail he was presently under was by far too extravagant.

To which the Lord Advocate made answer: That the Writ of Recognizance, on which Mr. Stewart was liberate, was still in force, and behoved to continue, as the Cautioners and Mr. Stewart not only became bound that he should appear such a Day, but from Time to Time thereafter, as the Lords should appoint, and not to depart, without Leave, out of the Court; that this Bail was taken by, and given to one of the highest Authority, and that it must necessarily continue, agreeable to the said Writ, 'till he be dismissed.

Whereupon Mr. Stewart himself, and Mr. Elliot his Procurator, waved the Motion made by Mr. Lockhart anent renewing the Bail, and agreed that the former stand good, and he had no Objection why the next Diet of Compearance might not be the third of July next.

'The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the above 'Debate, they continue the Diet, for the said Archibald Stewart's farther 'Compearance, 'till Friday the third Day of July next to come.' Signed

ALEX. FRASER. I. P. D.

Upon the third of July the Diet was continued to the Tirteenth of that Month.

Intran.

Archibald Stewart of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provost of the said City, Pannel,

Indicted and accused at the Instance of William Grant of Prestongrange, Esq; his Majesty's Advocate for his Majesty's Interest, for the Crimes of Neglect of Duty, and Misbehaviour in Offices and Places of publick Trust, and the Violation of the Trust and Duty of such Offices, in manner at Length mentioned in the criminal Libel raised against him thereanent, making mention, That Whereas, by the Laws of this and all other well governed Realms, all Neglects of Duty, and Misbehaviours of Persons employed in Offices and Places of publick Trust; and all Violations of the Trust and Duty of such Offices, are Crimes of a high Nature, and severely punishable; and the public Justice of the Realm requireth a vigorous Prosecution of such Offenders, especially when such Neglects of Duty and Misbehaviours are incurred by the chief Magistrate of any great or considerable City, in a Time of publick Danger, and open Rebellion; and particularly by an Act made in the fourteenth Parliament of King James the Second of Scotland, Chapter seventy-sixth, intitled, The Punition of negligent Officiars, 'It is ordained and determined, That if any of the King's Officiars or Sheriffs, 'Mayors, Bailies, Crowners, Serjeants, Provost of Burghs, and their 'Ministers both to Land and to Burgh, be found faulty or negligent 'in the Execution of their Offices, and it may be lawfully proved on 'him, or notourly kend; if the said Office pertains to him in Fie and 'Heritage, he shall tyne his Office, and the Profit thereof, for an Year 'and a Day, and to be punished by the King in his Person and Goods 'after the Quantity of his Trespass; and if his Office pertains to him 'not in Fie and Heritage, he shall tyne his Office for all the Times 'he has it, and to be punished in his Person, after the Quantity of 'sik Trespass, at the King's Will.' Yet true it is and of Verity, That the said Archibald Stewart of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Provost of the said City, is guilty, Actor, or Art and Part of the said Crimes, or one or other of them, aggravated as aforesaid; In so far as he, being Lord Provost of the City of Edinburgh, in the Year One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, when a most bold, desperate, wicked, and unprovoked Rebellion was raised and carried on against his Majesty within this Realm, by a large Body of armed Traytors, headed by the eldest Son of the Pretender to his Crown, and assisted with Troops and Money from his Enemies abroad, and, at such a Juncture, it being his Duty, as the chief Magistrate of the said City, and the King's Lieutenant therein, having Authority to command the military Force of whatever Kind within the City, to have exerted himself with Fidelity, Vigilance and Zeal, for opposing the Progress of the Rebellion by all lawful Methods in his Power, and particularly for preserving the City intrusted to his Care from falling under the Power of the Rebels, or becoming a Prey to them, he, the said Archibald Stewart, was grosly faulty or negligent in the Execution of his said Office and Duty on so important an Occasion, in manifest Violation of the Trust and Duty of his Office: and particularly was thus guilty on the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Days of September, in the Year of our Lord One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, and upon several other Days and Times in the said Month of September, and the Month of August preceding, within the said City of Edinburgh, where he was resident for the Time. And moreover, the said Archibald Stewart was not only faulty or negligent in the Execution of his Office, and notoriously known to have been such, but was guilty of Malversations and counteracting the Duty of his Office, in such an Exigency, in many Instances, and particularly, amongst others, in these following: First, That whereas the Preservation of the City of Edinburgh, from falling into the Hands of the Rebels, was of great Importance to that City itself, and to the King and the Kingdom in general, and the Care of it especially incumbent on the Lord Provost for the Time being, and ought to have been looked after with the utmost Attention, Zeal and Vigour, in such an Exigency, as when the Rebels got to the Southward of the Body of the King's Troops under the Command of Sir John Cope, of which Advices came to Edinburgh in the latter End of August One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, from which there was Reason to fear that the Taking of that City would be attempted by the Rebels, and to hope that the King's Army might soon after come to its Relief: Yet, in these Circumstances, he, the said Archibald Stewart, then chief Magistrate, and sole military Governor of that City, did nothing of his own accord towards providing effectually for the Defence thereof; and, on the contrary, every Measure for that Purpose proposed, and pressed by the honest Zeal of the then Magistrates and Council, and of many of the Citizens and Inhabitants, instead of being heartily encouraged and promoted by him the Provost, were by him thwarted and retarded, or else absolutely refused or declined; and in this Manner it was that he received a Proposition made to him in the latter End of August One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, for raising a Regiment of one thousand Men, by voluntary Subscription, for Defence of the City; against which he formed Objections on account of the Expence, and affected Doubts concerning the Legality thereof. And, Secondly, He treated in like manner another Application made to him in the Beginning of September One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, by a Number of Gentlemen or Citizens, for Leave to associate themselves under his chief Command, as Volunteers, for the Defence of the City, and Service of the Government; and, after his Objections to the Legality of that Measure were over-ruled, he would not suffer it to be published or given out that he heartily approved, but barely that he acquiesced in that Measure; and yet his Reluctancy or Aversion to it, or Uneasiness under it, continued to discover itself on frequent Occasions, and particularly by the cold, if not the rude Manner in which he behaved towards those Volunteers, consisting of a Number of very respectable Gentlemen and Burgesses, when he went to a publick Meeting of them, in the New Church Isle of Edinburgh, to name their Captains. Thirdly, That, in like manner, through the Misbehaviour of the said Archibald Stewart, when certain Repairs of the City Walls, and other Works for making it defensible for some Time, against an Enemy who had no Artillery, and were very unskilful in making Sieges, had been proposed and advised, amongst others, by the now deceast and famous Mr. Colin Mac Laurin, Professor of Mathematicks in the College of Edinburgh, and were ordered by the Council of the City of Edinburgh to be made, the Execution whereof was chiefly incumbent on the Lord Provost for the Time being, yet the same was carried on very slowly and imperfectly, notwithstanding frequent Remonstrances and Complaints made by divers of the faithful and zealous Inhabitants; and, as late as Sunday the Fifteenth of September One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, when the Rebels were marching to, and were come within a few Miles of the City of Edinburgh, he the said Archibald Stewart refused to give Orders for loading the Cannon planted upon the City Walls, and, about the same Time, he refused to apply for some of the Sailors from on Board one of the King's Ships of War for managing of those Cannon, when he could not otherways be provided of fit Persons to act as Gunners. Fourthly, That, about the same Time, he the said Archibald Stewart refused to listen to, or to follow several salutary Propositions that were made and pressed by well-affected Inhabitants, for the greater Safety and better Defence of the City; such as, that the Trained Bands, consisting of a promiscuous Number of Burgesses, whereof many were known to be disaffected, should be laid aside, as had been practised during the Rebellion in the Year One thousand seven hundred and fifteen, and that Arms should only be trusted in the Hands of such as were known to be well-affected, and that a general Search for Arms should be made within the City, and that a Number of the ablest bodied Men of the Tradesmen's Servants should be employed and armed for assisting to defend the City when it should be attacked, upon the Encouragement of a Guinea to be given to each of them; towards defraying which Expence an Offer was made to the said Archibald Stewart, on the Part of the Volunteers, to have raised or advanced the sum of Five hundred Pounds Sterling. Fifthly, That the said Archibald Stewart misbehaved himself in like manner, in respect of the Succours that were brought at the Time aforesaid from the Country in the Neighbourhood of Edinburgh, consisting of Numbers of well-affected and zealous Subjects, under the Conduct of Gentlemen of known Loyalty and good Affection, who came and voluntarily offered their Service to assist in defending the City of Edinburgh, without any Fee or Reward, upon that dangerous and pressing Occasion, the Approach of the Rebels to that City; but these very seasonable and laudable Offers were by the said Archibald Stewart very coldly received and ill-treated: For Instance, he proposed to Sir Robert Dickson of Inveresk, who came to Edinburgh upon Sunday the fifteenth Day of September One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, from Musselburgh, with about One hundred and fifty Volunteers, to offer their Services for the Purposes aforesaid, that these Men should inlist themselves for three Months as Soldiers in the Edinburgh Regiment; a Proposition which, instead of being calculated sincerely to provide for the better Defence of the City, could be no otherways received by those Volunteers, than as an Insult and Discouragement to their Zeal, who, being Tradesmen or Husbandmen, did not mean to leave their Occupations, and inlist themselves as Soldiers for Hire, but had bravely offered to serve gratis in the then present Exigency, which could not last above a few Days, before the End of which the City of Edinburgh must either have been relieved or surrendered. Sixthly, That, on the Morning of Monday the Sixteenth of September One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, the said Archibald Stewart received a Message from the Camp of the Rebels, by Andrew Alves, Writer to the Signet, importing, that the City of Edinburgh would be ill treated by them, unless it should be readily or speedily surrendered; being a Message to the same Effect with that contained in a Letter from the Pretender's Son, bearing Date from his Camp that same Day, addressed, For the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh, and which Letter was thereafter that same Day delivered; and yet he the said Archibald Stewart did not immediately commit the said Andrew Alves to Prison, for bringing or delivering to him such Message, neither did he give Notice to any other of the King's Officers, Civil or Military, that he had received such Message. Seventhly, That upon the same Monday, the Sixteenth of September One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, about three of the Clock in the Afternoon, he received a Petition from certain of the Inhabitants of the City who opposed the Defence thereof, and insisted to have a general Meeting called of all the principal Inhabitants, to consult what was proper to be done, and he accordingly held and presided in a Meeting in the New Church Isle in the Afternoon of that same Day, upon the ringing of the Fire-Bell, which was the appointed Signal for the Volunteers to repair to their Alarm-Post; the Consequence of which was, that few or none of those Volunteers, who consisted of a Number of the most substantial and best affected Burgesses, were or could be present at that general Meeting: In which Meeting, as every one who had a mind got Access, there were Numbers of Persons present of known Disaffection to his Majesty's Government; and thus, by ill Design upon their Part, and by the Timidity of others who were thus assembled in a tumultuous Manner, and a very improper Council with which to take Measures in a Time of immediate and pressing Danger, the general Cry was given for surrendering the City, and giving up all Thoughts of making a Defence: And the said Archibald Stewart thus held and took the Sense of this Meeting, notwithstanding that before he went to it, it was very well known that the Rebels were ill armed, and that an Offer had been made to him, in Aid of the other Forces with which the City was provided, to send one hundred out of two Regiments of Dragoons in the King's Service, or as many of the Dragoons of those thoſe Regiments as he ſhould deſire, to aſſiſt in defending the City; but he refuſed to give his Conſent or Authority for receiving any of theſe Dragoons, though he had requeſted ſuch Party of Dragoons, about an Hour or two before in that ſame Day, by a Writing under his Hand, addreſſed to Lieutenant General Joſhua Gueſt, then in the Caſtle of Edinburgh. And moreover, at this Meeting there was brought in and delivered to the ſaid Archibald Stewart, the Letter above-mentioned from the Pretender's Son; immediately, or ſoon after the receiving whereof, that Meeting was diſmiſſed, and he, with others of the Magiſtrates and Council, withdrew to the Council-Chamber, where (which is the eighth Article charged upon him the ſaid Archibald Stewart) he cauſed or ſuffered the ſaid Letter from the Pretender's Son to be publickly read, and moved or agreed that an Anſwer ſhould be given to it; which was accordingly ſent, firſt by one, and then by another Deputation from the Council: All which Intercourſe was in him the ſaid Archibald Stewart, then Lord Provoſt, the more criminal, that any Danger or Neceſſity that might be alledged, in order to avoid the ſame being puniſhable as High-Treaſon, was owing in great Meaſure to his own Backwardneſs to diſcharge his Duty, by taking all the proper Precautions againſt ſuch Danger, with that Fidelity and Vigour which he owed, by his Allegiance and his Station, to the City of Edinburgh, and to the King and Kingdom. Ninthly, That all this while he the ſaid Archibald Stewart refuſed or neglected, though frequently applied to for that Purpoſe, to give any Orders to the Volunteers of the City of Edinburgh, who had been long ſtanding upon the Street under Arms, how or in what Manner they ſhould diſpoſe of themſelves, and employ theſe Arms, or how they ſhould diſpoſe of the Arms, if they were not to be uſed or employed for the Defence of the City, for which they had been firſt taken up; and, upon ſuch his Refuſal or Neglect, the ſaid Volunteers took and executed the Reſolution to carry back their Arms to the Magazine in the Caſtle of Edinburgh, in order to prevent the ſame from falling into the Hands of the Rebels. Tenthly, That, on the Evening of the ſame Monday the ſixteenth of September One Thouſand ſeven Hundred and Forty-five, he the ſaid Archibald Stewart refuſed or declined to give his Licence or Authority for a Party ſent by the ſaid Lieutenant-General Gueſt, or by Lieutenant-General George Preſton, Governor of the Caſtle of Edinburgh, to remove or ſpike up the Cannon that were then planted upon the City-Walls; and, about the ſame Time, he the ſaid Archibald Stewart gave Orders to Thomas Dalziel, one of the Captains of the City-Guard of Edinburgh, whoſe Turn it was to be on Duty that Night, to keep Guard with the uſual Complement in peaceable Times, of One-third of the City-Guard, or Company, and no more; and, about the ſame Time, he the ſaid Archibald Stewart gave Orders to the Parties of the Trained-Bands of the City of Edinburgh, who had been upon Guard at the ſeveral Gates of the City, to quit their Poſts, and to diſpoſe of their Arms in the Parliament-Houſe, or ſome other Place or Places, where they muſt be expoſed to fall into the Hands of the Rebels, as ſoon as they ſhould enter or become Maſters of the City. And, Eleventhly, In the ſame Evening of the ſixteenth of September, One Thouſand ſeven Hundred and Forty-five, it was propoſed and urged in Council, where the ſaid Archibald Stewart was preſent, and preſided, That the whole City Arms, being in Number about twelve hundred Firelocks and Bayonets, ſhould be lodged and ſecured within the Caſtle of Edinburgh, in order to prevent their falling into the Hands of the Rebels; but he the ſaid Archibald Stewart refuſed or declined to give any Order for that Purpoſe, neither in Fact were the City-Arms ſo lodged and ſecured, but were ſeized by the Rebels upon their entering the City the Day following, who came to Edinburgh ſo imperfectly armed, that the Supply of Arms which they thus received, appears to have been one principal Cauſe of the Diſaſter that befel the King's Forces near Preſton-Pans, on the twenty-firſt Day of the ſame Month of September, One Thouſand ſeven Hundred and Forty-five. And, loſtly, By Occaſion or Means of the ſeveral Inſtances above-recited, and other Inſtances during the Time above-mentioned, upon one or other of the Days of the Months of Auguſt or September, One Thouſand ſeven Hundred and Forty-five, of the Miſbehaviour of the ſaid Archibald Stewart within the City of Edinburgh, of which he was then Lord Provoſt, it came to be very notoriouſly known, that he was highly faulty and negligent in the Execution of his Office, and to be farther violently ſuſpected and believed, amongſt the King's faithful Subjects in that City, that he the ſaid Archibald Stewart was ſecretly in the Intereſt of the Pretender, by reaſon of the Uniformity of his Behaviour from the Beginning to the End of theſe Tranſactions, diſcovering a conſtant Unwillingneſs or Backwardneſs to provide for, or heartily proſecute the Meaſures that were in a Manner forced upon him, in order to the Defence of that City, at a Time when, if he had obſerved a contrary Conduct, there was at leaſt a high Probability, that the City might have been preſerved from falling into the Hands of the Rebels: And in Fact the ſame did fall into their Hands, in a very ſtrange and ſuſpicious Manner, by a Party of the Rebels entering the City at the Netherbow Port, early in the Morning of Tueſday the ſeventeenth of September, One thouſand ſeven Hundred and Forty-five, when that Port was guarded with nothing more than a Serjeant's Command of the City-Guard, and was opened to ſuffer a Hackney-Coach to go out, which had juſt returned from bringing back the ſecond Deputation ſent by the ſaid Archibald Stewart, and other Magiſtrates and Councillors of Edinburgh, to the Pretender's Son: All which Misfortunes were, in great Meaſure, owing to the Miſconduct of the ſaid Archibald Stewart, and ſerved to bring a heavy Calamity on the City of Edinburgh, and the Kingdom in general; at leaſt, at the Time and Place aforeſaid, he, the ſaid Archibald Stewart, being Lord Provoſt of the City of Edinburgh, was highly faulty or negligent in the Execution of his Office, at a Time of publick Danger and open Rebellion againſt his Majeſty. And for proving that the ſaid Archibald Stewart was guilty as aforeſaid, there would be produced againſt him, by Way of Evidence, beſides very credible Witneſſes, certain Documents in Writing, which ſhould be lodged in the Hands of the Clerks to the Court of Juſticiary, that he might ſee the ſame, and whereof a Liſt ſhould be delivered to him, along with the Liſt of Witneſſes to be adduced againſt him. All which enormous Neglects of Duty, and Miſbehaviours, or Part thereof, or his being Art and Part of the ſame, being found proven againſt the ſaid Archibald Stewart by the Verdict of an Aſſize, before the Lords Juſtice-General, Juſtice-Clerk, and Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, he, the ſaid Archibald Stewart, ought to be puniſhed with the Pains of Law; to the Terror of others to be guilty of the like in Time coming.

INFORMATION for his MAJESTY'S ADVOCATE for his Majeſty's Intereſt, Purſuer,

AGAINST

ARCHIBALD STEWART of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provoſt of the ſaid City, Pannel or Defender.

THE Libel, at the Purſuer's Inſtance, againſt Mr. Stewart, late Lord Provoſt of the City of Edinburgh, charges him the Pannel with being guilty of very high Crimes and Miſdemeanours, in having many ways acted contrary to his Duty, when he was chief Magiſtrate of the City of Edinburgh, in the Months of Auguſt and September 1745, a Time of publick Danger and open Rebellion, headed by the eldeſt Son of the Pretender to his Majeſty's Crown, aſſiſted with Troops and Money from his Majeſty's Enemies abroad; at which Juncture the Pannel, by his Miſbehaviour, ſuffered the City of Edinburgh, with the Cannon and Arms therein, as well as other Supplies of various Sorts, to fall into the Hands of the Rebels, in manifeſt Violation of the Truſt and Duty of his Office. This is the general Charge againſt the Pannel, which is in the Libel more particularly ſpecified, by a Deduction of many particular Inſtances of Miſbehaviour alledged againſt him in Support of that general Charge, which Particulars it is unneceſſary here to repeat; but for them the Purſuer begs Leave to refer to the Libel itſelf.

The Pannel having been duly ſerved with a Copy of this Libel, did firſt of all, in purſuance of the late Act of Parliament for aboliſhing the heritable Juriſdictions in Scotland, &c. give in to the Clerk of Court, the Day before his Trial was to come on, ſigned by one of his Counſel, his Account of the Facts relating to the Matters charged upon him, together with the Heads of certain Objections and Defences which he makes to the Libel, and therein ſays, 'That he is not guilty of all or any of the Ne'glects or Miſbehaviours laid to his Charge, and that there is no Ground 'for ſuppoſing him diſaffected to the Government, but much to the con'trary; and, in particular, he avers, that his Conduct, upon Occaſion 'and at the Time of the late Rebellion, will, upon Proof, afford the 'ſtrongeſt Evidence of his real Attachment to the Government;' and farther ſays, upon the ſeveral Matters charged againſt him,

In the firſt Article, 'That he thwarted no Meaſures that were pro'poſed that ſeemed legal and expedient; that where any Doubts or Diffi'culties occurred, either as to the Legality or Expediency of any Parti'cular propoſed, ſome of which ſeemed rather to be intended as a Snare, 'he delivered his Opinion with a becoming Freedom, ſubmitted his Rea'ſons to the Council or Committee, and heartily went into whatever 'they reſolved, after taking Advice, in Points of greateſt Importance, 'with thoſe who bore the higheſt Offices, both Civil and Military, that 'were at the Time in this Town.'

As to the ſecond Article of the Indictment, Mr. Stewart ſays, 'That 'the Propoſal made for aſſociating a Body of Volunteers was a Point of 'ſo much Delicacy, as muſt juſtify him for deſiring Advice as to the Le'gality of what was thereby propoſed. That ſo ſoon as the Magiſtrates 'found they could ſafely go into the Propoſal, the Lord Provoſt readily 'acquieſced, and ſhewed a Willingneſs to have it carried into Execution; 'and that, upon every Occaſion, he behaved towards them with the ut'moſt Civility.'

As to the third Article, 'The Magiſtrates of Edinburgh, with the reſt 'of a Committee appointed by the Council to provide for the Defence of 'the Town, readily liſtened, and chearfully received every Propoſal that 'appeared calculated for the Defence of the Town, in which nothing 'was by them delayed; and the Execution of theſe Matters was com-

'mitted

'mitted to proper Perſons, choſen and appointed for that Purpoſe by the 'Council and Committee.' He does farther ſay, 'That the Guns were 'charged in the proper time, and all Endeavours uſed to ſupply the 'Town with proper Gunners.'

The Provoſt does in like manner ſay, 'That what is looſely charged 'in this Article of the Indictment, of his having refuſed the Propoſals 'of thoſe who were zealouſly affected, is not well underſtood: Every 'Converſation was freighted with a Propoſal, many of them contra-'dictory, and ſome of them from ſiniſter Motives; ſuch particularly was 'the Propoſal mentioned in this Article, which, if ſincerely meant, 'ought to have been propoſed in Council, which never was done.'

As to the fifth Article, 'The Provoſt thinks he behaved kindly to 'every Man who came, or pretended that he came, to the Aſſiſtance of 'the Town; and denies the Inſtance charged in the Libel, nor can he 'imagine that it was, or can be preſumed an Affront, although he had 'offered the putting Sir Robert Dickſon's Volunteers in the Way of re-'ceiving Pay, ſuppoſing that to have been the Fact.'

As to the ſixth Article, 'Mr. Stewart apprehends there can be no 'Crime in it; for he did communicate the Meſſage by Mr. Alves, im-'mediately after he received it, to the Gentlemen of the Council, who 'were of Opinion, that the Meſſage delivered by Mr. Alves ought not 'to be divulged, for fear of intimidating the Inhabitants; and ſoon 'after he waited of the then Lord Advocate, to impart that Affair, and 'get his Advice what ought to be done, and, conform to the Advice 'then given, committed the ſaid Andrew Alves, ſo ſoon as he under-'ſtood that it was lawful and proper, and there was no criminal De-'lay in committing him.'

As to the ſeventh Article, 'Mr. Stewart ſays, That the Meeting in 'the New Church Iſle was not in conſequence of any Petition delivered 'him by the Inhabitants, which Petition was never once under Conſi-'deration of the Committee, nor did he order the Alarm-Bell to be rung 'to convocate the Inhabitants. Denies that he ever refuſed to admit 'any Dragoons into the Town; but, on the contrary, he expreſſed a 'Willingneſs to receive them, providing they were ſent.'

As to the eighth Article, 'Mr. Stewart refuſes that he received or 'gave Orders to read any Letters from the Pretender, or that he gave 'Orders in conſequence of any ſuch Letter; any Deputation that might 'have been ſent, was the Effect of the Fears of the Inhabitants, who 'had more of the Government of the Town at that time than the Ma-'giſtrates.'

As to the ninth Article, 'The Volunteers carried their Arms to the 'Caſtle without applying to Mr. Stewart for his Orders, and before he 'underſtood the Town to be in a defenceleſs State.'

As to the tenth Article, Mr. Stewart ſays, 'That it was the Senſe of 'the Committee the Provoſt ſhould give no Orders; and he believes it will 'appear, that the Meſſenger from Mr. Gueſt was told he was at Liberty 'to ſpike up the Cannon, if the General thought proper; nay, he far-'ther believes the Meſſenger was farther told, that he ſhould be ſhewn 'where the Cannon were. Mr. Stewart does not remember that Captain 'Dalziel was ordered to have but a Third of his Guard on Duty, but 'believes that the whole Guard at that time were not in a Condition to 'do Duty, after the Fatigue they had previouſly undergone; the Inha-'bitants had before this time reſolved not to ſtand upon their Defence; 'the Provoſt remembers nothing of the Orders ſaid to have been given 'to the Trained-Bands, but believes the contrary will be proven.'

As to the eleventh Article, the Provoſt repeats the firſt Part of his Anſwer to the preceding Article, and ſays, 'That if any of the City-'Arms fell into the Hands of the Rebels, it muſt have proceeded from 'various unavoidable Cauſes, but cannot be imputed to any Fault of 'Mr. Stewart.'

As to the twelfth Article, 'Mr. Stewart is confident there muſt appear, 'upon his Part, a zealous Attachment to the Intereſt of the Govern-'ment, by the Uniformity of his Conduct from the Commencement of 'the Rebellion, until the Time that the Town fell unhappily into the 'Rebels Hands; for ſuch is and muſt be the natural Conſtruction of 'his unwearied Application to every Part of his Duty, and upon con-'ſidering the Propoſals made by him in Council, with the Directions 'given to thoſe that acted under him.'

From this Account of the Provoſt's Conduct, in relation to the Matters charged upon him, his Defences againſt the Libel are:

'1*mo*. That the Whole of the Charge is laid in a Manner too looſe 'and general to be paſt to the Knowledge of an Aſſize.'

'2*do*. That the Facts therein contained are either miſrepreſented, or 'in their Nature not criminal.'

'3*tio*. That no Error in point of Judgment, if any thing of that 'kind ſhall appear, ought to be made the Foundation of a criminal Pro-'ſecution, eſpecially that he was only one of a Committee, and acted 'by their Direction.'

Before the Purſuer proceed to recite the Arguments that were offered on behalf of the Pannel, in Support of theſe Defences, when the Trial came on in the Court of Juſticiary on Monday the 13th current, together with the Replies made on the Part of the Purſuer to theſe Defences, he ſhall here, for the better underſtanding of the true Merits of the Caſe, firſt of all briefly ſet forth, without any Argument, the principal Facts which occurred at and about the Time libelled, ſuch as he believes can be proved to be true, either by Authentick Writings, or by parole Evidence.

[23d Auguſt 1745. Council Record.] The Lord Provoſt produced in Council a Letter from one of his Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State, by Direction of the Lords Juſtices, bearing Date 13th Auguſt 1745, giving him Notice, 'That they had received Intelligence that the Pre-'tender's Son was already landed, or intended to land in Scotland, and 'recommending it to him the Lord Provoſt to exert his Care and Vigi-'lance on this Occaſion, and make uſe of ſuch Precautions as he ſhould 'judge neceſſary for preſerving the publick Peace within the City of 'Edinburgh.' And produced alſo a Copy of his Anſwer to that Letter, bearing Date 17th of Auguſt, promiſing, inter alia, 'not to ſit down in 'Security, but to keep a watchful Eye, in order to prevent, as far as 'poſſible, every thing that might diſturb the Peace of this City;' of which Anſwer the Council approved.

The ſame Day the Council reſolved to levy and raiſe the Number of thirty Centinels to be added to the City-Guard, and recommended to the Lord Provoſt and Magiſtrates to direct and ordain the Captains and Sub-alterns of the Trained-Bands to make up full Liſts of the Perſons be-longing to their ſeveral Companies, and to report the ſame to the Ma-giſtrates againſt Wedneſday then next.

At the ſame time another Order was made, for directing the Conſtables of the City, to make out Liſts of all the Inhabitants and Reſidenters within their ſeveral Bounds and Diſtricts, and that they be diligent in inquiring and finding out what Strangers may happen, from Time to Time, to come within this City, and lodge within their ſeveral Diſtricts; and that all Inn-keepers, Stablers, and others, who lodge and entertain Strangers, ſhould from Time to Time, and as oft as any Strangers ſhall lodge with them, give in to the Captain of the City-Guard, a Note of their Names and Deſignations at their Arrival, and of the Time of their Departure from thence, and order the Captain of the Guard to re-port to the Magiſtrates in Writing, every Morning, Liſts of the Parti-culars that ſhould be delivered in to them by the Inhabitants.

[Tueſday, 27th Auguſt 1745.] Theſe Reſolutions were reported by the Lord Provoſt, and the other Magiſtrates, with the Conveener of the Trades, to a Meeting of ſubſtantial and well-affected Burgeſſes, which it had been propoſed to ſummon to give Advice on the preſent Occaſion. This Propoſal was made to the Lord Provoſt on the Saturday preceding, being the 24th of that Month, by a Citizen of Edinburgh, who had been ſome time a Magiſtrate, and had been commiſſioned by other well-affect-ed Citizens to propoſe ſuch Meeting to the Provoſt, as had been for-merly practiſed on important Occaſions, and which he repreſented as what they judged neceſſary at this Time, in order to take Meaſures for putting the City in a Poſture of Defence. This Propoſition the Provoſt received at firſt with a Sneer or Laugh; but, upon the other's preſſing him, as being the Opinion and the Wiſh of many ſubſtantial Burgeſſes, and what had been formerly practiſed on the like Occaſion, the Provoſt at laſt conſented that there ſhould be ſuch Meeting, but ſaid it could not be that Day, being Saturday, as many of the Burghers would be out of Town; and accordingly it was not held till the Tueſday following.

At this Meeting, which was held in the New Church Iſle at Five o'Clock in the Afternoon, conſiſting of a great Number of the moſt re-ſpectful Burgeſſes, of undoubted Loyalty to his Majeſty, they unani-mouſly approved of the Steps already taken, and offered their Advice as to the farther Steps to be taken, and particularly 'That the City ſhould 'be forthwith put in a Poſture of Defence, and a Body of Men raiſed 'and armed for the Defence thereof and the Service of the Government.' The former of theſe could be of little Uſe without the latter; and to the latter the Provoſt objected, that the ſame would be treaſonable or illegal, without ſpecial Warrant from the Crown. They replied, That if a War-rant was neceſſary, That might be applied for and obtained. Then the Provoſt ſaid, That, ſuppoſing they ſhould get a Warrant, he doubted much if Money could be raiſed by Subſcription for paying them. To which laſt Objection it was anſwered by ſome Citizens of conſiderable Wealth and Credit there preſent, That they were ready to undertake and oblige them-ſelves to find Money to pay a Regiment for three Months. Upon this it was reſolved, that a Committee ſhould be named, out of the Council and of the other Burgeſſes, to conſult with and take the Advice of the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, and ſuch of the other Judges as could be found in Town, and his Majeſty's Advocate and Solicitor, with regard to what farther Steps the Magiſtrates and Council and Community could legally take for preſerving the Peace of the City, and contributing to defeat the Deſigns of the Rebels; and next Day the Council named their Com-mittee accordingly; the Reſult of which was, that Application was made to his Majeſty, in order to remove all Doubts, for his ſpecial War-rant and Licence to raiſe ſuch Regiment.

[Saturday, Auguſt 31*ſt*, 1745.] Advice was received at Edinburgh, that Sir John Cope, with the Troops under his Command, inſtead of march-ing directly to the Rebels, as he had propoſed, and was expected, had, upon his March at Dalwinnie, the Place where the Fort-Auguſtus and In-verneſs Roads meet, marched foreward towards Inverneſs, whereby the Rebels were now got to the ſouthward of the King's Army, when there was no Force left to oppoſe their marching ſouthward where they ſhould think fit, which gave no ſmall Alarm to the Cities of Edinburgh and Glaſgow, and all the Country to the ſouthward of the Rivers or Friths of Forth and Clyde.

[Monday, September 2.] The Council of Edinburgh ordered the Town-Guard to be augmented to the full Number of 126 Men, Officers, Ser-jeants, and Drums included.

[Eodem die. The deceaſt Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'The Accounts 'from the North becoming more and more unfavourable, above twenty 'Gentlemen of known good Affection to his Majeſty and the Govern-'ment, met at Mrs. Clark's Tavern, and agreed to apply to the Lord 'Provoſt, that he would give Orders for putting the Town in as good a 'State of Defence as poſſible with all Expedition. It was complained 'of in this Meeting, that an Application which had been made the 'Week before to his Lordſhip had not met with due Encouragement, 'but that the Perſons who waited on his Lordſhip, and their Zeal, 'had been ridiculed, and made the Subject of inſipid Jokes. The 'Company (however) reſolved, that, whatever Diſcouragements they 'might meet with from thoſe whoſe Duty it was to have animated 'them, they ſhould meet frequently, and promote, to the utmoſt of 'their Power, whatever may tend to the Defence of the Town: 'In the mean time they appointed two of their Number, a 'Gentleman who had formerly been a Baily, and Mr. Mac Laurin, to 'wait on the Provoſt next Morning, with a general Inſtruction to beg 'he would ſee to the Defence of the Town, and offer their Aſſiſtance; 'and three particular Inſtructions, firſt, That he would order making 'Moulds for Bullets, it having been found on Trial that all in the Shops 'had been bought up of late by Cadies, (or Link Boys) who had been 'ſent for them. 2*dly*. That the Sluice of the North Loch, by which the 'Water iſſues from it, ſhould be ſhut and ſecured, that it might fill up. '3*dly*. That they ſhould propoſe to his Lordſhip the making a Diſtinction 'betwixt the Inhabitants of known good Affection, and ſuch as were 'ſuſpected, when he came to intruſt them with the Town's Arms,

and

'and take proper Measures that the City should not be in Danger from 'within, as (had been taken) in 1715.

'Lord Provost did give a satisfactory Answer to the two first of these, but 'as to the third, he did not give the Satisfaction desired; but, after a good 'deal of Reasoning, he said, That, if the Town came to be attacked, he 'would so far make a Distinction as to intrust the Town's Arms with 'the most substantial Burghers; he said, That, if a thousand Men had a 'mind to get into this Town, he could not see how he could hinder 'them. In answer to this, the Number of Trades-Lads in Edinburgh, of 'the Gentlemen who would associate to save the Town, the Unskilfulness 'the Highlanders had always shewn in attacking Stone-Walls, their 'Want of Artillery, and being ill-armed, with the Assistance that would 'be got from the Dragoons, in all Probability, were urged: It was insist-'ed, our doing something was requisite to save the Reputation of the 'Town, to divert the Enemy from coming this Way, and to raise a Spirit 'in the Country.'

'To this he answered, That, to pretend to do when we could do little, 'was to expose us to Ridicule. Other discouraging Expressions were 'used; but, at the End, he said he would be glad of Advice from sensible 'Burghers, and have regard to it.'

[Thursday, Sept. 5th.] 'Little material past till September the 5th, 'when the same Company, with some Addition of other Gentlemen, met 'at the same Place; and now the Danger appearing more imminent, 'they entered into an Association, as Volunteers, to serve for the Defence 'of the City at the Hazard of their Lives and Fortunes, under the Di-'rection of the Lord Provost. This was signed by all present, and by a 'hundred before Twelve the next Day. They appointed some of their 'Number to present this to the Lord Provost, to desire they might be al-'lowed to chuse their Officers, and that he would apply to General Guest 'for Arms to them: They were likewise ordered to intreat that the Pa-'rapet of the Town-Wall might be cleared, which, in many Places, had 'been stopt up with Stone and Lime to prevent smuggling; that Stairs 'should be made for getting up to it at proper Distances; that Cannon 'should be got from the Ships to be placed on the Flanks and Gates.'

This Spirit for putting the Town in a Posture of Defence was so generally prevalent amongst the well-affected, and even the least warlike Part of the Inhabitants, that, of this Date, a Representation to the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Council, was signed by the Principal and Professor of Divinity, and Twelve more of the Ministers of the City of Edinburgh, of whom the total Number is Sixteen, so that three only were absent or wanting; which Representation sets forth, that they have seen and considered a Petition to their Lordship and Honours, subscribed by a considerable Number of the Inhabitants of this City, well-affected to his Majesty's Person and Government, praying, that the City may be put in a proper Posture of Defence against the common Enemy; that they, the Ministers of Edinburgh, judged it their Duty to testify their hearty Approbation of such Design, and their firm Resolution to promote the same in their Sphere and Station, and thereby engage chearfully to contribute for defraying the necessary Expence with their Fellow-Citizens.

The Ministers were as good as their Word as to this Article; for, out of their moderate Stipends, they joined in subscribing for the Pay of one hundred Men out of the thousand proposed to be raised.

The Lord Provost, however, found also considerable Difficulties as to the Legality of this Measure, which was pressed upon him, of raising the Volunteers, and did not give way to it until he had first one signed Opinion of his Majesty's Advocate and Sollicitor, 'That it was lawful for the 'Magistrates to authorize the Subscribers, and other well-affected Inha-'bitants, to take up Arms in Defence of the City, and Support of the Go-'vernment.' And the Provost, it seems, not being fully satisfied with this Opinion, there was subjoined to it, and signed by the same Gentlemen, a farther Opinion, [Eodem die, Sept. 6th] 'That it was lawful, and 'not treasonable, for the Magistrates to comply with the Desire of the 'said Petition of the Volunteers.'

[Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] The Lord Provost declared now, and always afterwards, 'That he would insist on the Privileges of his Office, 'and did not leave the Nomination of the Officers to the Volunteers, but 'allowed them to make up a List of 30 or 40, or more, from which he 'would chuse them. He walked with some of the Magistrates and Vo-'lunteers about a Part of the Town-Wall; he then said, he could not 'see but if two thousand Men had a mind to get into the Town, they 'must succeed; after looking at a Part of the Wall, he desired Mr. 'Mac Laurin, one of the Volunteers, to take the Trouble to make a Plan 'of it; which he promised to do.

'It was thought proper to draw up an Article of News concerning this 'Association, to encourage others to join, and rouze the lethargick Spirit 'of the Country: After it was written, it was thought decent and dutiful 'to shew it to the Provost; the Words, That this Proposal was accepted by 'the Lord Provost, were altered by him; he would have it, that the Lord 'Provost acquiesced in this Proposal. This Alteration was much regretted 'by those who were sincerely zealous in this Cause, being sensible, that, 'in so critical a Time, more than acquiescing was requisite in the Ma-'gistrates, to animate the Burghers, and foreseeing, as it happened, that 'the Trades would not be warm when the Magistrates were so cool. The 'Volunteers however soon rose to 400. The Expences of the Works 'proposed were much talked and complained of, at this Time and af-'terwards.'

[Saturday, Sept. 7th.] The Lord Provost moved in Council, that an Address should be drawn up and presented to his Majesty, which was unanimously agreed to; and accordingly a very dutiful Address was made out and signed; and that same Day it was resolved in Council to authorise the Magistrates and Conveener to employ Persons, with all possible Speed, to put the City in a Posture of Defence, and particularly the Walls thereof.

[Eodem die, Sept. 7th, Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'The Plan of the 'Wall was made ready, and presented to the Council at Six o'Clock; the 'weak Places were pointed out, and what was most necessary to be done 'proposed. The Lord Provost desired an Estimate might be made of the 'Expence; but it was answered, That it could not easily be done, and 'would require Time. It was proposed the Flanks should be first taken 'care of, as the Time which the Rebels would take to come to Edin-'burgh was uncertain; that the doing as much as we could did not hin-'der the capitulating, if necessary; that there was a double Chance for 'Relief, either from Sir John Cope, or the Dutch, so that holding out one 'Day or two might save the Town; but that Dispatch was necessary 'above all things, and all the Workmen that could be got ought to be 'employed.'

[Sunday, Sept. 8th. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'The Workmen clear-'ed a Part of the Parapet; but the Number was very small for this Day, 'and indeed for the whole Week, till September 15th. Of this Complaints 'were made every Night, but to little or no Purpose; sometimes there 'were only two Dozen, when there ought to have been as many Hun-'dreds; for now the Rebels were at Perth. It was found that the Para-'pet, when cleared, was too narrow in several Places, and that it was ne-'cessary to add to it by Scaffolding. This was done in some Places, but 'so few Men were employed, that in others it was not executed.'

[Monday, Sept. 9th. Council Record.] The Lord Provost produced in Council a Sign-Manual from his Majesty, addressed to the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town-Council of Edinburgh, reciting: 'That it had 'been represented to his Majesty, that the Lord Provost, Magistrates, 'Town-Council, Burgesses, and others of the City of Edinburgh, from 'their great Loyalty and Affection to his Person and Govern-'ment, were at this Juncture willing and ready to raise and maintain, at 'their own proper Charge and Expence, by voluntary Subscription and 'Contribution, one thousand Foot for the Defence of the said City and 'the Support of his Government, and that they were desirous of obtaining 'his Royal Licence and Authority for the same: His Majesty does grant 'the same accordingly; and does farther ordain and command, that the 'said one thousand Men shall be under the Direction of the Lord Pro-'vost, Magistrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh.'

This Warrant having been read and considered by the Magistrates and Council, 'They appointed, as a Committee, the present and old Ma-'gistrates, Conveener, Deacons Lauder and Porteous, or any five of 'them, the Lord Provost being always one; and, in case of his Ab-'sence, any Nine of them to be a Quorum, to consider what is most pro-'per to be done upon this Occasion, for levying the said 1000 Foot, 'and particularly to take in the Subscriptions of such of the Inhabitants 'as are willing to contribute for levying and maintaining the said 1000 'Foot, with their proper Officers to be named, for the Purposes men-'tioned in the said Sign-Manual, for the Space of three Months after 'they shall be so inlisted; as also to consider what is proper to be done 'farther for the Safety of the City, and for Support of the Government; 'which Committee shall meet at the Goldsmiths Hall twice each Day, at 'the Hours of Eleven in the Forenoon, and Four in the Afternoon; and 'recommended to the said Committee to keep a Book, into which all their 'Proceedings and Actings shall be regularly ingrossed, to the end the same 'may be reported to the Council from Time to Time.

'And the Magistrates and Council nominate and appoint the Lord 'Provost to be Colonel and Commander of the said 1000 Foot, with 'Power to his Lordship to conduct and direct them, and the other Of-'ficers who shall be named to command under him, as the Council shall 'think proper, or as the Exigencies of Matters shall require.'

[Eodem die, Sept. 9th. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'The Work went on 'but slowly; some of the Embrazures in the Flanks for the Cannon, and 'in the Curtain for the Musqueteers, were opened.'

[Eodem die.] 'A Letter was delivered to the Lord Provost, signed by 'three old Provosts, Drummond, Mac Aulay, Osburn; and three old Bailies, 'Nimmo, Blackwood, Wilson; on Behalf of themselves and the other Vo-'lunteers, praying his Lordship to apply to the Commander in Chief for '200 Stand of Arms; and that he would appoint a Place where the 'Volunteers might be instructed in the Use of the Firelock and Bayonet.'

[Sept. 10th. Council Record.] 'The Council appointed Allan Burns, late 'of the Lord Rothes's Regiment, to be Adjutant to the 1000 Foot com-'manded by the Lord Provost, which were now levying, and recom-'mended to his Lordship to find out proper Persons to be Officers, to 'command each hundred Men under his Lordship.

[Eodem die. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'A Scheme of what was most 'necessary to be done was drawn up by a Volunteer above-mentioned, 'and shewn to General Guest, and at his Desire to an old Officer of the 'Dragoons; being approved by him, it was presented to the Lord Provost. 'It was insisted, that a high House, which rakes a Part of the Wall near 'the Potter-Row Port, should be possessed by a Party, and a Communica-'tion made from the Wall to the House, to relieve or bring off the Men as 'Occasion might require; but this, so much insisted on, was not yielded 'till September 16th, when Captain Murray approved of it; and then, 'though it was begun, there was not Time to finish it.

'Unhappily at this Time the Elections of their Deacons so much em-'ployed the Trades, that few came to work on the Wall; and it never 'appeared, that, after repeated Complaints, proper Authority was em-'ployed to oblige them to work in this Time of the greatest Danger.'

The Lord Provost reported, That he had procured from General Guest an Order to David Lyon, Store-Keeper of the Castle, to deliver to his Lordship, or his Order, upon Receipt, two hundred Muskets, Bayonets, and Cartouch-Boxes, and the like Number of Flints, with one Barrel of Powder, and an equal Proportion of Ball, which are to be distributed among the Gentlemen Volunteers.

The Council also authorized the Bailies of Potter-Row and Portsburgh to give Receipts for sixty Stand of Arms, to be by them distributed amongst the Inhabitants on proper Receipts.

The Council appointed the respective Deacons to make Choice of six Persons out of each of their Incorporations, to be given in to the Council on Friday next, that, out of the same Lists of six, three may be chosen by the Council, to the Effect the Corporations may elect their several Deacons for the Year ensuing.

[Eodem Die. Sept. 11*th.*] The Committee above-mentioned, appointed by the Council on the 9th, met for the firſt Time, the Lord Provoſt preſent, when they gave their Opinion concerning ſome Things to be done for the Reparation of the Walls, that the ſame ſhould be forthwith executed ſo far as hitherto undone.

[Eodem Die. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal] 'Some Cannon were got 'from Ships; and it having been earneſtly recommended to the Lord 'Provoſt, that ſome Hand Granadoes ſhould be got, and the City-Guard 'and Volunteers taught to uſe them, a Meſſage was ſent to the General, 'and by him to the Caſtle; but it was anſwered, That they had not 'above two hundred, and could not ſpare them. Afterwards, however, 'one of the Volunteers, ſurpriſed that there ſhould be ſo few in ſuch a 'Garriſon, ſo well provided with Stores, made a Viſit to the Caſtle, 'and was told by the Store-Keeper, that he had five times that Num-'ber, and was deſired to tell the Provoſt, that he had a hundred at his 'Service, if he had a mind for them. The Meſſage was delivered, but 'the Granadoes never appeared. We found twenty-three that had lien 'in a Cheſt ſince 1715, in the Town's Armoury, but they were never 'examined.

'A Ditch that had been ordered at Wallace's Tower, had been carried 'on right for ſome time, but was afterwards, by ſome Miſtake, or bad 'Advice, caſt on the wrong Side of the Dyke. This Day this was ſtopt, 'and a Remedy propoſed, but not executed for want of Time.

'[September 12. A. M.] The Committee above named, came to ſome 'farther Reſolutions about fortifying the City-Walls, and, inter alia, 'recommended to Mr. Mac Laurin to go along with the Tradeſmen to 'explain the tenth Article of his Memorial, in relation to the putting 'the Wall at Leith-Wynd in a better Poſture of Defence.'

[Committee's Record.] In purſuance of the Lord Provoſt's Recommendation, the Committee reſolved, That it be recommended to ſome of the City-Guard, Edinburgh Regiment, and Gentlemen Volunteers, that they do learn the Exerciſe of throwing the Hand-Granadoes.

'[Eodem Die. P. M.] The Committee reſolve, That the Council 'ſhould invite thoſe who have any Quantities of Grain at Leith, or other 'Parts near to the Town, to bring the ſame into this City, to be lodged 'in the City's Granaries, to be kept therein from the Enemy, Rent-free.'

'[September 13. Council Record.] The Provoſt reported, That, on the '12th current, he had given Receipt to the Store-Keeper of the Caſtle 'for a hundred Muſkets, Bayonets, and Cartouch-Boxes, with half a 'Barrel of Powder, and Ball in proportion, for the Uſe of the Volunteers 'of this City; and alſo that he had given Receipt for two hundred 'Stand of more Arms to the Uſe of the City's Regiment.

'The Proceedings of the Committee for levying the City-Regiment, 'and forwarding the neceſſary Steps to be taken for the Safety and De-'fence of the Place, named the 9th current, were read over, and una-'nimouſly approved by the Council, which recommended to the Com-'mittee to continue in their Diligence.'

The Council then proceeded to make the ſhort Leets for the Election of new Deacons; after which there is nothing entered in the Council Record, 'till the 18th of September, the Day after the Rebels got Poſſeſſion of the Town, when there were ſome Proceedings relating to the annual Election, which did not take effect.

[Eodem Die. Minutes of the Committee.] 'The Lord Provoſt, and other 'Members of the Committee preſent, recommended to Bailie Robert 'Baillie, and his Committee upon the publick Works, and ſuch of this 'Committee as pleaſed to attend, or any three of them, Bailie Baillie 'being always one, to ſee the whole Particulars contained in the former 'Minutes fully executed, without Loſs of Time, and to take the Advice 'and Direction of ſuch proper Perſons without Doors, as they ſhall 'judge neceſſary for executing the whole Particulars: with Power to 'the ſaid Committee to preſs ſuch Workmen as ſhall be judged pro-'per for compleating the whole Works before ſpecified.

'[September 13. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] The Day of the Election 'of the Deacons there was very little done on the Wall; the Deacons could 'not be got; ſome Houſes in St. Mary's Wynd, that had large Windows 'into the Town, were ſhewn to ſome Magiſtrates, and afterwards to the 'Provoſt: but no Orders were given about them. This Day the Car-'riages of the Cannon were examined, and any neceſſary Reparation 'ordered.

'[Saturday, September 14*th, Committee Record.*] The Lord Provoſt in 'the Committee reported, That he had this Day ſigned an Order for 'Payment of 1000 l. Sterling to the Receiver General, to Account of the 'Ceſs due by the City.

'The Committee reſolve, That the Ceſs Books, and thoſe by which 'the Annuity and Poor's Money is collected, ſhall be tranſported from 'the ſeveral Collectors Offices to the Caſtle of Edinburgh for Preſerva-'tion; and the Provoſt wrote a Letter to General Preſton, the Governor 'of the Caſtle, praying him to receive the ſaid Books, and keep them for 'the Uſe of the City.'

This is the laſt Entry made in the Regiſter of the Proceedings of this Committee, which does not appear to have met again after this Saturday the 14th.

'[Eodem Die. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] Little Work on the Walls 'and Scaffoldings, the Cannon were all proved and the Shot got ready.

'[Sept. 15. dit. Journal.] The Lord Provoſt brought Captain Murray 'to Town to give his Advice, and, not 'till this Day, he ordered ſome 'Works within the Gates, which were begun immediately. There were 'more Men employed this Day than ever before; and every body ſeemed 'to exert themſelves: But the Lord Provoſt having never named the 'Field-Officers to the Volunteers, they were now nine independent Com-'panies; and, upon a Motion to go out with Colonel Gardner, they 'unhappily divided in Opinion, which produced ſome Heat amongſt 'them. A moſt unlucky Signal was pitched on to call them to their 'Arms, the ringing of the Fire-Bell, which never fails to raiſe a Pan-'nick in Edinburgh. This happened in time of divine Service; the 'Churches diſmiſſed in Confuſion and Terror: And this was the firſt 'Appearance of Fear in the Place: This Signal ought not to have been 'propoſed or allowed by the Magiſtrates at ſuch a Time, the Rebels not 'being far from us.

'This Day moſt of the Cannon were carried to the Flanks, and in 'this as much Regard as poſſible was had to the weakeſt Places; ſo that 'there were three on St. Mary's Wynd, which raked it. About Six, one 'of the Volunteers, with the Chief of the Bombardiers, came to the 'Provoſt, to have an Order to load them; he kept them waiting till 'Eight, and then deſired another to ſign the Order for him. They 'begun, though in the Night; but, after they came to the Briſto Port, 'they were obliged to wait from Half an Hour after Ten, till near One, 'for want of a Centinel to place on the loaded Gun, though they ſent 'Meſſages for Centinels to the Guard and Council. This put a Stop 'to their Progreſs that Night; the Guns were all loaded with ſmall 'Shot, and, as they flanked the Curtains and Gates, it was the more 'dangerous to leave them without Centinels during all that Time, while 'the reſt of the Wall was guarded, and, All is well, was heard go round 'regularly; there were no Centinels from Briſto Port to the Weſt Port, 'but one or two below.'

On the Evening of this 15th of September, when the Rebels were within a few Miles of the City, and it was apprehended that they might have come up to it during that Night, it was reſolved at a Meeting with the Lord Provoſt, and others of the Council, with the Captains of the Volunteers, That 700 Men ſhould be upon Duty all Night, to guard the Walls all round the Town, who were to conſiſt of 400 Trained Band-, 40 of the new Regiment, 100 Volunteers, 90 Seceders, 40 Dalkeith Volunteers, 30 Exciſe-Officers.

[Monday, September 16. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'The Works 'went on chearfully till Four or Five at Night; a Work was thrown 'up to defend the Paſs to Mountreſay, ſome Gates were ſhut up, 'ſome more Cannon were got, and carried to the Baſtions and Gates; 'we were told that only five Gunners were got at One o'Clock, but 'were promiſed that Pains ſhould be taken to get more.

'Betwixt Two and Three o'Clock, ſome Burghers were ſaid to be 'carrying about for Subſcriptions a Petition to the Magiſtrates, praying 'the Town ſhould capitulate. The Alarm being great at the Weſt Port, 'the Guns there were loaded, and the other Works preſſed on, ſo that 'they were almoſt finiſhed, when an Account came, that a Meeting in 'the New Church had agreed to capitulate. One of the Volunteers 'called for the Provoſt, to know what was to be done to the Cannon; but 'was told, that his Lordſhip had not Time to ſpeak to him. The Call 'of, All is well, did not go round the Wall this Night as the former, 'and the Town ſeemed to be quite off its Defence; the Volunteers 'delivered their Arms into the Caſtle.'

Here Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal ends, which is all in his own Hand-Writing; and, as he was himſelf a Volunteer, and ſerved the Town as a chief Engineer, to deviſe and direct the Methods of fortifying the ſame; as he was a Perſon of great and eminent Abilities, of excellent Judgment as well as great Learning, and of perfect Probity and Veracity; as he had Opportunity to know all the Facts which he relates, and which he ſet down in Writing recently after they happened, with great Diſtinctneſs and Preciſion; and as the Purſuer has reaſon to believe that his Relation will be confirmed by the Teſtimony of living Witneſſes, he has choſen, in this Deduction of the Facts, in order to make the Charge and the Defence better underſtood, to make uſe of the very Words of Profeſſor Mac Laurin, as the moſt accurate and genuine Relation of the Facts that could be made, ſo far as he goes.

The Events of Monday the 16th, when, after ſo much Preparation for a Defence, the City of Edinburgh was in effect ſurrendered, and opened its Gates to the Rebels, were various, and deſerve to be more minutely recited. In the Morning of that Day Provoſt Stewart received a Meſſage from the Camp of the Rebels, which was delivered to him by Andrew Alves, Writer to the Signet, importing, That the City of Edinburgh would be ill-treated by them, unleſs it ſhould be readily or ſpeedily ſurrendered. Upon receiving which, the Provoſt did not commit the ſaid Andrew Alves to Priſon, neither did he give Notice of this Incident to any other of the King's Officers, Civil or Military, nor did he ſo much as adviſe or charge Mr. Alves to forbear repeating or relating that Meſſage of his in the Town, who went directly from the Provoſt to the Street, and repeated his Story to a Circle of People who came round him, amongſt whom one Gentleman adviſed Mr. Alves to go and tell what he had been relating to his Majeſty's Advocate; upon his doing which, the Advocate adviſed the Lord Provoſt to commit Mr. Alves to Priſon, which was now done too late to prevent the diſcloſing or ſpreading the threatening Meſſage which he had brought.

About Two o'Clock in the Afternoon of that Day, a Petition was ſet on foot, which was put into the Lord Provoſt's Hands about Three, addreſſed to the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Council, and intitled, Repreſentation of the under-ſubſcribing Inhabitants of the City of Edinburgh, and it is ſigned by 48 Perſons, ſetting forth, 'That being deeply affected 'with a Senſe of the great Danger to which the City is preſently ex-'poſed, by a rebellious Army marching up thereto in order to attack it, 'and being, at the ſame time, ſenſible of our Inability to make ſuch a 'Defence as with any Probability may defeat their Deſign of entering 'the ſame, without endangering the Lives and Properties of the Inha-'bitants, and expoſing the City to Rapine and Plunder, in the Event 'of our being obliged to ſurrender, and that there is but ſmall, if any 'Proſpect of Aſſiſtance from the Military; therefore praying them, who 'are the Governors of the City, that, before they came to any Reſolu-'tion, either of defending or giving up the Town, they will call a 'Meeting of all the principal Inhabitants and Heritors at preſent in the 'Place, to conſult with them what is proper to be done in an Affair of 'ſo great Importance.'

About the very time that this Petition was going forward, a Letter was ſigned by the Lord Provoſt, together with his Majeſty's Advocate and Sollicitor, addreſſed to the honourable Lieutenant-General Gueſt, in the Words following. 'Edinburgh, 16th September 1745. Sir, We are of 'Opinion, that it would be for his Majeſty's Service, that one hundred 'of the Dragoons ſhould be ordered in to the Town of Edinburgh, to aſ-'ſiſt in defending this Town.'

A little after this, and betwixt the Hours of Three and Four of the Afternoon of this Day, Mr. Walter Groſet was ſent by the Lord Juſtice-Clerk to the Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh, to know whether he the Provoſt intended to defend the Town or not, to preſs the Defence thereof, and to

to assure him, that, if he resolved to defend it, not only the 100 Dragoons he had applied for, but as many more as he pleased to desire, should forthwith be ordered in to his Assistance. Mr. Groset, in his Way to Edinburgh, met the Lord Advocate coming from the Town, and having acquainted him with the Message Lord Justice-Clerk had sent by him Groset to the Provost, he the Advocate approved thereof, and desired Mr. Groset to make all possible Haste in delivering the same, and getting the Provost's Answer.

Mr. Groset found the Lord Provost in the Goldsmiths-Hall, delivered to him the above Message, and insisted for a direct Answer, and that, to prevent Mistakes, the same might be put in Writing; which, after some Conversation on the Subject, the Provost gave him in Writing, directed to the Lord Advocate and the Lord Justice-Clerk, in the following Words: 'You know the Councils I was Witness to: Was I to desire 'his Majesty's Troops to come into the Town now, I might be upbraided, after that, for having laid a Snare for his Majesty's Forces; should 'I refuse them, I may afterwards be accused for tamely delivering up the 'Town of Edinburgh: I desire your Lordships to be explicit, and tell me 'whether it is your Opinion or not they should come in; and send your 'Orders in Writing.'

Upon Mr. Groset's receiving this Answer, he told the Lord Provost, that he had already assured him, that it was the Lord Justice-Clerk's Opinion, that the Town should be defended, and that therefore he must answer for the Consequences of this unnecessary Delay; and as for the Lord Advocate's Opinion, That had already been given in Writing an Hour or two before, when he, along with the Lord Provost himself, had signed a Letter to General Guest, requesting 100 Dragoons to assist in defending the City.

About Four o'Clock in the Afternoon, that is, about an Hour after the Petition above-recited was presented to the Lord Provost, praying for a general Meeting of the Inhabitants, to consult or deliberate with the Magistrates and Council, whether to defend or give up the Town; such Meeting was accordingly held in the New Church Isle, the Lord Provost being in the Chair, and presiding.

At this Meeting there happened to be present some of the Reverend Ministers of the City of Edinburgh, and some other Persons of known good Affection to his Majesty and his Government, according to whose Observation, the far greater Part of the Persons there assembled were reputed of a quite contrary Character; and indeed it was impracticable, at this Meeting, to gather the true Sense of the Citizens in general, supposing it had been now seasonable or fit to deliberate in a popular Assembly, whether to give up or pursue the Defence of the City, for which hitherto so many Preparations had been making, because the greater Part of the most substantial and well-affected Burgesses, who were in Arms as Volunteers, had no Notice of this Meeting, or the Intent of it, and could not possibly attend it, being at that very Time under Arms with their respective Officers, waiting for Orders from the Lord Provost or Colonel, in what Manner they should be disposed of, or act for the Defence of the City.

At the Meeting thus assembled, and thus composed, the general Cry was for giving up the City without making any Defence; and the Reverend Mr. Logan Minister, and others, who attempted to speak in Opposition to this Measure, were borne down with Clamour and Noise.

During this Meeting Mr. Lindsay, Deputy Secretary of War, came with a Message from General Guest to the Lord Provost, upon the General's hearing the Rumour that there was a Meeting of the Inhabitants to deliberate about giving up the Town to the Rebels, to ask the Provost if he continued to be of Opinion that the Dragoons should come into the Town. To which the Provost answered, That he would neither bid nor forbid them, but that the General might do what he thought proper. Upon which Mr. Lindsay very naturally asked him, how he came to scruple about giving Directions concerning the Dragoons, when he had an Hour or two before sent a written Request to the General to obtain them. To which the Provost answered, That he had only signed that Request at the Desire of the Lord Advocate.

Towards the Close of this general Meeting, there was brought into it, in a Manner that appeared somewhat mysterious, being handed in from the Door, from one Person to another, in the Crowd, a Letter addressed, For the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town-Council of Edinburgh, signed Charles P. R. bearing Date, From our Camp this 16th September, 1745, and in the following Words:

'Being now in a Condition to make our Way into the Capital of his 'Majesty's ancient Kingdom of Scotland, we hereby summon you to receive us, as you are in Duty bound to do; and, in order to it, we 'hereby require you, upon Receipt of this, to summon the Town-council, 'and take proper Measures in it for securing the Peace and Quiet of the 'City, which we are very desirous to protect: But if you suffer any of 'the Usurper's Troops to enter the Town, or any of the Cannon, Arms, 'or Ammunition now in it, whether belonging to the Publick, or to 'private Persons, to be carried off, we shall take it as a Breach of your 'Duty, and a heinous Offence against the King and us, and shall resent 'it accordingly. We promise to preserve all the Rights and Liberties of 'the City, and the particular Property of every one of his Majesty's Subjects: But if any Opposition be made to us, we cannot answer for the 'Consequences, being firmly resolved at any Rate to enter the City; and, 'in that Case, if any of the Inhabitants are found in Arms against us, 'they must not expect to be treated as Prisoners of War.'

This Letter was not read out in the general Meeting in the Church; for, as soon as the Subscription to the same was read, the Meeting broke up, and the Lord Provost, with the Members of Council there present, returned to their Council-Chamber, where this Letter was again produced and read; after which it was moved, or agreed to by the Provost, that an Answer should be sent to it, which was accordingly sent, first by one, and then by another Deputation from the Council, who went out to the Camp of the Pretender's Son, who was then about two Miles to the South-West of the City, upon the Water of Leith, in the Parish of Collington. The Return, brought in Writing, to the first of these Deputations, was in the Words following: 'His R. H. the Prince Regent thinks his 'Manifesto, and the King his Father's Declaration already published, are 'a sufficient Capitulation for all his Majesty's Subjects to accept of with 'Joy. His present Demands are, to be received into the City as the Son 'and Representative of the King his Father, and obeyed as such when 'he is there. His R. H. supposes, that since the Receipt of his Letter 'to the Provost, no Arms or Ammunition have been suffered to be carried off or concealed, and will expect a particular Account of all Things 'of that Nature. Lastly, He expects a positive Answer to this before 'Two o'Clock in the Morning, otherwise he will think himself obliged 'to take Measures conform. At Gray's-Mill, 16th September, 1745. 'By his Highness's Command,

'(Signed) J. MURRAY.'

It is proper here to observe, that after the first Deputation was sent out to the Camp of the Pretender's Son, Notice was brought to the Lord Provost, and the others assembled with him in the Council-Chamber, that Sir John Cope, with the Troops under his Command, was arrived off Dunbar. This News was brought by Mr. Walter Groset, who brought the original Letters from Dunbar, giving Notice of this Event, together with a Letter from the Lord Advocate, who was then at Musselburgh, certifying, that these were the original Letters. All these Mr. Groset delivered to the Lord Provost in the Council-Chamber; upon perusing which the Provost said, This News had come too late, for they had come to a Resolution to capitulate, and had sent a Deputation to the Camp of the Rebels for that Purpose, and shewed to Mr. Groset the Letter above-recited from the Pretender's Son, as the Occasion of that Resolution. Mr. Groset then proposed to send after the Deputies to bring them back; and for that Purpose another Member of the Council was accordingly sent, but he did not overtake them.

About this Time Mr. Drummond and Mr. Mac Aulay, Captains of the Volunteers, and who had been both formerly Provosts of Edinburgh, (as the former now is) upon hearing of Sir John Cope's Arrival, came to the Council-House, and insisted that the Defence of the Town should be now resumed, as there was so near a Prospect of their obtaining Relief, and proposed the ringing of the Alarm-Bell, as a Signal to bring every Body back to their Posts.

To this the Provost answered, That he must be careful of the Blood of the Inhabitants; and that, as certain of their Number had been sent out as Deputies to treat, should they be in the Hands of the Rebels whilst the Alarm-Bell was rung, they, the Deputies, might be ill used by the Rebels; and also urged the former Objections, of the Difficulty and Danger of defending the Town. To this Mr. Groset replied, That he knew the Situation of the Town so well, and the Condition of those who were to come against it, who had no Cannon and few Arms, that he would undertake to be one of Fifty that should defend the weakest Place of it, 'till the Troops should come to their Relief. To which one of the Council assenting, the Lord Provost seemed to give Way to the Resolution of defending the Town, provided General Guest would agree to let them have from the Castle what Arms should be wanted. This Mr. Groset undertook to procure, and went directly, accompanied by Provost Coutts, one of the Council, to General Guest in the Castle; who told him for Answer, That he was glad the Provost had come to a Resolution to defend the Town, who might depend upon the utmost Assistance that he the General could give them; and that as soon as the City Arms should be put into proper Hands for that Purpose, what farther Arms were wanting should be ready to be delivered to them from the Castle.

Upon their Return to the Provost, and reporting the General's Answer, Mr. Groset was told, 'That as the Person who had been sent to bring 'back the Deputies had not overtaken them, the Provost and Council, 'as they had entered upon a Treaty, had come to a Resolution not to 'defend the Town.'

It was then proposed and insisted on, that the Cannon and Arms should be delivered into the Castle. For Answer to which the Provost referred to the Letter from the Pretender's Son, and observed the Danger which the Town would incur, if they should remove their Arms. To which Provost Drummond replied, That if they, by giving up the Town, assisted the Rebels with Arms to fight against the King's Troops, would not they, upon retaking the Town, be apt to look upon the Inhabitants as Enemies, and use them accordingly?

After Receipt of the above Answer to the first Deputation, the Council agreed to send out a second Deputation, in order, if possible, to gain some more Time. The Answer to which second was also brought in Writing, though not signed, as the former was, and in the following Words: 'His Royal Highness has already given all the Assurances he can, that 'he intends to exact nothing of the City in general, nor of any in particular, but what his Character of Regent entitles him to: This he repeats, and renews his Summons to the Magistrates to receive him as 'such.'

This second Deputation returned to Edinburgh early in the Morning of Tuesday the 17th of September, in a Hackney-Coach, which entered the City at the West Port, and set down the Deputies at Mrs. Clark's Tavern, where the Lord Provost and others of the Council were waiting for them, to receive their Report, and then the Coach drove down the Street towards the Cannongate; and at the Netherbow Port, which was then kept by a Serjeant's Command of the City-Guard, the Gate was opened to let out the Hackney-Coach, and a Body of Rebels, who were waiting without the Gate, headed by Sullivan and Lochiel, rushed in at the Gate, and became at once Masters of this Capital.

The Rebels, immediately after their becoming Masters of the City, seized all the Cannon, Arms, and Ammunition belonging to it; and the Day following, being Wednesday the 18th, they issued a Proclamation, requiring all Persons in the Shire of Edinburgh, forthwith to deliver up, at the Palace of Holy-Rood-House, all the Arms and Ammunition they had in their Custody, on Pain of being treated as Rebels. And on Thursday the 19th, they sent a Message in Writing to the City of Edinburgh, requiring, on Pain of military Execution, that one thousand Tents, two thousand Targets, six thousand Pairs of Shoes, and a proportional Number of Water Cantines, should be furnished to their Army against the 23d, and promising Payment as soon as the present Troubles should be over. All which were accordingly furnished; and for that Purpose a Tax laid upon the Inhabitants of 2*s.* 6*d.* upon each Pound of their real Rent, within the City, Cannongate, and Leith.

Thus was the City of Edinburgh, which had, in their Address to the King of the 7th of this very Month, said with great Truth, 'That this City 'hath

'hath always diſtinguiſhed itſelf by a firm and ſteddy Attachment to 'Revolution and Whig Principles, and a hearty Abhorrence of all 'Popiſh and arbitrary Government: and particularly, that, during the 'Rebellion in the Year 1715, their Zeal for his late Majeſty was 'equalled by few, and ſurpaſſed by none; and, at the ſame Time, 'aſſured his preſent Majeſty, that, at this Time, they would ſtand by 'him with their Lives and Fortunes, and employ every Power they were 'poſſeſſed of, and all the Means his Majeſty ſhould put in their Hands, 'to diſappoint the Attempts of France and the Pretender.' This City, which had given ſo many Reaſons to expect better Things of it, was, after mighty Preparations for a vigorous Defence, thus poorly delivered up, without ſtriking one Blow, to an half-armed Rabble, at a Time when the King's Army was within a Day's March of the City, to the great Diſcredit and Reproach of the City itſelf, in the Eyes of the World, who were ignorant of the particular Circumſtances and Cauſes of ſo ſtrange an Appearance, to the hearty Grief and Sorrow of all its well-affected Inhabitants, who are by far the greater Part of them, to the Triumph of the Pretender's Son and his Adherents, to the Ruin of many unfortunate Perſons, who, by this Appearance of Succeſs, were encouraged to engage in the Rebellion, to the real and high Detriment, not of the City itſelf only, but of the Publick; the Rebels, by this Capture, having been there furniſhed with Arms, Tents, and Proviſions of all Kinds, which contributed chiefly to their obtaining the Victory at Preſton Pans a few Days after; and that again, to the Continuance and farther Progreſs of the Rebellion, to the immenſe Addition to the Expence of the Publick, the great Interruption of Commerce and Credit, the Progreſs of his Majeſty's Enemies abroad, and the Interruption of the internal Tranquillity of this Kingdom, until that was happily reſtored by the Conduct and Succeſs of his Royal Highneſs the Duke.

It was natural for all the World, at firſt Sight, to lay the Blame of an Event, which has brought on and contributed to ſo many and great Miſchiefs, principally on the Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh for the Time, being the chief Magiſtrate and Governor of the City; and the Queſtion now brought to Trial is, Whether he was, or was not guilty or culpable in his Deportment in that high Office, during the Tranſactions libelled, and above more particularly recited? The Libel charges, That he was guilty of groſs Neglect of Duty, and Miſbehaviour in his Office on that Occaſion; and whether he was or not, muſt depend upon a due Compariſon of the Duty of his Office, with his actual Behaviour, to ſee how far the one comes up to the other, and wherein he was alledged to be deficient; and to have counteracted his Duty, the Libel fairly and particularly ſets forth, and thereby gives him the better Opportunity to clear himſelf, if he be able.

Upon the Libel being read in Court on the 13th current, and the Pannel being aſked by the Court, as uſual, what he had to ſay for himſelf, he ſaid, in effect, that he was not guilty, and that his Conduct, upon the Occaſion libelled, had been agreeable to his Duty; and then left it to his Counſel to offer and make good his Defence at large; of whom five were accordingly heard at great Length, and the Subſtance of their Arguments, as far as the Purſuer could obſerve and recollect them, was as follows.

They took Notice that the Pannel had already ſuffered very great Hardſhips by his long Confinement, for the Space of fourteen Months, without being brought to Trial, which, to a Man engaged, as he is, in conſiderable Trade and Buſineſs, they ſaid was a Puniſhment greater than he merited, ſuppoſing all that is alledged in this Libel were true. They ſaid, that the Source of this hard Uſage was the Malice of certain Enemies of the Pannel in the City of Edinburgh, who, in order to ruin his Credit and Intereſt in this City, had ſet themſelves to find Fault with his Conduct during the Rebellion, had induſtriouſly miſrepreſented that Conduct, and raiſed a popular Clamour againſt him, which, having reached the Seat of Government, had produced the Severities he has already met with.

That he was however now glad of an Opportunity of having his Conduct brought to Trial by the certain Teſt of judicial Evidence, hoping that he would now be declared innocent upon Examination, who, by popular Clamour, had been pronounced guilty without Examination.

At the ſame Time it was alſo urged, though not very conſiſtently with this laſt Declaration, that the Pannel could not competently be brought to Trial at all in this Court upon this Libel; that the particular Statute of King James the Second, upon which it is laid, was almoſt three hundred Years old, and was gone into Diſuetude; that, whilſt it was in force, it was never meant to concern any more than the Behaviour of Magiſtrates in their judicial Capacity, or ordinary Adminiſtration on ſuch Occaſions as commonly or yearly occur, but never to concern the extraordinary Office of Magiſtrates in Time of War or open Rebellion, when it may be very incident to them to err or commit Miſtakes, as many an honeſt Burgeſs may be very well qualified to diſcharge the Duty of Provoſt, or other Magiſtrate of his Burgh, in quiet and peaceable Times, from whom it cannot be expected, that, in ſuch an Exigency as an open Rebellion, he ſhould be able to act the Part of an expert military Commander or Governor of a Town, and that the Deportment of the Provoſt on ſuch Occaſion, could not be tried at all at common Law; that it was an improper Queſtion to be tried by a Jury, who might very properly try a ſingle Iſſue, as whether a Man was guilty of Murder, Robbery, or the like, but very unfit to give Judgment upon a Series of Facts relating to the Deportment of a Provoſt, whether it was or was not agreeable to his Duty; and therefore it was ſaid, that the only competent Method, by the Conſtitution of this Kingdom, for trying and puniſhing Treſpaſſes ſuch as thoſe alledged in this Libel, was by the Authority of the Legiſlature itſelf, in ſuch Manner as had been practiſed in the Caſe of Alexander Wilſon, who had been Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh at the Time of the Murder of Captain John Porteous.

It was farther ſaid, by way of more particular Anſwer to the Matters charged in this Libel, that the ſame contained nothing criminal; that, as to the firſt Article, concerning the raiſing of the Edinburgh Regiment, it was no Crime in the Provoſt to entertain a Doubt concerning the Legality thereof, and to heſitate to commit what he apprehended might have been treaſonable, and that he was juſtified in his Doubt by the ableſt Advice given for applying for his Majeſty's ſpecial Warrant, which was accordingly obtained.

That, as to the ſecond, concerning the Volunteers, he had the ſame Reaſon to doubt concerning the Legality of that Meaſure, and it was no Crime in him that he could not perceive any Difference betwixt authorizing a Body of armed Men who were to ſerve without Pay, and another Body who were to receive Pay; or that the one might be authorized without his Majeſty's ſpecial Warrant, which had been adviſed to be neceſſary or proper in reſpect of the other; that, more particularly, as to this Article, the Provoſt had Reaſon to take Offence, that the Meaſure was ſo far concerted and carried on by the Volunteers, as that they brought him a Petition, ſigned by ninety or a hundred Perſons, without his Privity, or previouſly conſulting with him: This he had Reaſon to conſider as a deſigned Neglect and Inſult upon him; and yet, as ſoon as he was adviſed that the Thing might be lawfully done, he gave way to it; and it was a very ſlender Circumſtance to be charged as a Crime, that he choſe to have it ſaid that he acquieſced in that Meaſure, rather than that he heartily approved it, or that he ſhould be charged with a Defect of Civility or good Manners towards theſe Volunteers.

As to the Third, concerning the Repairs of the City Walls, it was obſerved in general, That the Provoſt was not the ſole Perſon anſwerable for any Slowneſs or Defect of Care and Diligence in this reſpect, though he had been ſingled out, and made the ſole Object of this Proſecution. He was but one of many, who behoved to act by the Authority of his Council, and of the Committee appointed to take the ſpecial Direction of what concerned the Defence of the City; and that all his Conduct was agreeable to the Senſe of theſe two Bodies, and approved by them, and without them he could do nothing; for that the King's Warrant concerning the Regiment, being addreſſed to the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Council, and having ordered that the Regiment ſhould be under the Direction of them all, and the Council having appointed a Committee for that Purpoſe, and to conſider what farther ſhould be done for the Safety of the City, the Provoſt was thus limited in the legal Exerciſe of the known Duty of his Office; that, however, the Committee, whereof he was one, had given the neceſſary Orders for the Repairs, and Warrants for impreſſing Workmen for that Purpoſe; that the Cannon upon the Walls were actually loaded on Sunday the 15th, and Applications were made to procure Gunners for managing them.

To the fourth Article it was ſaid, That no Propoſition could be accepted or rejected by the Provoſt alone, but by the whole Council; that as to the Propoſition in the Article mentioned concerning the Trained Bands, of the purging that Body of diſaffected or ſuſpected Perſons, it was true that the Provoſt was averſe to it, and choſe rather to undergo any Hazard, than take upon him to fix ſuch Mark of Infamy upon a Number of his Fellow-Citizens, without any certain Ground of Charge againſt them.

To the fifth Article, That here again the Pannel was charged with Defect of Civility or good Manners (a very unuſual Point of Dittay); and that ſuppoſing the Fact true, of the Converſation with Sir Robert Dickſon, it was not unreaſonable, nor could juſtly give Offence, for the Provoſt to propoſe ſuch Method for finding Subſiſtence to the ordinary Men, as inliſting them in the Edinburgh Regiment, which would alſo be a Means to inſure their Attendance and Service for a limited Time, ſo as they might not be at Liberty to withdraw at Pleaſure, and this perhaps when the City ſhould be under the moſt preſſing Exigency.

To the ſixth, That the only Thing here imputed to the Pannel as an Offence, was his not immediately committing Andrew Alves to Priſon, the doing which might have been of bad Conſequence, to deter others from bringing Intelligence to the Provoſt concerning the Rebels or their Deſigns; and that at beſt it was not a very clear Caſe, that it was at all lawful or competent to commit Mr. Alves for only repeating to the Provoſt what the Rebels had ſaid to him, when they ſeized him and made him their Priſoner; that his receiving the Meſſage, or hearing what Mr. Alves ſaid, could be no Crime; and, as ſoon as he heard it, he repaired to the Council-Chamber, then held in the Goldſmiths Hall, where he imparted this Piece of Intelligence to ſome others of the Council, who agreed that it ſhould be concealed, leſt it ſhould intimidate the Inhabitants that, however, ſoon after, the Lord Provoſt ſaw the Lord Advocate, and, in purſuance of his Advice, actually committed Mr. Alves.

To the ſeventh and eighth Articles it was ſaid, That Monday the 16th of September 1745. was a Day of univerſal Diſtraction in the City of Edinburgh; that the two Regiments of Dragoons of Hamilton and Gardner, who, with the whole City-Guard, had been poſted at the Colt-bridge, a Mile Weſt from Edinburgh, about three Afternoon, retreated, and paſt by the North Side of the Town, Eaſtward, which greatly heightened the Pannick of the Citizens, being thus abandoned by the only military Force they had in their Neighbourhood, and no News of Sir John Cope or his Army was now come, and at the ſame Time the chief civil Officers of the Crown had left the City; and yet, in this Situation, the Lord Provoſt, in the Goldſmiths Hall, where many of the Council and other Inhabitants were aſſembled, declared himſelf ready to act his Part for the Defence of the Town; but that he was now ſeconded by few: But at this Juncture, one Mr. Groſet arrived, and delivered a Meſſage to the Provoſt, that he ſhould ſend for, or conſent to receive a Party of Dragoons; at which he, the Provoſt, was ſurpriſed, having been preſent the Night before at a Council of War, where it was reſolved to be improper to bring any of the Dragoons into the City; upon which he gave his Anſwer in Writing to that Meſſage, which is above recited: That the Inhabitants, anxious to know the Reſolutions of the Council, preſſed into the Room in a Crowd; and then Somebody elſe, not the Provoſt, propoſed to adjourn to the New-Church Iſle; that, on the Way thither, a Gentleman on Horſeback told loudly, that the Rebels were near eight thouſand ſtrong, which ſtill heightened the Pannick; that yet, in the New-Church Iſle, the Lord Provoſt ſpoke as he had in the Council-Room, declaring himſelf ready, if the Citizens were ſo diſpoſed, to do his Part for Defence of the City; that at this Meeting, the Letter from the Pretender's Son was brought in, to the Reading of which he, the Provoſt, objected, and thereupon returned with his Council to the Goldſmiths Hall.

That the Inhabitants had now the Direction of Affairs in their Hands, and they were governed by their Fears and Terrors; that the higher Civil

Officers

Officers of the Crown being gone, the Magiſtrates ſent to their own Aſſeſſors for Advice; but they alſo were all gone, excepting one, who declined giving any explicit Opinion on ſuch high Matters; upon which the Letter was read, and found to be to the ſame Purpoſe with Alves's Meſſage, and then they thought themſelves under an unavoidable Neceſſity to ſend out a Deputation, in order to procure a Delay, and gain ſome Time for the expected Relief to come.

To the ninth and tenth it was ſaid, That the Defence of the Town was now given up as impracticable; and that upon ſerious Deliberation it was the unanimous Opinion of the Council, that no direct Order ſhould be given by the Lord Provoſt concerning the Arms of the Volunteers, or the Cannon upon the City-Walls, for fear of incenſing the lawleſs Multitude of Rebels to put their Threats in Execution.

The ſame Anſwer was given to the eleventh Article relating to the City-Arms, to which there was now added, and not till now, a Matter of Fact never formerly alledged by the Pannel; neither in his Examination before the Committee of the Privy-Council, on the 7th December 1745, nor in the ſigned Anſwers returned by him to his Libel, and it muſt appear very ſtrange, if it was true, that the moſt plauſible Anſwer he had to make to this very heavy Article ſhould never have been once mentioned till now, being, that he the Provoſt could prove that he ſent a Meſſage to General Gueſt, propoſing that he ſhould ſend a Party of Soldiers to take away the City-Arms and carry them up to the Caſtle.

Upon the twelfth Article it was ſaid, That the Opinion of the Citizens of Edinburgh, or any Number of them, concerning the Pannel, could afford no Evidence that he was actually guilty; and that, upon the whole, the Surrender of the City was owing to a Train of unavoidable Accidents, for which he the Provoſt was not blameable.

Notice was alſo taken more than once, by the Pannel's Counſel, that he himſelf had a very large Property, conſiſting of a Stock of Wines, lying in his Cellars at Leith, which would be expoſed to the Diſcretion of the Rebels in caſe of their coming to Edinburgh; but the Concluſion drawn from this Fact was not, to the Purſuer's Obſervation, diſtinctly ſpoke out or explained by his Counſel; ſo that the Purſuer is ſtill at a Loſs to know what Uſe was meant to be made of that Obſervation, whether by way of Argument to evince the Sincerity of Mr. Stewart, in deſiring to keep the Rebels at a Diſtance, that his own moveable Eſtate, of ſo great Value, might not come under their Power; or if it was meant to be offered by way of Excuſe for him, that he was afraid of giving offence to the Rebels, by oppoſing them with Vigour and Zeal, becauſe they might have it in their Power to hurt him deeply in his private Fortune or Effects; and therefore the Purſuer muſt leave it to them to explain their own Meaning or Intent, in alledging and inſiſting on this Matter of Fact.

It was farther obſerved for the Pannel, though not very conſiſtently with the Allegation, that there was nothing material relevant or criminal charged upon him in theſe Articles; that the Charge therein contained, if it amounted to any Crime at all, was no leſs than that of High-Treaſon; for that ſuch, no doubt, it was, if he purſued Meaſures that had no other Tendency than to betray the City, whereof he was chief Magiſtrate, into the Hands of the Rebels: It would have been this Crime in caſe the Provoſt had acted with that ill Intention, which is the eſſential Requiſite to render the Actions of Men at all criminal or puniſhable; and if the Provoſt had no ſuch Intention, then, ſuppoſing he had committed ſeveral Errors in his Conduct, theſe were no more than Errors in Judgment, and ſuch Miſtakes in Matters prudential, in difficult and dangerous Times, when a Magiſtrate muſt act one Way or other, ought never to be imputed to him as a Crime; for though the Part he chuſes do not prove ſucceſsful, the oppoſite Conduct might have been no more ſo, and, in that Caſe, that very oppoſite Conduct might, with the ſame Facility, have been laid hold of as the Ground of a Proſecution: For Example, if he had brought in the Dragoons into the City, and theſe afterwards had fallen into the Hands of the Rebels; or, ſuppoſe he had found Means to ſuppreſs the threatening Letter from the Pretender's Son, and the Inhabitants had ſtood to their Defence, and yet the Town had been ſtormed, and the Rebels had then cut the Throats of the Inhabitants, ſuppoſing he had eſcaped the Maſſacre, it is eaſy to imagine what a heavy Charge might have been formed againſt him, as having been the Author or Cauſe of ſuch Calamities: And therefore, ſince his Conduct is not alledged to have been directly treaſonable, it proceeded at worſt from Miſtake, or Errors in Judgment, which is no Crime at all that is puniſhable by the Law in a free Country, ſuch as this is.

It was farther obſerved, that the Pannel was not ſo much as charged in the Libel with Diſaffection to his Majeſty's Government; and that however the Facts libelled might be apt to make ſome Impreſſion, in maintaining a Charge of that Sort, they could not be combined or laid together to an End or Purpoſe that was not directly libelled; that the Facts alledged in the Libel might indeed amount to a Proof of this Propoſition, that the Provoſt was in his Judgment averſe to the Meaſure of defending the City of Edinburgh, as a thing that was impracticable, and therefore not eligible or prudent to be attempted; and it was contended, that this was not even an Error in Judgment, for that he was in the right in being of that Opinion, for that the City of Edinburgh is no ſtrong or fortified Place; and though it is ſurrounded by an old Wall, and a Lake upon one Side, and that the Rebels had no Artillery, it had been very practicable for them to have made their Way into the Town; they might have blown up the Gates, or a Part of the Wall, with Gun-Powder, or have ſet Fire to the Houſes on the Weſt-Side of St. Mary's Wynd, that enter from without, and yet are a Part of, and adjoining to the Town.

All this was, ſo far as the Purſuer could obſerve or recollect, the Subſtance of what was urged by the ſeveral Counſel for the Pannel in his Defence; and in reply to theſe Things, it was, and is now, on behalf of his Majeſty, and for the publick Intereſt, obſerved as follows:

It is admitted for the Purſuer, that the Counſel for the Pannel have rightly obſerved, that the Facts charged upon him, if it had been charged that they were done doloſe & malo animo, of ſet Purpoſe or Deſign, to have put the City of Edinburgh into the Hands of the Rebels, would have amounted to High-Treaſon; for the Lord Hale ſays, in his Pleas. of the Crown, Vol. I. p. 168. 'If a Captain, or other Officer that hath the Cuſtody of any of the King's Caſtles or Garriſons, ſhall treacherouſly, by 'Combination with the King's Enemies, or by Bribery, or for Reward, 'deliver them up, this is Adherence to the King's Enemies.'

And again, p. 169. he ſays, 'The Truth is, if it were delivered up by 'Bribery or Treachery, it might be Treaſon: But if delivered up upon 'Cowardice or Imprudence, without any Treachery, though it were an 'Offence againſt the Laws of War, and the Party ſubject to a Sentence 'of Death by Martial Law; yet it is not Treaſon by the Common Law, 'unleſs it was done by Treachery.'

And if the Pannel, without being engaged in the Intereſt of the Pretender, or without receiving any direct Bribe from him or his Adherents, did even ſuffer himſelf to be moved by the Fear of their hurting his private Property in his Wine-Cellars at Leith, to neglect or counteract any Part of his Duty as Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh, this was at leaſt bordering extremely near upon High-Treaſon.

The Atrocity and the Nature of High-Treaſon is excellently deſcribed in the Digeſts of the Civil Law, in the Title Ad legem Juliam majeſtatis, l. 1. in theſe Words: Proximum ſacrilegio crimen eſt, quod majeſtatis dicitur, § 1. majeſtatis autem crimen illud eſt, quod adverſus populum Romanum, vel adverſus ſecuritatem ejus committitur, quo tenetur is, cujus operâ, dolo malo, concilium initum erat,—quo armati homines cum telis lapidibuſve in urbe ſint, conveniantve advexſus rempublicam; locave occupentur, vel templa; quove cœtus conventuſve fiat, hominеſve ad ſeditionem convocentur:——Quove quis contra rempublicam arma ferat: quique hoſtibus populi Romani nuncium literaſve miſerit, ſignumve dederit, feceritve dolo malo, quo hoſtes populi Romani concilio juventur adverſus Rempublicam.

It is true, that, in this Deſcription, the dolus malus, or the ill Deſign, is an eſſential Ingredient; and it is in general true concerning all Crimes, as it is well expreſſed in the Reſcript of the Emperor Hadrian, l. 14. ad legem Corneliam de ſicariis,—in maleficiis voluntas ſpectatur, non exitus: But the voluntas, or the dolus malus, is to be gathered from the Facts by the Judgment of the Court or the Jury, by whom the Party is tried, againſt whom the Facts are charged, which may very poſſibly have proceeded from a treaſonable Deſign againſt the Crown or the Publick.

The King, however, may, if he be ſo graciouſly pleaſed, wave the inſiſting againſt a Criminal for the higheſt Crime with which he may be poſſibly chargeable; ſo the Lord Hale, p. 374. 'All Treaſon is Miſpriſion of 'Treaſon and more; and therefore, he that is aſſiſting to a Treaſon, may 'be indicted of Miſpriſion of Treaſon, if the King pleaſe.' Stanf. P. C. 37. 6. Co. P. C. 36. 2 R. III. 10. 6.

'The Judgment in Caſe of Miſpriſion of Treaſon, is Loſs of the Pro'fits of his Lands during his Life, Forfeiture of Goods, and Impriſon'ment during Life.'

And the ſame Lord Hale, p. 143. reports 'a Caſe, where there was a 'Conſultation of the Judges, where he was preſent, in the Year 1675. 'relating to the Weavers in and about London, being offended at the En'gine-Looms for making of Ribbons, who roſe in great Numbers to de'ſtroy thoſe Engines in different Counties, and did Damage to the Value 'of ſeveral Thouſand Pounds.

'Five of the Judges ſeemed to be of Opinion, that this was Treaſon 'within the Act 25th Edward III. upon the Clauſe of levying War 'againſt the King; or at leaſt upon the Clauſe of the Statute of the 13th 'Charles II. Chap. 1.

'The other five Judges were not ſatisfied that this was Treaſon with'in either of theſe Statutes.

'Many of them therefore concluded, that if Mr. Attorney ſhould think 'fit to proceed as for a Treaſon, the Matter might be ſpecially found, and 'ſo left to farther Advice——

'Upon the Concluſion of this Debate,—Mr. Attorney, upon Conſider'ation of the whole Matter, it ſeems, thought fit to proceed for a Riot, 'and cauſed many of them to be indicted for Riots, for which they were 'convicted, and had great Fines ſet upon them, and were committed in 'Execution, and adjudged to ſtand upon the Pillory.'

In the preſent Caſe, the Doubt is not concerning the Tendency of the Facts charged upon this Pannel, namely, That it was to give up the City of Edinburgh, the Capital of North-Britain, not to the King's Enemies only, but to a Pretender to his Crown; and the Doubt is only, quo animo this was done, whether with a treaſonable Intent, or through Cowardice, or Negligence, or Imprudence; and this might have been left to the Jury to judge, in caſe he had been charged with High-Treaſon. It is therefore one ſignal Inſtance of the Mildneſs and Benignity of his Majeſty's Government, that the Purſuer has been ordered to proſecute this Pannel, 'not for High-Treaſon, but for a High Miſdemeanour, in having many Ways acted contrary to his Duty, and thereby ſuffered the 'City of Edinburgh, with the Cannon, Arms, Ammunition, and Proviſions, to fall into the Hands of the Rebels;' and when the Pannel's own Counſel are ſenſible that the Facts charged upon him are ſuch, as, at leaſt, border ſo near upon High-Treaſon, and might have been charged as ſuch, they cannot be permitted at the ſame Time to plead, or, at leaſt, they ought not to be liſtened to when they plead, that the Facts here charged have no Relevancy in them, or do not amount to any Crime or Offence whatſoever.

The other Obſervations above recited were extremely groundleſs, That this Libel does not charge the Pannel with Diſaffection to the Government, and that the Opinion of the well-affected Citizens, mentioned in the 12th Article, That he was ſecretly in the Intereſt of the Pretender, cannot infer his being actually guilty of any Crime whatever, for Diſaffection is not the Name of a Crime known in the Law; no Man can be tried for that Diſpoſition of his Mind, but for the Effects which it produces; and, if the Facts here charged had been alledged to have been done by the Pannel through Diſaffection to his Majeſty and his Government, that would have been in Reality, or in Effect, a Charge of High-Treaſon, which was not the Thing intended in the preſent Caſe.

And as for the other Remark, it was far from the Meaning of the Purſuer to alledge, that any Man can be puniſhed merely for the Opinion of others concerning him: But that Fact is mentioned in the Libel for this Reaſon, That, when the main Queſtion, moved by this Trial, is, Whether the

the Pannel was, or was not culpable or negligent in the Execution of his Office as Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh, during the Rebellion, it is a Fact or Circumſtance ſtrongly tending to evince that he was ſo guilty, if it be true that the whole Tenor of his Behaviour was ſuch, as to induce a general Suſpicion or Belief amongſt the well-affected Inhabitants, that their Provoſt was ſecretly in the Intereſt of the Pretender; for, whether they were or were not in the right in that Suſpicion or Belief, they, being ſo immediately and ſo deeply intereſted, could not fail to be conſtantly attentive to the Conduct of their Provoſt; and, if that was ſuch as produced in them ſuch Apprehenſion or Belief, that very Thing is one Demonſtration, ſuppoſing that they carried their Concluſion too far, that his Conduct was not ſuch as became a faithful, vigilant, and zealous Magiſtrate upon that Occaſion.

The Nature of the Office of Lord Provoſt of the City of Edinburgh is well known to this Court. It is partly the ſame that belongs to the chief Magiſtrate of every Royal Burgh in the Kingdom, and partly ariſes from the particular Grants to the City of Edinburgh; they are Sheriffs within themſelves; the Lord Provoſt is the High Sheriff, and, of late Years, as well as formerly, has acted as ſuch, and tried Cauſes even capital, and the Bailies are, ex officio, his Deputy Sheriffs.

The Lord Provoſt is the King's Lieutenant within the City, he is Colonel of the City-Guard by the Act of Parliament authoriſing that, and he is chief Commander of the City Trained-Bands or Militia; and this very Provoſt claimed, and was allowed to be the Colonel of the Volunteers, and was by the Council declared to be Colonel of the Edinburgh Regiment of 1000 Men, that was to be raiſed and paid by the voluntary Subſcriptions of the Inhabitants: In ſhort, the whole military Power within the City was in him, and the chief executive Power, in all Reſpects.

Neither is it true, that the Order in the King's Sign-Manual for the Regiment, that the ſame ſhould be under the Direction of the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates, and Council of Edinburgh, was either intended, or had the Effect to derogate in the leaſt from the legal Powers and Privileges of the Lord Provoſt; that Warrant was granted on the Application of the whole Council of Edinburgh, the Regiment was to be maintained by them and their Fellow-Citizens, the End propoſed by it was the Defence of his Majeſty's Government, but more eſpecially the Preſervation of the City of Edinburgh againſt the Rebels; it was therefore very properly and graciouſly declared, that this Regiment ſhould be under the Direction of the Magiſtrates and Council of Edinburgh; that is, it ſhould not be withdrawn from the immediate Service of that City, or ſent elſewhere, like the reſt of his Majeſty's Troops, at the Diſcretion of his Generals, where it might be of Uſe for his Service, without the Conſent of the Magiſtrates and Council of Edinburgh. But this did not hinder the Lord Provoſt from being, according to the Conſtitution of the City, the Colonel or chief Commander of that Regiment, as well as of all the other Military Force within the City. It cannot be ſuppoſed to have been the Senſe of his Majeſty's Order, that the whole Town-Council, conſiſting of thirty-three Perſons, ſhould act the Part of a Colonel, or have the immediate Command of a Regiment; the utmoſt Effect that Order could have, was, that the whole Council ſhould have Power to give general Orders as to the Manner of employing the Regiment, ſuch as every Prince or State are daily known to give to the Generals or Commanders of their Armies, who are not the leſs veſted with the Powers of Commanders, that they are ſubject to ſuch Direction or Controul.

Neither is it true, that the Appointment of a Committee, in the Terms above-recited, was an Obſtruction or Hindrance to the Provoſt's acting in the Manner that the Libel requires of him, unleſs he can ſay, which he has not done, nor can do by any Thing that appears on Record, that either the Council or the Committee reſiſted his Will, or that they oppoſed or over-ruled him, by Majority of Voices, in any one Thing that he propoſed to be done towards the Preſervation of the City.

His Station, therefore, gave him Power ſufficient, and rendered it his Duty to be the chief Perſon to deviſe, order, and execute every Thing that was proper for preſerving his own City from the Rebels; and, if the Facts be true that are in this Libel charged, it is left to the Judgment of this Court, whether his Conduct was agreeable to his Duty; or if he was not, on the contrary, faulty or negligent in the Execution of his Office, and guilty of manifold Miſbehaviours in it on the Occaſion libelled.

That Occaſion called for the moſt earneſt, vigilant, and active Diſcharge of the Duty of chief Magiſtrate, veſted with ſuch Powers as he had; and, to illuſtrate this, the Purſuer begs Leave to quote a Paſſage from a learned Author, Ærodii rerum ab omni antiquitate judicatarum pandectæ, in the Title, De officio præfecti vigilum, whereof the Rubrick is in theſe Words: Negligentiam, in iis qui ad ſummum reipublicæ pertinent, eſſe capitalem, cap. 1. M. Militius, Cn. Lolius, L. Sextilius, triumviri nocturni, cùm incendii arcendi cauſâ, quod Romæ in ſacra via exortum eſſet, cum hamis & dolabris, omnique familiâ publicâ evocati, tardius adveniſſent: à tribuno plebis die dictâ ad populum, damnati ſunt: leves ob cauſas, inquit Valerius: ſed diſciplina neceſſaria.

Idem ferè apud nos, ſenatûs judicio, cùm adhuc illic eſſemus advocati, Gabaſtoni, præfecto vigilum, accidit: qui vocatus ad ſedandam ſcholarium de ſuo prato ſeditionem, non veniſſet. Nam indignum eſſe, qui, ut excubet reipublicæ, ab omnibus aliis muneribus excuſatur, & præſens vice eſt abſentis: is in tanta neceſſitati, ubi minima mora ſummi momenti eſt, ſegnem, tardum ac negligentem ſe præbeat, aut (quòd minus quoque eſt ferendum) contumacem.——Et quando omnibus viribus opus eſt, nulla cauſa, nulla excuſatio proficit.

Cap. 2. P. Bilius quoque triumvir nocturnus, à P. Aquilio, tribuno plebis accuſatus, quòd vigilias negligentiùs circumiſſet, populi judicio concidit. Nam quod levius ſit in aliis cauſis: in his, ut in re militari, capitale eſſe. Quia puncto ſæpe temporis, maximarum rerum occaſiones amittuntur: neque in hujuſmodi his errare fas eſt, aut dicere, Non putabam.

It was upon the ſame Principles that are here ſet forth, and followed in Practice in the Roman Republick, as well as the French Monarchy, that our old Statute 1457, in the Libel recited, was made, for the Punition of negligent Officiars, and namely, 'Provoſts of Burghs, and others, 'who ſhould be found faulty and negligent in the Execution of their Offices, and it may be lawfully proved on them, or notoriouſly known;' but with this Difference indeed, that every Offence of this Kind is not made capital, as mitiores pœnæ nobis ſemper placuere, 'but only that they be 'puniſhed, in their Perſons and Goods, after the Quantity of their 'Treſpaſs, at the King's Will.' This is ſuch a Statute as hardly enacts any thing poſitive, or other than what is included in the Common Law of this and all other civilized Nations, and therefore never can go into Diſuetude. And it ſeems unneceſſary to offer any Anſwer to the groundleſs Diſtinction advanced by the Pannel's Counſel, betwixt the Duty of a Provoſt, or other Magiſtrate, upon common or ordinary, and extraordinary Occaſions, there is neither Law nor Reaſon for that Diſtinction. No Man ſhould undertake the Office of a Pilot, who can only hold the Helm in his Hand in ſerene Weather, and is incapable to do his Duty when a Storm riſes. And the Allegation of this Diſtinction ill becomes the Pannel, who is a Gentleman by Birth and Education, and, as ſuch, ſuperior to the ordinary Rank of Burgeſſes, who may be, and often are raiſed to the Office of chief Magiſtrates.

Such, for Inſtance, was the Character of Provoſt Wilſon, a Brewer in Edinburgh, who was Lord Provoſt of that City when Captain Porteous was murdered, who, upon the ſame Principles that are above-mentioned, was puniſhed by an Act of the 10th of his Majeſty, merely for being faulty or negligent in the Execution of his Office; for the Act recites the Murder of Captain Porteous, 'And that, for ſome Time before the committing the 'ſaid Murder and Riot, it was commonly reported in the ſaid City of 'Edinburgh, that ſome ſuch atrocious Fact would be attempted, which, by 'proper Care in the Magiſtrates, Citizens and Inhabitants of the ſaid City, 'might have been prevented; notwithſtanding which, Alexander Wilſon, Pro'voſt of the ſaid City, and then actually reſident therein, and fully appriſed 'of the ſaid wicked Deſign, did not take any Precautions to prevent the 'ſaid Murder and Riot, nor uſe the proper or neceſſary Means to ſup'preſs the ſame, or to preſerve the Peace of the ſaid City, or, after the 'Perpetration of the ſaid Fact, to diſcover, apprehend, or ſecure the 'Authors, Actors or Abettors thereof, in manifeſt Violation of the Truſt 'and Duty of his Office of Chief Magiſtrate of the ſaid City.——And 'to the End that the ſaid enormous Miſbehaviours and Neglects of Duty 'may not go unpuniſhed, and that other Perſons may not preſume, 'through Hopes of Impunity, to be guilty of the like for the future, it 'is enacted, that the ſaid Alexander Wilſon be diſabled from holding any 'Office of Magiſtracy, &c.'

Here the Conviction by the Parliament itſelf proceeds altogether upon Negatives, or Neglects of Duty in the Provoſt or chief Magiſtrate, upon a very ſingular and extraordinary Occaſion; and ſo far it is a Precedent in point to the preſent Caſe, which in other reſpects appears to be vaſtly more atrocious than what Provoſt Wilſon was guilty of, who, it ſeems, did not give Credit to the Reports that were current before that extraordinary Attempt was made, and ſuffered himſelf to be ſurpriſed and diſconcerted, when the Mob was ſuddenly raiſed which committed that Murder; inſtead of which, here was long Warning, and many Precautions ſeemingly taken by the Provoſt, heartily intended by many of the Citizens, to avert Evil of a much higher Nature, tending to overthrow the Conſtitution and Eſtabliſhment of this united Kingdom.

It appears quite unneceſſary to anſwer the Allegation offered for the Pannel from this Precedent, which has ſurely not the leaſt Tendency to prove, that the Offence, which was here puniſhed by the Legiſlature itſelf, was no ways puniſhable by the Common Law, or the general Statutes of this Realm.

And as little can it avail the Pannel to enter now into an Argument upon the Expediency of the Reſolution in general, of putting the City of Edinburgh in a Poſture of Defence againſt the Rebels; for though it be true, that before any Reſolution was taken upon this Queſtion, it was very lawful and competent for the Lord Provoſt to declare his Opinion, if it was ſuch, for the Negative; yet, after it was a Reſolution formed by the Council of the City, with the Conſent and Approbation of the moſt conſiderable Citizens of all Ranks, many of whom had previouſly ſollicited that ſuch Meaſures ſhould be taken; and after he, the Lord Provoſt, had ſeemingly concurred, and given way to the general Senſe of the Citizens, as well as of the Council, it ſurely then became his Duty as the firſt Magiſtrate, who had the chief executive Power in his Hands, to exert himſelf, bona fide, for the Execution of the general Meaſure that had been thus reſolved; for better indeed had it been never to attempt ſuch Defence, than not to go through with it until actually overpowered by ſuperior Force; or that, to the great Expence and Diſcredit of the City, after many Preparations to provide a Force for its Defence, and Application to the Crown, which was readily granted, for a Warrant to authorize the Regiment, and to the Inhabitants for a Subſcription to pay it, which was filled up with great Alacrity, and many of the chief of them preſſed for Leave to venture their Perſons, as well as contribute their Money for the Cauſe which they had ſo much at Heart, when, to furniſh Arms, the King's Arſenal in the Caſtle was at their Command, and a conſiderable Force aſſembled, that the Provoſt ſhould ſo manage Matters, as that the Defence ſhould be thrown up juſt at the Time that it became needful to make uſe of all theſe Preparations.

This will require ſome better Excuſe, than that the Provoſt, in his private Opinion, was averſe to the Meaſure in general of defending the City, or that he was afraid of provoking the Rebels to rob his Wine-Cellars at Leith, (if that be meant by taking notice of his great Property there) for it is certain the Provoſt profeſſed to concur with the general Senſe of the City, to provide for and reſolve to make a Defence; and, even upon Monday the 16th of September, in the Afternoon, in the Council-Chamber, and at the general Meeting in the New-Church, it has been alledged, as a Part of his Defence, that he ſtill declared ſtoutly for adhering to that Reſolution; and in theſe Circumſtances, for his Counſel to ſay for him, by way of Apology for his Conduct in the Articles libelled, that the ſame proceeds from, or is to be accounted for, by his diſapproving in his Judgment of the general Meaſure of making any Defence, and offering Reaſons now in ſupport of the Juſtice of that Opinion, inſtead of excuſing him, is in reality to accuſe him very deeply of acting all along with a Duplicity, which muſt have been highly criminal, profeſſing to concur in the Execution of a Meaſure, which which in his Heart he disliked, and, as the Execution of it chiefly belonged to him in virtue of his Office, managing that in such a Manner as to defeat the Design.

As to that Design itself, the most sanguine Promoters of it never pretended to maintain that the City of Edinburgh was capable of holding out a regular or a long Siege; the very Number of the Inhabitants, and the Mouths to be fed, must render this impracticable; but, as the Circumstance which exposed them to be at all visited by the Rebels, was the Misfortune of Sir John Cope's getting to the Northward of the Rebel Army in the Highlands, and as he was known to be returning from Inverness, through the low Country, along the Eastern Coast, and as other Succours were daily expected from Holland, it was very reasonably concluded, that the Pressure upon the City of Edinburgh could be but of short Endurance, and that, very possibly, keeping out the Rebels a single Day might save the City altogether from falling into their Hands; and the Event in a great measure justified the Expectation; for, upon the Evening of Monday the 16th September, when the first Deputies were sent out by the Provost and others to the Rebels Camp, to treat about the Surrender demanded by the Letter from the Pretender's Son, those Deputies had not yet reached that Camp, when authentick Advice came, that Sir John Cope, with his Army, was arrived at Dunbar, which is but twenty Miles from Edinburgh: A very signal Instance of the Truth of what is said in the Passage above quoted from Ærodius, Quòd puncto sæpe temporis maximarum rerum occasiones amittuntur.

What then was the Occasion, or whence arose the Necessity that obliged the Pannel, on the Afternoon of Monday the 16th September, to abandon the Defence of the City, for which so many Preparations had been made and continued till this very Hour, and when, though the Enemy was at hand, there was all the Reason in the World to believe that Succour and Relief from the King's Troops was not far off, as the Event that very Evening accordingly proved, by the actual Arrival of Sir John Cope off Dunbar, and authentick Notice thereof being sent to Edinburgh at the Juncture of Time already mentioned.

The Answer to these Questions made for the Pannel, in the Debate upon his Libel, have been, 'That, on the Afternoon of this Monday, 'the 16th of September 1745. the City of Edinburgh was in great Consternation, occasioned by the Approach of the Rebels, and the threatening Messages sent from them, by the Retreat of the Dragoons from 'Coltbridge, and the withdrawing of the Civil Officers of the Crown 'from the City; that, in these Circumstances, the general Cry of the 'Inhabitants, at a publick Meeting assembled, was for abandoning the 'Defence of the City; after which the Fears of the Inhabitants was the 'governing Principle, the Multitude had the Power in their Hands, and 'there was no longer any Regard paid to Magistrates or legal Authority.'

But to this it is replied, That the Retreat of the Dragoons the Pursuer does not take upon him to approve or justify; very possibly it was made sooner and farther than it was necessary, though it cannot be said that the two Regiments of Dragoons, with the City-Guard of Edinburgh, if the whole Rebel Army had come up to them, ill armed as it was, would have been a Match for such a Superiority of Numbers: But when the Resolution was taken to defend the City of Edinburgh, they did not, nor could reckon upon these two Regiments of Dragoons, as what they could rely upon, or promise themselves to be always attending for their Assistance; and when the Defence of the City was abandoned, they were no farther removed than Musselburgh, which is but four Miles off, and an Offer was made to the Lord Provost to bring them back, or any Number of them he should desire, to assist in the Defence of the City.

That the withdrawing of the Civil Officers could afford no just Cause for abandoning that Defence; the Lord Justice-Clerk had only gone from Edinburgh that Day about Noon, to dine at his own House about three Miles off, and was returning in the Afternoon to the City, when he got Notice by the Way, that the Rebels were by that Time at the West Port of the City, which was not true, but afforded a very just Reason for his returning to his own House; and though the Lord Advocate at this Time also withdrew from the City, and went as far East as Musselburgh, yet, before he left the Town, he had concurred with the Provost and the Sollicitor, in procuring an Order from General Guest, for one hundred Dragoons to march into the City, to encourage and support the loyal Inhabitants in Defence of the Town. And he renewed his Advice by Mr. Grosset, whom he met going into the City in the Afternoon, with a Message from the Lord Justice-Clerk relating to those Dragoons. And of what use could a single Civil Officer be in the Case of a Siege? Or, to what purpose should he shut himself up within the Walls, and expose himself, in case of the Town's being taken, to become a Prisoner in the Hands of the Rebels?

And as for the affrighted Multitude, who are said to have got the Government into their Hands, it was the Fault of the Lord Provost if he permitted this to be: None of the Forces under his Command were withdrawn, and he had still at least twelve hundred well-armed Men under his Command, the Walls of the City repaired and planted with Cannon, and the Castle and its Garrison ready to assist him: And, in this Situation, why did he suffer himself to be despoiled of his Authority, or to be governed by the real, or by the affected Terrors of the timorous, or of the disaffected Multitude? Why did he give way to a general Meeting, in the Church, of an Assembly so composed? Why did he not tell them that the City had already taken its Measures and its Resolution to stand upon its Defence, and order all who did not chuse to depart the City, or to act in its Defence, to repair to their respective Houses, and keep within Doors? He had still the legal Authority in him, and the Means in his Hands to make that to be respected, when he had so great a Body of Men in Arms under his Command.

In these Circumstances, the Methods he pursued demonstrated the End which he had in View, namely, to deliver up, instead of defending the City; for, in order to justify himself in abandoning that Defence, he ought to have gone another Way to work, than to assemble a promiscuous Multitude in the Church, exclusive of the Volunteers. If there was truly any Change of Circumstances occurred, that made it reasonable now to lay aside Thoughts of that Defence which had been so long provided for and pursued, he should have summoned a Council of the same, or the like Persons with those who had first contributed to the Resolutions of making any Defence at all, that is, his own Fellow-Magistrates and Councillors, with the Chief Officers of the Volunteers and Trained-Bands, and deliberated with them upon the supposed Change of Circumstances; and if, in such Council, it had been debated and resolved, by Plurality of Voices, to be now impracticable, or inexpedient to persist any longer in the Measure formerly concerted, of defending the City, that Resolution might have justified or acquitted him; but nothing of this Kind is alledged, and thereby he has taken the whole upon himself. He consulted with a disaffected Multitude, as some of the Persons present in it, of undoubted Credit, say it was: And there is no Record of any Resolution of the Town-Council, or of the Committee abovementioned, of Monday the 16th of September, when this Change of Measures was brought about, nor any Record of the Council after Friday the 13th, before the Rebels entered the City, nor of the Committee after Saturday the 14th.

As for the particular Facts or Articles charged upon the Pannel, the Pursuer has Reason to believe he can prove every one of them; but he now says, that neither the separate Relevancy, nor the Proof of every one of them, is essential to the Conclusion of this Libel, whereof the general Scope and Averment is, That the Pannel, at the Time and upon the Occasion libelled, was faulty and negligent, or guilty of Malversation in the Discharge of his Duty; and, for making out this, particular Articles are specified: And altho' every one of these shall not appear separately material, or shall not be proved, it is no Matter, if enough be proved to make out or support the general Charge.

The Case is of the same Nature as if a civil Action were brought, for Instance, for removing a suspected Tutor by the Kindred of the Infant, in order to which a Number of Articles of Misbehaviour were alledged in the Libel; in which Case, tho' some of these Articles should not be proved, or well accounted for by the Defender, yet, if any Number should be made good and accounted for, the general Allegation of the Libel would be proved, and the Pursuers behoved to prevail in the Conclusion of their Action.

At the same time, to touch briefly at the particular Articles, it is replied to the Answer to the first, That it is not the Pannel's Doubt concerning the Point of Law that is charged as a Crime, but his urging that Doubt, inter alia, demonstrates his Backwardness to pursue any Measures for Defence of the City, for the Doubt itself was extremely groundless. There are sundry old Laws against private Leagues or Bonds among the Subjects, which have nothing to do with the present Case; but the only Law, upon which the Pannel's Objection, that it would have been High-Treason to arm without Authority from the Crown, can be founded, is the 5th Act of the Restoration Parliament 1661, intitled, Act asserting his Majesty's Royal Prerogative in the Militia, and in making Peace and War, &c. which Act declares, 'That it is and shall be 'High-Treason to the Subjects of this Kingdom, or any Number of 'them more or less, upon any Ground or Pretext whatsoever, to rise 'or continue in Arms, to maintain any Forts, Strengths or Garrisons, to 'make Peace or War, or to make any Treaties or Leagues with foreign 'Princes or Estates, or among themselves, without his Majesty's special 'Authority and Approbation first interposed thereto.'

Now, in the first place, whilst this Act continued in force, it surely could never be meant to comprehend the Case of the King's Subjects being called out, by the Magistrates acting under his Authority, to take Arms for his Service; for Instance, if the Militia of any County should be called out by the High Sheriff, or Lord Lieutenant, to resist a foreign Enemy, or a domestick Rebel: And the chief Magistrate of a Burgh, within his District, has the like Power to the Sheriff, or Lord Lieutenant, to defend the Burgh over which he presides.

But, 2*dly*. This Act, upon which the Doubt is singly founded, is repealed by the Act of the 7th of Queen Anne, Chap. 21. which provides, That nothing shall thereafter be High-Treason in Scotland, but what is such in England. And farther provides concerning certain Crimes therein mentioned, viz. Theft in landed Men, Murder under Trust, Fire-raising and Assassination, which were declared to be Treason by particular Statutes in Scotland, shall hereafter be adjudged and deemed to be capital Offences. But concerning the Fact which is made Treason by this Act 1661, no such Provision is made.

The Pursuer's Replies concerning the other Articles are already in Substance made in the foregoing Argument, and he shall not prolong this Paper to go through them minutely, and shall only farther observe, That, as to the new Defence offered to the eleventh Article, concerning the City-Arms, that though it comes with a bad Grace to be now for the first Time proposed, the Pursuer does not oppose the Pannel's being allowed to prove this Allegation, and all other Facts and Circumstances that have been by him alledged for his Vindication or Defence against the Charge contained in this Libel.

In respect whereof, &c. WILL. GRANT.

July 28, 1747.

INFORMATION for ARCHIBALD STEWART, of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provost of the said City, Pannel or Defendant,

AGAINST

His MAJESTY'S ADVOCATE for his Majesty's Interest, Pursuer.

BEFORE entering upon the Objections to the Relevancy of this Libel, it may not be improper, first of all, to lay before the Court a genuine and succinct Account of every Fact and Circumstance which any way concerns the Conduct of the Pannel, or can give any Light to form a Judgment of it during the Period mentioned in the Libel.

Upon the 17th of August 1745, the Pannel, then Lord Provost of the City of Edinburgh, had the Honour to receive a Letter from the Marquis of Tweeddale, one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State of the 13th current, acquainting him, 'That their Excellencies the Lords 'Justices, having received Intelligence, that the Pretender's Son was 'already landed, or intended to land in Scotland, had recommended it to him

'him to give Notice to the Provoſt thereof, that he might exert his Care 'and Vigilance on this Occaſion, and make uſe of ſuch Precautions as he 'ſhould judge neceſſary for preſerving the publick Peace within the 'Bounds of his Juriſdiction.

To this Letter the Lord Provoſt wrote an Anſwer on the 17th, as follows: 'It is with Pleaſure I aſſure your Lordſhip, that this Town 'was never better affected, nor more peaceable than at preſent. Nothing 'ſhall be neglected on my Part to preſerve People in their Duty to-'wards their King and their Country; and we truſt in God that no 'threatened Dangers ſhall ever reach us; at the ſame Time, we are not 'to ſit down in Security, but will keep a watchful Eye, in order to 'prevent, as far as it is in our Power, every thing that may diſturb the 'Peace of this Place.'

The above Letter was laid before the Magiſtrates when it came to Hand, and the Anſwer was approved of by the Town-Council, at a Meeting on the 23d of Auguſt, and, in purſuance of theſe Reſolutions taken by the Lord Provoſt and Council, the following Orders were forthwith iſſued.

Auguſt 23. Orders were given to levy and raiſe thirty Centinels to be added to the City-Guard, agreeable to the Powers given them by Act of Parliament, and to provide them with Clothing and all other Neceſſaries.

Recommended to the Lord Provoſt and Magiſtrates to direct the Captains and Officers of the Trained-Bands, forthwith to make up full Liſts of all the Perſons belonging to their ſeveral Companies, and to report the ſame to the Magiſtrates againſt Saturday next; and that the Captains warn and premoniſh them all to be ready, in caſe of any Diſturbance, to appear with their beſt Arms, upon an Hour's Warning, at the ordinary Places of Rendezvous.

Orders were given for directing the Conſtables of the City to make out full and ample Liſts of all the Inhabitants and Reſidenters within their Diſtricts, and report the ſame to the Magiſtrates; and to be diligent in inquiring and finding out what Strangers may happen from time to time to come within the City, and lodge within their ſeveral Diſtricts.

Orders for a Proclamation, requiring and ordaining all Inn-Keepers, Strangers, and others, who lodge and entertain Strangers, from time to time, and as oft as any Stranger ſhall lodge with them, to give in to the Captain of the City-Guard a Note of their Names and Deſignations at their Arrival; and of the Time of their Departure, under a Penalty for each Tranſgreſſion; and the Captains of the Guard ordered duly to report to the Magiſtrates, in Writing, every Morning, Liſts of the Particulars that ſhould be delivered in to them by the Inhabitants.

Theſe Orders, moſt of which proceeded upon Motions made by the Lord Provoſt, were all agreed to by the Magiſtrates and Council, and ſigned by him in their Preſence; and Care was taken of the due and punctual Execution of them all, without any Loſs of Time.

The next Day, being Saturday, Auguſt 24th, it was ſuggeſted to the Lord Provoſt that it might be fit to call a general Meeting of the Inhabitants, to conſider what was to be done on this Occaſion; to which he agreed, and communicated the Propoſal to the Council at their next Meeting on Monday, Auguſt 26. who alſo approved of it; and accordingly the Meeting was ordered, and the moſt ſubſtantial and well-affected Burgeſſes were invited to aſſiſt with their Counſel and Advice; and at the Meeting, which could not be convened ſooner than next Day, Auguſt 27. the above Reſolutions and Orders were reported to them by the Lord Provoſt; and the Meeting 'unanimouſly approved thereof, and gave his 'Lordſhip and the Council their hearty Thanks for the wiſe and pru-'dent Meaſures they had already taken; and, farther, offered it as their 'Advice to the Magiſtrates and Council, to name ſome of their own 'Number, and ſuch other of the Burgeſſes as they ſhould think fit, as 'a joint Committee to conſult with and take the Advice of the Lord 'Juſtice-Clerk, Lord Advocate, Mr. Sollicitor, and ſuch of the Lords 'of Seſſion as can be found in Town, with regard to what farther Steps 'the Magiſtrates, Council and Community can legally take for preſerv-'ing the Peace of the City, and contributing to defeat the dangerous 'and wicked Deſigns of the Enemies to his ſacred Majeſty, his Royal 'Family, and preſent happy Conſtitution.

Auguſt 28. The Committee were accordingly named by the Council next Day, and that very Evening met with the King's Counſel, and ſuch of the Judges as were in Town, at the Lord Juſtice-Clerk's Houſe, where it was propoſed, that a Regiment of a thouſand Men ſhould be levied for the Defence of the Town, and Service of the Government, to be ſubſiſted, for three Months, on the Charges of ſuch of the Inhabitants as were willing to ſign an Aſſociation for that Purpoſe. And as it had been, for ſome time, a general Subject of Converſation and Debate without Doors, how far it was legal to levy ſuch Regiment without a ſpecial Order from his Majeſty, the Opinion of the learned and honourable Perſons preſent was aſked upon this Point, and they all agreed, that it could not be legally done without his Majeſty's Warrant. Upon which it was reſolved that the Lord Advocate ſhould make Application for ſuch Warrant; and that, in the mean Time, Trial ſhould be made of the Inclinations of the Inhabitants to concur in this Meaſure, how ſoon the Warrant ſhould be obtained from his Majeſty.

Auguſt 30. The Lord Provoſt and Magiſtrates were employed in receiving Propoſals for putting the Town in a Poſture of Defence; and the Lord Provoſt wrote Letters to the Magiſtrates of Boroughs, and Miniſters, for about the Diſtance of fourteen Miles round the City, begging that they would ſend as early Intelligence as poſſible, by Expreſs on Horſeback, of any Bodies of armed Men they could diſcover marching towards this City.

Auguſt 31. About the ſame time many different Orders were given by the Lord Provoſt to proper Perſons, with a View to put the Town in a Poſture of Defence, which were afterwards executed, particularly for clearing the Town Wall, building Stairs to get up to the Wall, making Communications from one Place to another, raiſing a Work at Wallace's Tower, to prevent the Communication by the Back of the Caſtle. This laſt Work had been directed at firſt in a very proper Manner by Bailie Robert Baillie, Overſeer of the publick Works for this Year; but Bailie Gavin Hamilton afterwards ſtopt it, and gave a different Direction, by which that Work was for ſome time retarded.

Monday, September 2. The Lord Provoſt ſigned an Order in Council for augmenting the Town-Guard to the Number of 126 Men.

September 3. Bailie James Stewart and Mr. Colin Mac Laurin applied to the Lord Provoſt, with a Meſſage from ſome Gentlemen who had met the Evening before, deſiring in general that he would ſee to the Defence of the Town; and particularly, firſt, That he would order Moulds to be made for caſting Bullets. 2dly, That the Sluices of the North-Loch ſhould be filled up. And, 3dly, That a Diſtinction ſhould be made betwixt the Inhabitants of known good Affection and others, before he came to intruſt them with the Town's Arms.

The Lord Provoſt agreed to the firſt two Propoſals, and ordered the immediate Execution of them; but as to the third, he demurred. He obſerved to them the Inconvenience of making Diſtinctions amongſt Inhabitants upon bare Suſpicions, eſpecially about the Time of an approaching Election, when Parties were forming, which would lead them to ſpread Calumnies againſt one another upon By-Views; that this might occaſion Heats and Diſſentions dangerous to the Peace of the Town, and even ſtrengthen the Diſaffected by combining them together; that, where any real Ground of Complaint could be condeſcended, he was ready, not only to exclude ſuch Perſons from ſerving in the Trained-Bands, but alſo to oblige them to find Security for their good Behaviour. After this Reaſoning the Gentlemen did not inſiſt farther upon that Part of their Propoſal, nor lay it before the Council, who were the proper Judges of the Expediency of ſuch Meaſures, had they thought it fit to be inſiſted on.

September 4. The Lord Provoſt met with the ſame two Gentlemen, and ſeveral other Burgeſſes, in a Tavern, and, after a good deal of Converſation upon the ſeveral Expedients propoſed for Defence of the Town, he deſired they would digeſt their Propoſals, and give them in, in Writing, which he would either immediately comply with, or give them an Anſwer in Writing. This they ſeemed chearfully to agree to, and promiſed to give him in their Propoſals, but never did it.

September 6. Some of the ſame Gentlemen preſented to the Provoſt a Petition ſigned by about 80 or 90 of the Inhabitants, offering to ſerve as Volunteers for Defence of the City againſt any Attack, and particularly in contributing to erect the neceſſary and proper Barricado's for defending the Ports and ſeveral Avenues to the City, and praying that the City-Wall might be inſtantly repaired, and Stairs put up, &c. to appoint proper Places of Rendezvous, furniſh them with neceſſary Arms, and allow them to name their Officers.

The Provoſt told the Gentlemen who had met with him two Days before, That, after what had paſt at that Meeting, he expected they would have communicated to him their Intentions, as they promiſed; but he never would mind any perſonal Neglect in a Matter where the publick Safety was concerned, and therefore ſhould take care to preſent their Petition to the Magiſtrates without Delay, and return their Anſwer.

September 7. He did accordingly order a Meeting of the Magiſtrates to be ſummoned againſt Eleven next Forenoon; and, that there might be no unneceſſary Delay from any Doubtfulneſs concerning the Legality of this Meaſure, the Provoſt adviſed with the Lord Advocate upon that Point in his Way to the Meeting; and, having got his and the Sollicitor's Opinion of the Lawfulneſs of it, he forthwith met with the Magiſtrates, and laid the Petition and Opinion before them; upon which they chearfully approved of the Propoſal, and applauded the Zeal of the Petitioners.

Immediately after the Provoſt went to the Volunteers, who were met in the New Church Iſle, and told them their Petition was to be complied with in every Particular, except the Nomination of their Officers: But, notwithſtanding that did of Right belong to him, yet, as he wiſhed of all Things they might have ſuch Officers as they inclined to obey, if they would give him a Liſt of 20 or 30 of their Number, he would confine his Nomination to that Liſt. They complied. He named ſix of the fitteſt Perſons in the Liſt for Captains, with whom they were highly pleaſed, and he left the Nomination of the Subalterns to themſelves, for which they returned him Thanks.

The ſame Day the Lord Provoſt moved in Council, that an Addreſs ſhould be drawn up and preſented to his Majeſty, which was unanimouſly agreed to; and a dutiful Addreſs was accordingly drawn out, approven and ſigned; after which it was reſolved, 'To authorize the Magiſtrates 'and Conveener to employ Perſons with all poſſible Speed to put the 'City in a Poſture of Defence, and particularly the Walls thereof.'

In conſequence of this, Workmen were immediately ſent for, and the Lord Provoſt ordered them forthwith to fall to work, under the Direction of Mr. Mac Laurin, and to work Night and Day, Sundays not excepted, till all was finiſhed, and gave Warrants for impreſſing Workmen.

September 8. The Provoſt, of his own Accord, ordered all the Powder that was in the Town's Magazine to be carried to the Caſtle; which was ſo punctually executed, that he behoved afterwards to take from the Caſtle what was neceſſary for the Service of the Town.

About the ſame Time he wrote an Order to Robert Davidſon, Tackſman of the Meal-Market, to clean out the Granaries, and provide Meal.

September 9. This Morning the Provoſt having occaſionally heard that his Majeſty's Sign-Manual, authorizing to levy the Regiment propoſed, had come the Day before to the Lord Advocate's Hand, he went and waited on his Lordſhip, and, upon receiving the Sign-Manual, he immediately called a Council, and produced the ſame, which was addreſſed to the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh; and recites, 'That it had been repreſented to his Majeſty, that the Lord 'Provoſt, Magiſtrates, Town-Council, Burgeſſes, and others of his 'City of Edinburgh, from the great Loyalty and Affection to his Perſon and Government, were at this Juncture willing and ready to raiſe 'and maintain, at their own proper Charge and Expence, by voluntary Subſcription and Contribution, One thouſand Foot for the Defence of the ſaid City, and the Support of his Government; and they 'were deſirous of obtaining his Royal Licence and Authority for the 'ſame: His Majeſty therefore, repoſing intire Truſt and Confidence 'in the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Town-Council of his ſaid City, 'did thereby authorize and impower them to raiſe, form and diſcipline 'One thouſand Foot to be employed for the Purpoſes above mentioned; 'and his Majeſty did thereby farther order and command, that the ſaid 'One thouſand Men ſhall be under the Direction of the Lord Provoſt, 'Magiſtrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh: For the doing whereof 'this ſhall be a ſufficient Warrant.'

As by this Warrant the Direction of the Regiment was placed in the Magiſtrates and Town-Council, ſo, as ſoon as it was read, they took the Direction into their own Hands, 'and appointed, as a Committee, 'the preſent and old Magiſtrates, Conveener, Deacons Lauder and Por- 'teous, or any five of them, the Lord Provoſt being always one, and, in 'caſe of his Abſence, any Nine of them, to be a Quorum, to conſider 'what is moſt proper to be done upon this Occaſion for levying the ſaid 'Thouſand Foot; and particularly to take in the Subſcription of ſuch 'of the Inhabitants as are willing to contribute for levying and main-'taining the ſaid Thouſand Foot, with their proper Officers, to be named 'for the Purpoſes mentioned in the ſaid Sign-Manual, for the Space of three 'Months after they ſhall be ſo inliſted; as alſo to conſider what is proper 'farther to be done for the Safety of this City, and for Support of the 'Government; which Committee ſhall meet at the Goldſmiths-Hall, 'twice each Day, at the Hours of Eleven in the Forenoon, and Four in 'the Afternoon; and recommended to the ſaid Committee, to keep a 'Book, into which all their Proceedings and Actings ſhall be regularly 'ingroſſed, to the end the ſame may be reported to the Council from 'Time to Time.'

At the ſame Time, the Council 'ordered the Serjeants, Corporals and 'Drums of the City-Guard to beat up for Volunteers to compleat the 'Thouſand Foot; and they nominated the Lord Provoſt to be Colonel 'and Commander of the ſaid Thouſand Foot, with Power to him to 'conduct and direct them, and the other Officers who ſhall be named to 'command under him, as the Council ſhall think proper, or as the Exi-'gencies of Matters ſhall require.'

And the Lord Provoſt ſhewed his chearful Concurrence in this Meaſure, by a Subſcription far beyond any other that was made to this Regiment.

September 10 to 13. From this Day, to the 13th of September, there are daily Proceedings of the Council and Committee above named, who went on with all Diligence in raiſing the Men, taking in Subſcriptions, providing Arms, Grain, and other Neceſſaries, and doing every thing that was judged proper for putting the Town in a Poſture of Defence. It is unneceſſary to trouble the Lords with reciting minutely every Particular which appears to this Purpoſe from the Records of the Council, and the Minutes of the Committee, which regularly met for carrying on the Buſineſs intruſted to them; and the Lord Provoſt appears, by their Minutes, to have been preſent at every Sederunt.

The Pannel is deſirous to abridge the Trouble of the Court, in reading a long Story, as much as poſſible; and therefore ſhall but juſt mention a few of the many Inſtances of his Care and Concern in carrying on the general Meaſure now reſolved on, for the Defence of the Town, about this Period.

That whenever any Complaints were made of the Slowneſs of the Workmen, that they were not going on with that Diligence they ought, the Lord Provoſt ſeverely reprimanded them, and gave freſh Warrants to preſs Men and Carts, with ſtrict Orders to loſe no Time.

That Bailie Robert Baillie, who had the Inſpection of the publick Works, with his Committee, were ordered to ſee that every thing was done that was neceſſary for the Defence and Preſervation of the Town; and he had the Charge of impreſſing Workmen and Carts, and exerciſing all the Authority that was neceſſary for carrying on the publick Works with the utmoſt Diſpatch.

That the Provoſt, on the 10th of September, wrote a Letter to Captain John Dalrymple, and alſo applied to Captain James Murray, to take upon them the Command of the Volunteers: But they both refuſed to accept of a Command of Men who had not been accuſtomed to military Diſcipline.

That the Provoſt moved in the Committee, to recommend to ſome of the City-Guard, Edinburgh Regiment, and Gentlemen Volunteers, that they ſhould learn the Exerciſe of throwing the Hand-Granadoes.

That, in order to preſerve the publick Money from falling into the Hands of the Rebels, the Provoſt called a Council, and propoſed, that what was owing of the King's Ceſs ſhould be paid up to the Receiver-General, though it had not been paid by the Inhabitants to the Collector; and for that Purpoſe the Provoſt forthwith ſigned an Order on the Caſh Accompt for 1000 l. Sterling, payable to the Receiver-General, to Account of the Ceſs due by the City, which was delivered to the Receiver-General.

September 13. That the Proceedings of the Committee for levying the City's Regiment, and forewarding the neceſſary Steps to be taken for the Safety and Defence of the Place, were read over in Preſence of, and conſidered by the Council, and unanimouſly approven of, and the Council recommended to the Committee to continue in their Diligence.

September 14. Notice having come to Town this Morning, that the Rebels had paſſed the Forth ſome Miles above Stirling, and were directing their March towards Edinburgh, and Colonel Gairdner's Dragoons were retiring before them, the Lord Juſtice-Clerk ſent a Meſſage to the Provoſt, deſiring he would meet with him, and ſome Lords and Gentlemen of the Army, and others, whom he was to bring from the Country, in order to concert what was to be done in this Exigence. The Provoſt immediately went to Lord Juſtice-Clerk's Houſe, and told his Lordſhip he was ſenſible how much he ſtood in need of ſuch Advice; that he would always be ready to follow it, and would be ſure to attend them whenever called for.

He went on ſtill in doing every thing that could be thought of as neceſſary to provide for the Defence of the Place. He ſigned a Warrant this Day, along with Lord Somerville as Juſtice of Peace, to preſs Men and Carts for carrying Sand and other Materials to the Ramparts and Works about the Walls, which was accordingly executed; and alſo to bring in Hay, Corn, and Proviſions into the Town, and John Walker and William Mercer were ſent to Leith for that Purpoſe.

This Day alſo the Provoſt ordered twenty-four Men to attend Captain Bryden in mounting the Cannon upon the Walls;

And granted Warrant to bring into the Town all the Ladders, Arms and Ammunition, which were in the Cannongate, Potter-Row, and other Suburbs adjacent to the Town, that they might not be ſeized by the Rebels.

Sunday, September 15. We are now come to Sunday the 15th of September; and as the Proceedings of this Day, and the next, are greatly miſrepreſented, as well as curtailed in the Purſuer's Information, it is neceſſary to be a little more particular in reciting them.

Upon Sunday Morning, when the Committee were met in the Goldſmiths-Hall, a Gentleman came with a Meſſage from General Gueſt, to acquaint them, that when it was propoſed, at a Meeting at his Houſe, to order Hamilton's Regiment of Dragoons to join Gairdner's, and make a Stand againſt the Rebels, the General made a Difficulty, in regard he had no Body of Foot to ſuſtain them. Upon which a Captain of the Volunteers undertook, that, at leaſt, two hundred and fifty of theſe Gentlemen would be ready to march upon any Service the General would order them; he believed more would, but he could anſwer for two hundred and fifty, providing the Provoſt would allow Fifty of the Town-Guard to go along with them; and the Gentleman deſired to know if the Provoſt would conſent.

On firſt hearing of this Propoſal, the Provoſt had ſome Difficulty to part with the Town-Guard, as being the Body of Men he could moſt depend upon, in caſe of any Occaſion, to defend the Town; on which Bailie Robert Baillie ſaid, he thought fifty of the Town-Guard could not be better employed than in ſupporting ſo many of the Volunteers, if they marched out; and inſtantly the Provoſt, upon Recollection, agreed, and anſwered, 'Mr. Baillie, you are in the right; in place of 'Fifty, they ſhall have the whole Town-Guard, and as many of the 'Edinburgh Regiment as are capable of doing Service.'

The Provoſt immediately went down in a Coach, along with the Gentleman who had brought the Meſſage, and told the General the Reſolution of the Committee as to ſending out the Town-Guard and the Edinburgh Regiment; upon which the General ſent Orders to Hamilton's Regiment to march through the Town and join Colonel Gairdner's.

The Provoſt came up to Town from the General's in a Coach, along with Provoſt Drummond, the firſt Captain of the Volunteers, and by the Way met two of their Officers, who came into the Coach, and told them, they were ſure the Volunteers would not comply with the Meaſure propoſed, and that they were now ſeparated, and had gone home.

The Provoſt aſked Mr. Drummond what would be the beſt Signal to bring the Volunteers together? He ſaid they had only two, three Guns from the Caſtle, or ringing the Alarm-Bell. The firſt, ſays the Provoſt, is not in our Power, as the Caſtle is ſhut; and the other, in Time of divine Service, may alarm the Town. No help for it, ſays Mr. Drummond, the Bell muſt be rung.

The Bell was accordingly rung, which alarmed the People, and made them leave the Church. The Volunteers conveened in the Lawn-Market, and huzza'd Hamilton's Dragoons as they paſt along. Their Officers applied to the Provoſt, and aſked if he had ordered them to go out and join the Dragoons? He told them, he had no Power to order them any where out of Town; but he had conſented, that as many as were inclined ſhould go out with the Town-Guard and Edinburgh Regiment, to ſuſtain the Dragoons in oppoſing the Rebels. The Meaſure was generally not liked by the Volunteers, and was imputed to the Provoſt as if he had been the firſt Propoſer, as one of their Officers told him with a good deal of Warmth.

After many Expoſtulations among themſelves, at laſt Mr. Drummond marched up on the Head of his Company, and ſome others followed. They went the Length of the Weſt Port and then returned.

Two of their Officers went foreward to ſtop the Town-Guard and Edinburgh Regiment, who had marched on to ſuſtain the Dragoons, and found them between the Coltbridge and Brucehill: But the Provoſt being informed of this, ſent Orders that the City Regiment and Town-Guard ſhould march foreward, and take their Orders from the commanding Officer. General Gueſt, when he heard of the Return of the Volunteers, was vexed at the Diſappointment, and ſaid, if he had expected it, he would not have ordered Hamilton's Regiment to go out to join the other in Defence of the Town.

The Provoſt ſent up Mr. Stewart, chief Conſtable, to the Caſtle, with a ſigned Order for a Number of Matches for the Uſe of the Cannon mounted on the Town-Walls, which were accordingly delivered, and brought down to the Goldſmiths-Hall.

The Provoſt conveened the Trained-Bands under their proper Colours and Officers, and gave them Notice to hold themſelves in Readineſs upon a Minute's Warning, and three Companies of them were ordered to mount Guard.

He alſo ordered the Conſtables to ſearch Houſes, of which there was any Suſpicion, for Arms and treaſonable Papers.

This Afternoon Brigadier Fowkes came to Town, and the Provoſt was called in the Evening to Lord Juſtice-Clerk's, where Lord Advocate, General Gueſt, Brigadier Fowkes, and ſeveral other Gentlemen of the Army were preſent. A Propoſal was made, that the Dragoons might be brought into Town, with a View to give them ſome Reſt and Refreſhment, and have their Horſes fed on the Street: But after the Thing was debated among the Gentlemen of the Military, who conſidered that the Avenues of the Town might be taken Poſſeſſion of by the Rebels, the Streets barricadoed, and the Houſes lined, and that the Dragoons might very probably, by this Means, fall into the Hands of the Rebels, it was agreed to be a Thing not to be attempted.

From this the Provoſt went along with Major Cochran, Captain Murray, Provoſt Drummond, and others, to the Houſe of Mrs. Clark Vintner, where a Diſpoſition was made of the ſeveral Corps of armed Men into different Quarters of the Town, particular Guards aſſigned them, and Places for their Alarm-Poſt condeſcended on, where each of them ſhould appear on the proper Signals; Copies of which were given to the commanding Officers of the different Corps.

This Afternoon the Provoſt met with Sir Robert Dickſon upon the Street, who had come in with a conſiderable Number of Volunteers; he received him with great Civility, as both his perſonal Character and Errand deſerved; immediately gave Orders that his Men ſhould be lodged in the Kirk, and that a ſufficient Quantity of Bread and Ale ſhould be carried there for a Refreſhment to them without Delay.

About this Time Meſſages were ſent to the Caſtle and Leith, to procure Gunners for loading the Cannon. Mr. Gueſt could afford us none out of the Caſtle; Bailie Set made ſearch over all Leith, aſſiſted by David Dryburgh, Charles and Alexander Sheriffs, and ſent us up what could be found [Eodem Die. Sept. 11*th.*] The Committee above-mentioned, appointed by the Council on the 9th, met for the first Time, the Lord Provoſt preſent, when they gave their Opinion concerning ſome Things to be done for the Reparation of the Walls, that the ſame ſhould be forthwith executed ſo far as hitherto undone.

[Eodem Die. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal] 'Some Cannon were got 'from Ships; and it having been earneſtly recommended to the Lord 'Provoſt, that ſome Hand Granadoes ſhould be got, and the City-Guard 'and Volunteers taught to uſe them, a Meſſage was ſent to the General, 'and by him to the Caſtle; but it was anſwered, That they had not 'above two hundred, and could not ſpare them. Afterwards, however, 'one of the Volunteers, ſurpriſed that there ſhould be ſo few in ſuch a 'Garriſon, ſo well provided with Stores, made a Viſit to the Caſtle, 'and was told by the Store-Keeper, that he had five times that Num-'ber, and was deſired to tell the Provoſt, that he had a hundred at his 'Service, if he had a mind for them. The Meſſage was delivered, but 'the Granadoes never appeared. We found twenty-three that had lien 'in a Cheſt ſince 1715, in the Town's Armoury, but they were never 'examined.

'A Ditch that had been ordered at Wallace's Tower, had been carried 'on right for ſome time, but was afterwards, by ſome Miſtake, or bad 'Advice, caſt on the wrong Side of the Dyke. This Day this was ſtopt, 'and a Remedy propoſed, but not executed for want of Time.

'[September 12. A. M.] The Committee above named, came to ſome 'farther Reſolutions about fortifying the City-Walls, and, inter alia, 'recommended to Mr. Mac Laurin to go along with the Tradeſmen to 'explain the tenth Article of his Memorial, in relation to the putting 'the Wall at Leith-Wynd in a better Poſture of Defence.'

[Committee's Record.] In purſuance of the Lord Provoſt's Recommendation, the Committee reſolved, That it be recommended to ſome of the City-Guard, Edinburgh Regiment, and Gentlemen Volunteers, that they do learn the Exerciſe of throwing the Hand-Granadoes.

'[Eodem Die. P. M.] The Committee reſolve, That the Council 'ſhould invite thoſe who have any Quantities of Grain at Leith, or other 'Parts near to the Town, to bring the ſame into this City, to be lodged 'in the City's Granaries, to be kept therein from the Enemy, Rent-free.'

'[September 13. Council Record.] The Provoſt reported, That, on the '12th current, he had given Receipt to the Store-Keeper of the Caſtle 'for a hundred Muſkets, Bayonets, and Cartouch-Boxes, with half a 'Barrel of Powder, and Ball in proportion, for the Uſe of the Volunteers 'of this City; and alſo that he had given Receipt for two hundred 'Stand of more Arms to the Uſe of the City's Regiment.

'The Proceedings of the Committee for levying the City-Regiment, 'and forwarding the neceſſary Steps to be taken for the Safety and De-'fence of the Place, named the 9th current, were read over, and una-'nimouſly approved by the Council, which recommended to the Com-'mittee to continue in their Diligence.'

The Council then proceeded to make the ſhort Leets for the Election of new Deacons; after which there is nothing entered in the Council Record, 'till the 18th of September, the Day after the Rebels got Poſſeſſion of the Town, when there were ſome Proceedings relating to the annual Election, which did not take effect.

[Eodem Die. Minutes of the Committee.] 'The Lord Provoſt, and other 'Members of the Committee preſent, recommended to Bailie Robert 'Baillie, and his Committee upon the publick Works, and ſuch of this 'Committee as pleaſed to attend, or any three of them, Bailie Baillie 'being always one, to ſee the whole Particulars contained in the former 'Minutes fully executed, without Loſs of Time, and to take the Advice 'and Direction of ſuch proper Perſons without Doors, as they ſhall 'judge neceſſary for executing the whole Particulars: with Power to 'the ſaid Committee to preſs ſuch Workmen as ſhall be judged pro-'per for compleating the whole Works before ſpecified.

'[September 13. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] The Day of the Election 'of the Deacons there was very little done on the Wall; the Deacons could 'not be got; ſome Houſes in St. Mary's Wynd, that had large Windows 'into the Town, were ſhewn to ſome Magiſtrates, and afterwards to the 'Provoſt: but no Orders were given about them. This Day the Car-'riages of the Cannon were examined, and any neceſſary Reparation 'ordered.

'[Saturday, September 14*th, Committee Record.*] The Lord Provoſt in 'the Committee reported, That he had this Day ſigned an Order for 'Payment of 1000 l. Sterling to the Receiver General, to Account of the 'Ceſs due by the City.

'The Committee reſolve, That the Ceſs Books, and thoſe by which 'the Annuity and Poor's Money is collected, ſhall be tranſported from 'the ſeveral Collectors Offices to the Caſtle of Edinburgh for Preſerva-'tion; and the Provoſt wrote a Letter to General Preſton, the Governor 'of the Caſtle, praying him to receive the ſaid Books, and keep them for 'the Uſe of the City.'

This is the laſt Entry made in the Regiſter of the Proceedings of this Committee, which does not appear to have met again after this Saturday the 14th.

'[Eodem Die. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] Little Work on the Walls 'and Scaffoldings, the Cannon were all proved and the Shot got ready.

'[Sept. 15. dit. Journal.] The Lord Provoſt brought Captain Murray 'to Town to give his Advice, and, not 'till this Day, he ordered ſome 'Works within the Gates, which were begun immediately. There were 'more Men employed this Day than ever before; and every body ſeemed 'to exert themſelves: But the Lord Provoſt having never named the 'Field-Officers to the Volunteers, they were now nine independent Com-'panies; and, upon a Motion to go out with Colonel Gardner, they 'unhappily divided in Opinion, which produced ſome Heat amongſt 'them. A moſt unlucky Signal was pitched on to call them to their 'Arms, the ringing of the Fire-Bell, which never fails to raiſe a Pan-'nick in Edinburgh. This happened in time of divine Service; the 'Churches diſmiſſed in Confuſion and Terror: And this was the firſt 'Appearance of Fear in the Place: This Signal ought not to have been 'propoſed or allowed by the Magiſtrates at ſuch a Time, the Rebels not 'being far from us.

'This Day moſt of the Cannon were carried to the Flanks, and in 'this as much Regard as poſſible was had to the weakeſt Places; ſo that 'there were three on St. Mary's Wynd, which raked it. About Six, one 'of the Volunteers, with the Chief of the Bombardiers, came to the 'Provoſt, to have an Order to load them; he kept them waiting till 'Eight, and then deſired another to ſign the Order for him. They 'begun, though in the Night; but, after they came to the Briſto Port, 'they were obliged to wait from Half an Hour after Ten, till near One, 'for want of a Centinel to place on the loaded Gun, though they ſent 'Meſſages for Centinels to the Guard and Council. This put a Stop 'to their Progreſs that Night; the Guns were all loaded with ſmall 'Shot, and, as they flanked the Curtains and Gates, it was the more 'dangerous to leave them without Centinels during all that Time, while 'the reſt of the Wall was guarded, and, All is well, was heard go round 'regularly; there were no Centinels from Briſto Port to the Weſt Port, 'but one or two below.'

On the Evening of this 15th of September, when the Rebels were within a few Miles of the City, and it was apprehended that they might have come up to it during that Night, it was reſolved at a Meeting with the Lord Provoſt, and others of the Council, with the Captains of the Volunteers, That 700 Men ſhould be upon Duty all Night, to guard the Walls all round the Town, who were to conſiſt of 400 Trained Bands, 40 of the new Regiment, 100 Volunteers, 90 Seceders, 40 Dalkeith Volunteers, 30 Exciſe-Officers.

[Monday, September 16. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'The Works 'went on chearfully till Four or Five at Night; a Work was thrown 'up to defend the Paſs to Mountreſay, ſome Gates were ſhut up, 'ſome more Cannon were got, and carried to the Baſtions and Gates; 'we were told that only five Gunners were got at One o'Clock, but 'were promiſed that Pains ſhould be taken to get more.

'Betwixt Two and Three o'Clock, ſome Burghers were ſaid to be 'carrying about for Subſcriptions a Petition to the Magiſtrates, praying 'the Town ſhould capitulate. The Alarm being great at the Weſt Port, 'the Guns there were loaded, and the other Works preſſed on, ſo that 'they were almoſt finiſhed, when an Account came, that a Meeting in 'the New Church had agreed to capitulate. One of the Volunteers 'called for the Provoſt, to know what was to be done to the Cannon; but 'was told, that his Lordſhip had not Time to ſpeak to him. The Call 'of, All is well, did not go round the Wall this Night as the former, 'and the Town ſeemed to be quite off its Defence; the Volunteers 'delivered their Arms into the Caſtle.'

Here Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal ends, which is all in his own Hand-Writing; and, as he was himſelf a Volunteer, and ſerved the Town as a chief Engineer, to deviſe and direct the Methods of fortifying the ſame; as he was a Perſon of great and eminent Abilities, of excellent Judgment as well as great Learning, and of perfect Probity and Veracity; as he had Opportunity to know all the Facts which he relates, and which he ſet down in Writing recently after they happened, with great Diſtinctneſs and Preciſion; and as the Purſuer has reaſon to believe that his Relation will be confirmed by the Teſtimony of living Witneſſes, he has choſen, in this Deduction of the Facts, in order to make the Charge and the Defence better underſtood, to make uſe of the very Words of Profeſſor Mac Laurin, as the moſt accurate and genuine Relation of the Facts that could be made, ſo far as he goes.

The Events of Monday the 16th, when, after ſo much Preparation for a Defence, the City of Edinburgh was in effect ſurrendered, and opened its Gates to the Rebels, were various, and deſerve to be more minutely recited. In the Morning of that Day Provoſt Stewart received a Meſſage from the Camp of the Rebels, which was delivered to him by Andrew Alves, Writer to the Signet, importing, That the City of Edinburgh would be ill-treated by them, unleſs it ſhould be readily or ſpeedily ſurrendered. Upon receiving which, the Provoſt did not commit the ſaid Andrew Alves to Priſon, neither did he give Notice of this Incident to any other of the King's Officers, Civil or Military, nor did he ſo much as adviſe or charge Mr. Alves to forbear repeating or relating that Meſſage of his in the Town, who went directly from the Provoſt to the Street, and repeated his Story to a Circle of People who came round him, amongſt whom one Gentleman adviſed Mr. Alves to go and tell what he had been relating to his Majeſty's Advocate; upon his doing which, the Advocate adviſed the Lord Provoſt to commit Mr. Alves to Priſon, which was now done too late to prevent the diſcloſing or ſpreading the threatening Meſſage which he had brought.

About Two o'Clock in the Afternoon of that Day, a Petition was ſet on foot, which was put into the Lord Provoſt's Hands about Three, addreſſed to the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Council, and intitled, Repreſentation of the under-ſubſcribing Inhabitants of the City of Edinburgh, and it is ſigned by 48 Perſons, ſetting forth, 'That being deeply affected 'with a Senſe of the great Danger to which the City is preſently ex-'poſed, by a rebellious Army marching up thereto in order to attack it, 'and being, at the ſame time, ſenſible of our Inability to make ſuch a 'Defence as with any Probability may defeat their Deſign of entering 'the ſame, without endangering the Lives and Properties of the Inha-'bitants, and expoſing the City to Rapine and Plunder, in the Event 'of our being obliged to ſurrender, and that there is but ſmall, if any 'Proſpect of Aſſiſtance from the Military; therefore praying them, who 'are the Governors of the City, that, before they came to any Reſolu-'tion, either of defending or giving up the Town, they will call a 'Meeting of all the principal Inhabitants and Heritors at preſent in the 'Place, to conſult with them what is proper to be done in an Affair of 'ſo great Importance.'

About the very time that this Petition was going forward, a Letter was ſigned by the Lord Provoſt, together with his Majeſty's Advocate and Sollicitor, addreſſed to the honourable Lieutenant-General Gueſt, in the Words following. 'Edinburgh, 16th September 1745. Sir, We are of 'Opinion, that it would be for his Majeſty's Service, that one hundred 'of the Dragoons ſhould be ordered in to the Town of Edinburgh, to aſ-'ſiſt in defending this Town.'

A little after this, and betwixt the Hours of Three and Four of the Afternoon of this Day, Mr. Walter Graſet was ſent by the Lord Juſtice-Clerk to the Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh, to know whether he the Provoſt intended to defend the Town or not, to preſs the Defence thereof, and

to assure him, that, if he resolved to defend it, not only the 100 Dragoons he had applied for, but as many more as he pleased to desire, should forthwith be ordered in to his Assistance. Mr. Groset, in his Way to Edinburgh, met the Lord Advocate coming from the Town, and having acquainted him with the Message Lord Justice-Clerk had sent by him Groset to the Provost, he the Advocate approved thereof, and desired Mr. Groset to make all possible Haste in delivering the same, and getting the Provost's Answer.

Mr. Groset found the Lord Provost in the Goldsmiths-Hall, delivered to him the above Message, and insisted for a direct Answer, and that, to prevent Mistakes, the same might be put in Writing; which, after some Conversation on the Subject, the Provost gave him in Writing, directed to the Lord Advocate and the Lord Justice-Clerk, in the following Words: 'You know the Councils I was Witness to: Was I to desire 'his Majesty's Troops to come into the Town now, I might be upbraid-'ed, after that, for having laid a Snare for his Majesty's Forces; should 'I refuse them, I may afterwards be accused for tamely delivering up the 'Town of Edinburgh: I desire your Lordships to be explicit, and tell me 'whether it is your Opinion or not they should come in; and send your 'Orders in Writing.'

Upon Mr. Groset's receiving this Answer, he told the Lord Provost, that he had already assured him, that it was the Lord Justice-Clerk's Opinion, that the Town should be defended, and that therefore he must answer for the Consequences of this unnecessary Delay; and as for the Lord Advocate's Opinion, That had already been given in Writing an Hour or two before, when he, along with the Lord Provost himself, had signed a Letter to General Guest, requesting 100 Dragoons to assist in defending the City.

About Four o'Clock in the Afternoon, that is, about an Hour after the Petition above-recited was presented to the Lord Provost, praying for a general Meeting of the Inhabitants, to consult or deliberate with the Magistrates and Council, whether to defend or give up the Town; such Meeting was accordingly held in the New Church Isle, the Lord Provost being in the Chair, and presiding.

At this Meeting there happened to be present some of the Reverend Ministers of the City of Edinburgh, and some other Persons of known good Affection to his Majesty and his Government, according to whose Observation, the far greater Part of the Persons there assembled were reputed of a quite contrary Character; and indeed it was impracticable, at this Meeting, to gather the true Sense of the Citizens in general, supposing it had been now seasonable or fit to deliberate in a popular Assembly, whether to give up or pursue the Defence of the City, for which hitherto so many Preparations had been making, because the greater Part of the most substantial and well-affected Burgesses, who were in Arms as Volunteers, had no Notice of this Meeting, or the Intent of it, and could not possibly attend it, being at that very Time under Arms with their respective Officers, waiting for Orders from the Lord Provost or Colonel, in what Manner they should be disposed of, or act for the Defence of the City.

At the Meeting thus assembled, and thus composed, the general Cry was for giving up the City without making any Defence; and the Reverend Mr. Logan Minister, and others, who attempted to speak in Opposition to this Measure, were borne down with Clamour and Noise.

During this Meeting Mr. Lindsay, Deputy Secretary of War, came with a Message from General Guest to the Lord Provost, upon the General's hearing the Rumour that there was a Meeting of the Inhabitants to deliberate about giving up the Town to the Rebels, to ask the Provost if he continued to be of Opinion that the Dragoons should come into the Town. To which the Provost answered, That he would neither bid nor forbid them, but that the General might do what he thought proper. Upon which Mr. Lindsay very naturally asked him, how he came to scruple about giving Directions concerning the Dragoons, when he had an Hour or two before sent a written Request to the General to obtain them. To which the Provost answered, That he had only signed that Request at the Desire of the Lord Advocate.

Towards the Close of this general Meeting, there was brought into it, in a Manner that appeared somewhat mysterious, being handed in from the Door, from one Person to another, in the Crowd, a Letter addressed, For the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town-Council of Edinburgh, signed Charles P. R. bearing Date, From our Camp this 16th September, 1745, and in the following Words:

'Being now in a Condition to make our Way into the Capital of his 'Majesty's ancient Kingdom of Scotland, we hereby summon you to re-'ceive us, as you are in Duty bound to do; and, in order to it, we 'hereby require you, upon Receipt of this, to summon the Town-council, 'and take proper Measures in it for securing the Peace and Quiet of the 'City, which we are very desirous to protect: But if you suffer any of 'the Usurper's Troops to enter the Town, or any of the Cannon, Arms, 'or Ammunition now in it, whether belonging to the Publick, or to 'private Persons, to be carried off, we shall take it as a Breach of your 'Duty, and a heinous Offence against the King and us, and shall resent 'it accordingly. We promise to preserve all the Rights and Liberties of 'the City, and the particular Property of every one of his Majesty's Sub-'jects: But if any Opposition be made to us, we cannot answer for the 'Consequences, being firmly resolved at any Rate to enter the City; and, 'in that Case, if any of the Inhabitants are found in Arms against us, 'they must not expect to be treated as Prisoners of War.'

This Letter was not read out in the general Meeting in the Church; for, as soon as the Subscription to the same was read, the Meeting broke up, and the Lord Provost, with the Members of Council there present, returned to their Council-Chamber, where this Letter was again produced and read; after which it was moved, or agreed to by the Provost, that an Answer should be sent to it, which was accordingly sent, first by one, and then by another Deputation from the Council, who went out to the Camp of the Pretender's Son, who was then about two Miles to the South-West of the City, upon the Water of Leith, in the Parish of Collington. The Return, brought in Writing, to the first of these Deputations, was in the Words following: 'His R. H. the Prince Regent thinks his 'Manifesto, and the King his Father's Declaration already published, are 'a sufficient Capitulation for all his Majesty's Subjects to accept of with 'Joy. His present Demands are, to be received into the City as the Son 'and Representative of the King his Father, and obeyed as such when 'he is there. His R. H. supposes, that since the Receipt of his Letter 'to the Provost, no Arms or Ammunition have been suffered to be car-'ried off or concealed, and will expect a particular Account of all Things 'of that Nature. Lastly, He expects a positive Answer to this before 'Two o'Clock in the Morning, otherwise he will think himself obliged 'to take Measures conform. At Gray's-Mill, 16th September, 1745. 'By his Highness's Command,

'(Signed) J. MURRAY.'

It is proper here to observe, that after the first Deputation was sent out to the Camp of the Pretender's Son, Notice was brought to the Lord Provost, and the others assembled with him in the Council-Chamber, that Sir John Cope, with the Troops under his Command, was arrived off Dunbar. This News was brought by Mr. Walter Groset, who brought the original Letters from Dunbar, giving Notice of this Event, together with a Letter from the Lord Advocate, who was then at Musselburgh, certifying, that these were the original Letters. All these Mr. Groset delivered to the Lord Provost in the Council-Chamber; upon perusing which the Provost said, This News had come too late, for they had come to a Resolution to capitulate, and had sent a Deputation to the Camp of the Rebels for that Purpose, and shewed to Mr. Groset the Letter above-recited from the Pretender's Son, as the Occasion of that Resolution. Mr. Groset then proposed to send after the Deputies to bring them back; and for that Purpose another Member of the Council was accordingly sent, but he did not overtake them.

About this Time Mr. Drummond and Mr. Mac Aulay, Captains of the Volunteers, and who had been both formerly Provosts of Edinburgh, (as the former now is) upon hearing of Sir John Cope's Arrival, came to the Council-House, and insisted that the Defence of the Town should be now resumed, as there was so near a Prospect of their obtaining Relief, and proposed the ringing of the Alarm-Bell, as a Signal to bring every Body back to their Posts.

To this the Provost answered, That he must be careful of the Blood of the Inhabitants; and that, as certain of their Number had been sent out as Deputies to treat, should they be in the Hands of the Rebels whilst the Alarm-Bell was rung, they, the Deputies, might be ill used by the Rebels; and also urged the former Objections, of the Difficulty and Danger of defending the Town. To this Mr. Groset replied, That he knew the Situation of the Town so well, and the Condition of those who were to come against it, who had no Cannon and few Arms, that he would undertake to be one of Fifty that should defend the weakest Place of it, 'till the Troops should come to their Relief. To which one of the Council assenting, the Lord Provost seemed to give Way to the Resolution of defending the Town, provided General Guest would agree to let them have from the Castle what Arms should be wanted. This Mr. Groset undertook to procure, and went directly, accompanied by Provost Coutts, one of the Council, to General Guest in the Castle; who told him for Answer, That he was glad the Provost had come to a Resolution to defend the Town, who might depend upon the utmost Assistance that he the General could give them; and that as soon as the City Arms should be put into proper Hands for that Purpose, what farther Arms were wanting should be ready to be delivered to them from the Castle.

Upon their Return to the Provost, and reporting the General's Answer, Mr. Groset was told, 'That as the Person who had been sent to bring 'back the Deputies had not overtaken them, the Provost and Council, 'as they had entered upon a Treaty, had come to a Resolution not to 'defend the Town.'

It was then proposed and insisted on, that the Cannon and Arms should be delivered into the Castle. For Answer to which the Provost referred to the Letter from the Pretender's Son, and observed the Danger which the Town would incur, if they should remove their Arms. To which Provost Drummond replied, That if they, by giving up the Town, assisted the Rebels with Arms to fight against the King's Troops, would not they, upon retaking the Town, be apt to look upon the Inhabitants as Enemies, and use them accordingly?

After Receipt of the above Answer to the first Deputation, the Council agreed to send out a second Deputation, in order, if possible, to gain some more Time. The Answer to which second was also brought in Writing, though not signed, as the former was, and in the following Words: 'His Royal Highness has already given all the Assurances he can, that 'he intends to exact nothing of the City in general, nor of any in parti-'cular, but what his Character of Regent entitles him to: This he re-'peats, and renews his Summons to the Magistrates to receive him as 'such.'

This second Deputation returned to Edinburgh early in the Morning of Tuesday the 17th of September, in a Hackney-Coach, which entered the City at the West Port, and set down the Deputies at Mrs. Clark's Tavern, where the Lord Provost and others of the Council were waiting for them, to receive their Report, and then the Coach drove down the Street towards the Cannongate; and at the Netherbow Port, which was then kept by a Serjeant's Command of the City-Guard, the Gate was opened to let out the Hackney-Coach, and a Body of Rebels, who were waiting without the Gate, headed by Sullivan and Lochiel, rushed in at the Gate, and became at once Masters of this Capital.

The Rebels, immediately after their becoming Masters of the City, seized all the Cannon, Arms, and Ammunition belonging to it; and the Day following, being Wednesday the 18th, they issued a Proclamation, requiring all Persons in the Shire of Edinburgh, forthwith to deliver up, at the Palace of Holy-Rood-House, all the Arms and Ammunition they had in their Custody, on Pain of being treated as Rebels. And on Thursday the 19th, they sent a Message in Writing to the City of Edinburgh, requiring, on Pain of military Execution, that one thousand Tents, two thousand Targets, six thousand Pairs of Shoes, and a proportional Number of Water Cantines, should be furnished to their Army against the 23d, and promising Payment as soon as the present Troubles should be over. All which were accordingly furnished; and for that Purpose a Tax laid upon the Inhabitants of 2*s.* 6*d.* upon each Pound of their real Rent, within the City, Cannongate, and Leith.

Thus was the City of Edinburgh, which had, in their Address to the King of the 7th of this very Month, said with great Truth, 'That this City 'hath

'hath always diſtinguiſhed itſelf by a firm and ſteddy Attachment to 'Revolution and Whig Principles, and a hearty Abhorrence of all 'Popiſh and arbitrary Government: and particularly, that, during the 'Rebellion in the Year 1715, their Zeal for his late Majeſty was 'equalled by few, and ſurpaſſed by none; and, at the ſame Time, 'aſſured his preſent Majeſty, that, at this Time, they would ſtand by 'him with their Lives and Fortunes, and employ every Power they were 'poſſeſſed of, and all the Means his Majeſty ſhould put in their Hands, 'to diſappoint the Attempts of France and the Pretender.' This City, which had given ſo many Reaſons to expect better Things of it, was, after mighty Preparations for a vigorous Defence, thus poorly delivered up, without ſtriking one Blow, to an half-armed Rabble, at a Time when the King's Army was within a Day's March of the City, to the great Diſcredit and Reproach of the City itſelf, in the Eyes of the World, who were ignorant of the particular Circumſtances and Cauſes of ſo ſtrange an Appearance, to the hearty Grief and Sorrow of all its well-affected Inhabitants, who are by far the greater Part of them, to the Triumph of the Pretender's Son and his Adherents, to the Ruin of many unfortunate Perſons, who, by this Appearance of Succeſs, were encouraged to engage in the Rebellion, to the real and high Detriment, not of the City itſelf only, but of the Publick; the Rebels, by this Capture, having been there furniſhed with Arms, Tents, and Proviſions of all Kinds, which contributed chiefly to their obtaining the Victory at Preſton Pans a few Days after; and that again, to the Continuance and farther Progreſs of the Rebellion, to the immenſe Addition to the Expence of the Publick, the great Interruption of Commerce and Credit, the Progreſs of his Majeſty's Enemies abroad, and the Interruption of the internal Tranquillity of this Kingdom, until that was happily reſtored by the Conduct and Succeſs of his Royal Highneſs the Duke.

It was natural for all the World, at firſt Sight, to lay the Blame of an Event, which has brought on and contributed to ſo many and great Miſchiefs, principally on the Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh for the Time, being the chief Magiſtrate and Governor of the City; and the Queſtion now brought to Trial is, Whether he was, or was not guilty or culpable in his Deportment in that high Office, during the Tranſactions libelled, and above more particularly recited? The Libel charges, That he was guilty of groſs Neglect of Duty, and Miſbehaviour in his Office on that Occaſion; and whether he was or not, muſt depend upon a due Compariſon of the Duty of his Office, with his actual Behaviour, to ſee how far the one comes up to the other, and wherein he was alledged to be deficient; and to have counteracted his Duty, the Libel fairly and particularly ſets forth, and thereby gives him the better Opportunity to clear himſelf, if he be able.

Upon the Libel being read in Court on the 13th current, and the Pannel being aſked by the Court, as uſual, what he had to ſay for himſelf, he ſaid, in effect, that he was not guilty, and that his Conduct, upon the Occaſion libelled, had been agreeable to his Duty; and then left it to his Counſel to offer and make good his Defence at large; of whom five were accordingly heard at great Length, and the Subſtance of their Arguments, as far as the Purſuer could obſerve and recollect them, was as follows.

They took Notice that the Pannel had already ſuffered very great Hardſhips by his long Confinement, for the Space of fourteen Months, without being brought to Trial, which, to a Man engaged, as he is, in conſiderable Trade and Buſineſs, they ſaid was a Puniſhment greater than he merited, ſuppoſing all that is alledged in this Libel were true. They ſaid, that the Source of this hard Uſage was the Malice of certain Enemies of the Pannel in the City of Edinburgh, who, in order to ruin his Credit and Intereſt in this City, had ſet themſelves to find Fault with his Conduct during the Rebellion, had induſtriouſly miſrepreſented that Conduct, and raiſed a popular Clamour againſt him, which, having reached the Seat of Government, had produced the Severities he has already met with.

That he was however now glad of an Opportunity of having his Conduct brought to Trial by the certain Teſt of judicial Evidence, hoping that he would now be declared innocent upon Examination, who, by popular Clamour, had been pronounced guilty without Examination.

At the ſame Time it was alſo urged, though not very conſiſtently with this laſt Declaration, that the Pannel could not competently be brought to Trial at all in this Court upon this Libel; that the particular Statute of King James the Second, upon which it is laid, was almoſt three hundred Years old, and was gone into Diſuetude; that, whilſt it was in force, it was never meant to concern any more than the Behaviour of Magiſtrates in their judicial Capacity, or ordinary Adminiſtration on ſuch Occaſions as commonly or yearly occur, but never to concern the extraordinary Office of Magiſtrates in Time of War or open Rebellion, when it may be very incident to them to err or commit Miſtakes, as many an honeſt Burgeſs may be very well qualified to diſcharge the Duty of Provoſt, or other Magiſtrate of his Burgh, in quiet and peaceable Times, from whom it cannot be expected, that, in ſuch an Exigency as an open Rebellion, he ſhould be able to act the Part of an expert military Commander or Governor of a Town, and that the Deportment of the Provoſt on ſuch Occaſion, could not be tried at all at common Law; that it was an improper Queſtion to be tried by a Jury, who might very properly try a ſingle Iſſue, as whether a Man was guilty of Murder, Robbery, or the like, but very unfit to give Judgment upon a Series of Facts relating to the Deportment of a Provoſt, whether it was or was not agreeable to his Duty; and therefore it was ſaid, that the only competent Method, by the Conſtitution of this Kingdom, for trying and puniſhing Treſpaſſes ſuch as thoſe alledged in this Libel, was by the Authority of the Legiſlature itſelf, in ſuch Manner as had been practiſed in the Caſe of Alexander Wilſon, who had been Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh at the Time of the Murder of Captain John Porteous.

It was farther ſaid, by way of more particular Anſwer to the Matters charged in this Libel, that the ſame contained nothing criminal; that, as to the firſt Article, concerning the raiſing of the Edinburgh Regiment, it was no Crime in the Provoſt to entertain a Doubt concerning the Legality thereof, and to heſitate to commit what he apprehended might have been treaſonable, and that he was juſtified in his Doubt by the ableſt Advice given for applying for his Majeſty's ſpecial Warrant, which was accordingly obtained.

That, as to the ſecond, concerning the Volunteers, he had the ſame Reaſon to doubt concerning the Legality of that Meaſure, and it was no Crime in him that he could not perceive any Difference betwixt authorizing a Body of armed Men who were to ſerve without Pay, and another Body who were to receive Pay; or that the one might be authorized without his Majeſty's ſpecial Warrant, which had been adviſed to be neceſſary or proper in reſpect of the other; that, more particularly, as to this Article, the Provoſt had Reaſon to take Offence, that the Meaſure was ſo far concerted and carried on by the Volunteers, as that they brought him a Petition, ſigned by ninety or a hundred Perſons, without his Privity, or previouſly conſulting with him: This he had Reaſon to conſider as a deſigned Neglect and Inſult upon him; and yet, as ſoon as he was adviſed that the Thing might be lawfully done, he gave way to it; and it was a very ſlender Circumſtance to be charged as a Crime, that he choſe to have it ſaid that he acquieſced in that Meaſure, rather than that he heartily approved it, or that he ſhould be charged with a Defect of Civility or good Manners towards theſe Volunteers.

As to the Third, concerning the Repairs of the City Walls, it was obſerved in general, That the Provoſt was not the ſole Perſon anſwerable for any Slowneſs or Defect of Care and Diligence in this reſpect, though he had been ſingled out, and made the ſole Object of this Proſecution. He was but one of many, who behoved to act by the Authority of his Council, and of the Committee appointed to take the ſpecial Direction of what concerned the Defence of the City; and that all his Conduct was agreeable to the Senſe of theſe two Bodies, and approved by them, and without them he could do nothing; for that the King's Warrant concerning the Regiment, being addreſſed to the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Council, and having ordered that the Regiment ſhould be under the Direction of them all, and the Council having appointed a Committee for that Purpoſe, and to conſider what farther ſhould be done for the Safety of the City, the Provoſt was thus limited in the legal Exerciſe of the known Duty of his Office; that, however, the Committee, whereof he was one, had given the neceſſary Orders for the Repairs, and Warrants for impreſſing Workmen for that Purpoſe; that the Cannon upon the Walls were actually loaded on Sunday the 15th, and Applications were made to procure Gunners for managing them.

To the fourth Article it was ſaid, That no Propoſition could be accepted or rejected by the Provoſt alone, but by the whole Council; that as to the Propoſition in the Article mentioned concerning the Trained Bands, of the purging that Body of diſaffected or ſuſpected Perſons, it was true that the Provoſt was averſe to it, and choſe rather to undergo any Hazard, than take upon him to fix ſuch Mark of Infamy upon a Number of his Fellow-Citizens, without any certain Ground of Charge againſt them.

To the fifth Article, That here again the Pannel was charged with Defect of Civility or good Manners (a very unuſual Point of Dittay); and that ſuppoſing the Fact true, of the Converſation with Sir Robert Dickſon, it was not unreaſonable, nor could juſtly give Offence, for the Provoſt to propoſe ſuch Method for finding Subſiſtence to the ordinary Men, as inliſting them in the Edinburgh Regiment, which would alſo be a Means to inſure their Attendance and Service for a limited Time, ſo as they might not be at Liberty to withdraw at Pleaſure, and this perhaps when the City ſhould be under the moſt preſſing Exigency.

To the ſixth, That the only Thing here imputed to the Pannel as an Offence, was his not immediately committing Andrew Alves to Priſon, the doing which might have been of bad Conſequence, to deter others from bringing Intelligence to the Provoſt concerning the Rebels or their Deſigns; and that at beſt it was not a very clear Caſe, that it was at all lawful or competent to commit Mr. Alves for only repeating to the Provoſt what the Rebels had ſaid to him, when they ſeized him and made him their Priſoner; that his receiving the Meſſage, or hearing what Mr. Alves ſaid, could be no Crime; and, as ſoon as he heard it, he repaired to the Council-Chamber, then held in the Goldſmiths Hall, where he imparted this Piece of Intelligence to ſome others of the Council, who agreed that it ſhould be concealed, leſt it ſhould intimidate the Inhabitants that, however, ſoon after, the Lord Provoſt ſaw the Lord Advocate, and, in purſuance of his Advice, actually committed Mr. Alves.

To the ſeventh and eighth Articles it was ſaid, That Monday the 16th of September 1745. was a Day of univerſal Diſtraction in the City of Edinburgh; that the two Regiments of Dragoons of Hamilton and Gardner, who, with the whole City-Guard, had been poſted at the Coltbridge, a Mile Weſt from Edinburgh, about three Afternoon, retreated, and paſt by the North Side of the Town, Eaſtward, which greatly heightened the Pannick of the Citizens, being thus abandoned by the only military Force they had in their Neighbourhood, and no News of Sir John Cope or his Army was now come, and at the ſame Time the chief civil Officers of the Crown had left the City; and yet, in this Situation, the Lord Provoſt, in the Goldſmiths Hall, where many of the Council and other Inhabitants were aſſembled, declared himſelf ready to act his Part for the Defence of the Town; but that he was now ſeconded by few: But at this Juncture, one Mr. Groſet arrived, and delivered a Meſſage to the Provoſt, that he ſhould ſend for, or conſent to receive a Party of Dragoons; at which he, the Provoſt, was ſurpriſed, having been preſent the Night before at a Council of War, where it was reſolved to be improper to bring any of the Dragoons into the City; upon which he gave his Anſwer in Writing to that Meſſage, which is above recited: That the Inhabitants, anxious to know the Reſolutions of the Council, preſſed into the Room in a Crowd; and then Somebody elſe, not the Provoſt, propoſed to adjourn to the New-Church Iſle; that, on the Way thither, a Gentleman on Horſeback told loudly, that the Rebels were near eight thouſand ſtrong, which ſtill heightened the Pannick; that yet, in the New-Church Iſle, the Lord Provoſt ſpoke as he had in the Council-Room, declaring himſelf ready, if the Citizens were ſo diſpoſed, to do his Part for Defence of the City; that at this Meeting, the Letter from the Pretender's Son was brought in, to the Reading of which he, the Provoſt, objected, and thereupon returned with his Council to the Goldſmiths Hall.

That the Inhabitants had now the Direction of Affairs in their Hands, and they were governed by their Fears and Terrors; that the higher Civil

Officers of the Crown being gone, the Magiſtrates ſent to their own Aſſeſſors for Advice; but they alſo were all gone, excepting one, who declined giving any explicit Opinion on ſuch high Matters; upon which the Letter was read, and found to be to the ſame Purpoſe with Alves's Meſſage, and then they thought themſelves under an unavoidable Neceſſity to ſend out a Deputation, in order to procure a Delay, and gain ſome Time for the expected Relief to come.

To the ninth and tenth it was ſaid, That the Defence of the Town was now given up as impracticable; and that upon ſerious Deliberation it was the unanimous Opinion of the Council, that no direct Order ſhould be given by the Lord Provoſt concerning the Arms of the Volunteers, or the Cannon upon the City-Walls, for fear of incenſing the lawleſs Multitude of Rebels to put their Threats in Execution.

The ſame Anſwer was given to the eleventh Article relating to the City-Arms, to which there was now added, and not till now, a Matter of Fact never formerly alledged by the Pannel; neither in his Examination before the Committee of the Privy-Council, on the 7th December 1745, nor in the ſigned Anſwers returned by him to his Libel, and it muſt appear very ſtrange, if it was true, that the moſt plauſible Anſwer he had to make to this very heavy Article ſhould never have been once mentioned till now, being, that he the Provoſt could prove that he ſent a Meſſage to General Gueſt, propoſing that he ſhould ſend a Party of Soldiers to take away the City-Arms and carry them up to the Caſtle.

Upon the twelfth Article it was ſaid, That the Opinion of the Citizens of Edinburgh, or any Number of them, concerning the Pannel, could afford no Evidence that he was actually guilty; and that, upon the whole, the Surrender of the City was owing to a Train of unavoidable Accidents, for which he the Provoſt was not blameable.

Notice was alſo taken more than once, by the Pannel's Counſel, that he himſelf had a very large Property, conſiſting of a Stock of Wines, lying in his Cellars at Leith, which would be expoſed to the Diſcretion of the Rebels in caſe of their coming to Edinburgh; but the Concluſion drawn from this Fact was not, to the Purſuer's Obſervation, diſtinctly ſpoke out or explained by his Counſel; ſo that the Purſuer is ſtill at a Loſs to know what Uſe was meant to be made of that Obſervation, whether by way of Argument to evince the Sincerity of Mr. Stewart, in deſiring to keep the Rebels at a Diſtance, that his own moveable Eſtate, of ſo great Value, might not come under their Power; or if it was meant to be offered by way of Excuſe for him, that he was afraid of giving offence to the Rebels, by oppoſing them with Vigour and Zeal, becauſethey might have it in their Power to hurt him deeply in his private Fortune or Effects; and therefore the Purſuer muſt leave it to them to explain their own Meaning or Intent, in alledging and inſiſting on this Matter of Fact.

It was farther obſerved for the Pannel, though not very conſiſtently with the Allegation, that there was nothing material relevant or criminal charged upon him in theſe Articles; that the Charge therein contained, if it amounted to any Crime at all, was no leſs than that of High-Treaſon; for that ſuch, no doubt, it was, if he purſued Meaſures that had no other Tendency than to betray the City, whereof he was chief Magiſtrate, into the Hands of the Rebels: It would have been this Crime in caſe the Provoſt had acted with that ill Intention, which is the eſſential Requiſite to render the Actions of Men at all criminal or puniſhable; and if the Provoſt had no ſuch Intention, then, ſuppoſing he had committed ſeveral Errors in his Conduct, theſe were no more than Errors in Judgment, and ſuch Miſtakes in Matters prudential, in difficult and dangerous Times, when a Magiſtrate muſt act one Way or other, ought never to be imputed to him as a Crime; for though the Part he chuſes do not prove ſucceſsful, the oppoſite Conduct might have been no more ſo, and, in that Caſe, that very oppoſite Conduct might, with the ſame Facility, have been laid hold of as the Ground of a Proſecution: For Example, if he had brought in the Dragoons into the City, and theſe afterwards had fallen into the Hands of the Rebels; or, ſuppoſe he had found Means to ſuppreſs the threatening Letter from the Pretender's Son, and the Inhabitants had ſtood to their Defence, and yet the Town had been ſtormed, and the Rebels had then cut the Throats of the Inhabitants, ſuppoſing he had eſcaped the Maſſacre, it is eaſy to imagine what a heavy Charge might have been formed againſt him, as having been the Author or Cauſe of ſuch Calamities: And therefore, ſince his Conduct is not alledged to have been directly treaſonable, it proceeded at worſt from Miſtake, or Errors in Judgment, which is no Crime at all that is puniſhable by the Law in a free Country, ſuch as this is.

It was farther obſerved, that the Pannel was not ſo much as charged in the Libel with Diſaffection to his Majeſty's Government; and that however the Facts libelled might be apt to make ſome Impreſſion, in maintaining a Charge of that Sort, they could not be combined or laid together to an End or Purpoſe that was not directly libelled; that the Facts alledged in the Libel might indeed amount to a Proof of this Propoſition, that the Provoſt was in his Judgment averſe to the Meaſure of defending the City of Edinburgh, as a thing that was impracticable, and therefore not eligible or prudent to be attempted; and it was contended, that this was not even an Error in Judgment, for that he was in the right in being of that Opinion, for that the City of Edinburgh is no ſtrong or fortified Place; and though it is ſurrounded by an old Wall, and a Lake upon one Side, and that the Rebels had no Artillery, it had been very practicable for them to have made their Way into the Town; they might have blown up the Gates, or a Part of the Wall, with Gun-Powder, or have ſet Fire to the Houſes on the Weſt-Side of St. Mary's Wynd, that enter from without, and yet are a Part of, and adjoining to the Town.

All this was, ſo far as the Purſuer could obſerve or recollect, the Subſtance of what was urged by the ſeveral Counſel for the Pannel in his Defence; and in reply to theſe Things, it was, and is now, on behalf of his Majeſty, and for the publick Intereſt, obſerved as follows:

It is admitted for the Purſuer, that the Counſel for the Pannel have rightly obſerved, that the Facts charged upon him, if it had been charged that they were done doloſe & malo animo, of ſet Purpoſe or Deſign, to have put the City of Edinburgh into the Hands of the Rebels, would have amounted to High-Treaſon; for the Lord Hale ſays, in his Pleas. of the Crown, Vol. I. p. 168. 'If a Captain, or other Officer that hath the Cuſtody of any of the King's Caſtles or Garriſons, ſhall treacherouſly, by 'Combination with the King's Enemies, or by Bribery, or for Reward, 'deliver them up, this is Adherence to the King's Enemies.'

And again, p. 169. he ſays, 'The Truth is, if it were delivered up by 'Bribery or Treachery, it might be Treaſon: But if delivered up upon 'Cowardice or Imprudence, without any Treachery, though it were an 'Offence againſt the Laws of War, and the Party ſubject to a Sentence 'of Death by Martial Law; yet it is not Treaſon by the Common Law, 'unleſs it was done by Treachery.'

And if the Pannel, without being engaged in the Intereſt of the Pretender, or without receiving any direct Bribe from him or his Adherents, did even ſuffer himſelf to be moved by the Fear of their hurting his private Property in his Wine-Cellars at Leith, to neglect or counteract any Part of his Duty as Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh, this was at leaſt bordering extremely near upon High-Treaſon.

The Atrocity and the Nature of High-Treaſon is excellently deſcribed in the Digeſts of the Civil Law, in the Title Ad legem Juliam majeſtatis, l. 1. in theſe Words: Proximum ſacrilegio crimen eſt, quod majeſtatis dicitur, § 1. majeſtatis autem crimen illud eſt, quod adverſus populum Romanum, vel adverſus ſecuritatem ejus committitur, quo tenetur is, cujus operâ, dolo malo, concilium initum erat,—quo armati homines cum telis lapidibuſve in urbe ſint, conveniantve adverſus rempublicam; locave occupentur, vel templa; quove cœtus conventuſve fiat, hominеſve ad ſeditionem convocentur:——Quove quis contra rempublicam arma ferat: quique hoſtibus populi Romani nuncium literaſve miſerit, ſignumve dederit, feceritve dolo malo, quo hoſtes populi Romani concilio juventur adverſus Rempublicam.

It is true, that, in this Deſcription, the dolus malus, or the ill Deſign, is an eſſential Ingredient; and it is in general true concerning all Crimes, as it is well expreſſed in the Reſcript of the Emperor Hadrian, l. 14. ad legem Corneliam de ſicariis,—in maleficiis voluntas ſpectatur, non exitus: But the voluntas, or the dolus malus, is to be gathered from the Facts by the Judgment of the Court or the Jury, by whom the Party is tried, againſt whom the Facts are charged, which may very poſſibly have proceeded from a treaſonable Deſign againſt the Crown or the Publick.

The King, however, may, if he be ſo graciouſly pleaſed, wave the inſiſting againſt a Criminal for the higheſt Crime with which he may be poſſibly chargeable; ſo the Lord Hale, p. 374. 'All Treaſon is Miſpriſion of 'Treaſon and more; and therefore, he that is aſſiſting to a Treaſon, may 'be indicted of Miſpriſion of Treaſon, if the King pleaſe.' Stanf. P. C. 37. 6. Co. P. C. 36. 2 R. III. 10. 6.

'The Judgment in Caſe of Miſpriſion of Treaſon, is Loſs of the Pro'fits of his Lands during his Life, Forfeiture of Goods, and Impriſon'ment during Life.'

And the ſame Lord Hale, p. 143. reports 'a Caſe, where there was a 'Conſultation of the Judges, where he was preſent, in the Year 1675. 'relating to the Weavers in and about London, being offended at the En'gine-Looms for making of Ribbons, who roſe in great Numbers to de'ſtroy thoſe Engines in different Counties, and did Damage to the Value 'of ſeveral Thouſand Pounds.

'Five of the Judges ſeemed to be of Opinion, that this was Treaſon 'within the Act 25th Edward III. upon the Clauſe of levying War 'againſt the King; or at leaſt upon the Clauſe of the Statute of the 13th 'Charles II. Chap. 1.

'The other five Judges were not ſatisfied that this was Treaſon with'in either of theſe Statutes.

'Many of them therefore concluded, that if Mr. Attorney ſhould think 'fit to proceed as for a Treaſon, the Matter might be ſpecially found, and 'ſo left to farther Advice——

'Upon the Concluſion of this Debate,—Mr. Attorney, upon Conſider'ation of the whole Matter, it ſeems, thought fit to proceed for a Riot, 'and cauſed many of them to be indicted for Riots, for which they were 'convicted, and had great Fines ſet upon them, and were committed in 'Execution, and adjudged to ſtand upon the Pillory.'

In the preſent Caſe, the Doubt is not concerning the Tendency of the Facts charged upon this Pannel, namely, That it was to give up the City of Edinburgh, the Capital of North-Britain, not to the King's Enemies only, but to a Pretender to his Crown; and the Doubt is only, quo animo this was done, whether with a treaſonable Intent, or through Cowardice, or Negligence, or Imprudence; and this might have been left to the Jury to judge, in caſe he had been charged with High-Treaſon. It is therefore one ſignal Inſtance of the Mildneſs and Benignity of his Majeſty's Government, that the Purſuer has been ordered to proſecute this Pannel, 'not for High-Treaſon, but for a High Miſdemeanour, in hav'ing many Ways acted contrary to his Duty, and thereby ſuffered the 'City of Edinburgh, with the Cannon, Arms, Ammunition, and Provi'ſions, to fall into the Hands of the Rebels;' and when the Pannel's own Counſel are ſenſible that the Facts charged upon him are ſuch, as, at leaſt, border ſo near upon High-Treaſon, and might have been charged as ſuch, they cannot be permitted at the ſame Time to plead, or, at leaſt, they ought not to be liſtened to when they plead, that the Facts here charged have no Relevancy in them, or do not amount to any Crime or Offence whatſoever.

The other Obſervations above recited were extremely groundleſs, That this Libel does not charge the Pannel with Diſaffection to the Government, and that the Opinion of the well-affected Citizens, mentioned in the 12th Article, That he was ſecretly in the Intereſt of the Pretender, cannot infer his being actually guilty of any Crime whatever, for Diſaffection is not the Name of a Crime known in the Law; no Man can be tried for that Diſpoſition of his Mind, but for the Effects which it produces; and, if the Facts here charged had been alledged to have been done by the Pannel through Diſaffection to his Majeſty and his Government, that would have been in Reality, or in Effect, a Charge of High-Treaſon, which was not the Thing intended in the preſent Caſe.

And as for the other Remark, it was far from the Meaning of the Purſuer to alledge, that any Man can be puniſhed merely for the Opinion of others concerning him: But that Fact is mentioned in the Libel for this Reaſon, That, when the main Queſtion, moved by this Trial, is, Whether the

the Pannel was, or was not culpable or negligent in the Execution of his Office as Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh, during the Rebellion, it is a Fact or Circumſtance ſtrongly tending to evince that he was ſo guilty, if it be true that the whole Tenor of his Behaviour was ſuch, as to induce a general Suſpicion or Belief amongſt the well-affected Inhabitants, that their Provoſt was ſecretly in the Intereſt of the Pretender; for, whether they were or were not in the right in that Suſpicion or Belief, they, being ſo immediately and ſo deeply intereſted, could not fail to be conſtantly attentive to the Conduct of their Provoſt; and, if that was ſuch as produced in them ſuch Apprehenſion or Belief, that very Thing is one Demonſtration, ſuppoſing that they carried their Concluſion too far, that his Conduct was not ſuch as became a faithful, vigilant, and zealous Magiſtrate upon that Occaſion.

The Nature of the Office of Lord Provoſt of the City of Edinburgh is well known to this Court. It is partly the ſame that belongs to the chief Magiſtrate of every Royal Burgh in the Kingdom, and partly ariſes from the particular Grants to the City of Edinburgh; they are Sheriffs within themſelves; the Lord Provoſt is the High Sheriff, and, of late Years, as well as formerly, has acted as ſuch, and tried Cauſes even capital, and the Bailies are, ex officio, his Deputy Sheriffs.

The Lord Provoſt is the King's Lieutenant within the City, he is Colonel of the City-Guard by the Act of Parliament authoriſing that, and he is chief Commander of the City Trained-Bands or Militia; and this very Provoſt claimed, and was allowed to be the Colonel of the Volunteers, and was by the Council declared to be Colonel of the Edinburgh Regiment of 1000 Men, that was to be raiſed and paid by the voluntary Subſcriptions of the Inhabitants: In ſhort, the whole military Power within the City was in him, and the chief executive Power, in all Reſpects.

Neither is it true, that the Order in the King's Sign-Manual for the Regiment, that the ſame ſhould be under the Direction of the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates, and Council of Edinburgh, was either intended, or had the Effect to derogate in the leaſt from the legal Powers and Privileges of the Lord Provoſt; that Warrant was granted on the Application of the whole Council of Edinburgh, the Regiment was to be maintained by them and their Fellow-Citizens, the End propoſed by it was the Defence of his Majeſty's Government, but more eſpecially the Preſervation of the City of Edinburgh againſt the Rebels; it was therefore very properly and graciouſly declared, that this Regiment ſhould be under the Direction of the Magiſtrates and Council of Edinburgh; that is, it ſhould not be withdrawn from the immediate Service of that City, or ſent elſewhere, like the reſt of his Majeſty's Troops, at the Diſcretion of his Generals, where it might be of Uſe for his Service, without the Conſent of the Magiſtrates and Council of Edinburgh. But this did not hinder the Lord Provoſt from being, according to the Conſtitution of the City, the Colonel or chief Commander of that Regiment, as well as of all the other Military Force within the City. It cannot be ſuppoſed to have been the Senſe of his Majeſty's Order, that the whole Town-Council, conſiſting of thirty-three Perſons, ſhould act the Part of a Colonel, or have the immediate Command of a Regiment; the utmoſt Effect that Order could have, was, that the whole Council ſhould have Power to give general Orders as to the Manner of employing the Regiment, ſuch as every Prince or State are daily known to give to the Generals or Commanders of their Armies, who are not the leſs veſted with the Powers of Commanders, that they are ſubject to ſuch Direction or Controul.

Neither is it true, that the Appointment of a Committee, in the Terms above-recited, was an Obſtruction or Hindrance to the Provoſt's acting in the Manner that the Libel requires of him, unleſs he can ſay, which he has not done, nor can do by any Thing that appears on Record, that either the Council or the Committee reſiſted his Will, or that they oppoſed or over-ruled him, by Majority of Voices, in any one Thing that he propoſed to be done towards the Preſervation of the City.

His Station, therefore, gave him Power ſufficient, and rendered it his Duty to be the chief Perſon to deviſe, order, and execute every Thing that was proper for preſerving his own City from the Rebels; and, if the Facts be true that are in this Libel charged, it is left to the Judgment of this Court, whether his Conduct was agreeable to his Duty; or if he was not, on the contrary, faulty or negligent in the Execution of his Office, and guilty of manifold Miſbehaviours in it on the Occaſion libelled.

That Occaſion called for the moſt earneſt, vigilant, and active Diſcharge of the Duty of chief Magiſtrate, veſted with ſuch Powers as he had; and, to illuſtrate this, the Purſuer begs Leave to quote a Paſſage from a learned Author, Ærodii rerum ab omni antiquitate judicatarum pandectæ, in the Title, De officio præfecti vigilum, whereof the Rubrick is in theſe Words: Negligentiam, in iis qui ad ſummum reipublicæ pertinent, eſſe capitalem, cap. 1. M. Militius, Cn. Lolius, L. Sextilius, triumviri nocturni, cùm incendii arcendi cauſâ, quod Romæ in ſacra via exortum eſſet, cum hamis & dolabris, omnique familiâ publicâ evocati, tardius adveniſſent: à tribuno plebis die dictâ ad populum, damnati ſunt: leves ob cauſas, inquit Valerius: ſed diſciplina neceſſaria.

Idem ferè apud nos, ſenatûs judicio, cùm adhuc illic eſſemus advocati, Gabaſtoni, præfecto vigilum, accidit: qui vocatus ad ſedandam ſcholarium de ſuo prato ſeditionem, non veniſſet. Nam indignum eſſe, qui, ut excubet reipublicæ, ab omnibus aliis muneribus excuſatur, & præſens vice eſt abſentis: is in tanta neceſſitati, ubi minima mora ſummi momenti eſt, ſegnem, tardum ac negligentem ſe præbeat, aut (quòd minus quoque eſt ferendum) contumacem.——Et quando omnibus viribus opus eſt, nulla cauſa, nulla excuſatio proficit.

Cap. 2. P. Bilius quoque triumvir nocturnus, à P. Aquilio, tribuno plebis accuſatus, quòd vigilias negligentiùs circumiſſet, populi judicio concidit. Nam quod levius ſit in aliis cauſis: in his, ut in re militari, capitale eſſe. Quia puncto ſæpe temporis, maximarum rerum occaſiones amittuntur: neque in hujuſmodi his errare fas eſt, aut dicere, Non putabam.

It was upon the ſame Principles that are here ſet forth, and followed in Practice in the Roman Republick, as well as the French Monarchy, that our old Statute 1457, in the Libel recited, was made, for the Punition of negligent Officiars, and namely, 'Provoſts of Burghs, and others, 'who ſhould be found faulty and negligent in the Execution of their Offi-'ces, and it may be lawfully proved on them, or notoriouſly known;' but with this Difference indeed, that every Offence of this Kind is not made capital, as mitiores pœnæ nobis ſemper placuere, 'but only that they be 'puniſhed, in their Perſons and Goods, after the Quantity of their 'Treſpaſs, at the King's Will.' This is ſuch a Statute as hardly enacts any thing poſitive, or other than what is included in the Common Law of this and all other civilized Nations, and therefore never can go into Diſuetude. And it ſeems unneceſſary to offer any Anſwer to the groundleſs Diſtinction advanced by the Pannel's Counſel, betwixt the Duty of a Provoſt, or other Magiſtrate, upon common or ordinary, and extraordinary Occaſions, there is neither Law nor Reaſon for that Diſtinction. No Man ſhould undertake the Office of a Pilot, who can only hold the Helm in his Hand in ſerene Weather, and is incapable to do his Duty when a Storm riſes. And the Allegation of this Diſtinction ill becomes the Pannel, who is a Gentleman by Birth and Education, and, as ſuch, ſuperior to the ordinary Rank of Burgeſſes, who may be, and often are raiſed to the Office of chief Magiſtrates.

Such, for Inſtance, was the Character of Provoſt Wilſon, a Brewer in Edinburgh, who was Lord Provoſt of that City when Captain Porteous was murdered, who, upon the ſame Principles that are above-mentioned, was puniſhed by an Act of the 10th of his Majeſty, merely for being faulty or negligent in the Execution of his Office; for the Act recites the Murder of Captain Porteous, 'And that, for ſome Time before the committing the 'ſaid Murder and Riot, it was commonly reported in the ſaid City of 'Edinburgh, that ſome ſuch atrocious Fact would be attempted, which, by 'proper Care in the Magiſtrates, Citizens and Inhabitants of the ſaid City, 'might have been prevented; notwithſtanding which, Alexander Wilſon, Pro-'voſt of the ſaid City, and then actually reſident therein, and fully appriſed 'of the ſaid wicked Deſign, did not take any Precautions to prevent the 'ſaid Murder and Riot, nor uſe the proper or neceſſary Means to ſup-'preſs the ſame, or to preſerve the Peace of the ſaid City, or, after the 'Perpetration of the ſaid Fact, to diſcover, apprehend, or ſecure the 'Authors, Actors or Abettors thereof, in manifeſt Violation of the Truſt 'and Duty of his Office of Chief Magiſtrate of the ſaid City.——And 'to the End that the ſaid enormous Miſbehaviours and Neglects of Duty 'may not go unpuniſhed, and that other Perſons may not preſume, 'through Hopes of Impunity, to be guilty of the like for the future, it 'is enacted, that the ſaid Alexander Wilſon be diſabled from holding any 'Office of Magiſtracy, &c.'

Here the Conviction by the Parliament itſelf proceeds altogether upon Negatives, or Neglects of Duty in the Provoſt or chief Magiſtrate, upon a very ſingular and extraordinary Occaſion; and ſo far it is a Precedent in point to the preſent Caſe, which in other reſpects appears to be vaſtly more atrocious than what Provoſt Wilſon was guilty of, who, it ſeems, did not give Credit to the Reports that were current before that extraordinary Attempt was made, and ſuffered himſelf to be ſurpriſed and diſconcerted, when the Mob was ſuddenly raiſed which committed that Murder; inſtead of which, here was long Warning, and many Precautions ſeemingly taken by the Provoſt, heartily intended by many of the Citizens, to avert Evil of a much higher Nature, tending to overthrow the Conſtitution and Eſtabliſhment of this united Kingdom.

It appears quite unneceſſary to anſwer the Allegation offered for the Pannel from this Precedent, which has ſurely not the leaſt Tendency to prove, that the Offence, which was here puniſhed by the Legiſlature itſelf, was no ways puniſhable by the Common Law, or the general Statutes of this Realm.

And as little can it avail the Pannel to enter now into an Argument upon the Expediency of the Reſolution in general, of putting the City of Edinburgh in a Poſture of Defence againſt the Rebels; for though it be true, that before any Reſolution was taken upon this Queſtion, it was very lawful and competent for the Lord Provoſt to declare his Opinion, if it was ſuch, for the Negative; yet, after it was a Reſolution formed by the Council of the City, with the Conſent and Approbation of the moſt conſiderable Citizens of all Ranks, many of whom had previouſly ſollicited that ſuch Meaſures ſhould be taken; and after he, the Lord Provoſt, had ſeemingly concurred, and given way to the general Senſe of the Citizens, as well as of the Council, it ſurely then became his Duty as the firſt Magiſtrate, who had the chief executive Power in his Hands, to exert himſelf, bona fide, for the Execution of the general Meaſure that had been thus reſolved; for better indeed had it been never to attempt ſuch Defence, than not to go through with it until actually overpowered by ſuperior Force; or that, to the great Expence and Diſcredit of the City, after many Preparations to provide a Force for its Defence, and Application to the Crown, which was readily granted, for a Warrant to authorize the Regiment, and to the Inhabitants for a Subſcription to pay it, which was filled up with great Alacrity, and many of the chief of them preſſed for Leave to venture their Perſons, as well as contribute their Money for the Cauſe which they had ſo much at Heart, when, to furniſh Arms, the King's Arſenal in the Caſtle was at their Command, and a conſiderable Force aſſembled, that the Provoſt ſhould ſo manage Matters, as that the Defence ſhould be thrown up juſt at the Time that it became needful to make uſe of all theſe Preparations.

This will require ſome better Excuſe, than that the Provoſt, in his private Opinion, was averſe to the Meaſure in general of defending the City, or that he was afraid of provoking the Rebels to rob his Wine-Cellars at Leith, (if that be meant by taking notice of his great Property there) for it is certain the Provoſt profeſſed to concur with the general Senſe of the City, to provide for and reſolve to make a Defence; and, even upon Monday the 16th of September, in the Afternoon, in the Council-Chamber, and at the general Meeting in the New-Church, it has been alledged, as a Part of his Defence, that he ſtill declared ſtoutly for adhering to that Reſolution; and in theſe Circumſtances, for his Counſel to ſay for him, by way of Apology for his Conduct in the Articles libelled, that the ſame proceeds from, or is to be accounted for, by his diſapproving in his Judgment of the general Meaſure of making any Defence, and offering Reaſons now in ſupport of the Juſtice of that Opinion, inſtead of excuſing him, is in reality to accuſe him very deeply of acting all along with a Duplicity, which muſt have been highly criminal, profeſſing to concur in the Execution of a Meaſure, which which in his Heart he disliked, and, as the Execution of it chiefly belonged to him in virtue of his Office, managing that in such a Manner as to defeat the Design.

As to that Design itself, the most sanguine Promoters of it never pretended to maintain that the City of Edinburgh was capable of holding out a regular or a long Siege; the very Number of the Inhabitants, and the Mouths to be fed, must render this impracticable; but, as the Circumstance which exposed them to be at all visited by the Rebels, was the Misfortune of Sir John Cope's getting to the Northward of the Rebel Army in the Highlands, and as he was known to be returning from Inverness, through the low Country, along the Eastern Coast, and as other Succours were daily expected from Holland, it was very reasonably concluded, that the Pressure upon the City of Edinburgh could be but of short Endurance, and that, very possibly, keeping out the Rebels a single Day might save the City altogether from falling into their Hands; and the Event in a great measure justified the Expectation; for, upon the Evening of Monday the 16th September, when the first Deputies were sent out by the Provost and others to the Rebels Camp, to treat about the Surrender demanded by the Letter from the Pretender's Son, those Deputies had not yet reached that Camp, when authentick Advice came, that Sir John Cope, with his Army, was arrived at Dunbar, which is but twenty Miles from Edinburgh: A very signal Instance of the Truth of what is said in the Passage above quoted from Ærodius, Quòd puncto sæpe temporis maximarum rerum occasiones amittuntur.

What then was the Occasion, or whence arose the Necessity that obliged the Pannel, on the Afternoon of Monday the 16th September, to abandon the Defence of the City, for which so many Preparations had been made and continued till this very Hour, and when, though the Enemy was at hand, there was all the Reason in the World to believe that Succour and Relief from the King's Troops was not far off, as the Event that very Evening accordingly proved, by the actual Arrival of Sir John Cope off Dunbar, and authentick Notice thereof being sent to Edinburgh at the Juncture of Time already mentioned.

The Answer to these Questions made for the Pannel, in the Debate upon his Libel, have been, 'That, on the Afternoon of this Monday, 'the 16th of September 1745. the City of Edinburgh was in great Consternation, occasioned by the Approach of the Rebels, and the threatening Messages sent from them, by the Retreat of the Dragoons from 'Coltbridge, and the withdrawing of the Civil Officers of the Crown 'from the City; that, in these Circumstances, the general Cry of the 'Inhabitants, at a publick Meeting assembled, was for abandoning the 'Defence of the City; after which the Fears of the Inhabitants was the 'governing Principle, the Multitude had the Power in their Hands, and 'there was no longer any Regard paid to Magistrates or legal Authority.'

But to this it is replied, That the Retreat of the Dragoons the Pursuer does not take upon him to approve or justify; very possibly it was made sooner and farther than it was necessary, though it cannot be said that the two Regiments of Dragoons, with the City-Guard of Edinburgh, if the whole Rebel Army had come up to them, ill armed as it was, would have been a Match for such a Superiority of Numbers: But when the Resolution was taken to defend the City of Edinburgh, they did not, nor could reckon upon these two Regiments of Dragoons, as what they could rely upon, or promise themselves to be always attending for their Assistance; and when the Defence of the City was abandoned, they were no farther removed than Musselburgh, which is but four Miles off, and an Offer was made to the Lord Provost to bring them back, or any Number of them he should desire, to assist in the Defence of the City.

That the withdrawing of the Civil Officers could afford no just Cause for abandoning that Defence; the Lord Justice-Clerk had only gone from Edinburgh that Day about Noon, to dine at his own House about three Miles off, and was returning in the Afternoon to the City, when he got Notice by the Way, that the Rebels were by that Time at the West Port of the City, which was not true, but afforded a very just Reason for his returning to his own House; and though the Lord Advocate at this Time also withdrew from the City, and went as far East as Musselburgh, yet, before he left the Town, he had concurred with the Provost and the Sollicitor, in procuring an Order from General Guest, for one hundred Dragoons to march into the City, to encourage and support the loyal Inhabitants in Defence of the Town. And he renewed his Advice by Mr. Grosset, whom he met going into the City in the Afternoon, with a Message from the Lord Justice-Clerk relating to those Dragoons. And of what use could a single Civil Officer be in the Case of a Siege? Or, to what purpose should he shut himself up within the Walls, and expose himself, in case of the Town's being taken, to become a Prisoner in the Hands of the Rebels?

And as for the affrighted Multitude, who are said to have got the Government into their Hands, it was the Fault of the Lord Provost if he permitted this to be: None of the Forces under his Command were withdrawn, and he had still at least twelve hundred well-armed Men under his Command, the Walls of the City repaired and planted with Cannon, and the Castle and its Garrison ready to assist him: And, in this Situation, why did he suffer himself to be despoiled of his Authority, or to be governed by the real, or by the affected Terrors of the timorous, or of the disaffected Multitude? Why did he give way to a general Meeting, in the Church, of an Assembly so composed? Why did he not tell them that the City had already taken its Measures and its Resolution to stand upon its Defence, and order all who did not chuse to depart the City, or to act in its Defence, to repair to their respective Houses, and keep within Doors? He had still the legal Authority in him, and the Means in his Hands to make that to be respected, when he had so great a Body of Men in Arms under his Command.

In these Circumstances, the Methods he pursued demonstrated the End which he had in View, namely, to deliver up, instead of defending the City; for, in order to justify himself in abandoning that Defence, he ought to have gone another Way to work, than to assemble a promiscuous Multitude in the Church, exclusive of the Volunteers. If there was truly any Change of Circumstances occurred, that made it reasonable now to lay aside Thoughts of that Defence which had been so long provided for and pursued, he should have summoned a Council of the same, or the like Persons with those who had first contributed to the Resolutions of making any Defence at all, that is, his own Fellow-Magistrates and Councillors, with the Chief Officers of the Volunteers and Trained-Bands, and deliberated with them upon the supposed Change of Circumstances; and if, in such Council, it had been debated and resolved, by Plurality of Voices, to be now impracticable, or inexpedient to persist any longer in the Measure formerly concerted, of defending the City, that Resolution might have justified or acquitted him; but nothing of this Kind is alledged, and thereby he has taken the whole upon himself. He consulted with a disaffected Multitude, as some of the Persons present in it, of undoubted Credit, say it was: And there is no Record of any Resolution of the Town-Council, or of the Committee abovementioned, of Monday the 16th of September, when this Change of Measures was brought about, nor any Record of the Council after Friday the 13th, before the Rebels entered the City, nor of the Committee after Saturday the 14th.

As for the particular Facts or Articles charged upon the Pannel, the Pursuer has Reason to believe he can prove every one of them; but he now says, that neither the separate Relevancy, nor the Proof of every one of them, is essential to the Conclusion of this Libel, whereof the general Scope and Averment is, That the Pannel, at the Time and upon the Occasion libelled, was faulty and negligent, or guilty of Malversation in the Discharge of his Duty; and, for making out this, particular Articles are specified: And altho' every one of these shall not appear separately material, or shall not be proved, it is no Matter, if enough be proved to make out or support the general Charge.

The Case is of the same Nature as if a civil Action were brought, for Instance, for removing a suspected Tutor by the Kindred of the Infant, in order to which a Number of Articles of Misbehaviour were alledged in the Libel; in which Case, tho' some of these Articles should not be proved, or well accounted for by the Defender, yet, if any Number should be made good and accounted for, the general Allegation of the Libel would be proved, and the Pursuers behoved to prevail in the Conclusion of their Action.

At the same time, to touch briefly at the particular Articles, it is replied to the Answer to the first, That it is not the Pannel's Doubt concerning the Point of Law that is charged as a Crime, but his urging that Doubt, inter alia, demonstrates his Backwardness to pursue any Measures for Defence of the City, for the Doubt itself was extremely groundless. There are sundry old Laws against private Leagues or Bonds among the Subjects, which have nothing to do with the present Case; but the only Law, upon which the Pannel's Objection, that it would have been High-Treason to arm without Authority from the Crown, can be founded, is the 5th Act of the Restoration Parliament 1661, intitled, Act asserting his Majesty's Royal Prerogative in the Militia, and in making Peace and War, &c. which Act declares, 'That it is and shall be 'High-Treason to the Subjects of this Kingdom, or any Number of 'them more or less, upon any Ground or Pretext whatsoever, to rise 'or continue in Arms, to maintain any Forts, Strengths or Garrisons, to 'make Peace or War, or to make any Treaties or Leagues with foreign 'Princes or Estates, or among themselves, without his Majesty's special 'Authority and Approbation first interposed thereto.'

Now, in the first place, whilst this Act continued in force, it surely could never be meant to comprehend the Case of the King's Subjects being called out, by the Magistrates acting under his Authority, to take Arms for his Service; for Instance, if the Militia of any County should be called out by the High Sheriff, or Lord Lieutenant, to resist a foreign Enemy, or a domestick Rebel: And the chief Magistrate of a Burgh, within his District, has the like Power to the Sheriff, or Lord Lieutenant, to defend the Burgh over which he presides.

But, 2*dly*. This Act, upon which the Doubt is singly founded, is repealed by the Act of the 7th of Queen Anne, Chap. 21. which provides, That nothing shall thereafter be High-Treason in Scotland, but what is such in England. And farther provides concerning certain Crimes therein mentioned, viz. Theft in landed Men, Murder under Trust, Fire-raising and Assassination, which were declared to be Treason by particular Statutes in Scotland, shall hereafter be adjudged and deemed to be capital Offences. But concerning the Fact which is made Treason by this Act 1661, no such Provision is made.

The Pursuer's Replies concerning the other Articles are already in Substance made in the foregoing Argument, and he shall not prolong this Paper to go through them minutely, and shall only farther observe, That, as to the new Defence offered to the eleventh Article, concerning the City-Arms, that though it comes with a bad Grace to be now for the first Time proposed, the Pursuer does not oppose the Pannel's being allowed to prove this Allegation, and all other Facts and Circumstances that have been by him alledged for his Vindication or Defence against the Charge contained in this Libel.

In respect whereof, &c. WILL. GRANT.

AGAINST

His MAJESTY'S ADVOCATE for his Majesty's Interest, Pursuer.

BEFORE entering upon the Objections to the Relevancy of this Libel, it may not be improper, first of all, to lay before the Court a genuine and succinct Account of every Fact and Circumstance which any way concerns the Conduct of the Pannel, or can give any Light to form a Judgment of it during the Period mentioned in the Libel.

Upon the 17th of August 1745, the Pannel, then Lord Provost of the City of Edinburgh, had the Honour to receive a Letter from the Marquis of Tweeddale, one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State of the 13th current, acquainting him, 'That their Excellencies the Lords 'Justices, having received Intelligence, that the Pretender's Son was 'already landed, or intended to land in Scotland, had recommended it to him

'him to give Notice to the Provoſt thereof, that he might exert his Care 'and Vigilance on this Occaſion, and make uſe of ſuch Precautions as he 'ſhould judge neceſſary for preſerving the publick Peace within the 'Bounds of his Juriſdiction.

To this Letter the Lord Provoſt wrote an Anſwer on the 17th, as follows: 'It is with Pleaſure I aſſure your Lordſhip, that this Town 'was never better affected, nor more peaceable than at preſent. Nothing 'ſhall be neglected on my Part to preſerve People in their Duty to-'wards their King and their Country; and we truſt in God that no 'threatened Dangers ſhall ever reach us; at the ſame Time, we are not 'to ſit down in Security, but will keep a watchful Eye, in order to 'prevent, as far as it is in our Power, every thing that may diſturb the 'Peace of this Place.'

The above Letter was laid before the Magiſtrates when it came to Hand, and the Anſwer was approved of by the Town-Council, at a Meeting on the 23d of Auguſt, and, in purſuance of theſe Reſolutions taken by the Lord Provoſt and Council, the following Orders were forthwith iſſued.

Auguſt 23. Orders were given to levy and raiſe thirty Centinels to be added to the City-Guard, agreeable to the Powers given them by Act of Parliament, and to provide them with Clothing and all other Neceſſaries.

Recommended to the Lord Provoſt and Magiſtrates to direct the Captains and Officers of the Trained-Bands, forthwith to make up full Liſts of all the Perſons belonging to their ſeveral Companies, and to report the ſame to the Magiſtrates againſt Saturday next; and that the Captains warn and premoniſh them all to be ready, in caſe of any Diſturbance, to appear with their beſt Arms, upon an Hour's Warning, at the ordinary Places of Rendezvous.

Orders were given for directing the Conſtables of the City to make out full and ample Liſts of all the Inhabitants and Reſidenters within their Diſtricts, and report the ſame to the Magiſtrates; and to be diligent in inquiring and finding out what Strangers may happen from time to time to come within the City, and lodge within their ſeveral Diſtricts.

Orders for a Proclamation, requiring and ordaining all Inn-Keepers, Strangers, and others, who lodge and entertain Strangers, from time to time, and as oft as any Stranger ſhall lodge with them, to give in to the Captain of the City-Guard a Note of their Names and Deſignations at their Arrival; and of the Time of their Departure, under a Penalty for each Tranſgreſſion; and the Captains of the Guard ordered duly to report to the Magiſtrates, in Writing, every Morning, Liſts of the Particulars that ſhould be delivered in to them by the Inhabitants.

Theſe Orders, moſt of which proceeded upon Motions made by the Lord Provoſt, were all agreed to by the Magiſtrates and Council, and ſigned by him in their Preſence; and Care was taken of the due and punctual Execution of them all, without any Loſs of Time.

The next Day, being Saturday, Auguſt 24th, it was ſuggeſted to the Lord Provoſt that it might be fit to call a general Meeting of the Inhabitants, to conſider what was to be done on this Occaſion; to which he agreed, and communicated the Propoſal to the Council at their next Meeting on Monday, Auguſt 26. who alſo approved of it; and accordingly the Meeting was ordered, and the moſt ſubſtantial and well-affected Burgeſſes were invited to aſſiſt with their Counſel and Advice; and at the Meeting, which could not be convened ſooner than next Day, Auguſt 27. the above Reſolutions and Orders were reported to them by the Lord Provoſt; and the Meeting 'unanimouſly approved thereof, and gave his 'Lordſhip and the Council their hearty Thanks for the wiſe and pru-'dent Meaſures they had already taken; and, farther, offered it as their 'Advice to the Magiſtrates and Council, to name ſome of their own 'Number, and ſuch other of the Burgeſſes as they ſhould think fit, as 'a joint Committee to conſult with and take the Advice of the Lord 'Juſtice-Clerk, Lord Advocate, Mr. Sollicitor, and ſuch of the Lords 'of Seſſion as can be found in Town, with regard to what farther Steps 'the Magiſtrates, Council and Community can legally take for preſerv-'ing the Peace of the City, and contributing to defeat the dangerous 'and wicked Deſigns of the Enemies to his ſacred Majeſty, his Royal 'Family, and preſent happy Conſtitution.

Auguſt 28. The Committee were accordingly named by the Council next Day, and that very Evening met with the King's Counſel, and ſuch of the Judges as were in Town, at the Lord Juſtice-Clerk's Houſe, where it was propoſed, that a Regiment of a thouſand Men ſhould be levied for the Defence of the Town, and Service of the Government, to be ſubſiſted, for three Months, on the Charges of ſuch of the Inhabitants as were willing to ſign an Aſſociation for that Purpoſe. And as it had been, for ſome time, a general Subject of Converſation and Debate without Doors, how far it was legal to levy ſuch Regiment without a ſpecial Order from his Majeſty, the Opinion of the learned and honourable Perſons preſent was aſked upon this Point, and they all agreed, that it could not be legally done without his Majeſty's Warrant. Upon which it was reſolved that the Lord Advocate ſhould make Application for ſuch Warrant; and that, in the mean Time, Trial ſhould be made of the Inclinations of the Inhabitants to concur in this Meaſure, how ſoon the Warrant ſhould be obtained from his Majeſty.

Auguſt 30. The Lord Provoſt and Magiſtrates were employed in receiving Propoſals for putting the Town in a Poſture of Defence; and the Lord Provoſt wrote Letters to the Magiſtrates of Boroughs, and Miniſters, for about the Diſtance of fourteen Miles round the City, begging that they would ſend as early Intelligence as poſſible, by Expreſs on Horſeback, of any Bodies of armed Men they could diſcover marching towards this City.

Auguſt 31. About the ſame time many different Orders were given by the Lord Provoſt to proper Perſons, with a View to put the Town in a Poſture of Defence, which were afterwards executed, particularly for clearing the Town Wall, building Stairs to get up to the Wall, making Communications from one Place to another, raiſing a Work at Wallace's Tower, to prevent the Communication by the Back of the Caſtle. This laſt Work had been directed at firſt in a very proper Manner by Bailie Robert Baillie, Overſeer of the publick Works for this Year; but Bailie Gavin Hamilton afterwards ſtopt it, and gave a different Direction, by which that Work was for ſome time retarded.

Monday, September 2. The Lord Provoſt ſigned an Order in Council for augmenting the Town-Guard to the Number of 126 Men.

September 3. Bailie James Stewart and Mr. Colin Mac Laurin applied to the Lord Provoſt, with a Meſſage from ſome Gentlemen who had met the Evening before, deſiring in general that he would ſee to the Defence of the Town; and particularly, firſt, That he would order Moulds to be made for caſting Bullets. 2dly, That the Sluices of the North-Loch ſhould be filled up. And, 3dly, That a Diſtinction ſhould be made betwixt the Inhabitants of known good Affection and others, before he came to intruſt them with the Town's Arms.

The Lord Provoſt agreed to the firſt two Propoſals, and ordered the immediate Execution of them; but as to the third, he demurred. He obſerved to them the Inconvenience of making Diſtinctions amongſt Inhabitants upon bare Suſpicions, eſpecially about the Time of an approaching Election, when Parties were forming, which would lead them to ſpread Calumnies againſt one another upon By-Views; that this might occaſion Heats and Diſſentions dangerous to the Peace of the Town, and even ſtrengthen the Diſaffected by combining them together; that, where any real Ground of Complaint could be condeſcended, he was ready, not only to exclude ſuch Perſons from ſerving in the Trained-Bands, but alſo to oblige them to find Security for their good Behaviour. After this Reaſoning the Gentlemen did not inſiſt farther upon that Part of their Propoſal, nor lay it before the Council, who were the proper Judges of the Expediency of ſuch Meaſures, had they thought it fit to be inſiſted on.

September 4. The Lord Provoſt met with the ſame two Gentlemen, and ſeveral other Burgeſſes, in a Tavern, and, after a good deal of Converſation upon the ſeveral Expedients propoſed for Defence of the Town, he deſired they would digeſt their Propoſals, and give them in, in Writing, which he would either immediately comply with, or give them an Anſwer in Writing. This they ſeemed chearfully to agree to, and promiſed to give him in their Propoſals, but never did it.

September 6. Some of the ſame Gentlemen preſented to the Provoſt a Petition ſigned by about 80 or 90 of the Inhabitants, offering to ſerve as Volunteers for Defence of the City againſt any Attack, and particularly in contributing to erect the neceſſary and proper Barricado's for defending the Ports and ſeveral Avenues to the City, and praying that the City-Wall might be inſtantly repaired, and Stairs put up, &c. to appoint proper Places of Rendezvous, furniſh them with neceſſary Arms, and allow them to name their Officers.

The Provoſt told the Gentlemen who had met with him two Days before, That, after what had paſt at that Meeting, he expected they would have communicated to him their Intentions, as they promiſed; but he never would mind any perſonal Neglect in a Matter where the publick Safety was concerned, and therefore ſhould take care to preſent their Petition to the Magiſtrates without Delay, and return their Anſwer.

September 7. He did accordingly order a Meeting of the Magiſtrates to be ſummoned againſt Eleven next Forenoon; and, that there might be no unneceſſary Delay from any Doubtfulneſs concerning the Legality of this Meaſure, the Provoſt adviſed with the Lord Advocate upon that Point in his Way to the Meeting; and, having got his and the Sollicitor's Opinion of the Lawfulneſs of it, he forthwith met with the Magiſtrates, and laid the Petition and Opinion before them; upon which they chearfully approved of the Propoſal, and applauded the Zeal of the Petitioners.

Immediately after the Provoſt went to the Volunteers, who were met in the New Church Iſle, and told them their Petition was to be complied with in every Particular, except the Nomination of their Officers: But, notwithſtanding that did of Right belong to him, yet, as he wiſhed of all Things they might have ſuch Officers as they inclined to obey, if they would give him a Liſt of 20 or 30 of their Number, he would confine his Nomination to that Liſt. They complied. He named ſix of the fitteſt Perſons in the Liſt for Captains, with whom they were highly pleaſed, and he left the Nomination of the Subalterns to themſelves, for which they returned him Thanks.

The ſame Day the Lord Provoſt moved in Council, that an Addreſs ſhould be drawn up and preſented to his Majeſty, which was unanimouſly agreed to; and a dutiful Addreſs was accordingly drawn out, approven and ſigned; after which it was reſolved, 'To authorize the Magiſtrates 'and Conveener to employ Perſons with all poſſible Speed to put the 'City in a Poſture of Defence, and particularly the Walls thereof.'

In conſequence of this, Workmen were immediately ſent for, and the Lord Provoſt ordered them forthwith to fall to work, under the Direction of Mr. Mac Laurin, and to work Night and Day, Sundays not excepted, till all was finiſhed, and gave Warrants for impreſſing Workmen.

September 8. The Provoſt, of his own Accord, ordered all the Powder that was in the Town's Magazine to be carried to the Caſtle; which was ſo punctually executed, that he behoved afterwards to take from the Caſtle what was neceſſary for the Service of the Town.

About the ſame Time he wrote an Order to Robert Davidſon, Tackſman of the Meal-Market, to clean out the Granaries, and provide Meal.

September 9. This Morning the Provoſt having occaſionally heard that his Majeſty's Sign-Manual, authorizing to levy the Regiment propoſed, had come the Day before to the Lord Advocate's Hand, he went and waited on his Lordſhip, and, upon receiving the Sign-Manual, he immediately called a Council, and produced the ſame, which was addreſſed to the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh; and recites, 'That it had been repreſented to his Majeſty, that the Lord 'Provoſt, Magiſtrates, Town-Council, Burgeſſes, and others of his 'City of Edinburgh, from the great Loyalty and Affection to his Per-'ſon and Government, were at this Juncture willing and ready to raiſe 'and maintain, at their own proper Charge and Expence, by volun-'tary Subſcription and Contribution, One thouſand Foot for the De-'fence of the ſaid City, and the Support of his Government; and they 'were deſirous of obtaining his Royal Licence and Authority for the 'ſame: His Majeſty therefore, repoſing intire Truſt and Confidence 'in the Lord Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Town-Council of his ſaid City, 'did thereby authorize and impower them to raiſe, form and diſcipline 'One thouſand Foot to be employed for the Purpoſes above mentioned; 'and his Majeſty did thereby farther order and command, that the ſaid 'One thouſand Men ſhall be under the Direction of the Lord Provoſt, 'Magiſtrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh: For the doing whereof 'this ſhall be a ſufficient Warrant.'

As by this Warrant the Direction of the Regiment was placed in the Magiſtrates and Town-Council, ſo, as ſoon as it was read, they took the Direction into their own Hands, 'and appointed, as a Committee, 'the preſent and old Magiſtrates, Conveener, Deacons Lauder and Por- 'teous, or any five of them, the Lord Provoſt being always one, and, in 'caſe of his Abſence, any Nine of them, to be a Quorum, to conſider 'what is moſt proper to be done upon this Occaſion for levying the ſaid 'Thouſand Foot; and particularly to take in the Subſcription of ſuch 'of the Inhabitants as are willing to contribute for levying and main-'taining the ſaid Thouſand Foot, with their proper Officers, to be named 'for the Purpoſes mentioned in the ſaid Sign-Manual, for the Space of three 'Months after they ſhall be ſo inliſted; as alſo to conſider what is proper 'farther to be done for the Safety of this City, and for Support of the 'Government; which Committee ſhall meet at the Goldſmiths-Hall, 'twice each Day, at the Hours of Eleven in the Forenoon, and Four in 'the Afternoon; and recommended to the ſaid Committee, to keep a 'Book, into which all their Proceedings and Actings ſhall be regularly 'ingroſſed, to the end the ſame may be reported to the Council from 'Time to Time.'

At the ſame Time, the Council 'ordered the Serjeants, Corporals and 'Drums of the City-Guard to beat up for Volunteers to compleat the 'Thouſand Foot; and they nominated the Lord Provoſt to be Colonel 'and Commander of the ſaid Thouſand Foot, with Power to him to 'conduct and direct them, and the other Officers who ſhall be named to 'command under him, as the Council ſhall think proper, or as the Exi-'gencies of Matters ſhall require.'

And the Lord Provoſt ſhewed his chearful Concurrence in this Meaſure, by a Subſcription far beyond any other that was made to this Regiment.

September 10 to 13. From this Day, to the 13th of September, there are daily Proceedings of the Council and Committee above named, who went on with all Diligence in raiſing the Men, taking in Subſcriptions, providing Arms, Grain, and other Neceſſaries, and doing every thing that was judged proper for putting the Town in a Poſture of Defence. It is unneceſſary to trouble the Lords with reciting minutely every Particular which appears to this Purpoſe from the Records of the Council, and the Minutes of the Committee, which regularly met for carrying on the Buſineſs intruſted to them; and the Lord Provoſt appears, by their Minutes, to have been preſent at every Sederunt.

The Pannel is deſirous to abridge the Trouble of the Court, in reading a long Story, as much as poſſible; and therefore ſhall but juſt mention a few of the many Inſtances of his Care and Concern in carrying on the general Meaſure now reſolved on, for the Defence of the Town, about this Period.

That whenever any Complaints were made of the Slowneſs of the Workmen, that they were not going on with that Diligence they ought, the Lord Provoſt ſeverely reprimanded them, and gave freſh Warrants to preſs Men and Carts, with ſtrict Orders to loſe no Time.

That Bailie Robert Baillie, who had the Inſpection of the publick Works, with his Committee, were ordered to ſee that every thing was done that was neceſſary for the Defence and Preſervation of the Town; and he had the Charge of impreſſing Workmen and Carts, and exerciſing all the Authority that was neceſſary for carrying on the publick Works with the utmoſt Diſpatch.

That the Provoſt, on the 10th of September, wrote a Letter to Captain John Dalrymple, and alſo applied to Captain James Murray, to take upon them the Command of the Volunteers: But they both refuſed to accept of a Command of Men who had not been accuſtomed to military Diſcipline.

That the Provoſt moved in the Committee, to recommend to ſome of the City-Guard, Edinburgh Regiment, and Gentlemen Volunteers, that they ſhould learn the Exerciſe of throwing the Hand-Granadoes.

That, in order to preſerve the publick Money from falling into the Hands of the Rebels, the Provoſt called a Council, and propoſed, that what was owing of the King's Ceſs ſhould be paid up to the Receiver-General, though it had not been paid by the Inhabitants to the Collector; and for that Purpoſe the Provoſt forthwith ſigned an Order on the Caſh Accompt for 1000*l.* Sterling, payable to the Receiver-General, to Account of the Ceſs due by the City, which was delivered to the Receiver-General.

September 13. That the Proceedings of the Committee for levying the City's Regiment, and forewarding the neceſſary Steps to be taken for the Safety and Defence of the Place, were read over in Preſence of, and conſidered by the Council, and unanimouſly approven of, and the Council recommended to the Committee to continue in their Diligence.

September 14. Notice having come to Town this Morning, that the Rebels had paſſed the Forth ſome Miles above Stirling, and were directing their March towards Edinburgh, and Colonel Gairdner's Dragoons were retiring before them, the Lord Juſtice-Clerk ſent a Meſſage to the Provoſt, deſiring he would meet with him, and ſome Lords and Gentlemen of the Army, and others, whom he was to bring from the Country, in order to concert what was to be done in this Exigence. The Provoſt immediately went to Lord Juſtice-Clerk's Houſe, and told his Lordſhip he was ſenſible how much he ſtood in need of ſuch Advice; that he would always be ready to follow it, and would be ſure to attend them whenever called for.

He went on ſtill in doing every thing that could be thought of as neceſſary to provide for the Defence of the Place. He ſigned a Warrant this Day, along with Lord Somerville as Juſtice of Peace, to preſs Men and Carts for carrying Sand and other Materials to the Ramparts and Works about the Walls, which was accordingly executed; and alſo to bring in Hay, Corn, and Proviſions into the Town, and John Walker and William Mercer were ſent to Leith for that Purpoſe.

This Day alſo the Provoſt ordered twenty-four Men to attend Captain Bryden in mounting the Cannon upon the Walls;

And granted Warrant to bring into the Town all the Ladders, Arms and Ammunition, which were in the Cannongate, Potter-Row, and other Suburbs adjacent to the Town, that they might not be ſeized by the Rebels.

Sunday, September 15. We are now come to Sunday the 15th of September; and as the Proceedings of this Day, and the next, are greatly miſrepreſented, as well as curtailed in the Purſuer's Information, it is neceſſary to be a little more particular in reciting them.

Upon Sunday Morning, when the Committee were met in the Goldſmiths-Hall, a Gentleman came with a Meſſage from General Gueſt, to acquaint them, that when it was propoſed, at a Meeting at his Houſe, to order Hamilton's Regiment of Dragoons to join Gairdner's, and make a Stand againſt the Rebels, the General made a Difficulty, in regard he had no Body of Foot to ſuſtain them. Upon which a Captain of the Volunteers undertook, that, at leaſt, two hundred and fifty of theſe Gentlemen would be ready to march upon any Service the General would order them; he believed more would, but he could anſwer for two hundred and fifty, providing the Provoſt would allow Fifty of the Town-Guard to go along with them; and the Gentleman deſired to know if the Provoſt would conſent.

On firſt hearing of this Propoſal, the Provoſt had ſome Difficulty to part with the Town-Guard, as being the Body of Men he could moſt depend upon, in caſe of any Occaſion, to defend the Town; on which Bailie Robert Baillie ſaid, he thought fifty of the Town-Guard could not be better employed than in ſupporting ſo many of the Volunteers, if they marched out; and inſtantly the Provoſt, upon Recollection, agreed, and anſwered, 'Mr. Baillie, you are in the right; in place of 'Fifty, they ſhall have the whole Town-Guard, and as many of the 'Edinburgh Regiment as are capable of doing Service.'

The Provoſt immediately went down in a Coach, along with the Gentleman who had brought the Meſſage, and told the General the Reſolution of the Committee as to ſending out the Town-Guard and the Edinburgh Regiment; upon which the General ſent Orders to Hamilton's Regiment to march through the Town and join Colonel Gairdner's.

The Provoſt came up to Town from the General's in a Coach, along with Provoſt Drummond, the firſt Captain of the Volunteers, and by the Way met two of their Officers, who came into the Coach, and told them, they were ſure the Volunteers would not comply with the Meaſure propoſed, and that they were now ſeparated, and had gone home.

The Provoſt aſked Mr. Drummond what would be the beſt Signal to bring the Volunteers together? He ſaid they had only two, three Guns from the Caſtle, or ringing the Alarm-Bell. The firſt, ſays the Provoſt, is not in our Power, as the Caſtle is ſhut; and the other, in Time of divine Service, may alarm the Town. No help for it, ſays Mr. Drummond, the Bell muſt be rung.

The Bell was accordingly rung, which alarmed the People, and made them leave the Church. The Volunteers conveened in the Lawn-Market, and huzza'd Hamilton's Dragoons as they paſt along. Their Officers applied to the Provoſt, and aſked if he had ordered them to go out and join the Dragoons? He told them, he had no Power to order them any where out of Town; but he had conſented, that as many as were inclined ſhould go out with the Town-Guard and Edinburgh Regiment, to ſuſtain the Dragoons in oppoſing the Rebels. The Meaſure was generally not liked by the Volunteers, and was imputed to the Provoſt as if he had been the firſt Propoſer, as one of their Officers told him with a good deal of Warmth.

After many Expoſtulations among themſelves, at laſt Mr. Drummond marched up on the Head of his Company, and ſome others followed. They went the Length of the Weſt Port and then returned.

Two of their Officers went foreward to ſtop the Town-Guard and Edinburgh Regiment, who had marched on to ſuſtain the Dragoons, and found them between the Coltbridge and Brucehill: But the Provoſt being informed of this, ſent Orders that the City Regiment and Town-Guard ſhould march foreward, and take their Orders from the commanding Officer. General Gueſt, when he heard of the Return of the Volunteers, was vexed at the Diſappointment, and ſaid, if he had expected it, he would not have ordered Hamilton's Regiment to go out to join the other in Defence of the Town.

The Provoſt ſent up Mr. Stewart, chief Conſtable, to the Caſtle, with a ſigned Order for a Number of Matches for the Uſe of the Cannon mounted on the Town-Walls, which were accordingly delivered, and brought down to the Goldſmiths-Hall.

The Provoſt conveened the Trained-Bands under their proper Colours and Officers, and gave them Notice to hold themſelves in Readineſs upon a Minute's Warning, and three Companies of them were ordered to mount Guard.

He alſo ordered the Conſtables to ſearch Houſes, of which there was any Suſpicion, for Arms and treaſonable Papers.

This Afternoon Brigadier Fowkes came to Town, and the Provoſt was called in the Evening to Lord Juſtice-Clerk's, where Lord Advocate, General Gueſt, Brigadier Fowkes, and ſeveral other Gentlemen of the Army were preſent. A Propoſal was made, that the Dragoons might be brought into Town, with a View to give them ſome Reſt and Refreſhment, and have their Horſes fed on the Street: But after the Thing was debated among the Gentlemen of the Military, who conſidered that the Avenues of the Town might be taken Poſſeſſion of by the Rebels, the Streets barricadoed, and the Houſes lined, and that the Dragoons might very probably, by this Means, fall into the Hands of the Rebels, it was agreed to be a Thing not to be attempted.

From this the Provoſt went along with Major Cochran, Captain Murray, Provoſt Drummond, and others, to the Houſe of Mrs. Clark Vintner, where a Diſpoſition was made of the ſeveral Corps of armed Men into different Quarters of the Town, particular Guards aſſigned them, and Places for their Alarm-Poſt condeſcended on, where each of them ſhould appear on the proper Signals; Copies of which were given to the commanding Officers of the different Corps.

This Afternoon the Provoſt met with Sir Robert Dickſon upon the Street, who had come in with a conſiderable Number of Volunteers; he received him with great Civility, as both his perſonal Character and Errand deſerved; immediately gave Orders that his Men ſhould be lodged in the Kirk, and that a ſufficient Quantity of Bread and Ale ſhould be carried there for a Refreſhment to them without Delay.

About this Time Meſſages were ſent to the Caſtle and Leith, to procure Gunners for loading the Cannon. Mr. Gueſt could afford us none out of the Caſtle; Bailie Set made ſearch over all Leith, aſſiſted by David Dryburgh, Charles and Alexander Sheriffs, and ſent us up what could be found found there; Application was alſo made to the Urſilla Man of War, and the Anſwer returned, That the Captain could ſend none.

By Orders from the Lord Provoſt, the great Guns upon the Walls were begun to be charged on Sunday Evening, and the Gunners employed continued to charge them till Two o'Clock next Morning.

The Provoſt this Evening ſent up an Officer of the Town-Guard to beg the General would order a Signal to be put up in the Caſtle, to diſcover the Road the Rebels ſhould take to Edinburgh, that Meaſures might be taken to turn the whole Force as much as poſſible to that Side; and an Anſwer was returned, That his Requeſt ſhould be complied with.

All this Sunday Evening, from Seven to Twelve, the Provoſt was conſtantly employed, either in the Goldſmiths-Hall, or at the different Guards of the Town, converſing with the Military Men about Orders, or with the Captains of the Trained-Bands. At Twelve at Night he began the grand Round, which laſted till about Four o'Clock in the Morning.

Monday, September 16. Having gone home for an Hour or two, he was upon the Streets again at Six in the Morning, reviewing the Barricadoes that were making at the Ports, and ſuperintending the other publick Works about the Town.

At Nine o'Clock, He ordered Bread and Ale to be carried out to the Dragoons; and upon Mr. Fowkes's applying to him for the Town-Guard and Edinburgh Regiment to be ſent out to join the Dragoons, he immediately ordered them to parade in the Parliament-Cloſe, and march out, which they did.

He next gave orders that Mutton, Beef, &c. ſhould be bought, and boiled in all the Taverns in Town, for the Uſe of the Dragoons; and went through ſeveral of the Taverns with Mr. Baillie and Mr. Hamilton, and gave Directions thereanent.

Being informed by Colonel Clayton, that the Proviſions firſt ſent out were not ſufficient, he expreſſed his Diſpleaſure that his firſt Orders had not been fully obeyed, ſent to the Bakers and Brewers, and cauſed preſt Carts to carry out Proviſions.

Betwixt Ten and Eleven o'Clock, When ſitting in a Cloſet in the Coffee-Houſe with Commiſſary Leſlie, Andrew Alves came in to them, and ſaid, That, in his Way to Town, he happened to ride near the Rebels; that the Duke of Perth knew him, and ordered him to come nearer; and upon hearing he was going to Edinburgh, ſaid, I underſtand the Provoſt and Magiſtrates are making great Preparations againſt us, but we are reſolved to pay them a Viſit; if they will keep their Arms in their Poſſeſſion, and allow us to come peaceably into Town, they ſhall be civilly dealt with; if not, they muſt lay their Account with Military Execution, or Words to that Purpoſe: And turning to a young Man he called the Prince, he aſked him, Whether or not that was his Pleaſure? Which the other ſeemed to aſſent to. The Provoſt ſaid, 'Mr. Alves, this is a very extraordinary Meſſage; but they will find we are not to be intimidated by 'Threats.'

The Provoſt went immediately over to the Goldſmiths-Hall, and acquainted two Gentlemen of the Committee of what Mr. Alves had ſaid, and conſulted with them what was proper to be done. They were of Opinion it was moſt proper to neglect it, and take no Step that might publiſh to the Inhabitants the Threatning they had received.

The Provoſt, after reviewing ſome of the Works about the Town, on his Return to the Street, was informed, that Andrew Alves had adventured to repeat to others what had paſſed betwixt him and the Rebels; upon which he went ſtraight to the Lord Advocate to aſk his Advice, where he found Mr. Alves; and, by the Advocate's Advice, he ſigned a Warrant for committing him.

Monday, September 16*th, Afternoon about Three o'Clock*, The Provoſt being then in Mrs. Wilſon's, was called out from the Company by Mr. Baillie and Mr. Ferreſt, who acquainted him, that a Petition to the Magiſtrates was handing about among the Inhabitants, deſiring they might be conſulted upon what was proper to be done upon this Juncture. At this the Provoſt was ſurpriſed, as well as vexed: However, as ſoon as he came out to go to the Goldſmiths-Hall, he was met by a great Crowd of Inhabitants, who delivered to him the Petition, which is produced in Proceſs, praying, 'That the Magiſtrates, before they came to any Reſolution, 'either of defending or giving up the Town, would call a Meeting of all 'the principal Inhabitants and Heritors, at preſent in the Place, to con'ſult with them what is proper to be done in an Affair of ſo great Im'portance.' Upon this the Provoſt immediately went to the Goldſmiths-Hall; they followed him, and endeavoured to crowd in: Upon which he was provoked, and aſked, If they meant to inforce their Petition by Numbers; begged they would be gone, and leave it to the Magiſtrates, who were to conſider what was moſt expedient to be done with reſpect to the Place; and immediately he cauſed the Drum to go about, and order the Inhabitants to retire from the Streets, who were all in an Uproar upon hearing that the Dragoons had retreated from the Rebels.

The Provoſt, in his Way to the Ports, met with the Lord Advocate and Sollicitor, who aſked him, If he did not think 100 Dragoons might be of Uſe to be brought into the Town; and he agreeing that they might, the Advocate aſked him to ſign a Letter in Conjunction with him and the Sollicitor, to General Gueſt, to ſend in 100 Dragoons; which the Provoſt immediately did, and then went on to ſee the Gates barricadoed.

After the Gates were barricadoed, he ordered Mr. Stewart the Conſtable to mount the Walls, and look out for the Dragoons; and ſo ſoon as he ſhould ſee them come near the Walls, to open the Gates and let them in: He had before provided a large Quantity of Hay for the Uſe of their Horſes.

As he was returning up the Weſtbow, a Citizen of very conſiderable Subſtance, and undoubted Loyalty, came to him, and ſaid, 'He applied to 'him in Name of himſelf, and many of the moſt conſiderable Citizens, 'to expoſtulate and beg, that the Defence of the Town might not be in'ſiſted on, which could only tend to expoſe the Lives of the Citizens.' To which the Provoſt anſwered, 'That his Requeſt could not be granted.'

In returning to the Goldſmiths-Hall, the Provoſt gave Captain Hamilton Orders with reſpect to the City-Guard, 20 of them to remain at the Weſt Port, 20 to go to Briſto Port, 20 to the Netherbow, and 40 of them to remain in the Guard, to move to any Place where they ſhould be moſt needed, which was allowed to be a very proper Diſpoſition.

During all the Way in his Return, the Cries of the People were heard on every Side, 'What, would he have them all murdered, by defending 'the Town after the Dragoons had run away?' And other Words to that Purpoſe.

As ſoon as he was returned to the Hall, where the Committee was met, he ſent Bailie Hamilton, Robert Baillie, and John Ferreſt, for the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, Lord Advocate, and the Sollicitor, to beg they would come and aſſiſt them with their Counſel, ſaying, He chuſed to be determined only by their Advice. They returned, and reported that they had all gone out of Town.

The Provoſt expreſſed great Concern when he found himſelf deſtitute of the Advice he moſt relied upon at ſo critical a Juncture, and then deſired that the Officers of the Army ſhould be ſent for, and the Officers of the Volunteers who were conveened at their Poſts by the ringing of the Alarm-Bell: Moſt of the Captains, and ſome other Officers of the Volunteers came; but no other Military Men were found in Town, except Captain James Murray and Major Cochran. The Lord Provoſt addreſſed himſelf to them, and ſaid, 'That, for his Part, he was willing to en'counter any Danger for the Defence of the Town: He hoped the In'habitants would do their Duty, and hoped the Enemy might be kept 'out until Aſſiſtance ſhould come to their Relief; and aſked Mr. Murray 'what was his Opinion?' Who ſaid, he pitied him, but was at a Loſs what Advice to give: And being farther preſſed by the Provoſt, he anſwered, That if the Volunteers, Trained-Bands, and other armed Men within the Town, were diſpoſed to do their utmoſt, he believed they might make a good Defence; but if they were not diſpoſed to fight, he would adviſe the ſending the Government's Arms to the Caſtle.

The Provoſt ſaid, 'He hoped thoſe Gentlemen who had undertaken 'the Defence of the Town, would not now abandon it when the Danger 'drew near, but remember what Expence the Town had been at, what 'Aſſurance they had given to his Majeſty, and what they had promiſed 'to perform, when the Danger was at a greater Diſtance.' He then aſked all the Captains and Officers of the Volunteers that were preſent, what he could expect from them? One ſaid, he did not find any Diſpoſition in his Men to fight: Another told, That there did not remain fifteen of the Company to which he belonged; but as he had promiſed to riſque his Life in Defence of the Town, he would ſtill do it; though he was ſure not five of the fifteen would follow him: And others of them declined to make any Anſwer at all.

About this Time Walter Groſet came into the Goldſmiths-Hall, and he ſaid he was ſent by the Lord Juſtice-Clerk and Lord Advocate, to deſire the Provoſt would ſend an Order to General Fowkes to bring the Dragoons into Town. To which he anſwered, That he was ſurpriſed at the Meſſage, after what had paſſed the Night before; that he would ſign no Order, as he had no Power over the Dragoons; but if they pleaſed to ſend them in, they ſhould be made very welcome, and we ſhould join them in Defence of the Town.

Mr. Groſet ſaid, That the Lord Advocate and Juſtice-Clerk thought it proper that the Provoſt ſhould ſign the Order. To which he anſwered, That he did not chuſe to make himſelf accountable for the Dragoons, after what he had heard in the Lord Juſtice-Clerk's laſt Night; but thought it more proper that they ſhould ſend their Orders, if they had altered their Way of Thinking about that Matter. Mr. Groſet deſired to have the Provoſt's Anſwer in Writing, with which he readily complied.

About this Time the Fears of the Inhabitants had brought a great Crowd into the Goldſmiths-Hall, and about the Door of it, who all cried out againſt the Madneſs of defending the Town, when all the Officers Civil and Military had left it, which ſhewed they underſtood it could not be defended. The Crowd ſtill increaſing, a Member of the Council propoſed they ſhould go to the New Kirk Iſle, as they were like to be ſmothered in that narrow Place: Upon which the Lord Provoſt left the Hall, and went out to the Parliament-Cloſe, where great Numbers came up to him, remonſtrating, in the ſtrongeſt Terms, againſt attempting any Defence, which could have no other Effect, but to expoſe them to Military Execution.

The Provoſt did all he could to reanimate the People; but when he was talking to them, Mr. Cunningham of Gairdner's Dragoons came up to him on Horſeback, with a Meſſage from Lieutenant-Colonel Whitney, deſiring he would order the Dragoons Baggage to be forthwith ſent out to them, becauſe they were going to Haddington; that they found they had been greatly deceived in the Number of the Rebels; for now they computed them to be near Eight Thouſand. This Account, which was given by Mr. Cunningham in the Hearing of the Crowd, did greatly contribute to increaſe the Terror of the Inhabitants, who were heard crying every where, What a Madneſs it was to pretend to ſtand out againſt ſuch a Number.

The Provoſt expoſtulated with them in the New Kirk Iſle, 'That he 'hoped they would not now abandon the Defence of the Town; that he 'was ready to concur in it to the utmoſt of his Power, and expected the 'Danger would not be ſo great as ſome Men's Fears made it.' But upon this ſuch a Noiſe was raiſed, that nothing could be heard but a general Cry for giving up the Town, not above two or three of the whole Multitude preſent appearing to be of a different Opinion.

About this Time a Letter was thrown in, directed to the Lord Provoſt and Magiſtrates, which was opened by Walter Orrock; and when he told it was ſigned by Charles P. R. the Provoſt ſtopt him, and ſaid, he would not witneſs the reading ſuch a Letter: Upon which many calling out to read, he ſaid he had been too long there, and with Difficulty got to the Door, and returned to the Goldſmiths-Hall, where the Magiſtrates alſo came, and a great Number of the Inhabitants, and immediately they ſent to conveen the Town's Aſſeſſors; but only one of the four was to be found: They aſked his Opinion what was to be done with reſpect to the Letter, and whether it ſhould be read? But he having declined to give any Opinion, and the Inhabitants expreſſing the utmoſt Uneaſineſs both within and without Doors, the Letter was read without any Authority from the Provoſt, and contained a Threatening of their higheſt Reſentment, in caſe any Oppoſition was made to their Entry, or that any of the Cannon or Arms were allowed to be carried off.

After

After this nothing was to be heard but loud Cries againſt a fruitleſs Oppoſition, and againſt Delivery up of the Town's Arms to the Caſtle, which, it was ſaid, would occaſion Deſtruction to the City; and many in the Hall inſiſted that a Deputation ſhould be ſent out, to beg that Hoſtilities might not be commenced againſt the City, until they had Time to deliberate what Anſwer they ſhould return; and, as it was believed the Enemy was at the Gates, the Deputation was immediately hurried away, viz. Bailies Gavin Hamilton, John Yetts, David Inglis, and Conveener Norrie.

The Volunteers in the mean time did, without applying to the Lord Provoſt for Orders or Directions, of their own Accord, take a Reſolution to give up their Arms to the Caſtle, which they forthwith executed, and thereby diſmiſt themſelves from the Service.

One of their principal Officers, whoſe Zeal or Bravery was never at any time called in queſtion, upon his Return from the Caſtle, was met on the Street by a Gentleman, who told him, the Rebels were not near ſo numerous or formidable as they had imagined, and that it would be a Shame to ſurrender the Town to them. But the Officer anſwered, It might be ſo, but it could not now be helped; that Information had come too late.

And, ſome Hours before, another Gentleman of the ſame Corps had ſent a Meſſage to his Wife, begging her not to be under any Fear about him, for the Town was to be given up.

At this Time a Meſſage came from the Caſtle, by Robert Griffith a Gunner, deſiring that the Cannon on the Town-Walls might be nailed up. It was the Opinion of the Committee, that the Provoſt ſhould give no Orders in theſe Matters, after what had paſt; but he told the Meſſenger, that Mr. Gueſt was at Liberty to do what he thought beſt for the Service of the Government, and nothing hindered him to ſpike up the Cannon, if he thought fit: And he was alſo told, that the Town-Officers would ſhew him where the Cannon were, for that Purpoſe.

About the ſame time the Adjutant of the City Regiment wanted to know what ſhould be done with the Arms under his Care; and was told, that it was not thought proper the Provoſt ſhould give Orders thereanent; that the Council was afraid the City might ſuffer from the Cruelty of the Rebels, and even that they themſelves might ſuffer from the Populace, if ſuch Orders were given; but, at the ſame time, that the Soldiers of the new-levied Regiment, poſſeſt of thoſe Arms, ſhould be privately acquainted to return them to the Caſtle; and by this means the whole Arms of the City-Regiment were returned, except thoſe of the Men upon Guard.

But it was not practicable to get the Arms of the Trained-Bands conveyed to the Caſtle in this Manner. Theſe Arms were in poſſeſſion of the ſubſtantial Burgeſſes and Houſholders of the Town, who conſidered them as their own Property, having been bought with their own Money when admitted Burgeſſes: And as moſt of them had not only their Wives and Children, but the greateſt Part of their Subſtance within the Town, they would not conſent to expoſe all that is dear to them to the Rage of an incenſed Enemy, for the ſake of keeping thoſe Arms out of their Hands, eſpecially as they were in themſelves of very little Value, being generally old Guns without Bayonets, bought at Half-a-Crown or three Shillings a-piece, more for Shew than Uſe, as they were never otherways employed than at a Birth-Day Parade.

But, of little Value as they were, the Provoſt was deſirous, if poſſible, they ſhould be ſaved out of the Hands of the Rebels; and as neither he nor the Council were able of themſelves to compel the Inhabitants to part with them, he thought of the only Expedient that could be taken in ſuch a Caſe, which was, to ſend a Meſſage to the Caſtle to inform Mr. Gueſt of the Situation of the Town, and the general Conſternation of the Inhabitants, and to beg that he would ſend a Party down to take up their Arms, as the Council was not at liberty to give Orders, for fear of the Conſequences with regard to the Town. This Meſſage was delivered to General Gueſt, but was not complied with.

From the Goldſmiths-Hall the Committee went to the Council-Houſe, and were alarmed with the Cry, that the Rebels had broke into the Town. This was owing to the Fright of a Party of Dragoons, who guarded their Baggage at the Netherbow Port, and when the Port was opened to let out the Baggage, a great Crowd burſt in, which the Dragoons imagined were the Rebels, and rode off as hard as they could, in great Terror, to the Caſtle.

Upon this Alarm the Commandant put the Provoſt in mind of the Threatning ſent to the Town, that every Man who was found in Arms ſhould be put to death; and aſked the Provoſt what the Trained-Bands ſhould do at the Weigh-Houſe and Weſt Port, when the Rebels had already burſt in at the other End of the Town? The only Anſwer any Man alive could give, in ſuch Circumſtances, was, they ſhould quit their Arms to avoid being maſſacred.

After this Alarm was over, Mr. Groſet arrived with Accounts that Sir John Cope had been ſeen off Dunbar, and, as the Wind was unfavourable for bringing them up the Frith, it was thought he would land that Night at Dunbar, and might ſoon come to their Relief. Upon which Bailie James Mansfield was immediately diſpatched to call back the Deputies, and a Town Officer was alſo ſent to run the ſhorteſt Way and ſtop them; but neither could overtake them.

It being now again reſolved, upon this Proſpect of Relief, to put the Town in a State of Defence, Mr. Groſet, and Mr. Lindſay Secretary at War, went up to the Caſtle along with Provoſt Coutts, and acquainted the General with the good News of Sir John Cope's Arrival, and aſked if he would think it proper to order the Dragoons back for the Defence of the City, and whether he would deliver back the Arms that had been returned to the Caſtle. General Gueſt's Anſwer was, That he did not think it for his Majeſty's Service to order the Dragoons back to Edinburgh, it being more fit they ſhould join Sir John Cope's ſmall Army: That the Gentlemen of the Council might put the Burghers Arms into the beſt Hands; and if, thereafter, the Lord Provoſt ſhould find a Diſpoſition in the Inhabitants to defend the Town, he might let him know: And added, that he would ſend down a Meſſage to the Serjeant that was nailing up the Cannon on the Walls, to ſtop him.

After the Gentlemen had returned from the Caſtle, it was propoſed in Council, by a Captain of the Volunteers, that the Alarm-Bell ſhould be rung: But it was objected by ſome of the Members, that nothing of that Kind ought to be done till the Deputies were returned, leſt the Rebels, who were apprehended to be very near, ſhould thereby be enraged, and make them ſuffer for it. One of the Reverend Miniſters of the City, who had been moſt active and zealous in the Service of the Government, and ſome other well-affected Burgeſſes, agreed in this Opinion; and all of them were poſitive that nothing could be done for Defence of the City, unleſs the Dragoons were brought back: Upon which Mr. Groſet roſe up, and ſaid he would go and endeavour to bring them back; and Provoſt Drummond and he went off upon that Errand, but did not again return.

Mr. Lindſay, the Secretary at War, aſked the Lord Provoſt, if he would ſend an Order to General Gueſt to re-deliver the Arms which had been ſent up to the Caſtle. Had the Provoſt been capable of any Degree of the bad Intention the Purſuer would now ſuppoſe, it was eaſy to comply with this Requeſt, for one-tenth Part of thoſe Arms would have been of more Value to the Rebels, than the whole Arms that were in the Hands of the Burghers: But, as his conſtant Intention was to bring no Arms or Ammunition from the Caſtle, but as there was neceſſary Occaſion for them, leſt they ſhould fall into the Hands of the Rebels, ſo, agreeably to his Intention, he anſwered Mr. Lindſay, 'That, before he gave 'ſuch Orders, he behoved to ſee a better Diſpoſition in the Inhabitants 'to Defend the City.'

For, ſince the Alarm of the Rebels burſting into the Town, moſt of the Inhabitants, dreading the Execution of their Threats againſt ſuch as ſhould be found in Arms, had quitted their Arms and goſe home.

The Gentlemen who had gone to the Rebel Camp returned, and brought their Anſwer, requiring the City to receive their Prince as Prince Regent, and that no Arms or Ammunition ſhould be ſuffered to be carried off or concealed; and demanding an Anſwer againſt Two o'Clock in the Morning, their Camp being then at Gray's Mill, about two Miles diſtant from the City. After receiving this Anſwer, the Gentlemen of the Council, with ſome other Citizens, continued together deliberating what was to be done, till Two o'Clock in the Morning, many of them expecting Relief from the Dragoons, which Provoſt Drummond and Mr. Groſet had been ſent ſome time before to bring back, if poſſible, to their Aſſiſtance.

When the Clock ſtruck Two, and no Relief came, it was propoſed to ſend a ſecond Deputation, in order to gain a further Time, which was unanimouſly agreed to; and Bailie Robert Baillie, Provoſt Coutts, with two or three other Councillors, were ſent off to beg a Delay till nine or ten o'Clock, by reaſon the Burghers were all in Bed, and could not be conveened for ſeveral Hours: At the ſame time they were authorized by the Provoſt to ſay, 'That he would rather die than comply with the 'Condition of receiving their Prince as Regent of Scotland.'

Meſſages were at the ſame time ſent to the principal Inhabitants and Citizens, to come and meet with the Council, and concert what was proper to be done; but few of them had come, when the Deputies returned with an Anſwer much to the ſame Purpoſe with the former; and ſoon after Notice was brought, that a Part of the Rebel Army had ruſhed in at the Netherbow Port, and made themſelves Maſters of the City Guard, who had been ſo harraſſed with the extraordinary Duty all the preceding Week, and by being out under Arms for two Days before along with the Dragoons, that they were hardly fit to do any Duty, far leſs able to oppoſe an Army of Rebels, who were numerous and hardy enough to defeat a regular diſciplined Body of the King's Forces a few Days after.

From the above Narrative, which is in every Particular ſtrictly agreeable to the Fact as it happened, it appears in what manner this City had the Misfortune to fall into the Poſſeſſion of the Rebels, after all poſſible Care taken by the Provoſt, Magiſtrates and Council, to prevent it. Some of them indeed were of Opinion, as well as many other of the wiſeſt and beſt-affected Citizens in the Town, that the Scheme of defending the City, againſt an Attack, was in itſelf impracticable. The old Walls are hardly ſufficient to keep out ſmuggled Goods, but by no means able to endure any Siege or Attack: Beſides, there were ſo many other obvious Ways the Town might be forced to ſurrender, by throwing in Fire, burning the Houſes which adjoin to the Town in ſome Places where there is no Wall, cutting the Water-Pipes, which would ſtarve the Town in a Day, &c. that a great many well-affected Burgeſſes thought the beſt thing could be done for the Service of the Government, was to diſpoſe of any thing that could be of uſe to the Rebels, and leave the Gates of the City open.

But, though this was the Opinion of the Provoſt, as well as many of the Council and moſt ſubſtantial Citizens, yet, when the other Scheme was reſolved, the Provoſt exerted all the Vigilance he was capable of to make it effectual, as appears from the Circumſtances above related. He ſpent his whole Time in the publick Service, from Six o'Clock in the Morning to Twelve at Night, ſometimes till Four next Morning, going about viewing the publick Works, giving Orders, adviſing Expedients, taking and deſiring to have the beſt Advice: And, at laſt, when the Thing came to the Puſh, he was aſhamed to ſee many, who had appeared keen for the Scheme in the Beginning, unwilling to carry it to the laſt Execution; and that, in general, the Inhabitants were ſo terrified by the frightful Notion they had got of the Rebels, that he could find no Concurrence to make an Oppoſition, and keep out the City, not even from thoſe who had firſt taken Arms in its Defence. He expreſſed his Sentiments in as ſtrong a Manner in time of Danger, as the Proſecutors can now declaim at Eaſe, of the Reproach it would be to the City to be ſurrendered without Defence, after all the Preparations that had been made, and the Aſſurances they had given his Majeſty to that Purpoſe; and declared himſelf ready to mount the Walls with the ſmalleſt Number of Men that could ſupport him: But the Terror they were in from the Cruelty of the Rebels, and the little Proſpect they had of making an effectual Defence, without farther Aſſiſtance than they had within the Town, prevailed over his Expoſtulations, and rendered his Deſign abortive, which he was willing to have proſecuted at the Hazard of his Life.

At

At the same Time it is obvious, that the Prosecutors set this Event in a very false Light, when they suppose, 'That the King's Army was 'within a Day's March of the City when it was taken by the Rebels, 'and that it was possible to have kept out the Town 'till the Army had 'come up to its Relief:' For it is a certain undisputed Fact, that General Cope's Army was still on Ship-board when the Rebels took Possession of the City, and very uncertain when they would disembark; and that, after all the Haste they could possibly make to approach the City, they could not get within Six Miles of it sooner than the Friday Evening, near four Days after the City was taken: Even the Pursuers do not maintain that the City could, by any Defence, have been kept out the Half of that Time. In fact, it is certain that it could not have been kept out many Hours. And therefore, take the Case in any View, it is highly unjust to lay the Blame of the bad Consequences, which afterwards followed, upon an Event which appears, in the Nature of Things, to have been unavoidable, as Circumstances then stood, and are admitted on all hands.

It is not properly the Pannel's Business to make an Answer to the Pursuer's Declamation upon the Consequences of this Event, which, were they founded, could not affect him, who did the utmost in his Power to prevent them. But the Exaggerations are too obvious to take with the most credulous. It will never go down with any body, that the Victory obtained by the Rebels at Preston-Pans was owing to the Tents or Furniture they got out of the City three Weeks after it was fought, or to the broken Guns that were dropt by the Burghers, when it is notorious that greater Numbers of the Rebels came armed to Edinburgh than were engaged in that Action. None of the Broad-swords, which were the Instruments of the Mischief done on that Day, were found in Edinburgh. Every one who considers the Matter coolly, will own that the Case must have been the same, had they met with Sir John Cope's Army the Day before they came to Edinburgh, as three Days after it. All depended on the Conduct and Behaviour of the two Armies, and this City behoved in course to fall to the Victor.

Were Conjectures of this Nature to be indulged, it would be more just to impute the taking of this City to General Cope's not having guarded the Passes on the Forth, or fought the Rebels when they were in the North in much smaller Numbers; by either of which their Progress would have been stopt from coming Southwards. But, to suppose that a Town, which, without any Siege, could be laid in Ashes by any Enemy from without in a few Hours, should be able to put a Stop to the Progress of a Rebellion, which was strong enough to stand a pitched Battle against the whole Forces in this Part of the united Kingdom, and defeat them, is a Stretch of Imagination too wild to be listened to even by the Vulgar, far less to be insisted on before any Court.

It was however the Misfortune of the Pannel, after all his Pains, Labour and Diligence, and the Hazards he was ready to undergo, to be attacked by Suspicions, as if he had failed in his Duty. To this several different Causes contributed, which frequently arise on such Occasions. In extraordinary Emergents of this Kind, Zeal in some, and Fear in others, never miss to set various Passions a-working. A third Source occurred, not so blameless as either of the other two. When the Accounts first came of a Rebellion stirring in the Northern Parts, the Approach of the annual Elections, and Steps thereto preparative, was what chiefly employed the Thoughts of the Inhabitants of this Town. The Danger then was distant, and it was hoped would approach no nearer: But it was a good Opportunity for such as looked with an envious Eye upon the present Magistracy, as having been too long in Possession of the good Opinion of the People, to undermine them, by working upon the Fears and Credulity of others. Surmises and Jealousies are easily spread when People are under Terror: And, by proposing contrary Schemes, they had a good Chance, either to bring the Magistrates into Disrepute with the People, if they opposed them; or to load them with the Blame, if, when they yielded, the Execution of them should, as in all Probability it would, in the Event, prove impracticable.

By such Attempts of the interested and designing, it can hardly fail that many of the honest and well-meaning will be led away, when their Fears and Jealousies are so strongly raised as to get the better of their Reason: And this was much increased by Reports artificially spread with the same View thro' the News-Papers in different Parts of the Kingdom, of Facts now notoriously known to be false, but which were easy to gain Belief at a Time when Men's Minds were in a Ferment, jealous of the Conduct of one another, and ready to catch at every remotest Suspicion.

Under these undeservedly unlucky Circumstances, the Pannel, conscious of his Innocence, set out for London to attend his Duty in Parliament; and, as soon as he came there, wrote to one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State to acquaint him of his Arrival, and that, as he understood many scandalous Reports had been spread to his Disadvantage, he was ready to wait on his Lordship, or any of his Majesty's Ministers, to give them Satisfaction with respect to his Conduct.

Two Days after, he was taken into Custody at his own House, and carried to a Messenger's House, where he remained for some Time: After that he underwent an Examination before the Cabinet Council, which lasted for several Hours, in which he gave full and particular Answers to every Question that was asked him, and strictly agreeable to the true State of the Fact as above set forth; but the malicious Reports of his Enemies had gained so much Ground, that he was after this sent to the Tower, and kept a close Prisoner for three Months. Thereafter, as the Credit of these Slanders, supported by no Evidence, began to abate, his Confinement was relaxed; but still continued 'till the 23d of January 1747, when he was admitted to Bail before one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, upon a Recognizance to the Extent of fifteen thousand Pounds Sterling, to appear before his Majesty's Court of Justiciary at Edinburgh, at the first Sitting of the said Court after the 20th Day of March then next.

During his long Confinement he made many Applications, expressing his Willingness to meet his Trial; and, as soon as he was liberated and came down to Scotland, he applied to the High Court of Justiciary at their first Meeting after the 20th of March; and now, at the Distance of above a Year and a Half from his first Confinement, he has been at last served with a Libel at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate; and, upon the 13th instant, Counsel on both Sides were heard before the Court upon the Relevancy of the Libel, and the Court has been pleased to order Informations to be given in.

The Counsel for the Pannel, in Answer to this Libel, after setting forth the several Steps of the Pannel's Conduct, and his Care, Diligence and Activity in the Discharge of his Office, as above represented, did, in the first Place, observe, That although a Prosecution of this Kind against a Magistrate, not for any criminal Fact alledged to be committed, but for supposed Neglects, Mistakes, or Errors in the Execution of his Office, is pretty new and extraordinary, and, it is believed, will hardly meet with any Precedent before a Court of Justice; yet the Pannel would not decline the Jurisdiction of the Court in any Trial that can be brought; he is sure his Conduct will stand the strictest Test of Inquiry; and therefore was willing chearfully to submit the Case to the Judgment of the Court.

At the same Time it was observed, That, after all the Pains that had been taken to find Fault with the Pannel, and to lay upon him the Load of the Misfortunes which befel the City of Edinburgh during the late Rebellion; yet it is very remarkable, that now, when the Libel appears, drawn out with the greatest Art and Skill for that Purpose, it does not contain any one Fact that is in itself criminal: And even the Omissions, charged upon the Pannel, are such as are either merely trifling, or at least of a very ambiguous Nature, and such as his Conduct would have been equally liable to be misconstructed in, had he followed the opposite Course, or done the Reverse of what he is charged with in the Libel.

That, if such are supposed to be relevant Grounds of Accusation against a Magistrate, his Situation must be very singularly unhappy, especially when Times of Danger and Difficulty occur: The Office he cannot decline to accept of, he can as little decline to act; he cannot stop, but must determine himself one Way or other; and, after he has honestly determined, and acted to the best of his Judgment, if he is liable, upon the Event's turning out unsuccessful, to be tried as a Criminal why he did not take a different Course, it is impossible for any Man, who has the Misfortune to be placed in such Circumstances, let him take what Course he will, to avoid Punishment: And this is the more applicable to the present Case that,

2*do*, This Libel does not charge the Pannel with any Disaffection to his Majesty, or our present happy Establishment, far less does it offer to prove any Fact that can infer it; nor is it alledged that any of the Articles charged in the Libel happened ex proposito, or ex malo animo. The natural Presumption therefore lies for Innocence, when the Facts are such as can admit of that Construction. In this Case the Presumption is confirmed from the whole Tenor of the Pannel's Conduct in his past Life, as well as from his Situation in the World. As he is a Gentleman of a pretty considerable Property in this Country, and who deals in Trade to a very large Extent, it cannot be supposed he would wish to see Confusions arise in his Country, or the Laws to be put to Silence by lawless Force. That such Disorders must in every Event affect him deeply, by ruining his Debitors, and hurting his Interest in many different Respects; and therefore, unless he were supposed to be destitute of common Sense, there can lie no Probability that he would wilfully do any thing that should tend to increase such Disorders, highly mischievous to himself, as well as to his Country.

And, 3*tio*, It was in general observed, That, in the present Case, the Pannel had not the sole Direction of any one of the Articles referred to in the Libel: That, as Lord Provost of this City, he was only the Head of a numerous Body of Magistrates and Town-Council, and behoved to act by their Direction. That, by his Majesty's Sign-Manual, the Direction of the City-Regiment was also expressly given to the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh; that accordingly the Town-Council did forthwith take the Direction into their Hands; and named a Committee, which was to meet twice a-Day, to consider and order what was proper to be done for the Safety of the City and Support of the Government; and though the Provost was named Colonel of the Regiment, yet, by his Nomination, he was limited to conduct and direct them in such Manner as the Council should think proper.

That the Pannel did accordingly act in every Particular by the Direction and Concurrence of the Council, and the Committee by them named; that no Instance can be given where he opposed their Resolutions and Orders, or followed his own Will or Judgment in Opposition to theirs; and in such Circumstances it seems impossible to assign a Reason why a Charge of Guilt should be fixed upon the Pannel, when the Council, by whose Direction he acted, are admitted to be innocent, and to have all along behaved dutifully to his Majesty and his Government.

And, more particularly, with respect to the several Articles of the Libel, it was insisted, That, neither separately nor jointly, can they amount to the Charge of a Crime against the Pannel.

The first Article begins with setting forth, 'That he did nothing of 'his own Accord towards providing for Defence of the City.' But it is evident this, if true, could be no Point of Dittay. Had the Pannel been of Opinion that it was not expedient for the Service of the Government to attempt a Defence of the City, which was the Opinion of many well-affected Councillors and Citizens; or if he had been of the contrary Opinion, but every thing he could suggest for its Defence should happen to be proposed by some other Member of the Council or Committee; in either of these Cases the Proposition here alledged might have been true, and yet the Pannel intirely blameless. At the same time, that nothing can be more contrary to Truth, evidently appears from Numbers of Instances in the above Narrative, where the Pannel, of his own Motion and Accord, suggested and executed many Expedients of great Importance, towards providing effectually for the Safety of the Town.

And as to the second Branch of this Article, 'That the Pannel stirred 'affected Doubts concerning the Legality of the Proposition for raising 'the City-Regiment,' which Doubts the Pursuer, in his Information, endeavours to remove, by observing, 'That the Act 1661, upon which 'they were founded, is repealed by the Act 7*mo Annæ*, which provides, 'That nothing thereafter shall be High Treason in Scotland, but what 'is such by the Law of England:'

It is answered, That the Doubt upon this Point is not singly founded upon the Statute 1661, but upon the Common Law, by which the Power of of Arms is one of the King's undoubted Prerogatives, and the incroaching upon it has been declared highly criminal, by Statutes anterior to the 1661, particularly by the Act 75th, Parl. 1563, which forbids any Perſon of whatſoever Quality, Eſtate, Condition or Degree, to raiſe Men in Arms without ſpecial Licence, in Writ had from the Crown, under the Pain of Death. This Act has never been repealed by any ſubſequent Law, either expreſly or by Implication; and it makes no Exception of Magiſtrates of Burghs, but extends to all Subjects of whatever Condition or Degree, nor of raiſing Men upon Pretence of the King's Service. It is well known no ſuch Exception was intended to be implied, either in this Statute, or the after Laws made in the Reign of Charles II; for the Diſturbances which happened in thoſe Times, and which theſe Laws were intended to prevent, were frequently occaſioned by raiſing Men upon ſuch Pretences.

But it is unneceſſary for the Pannel to enlarge on this Argument. Were a Doubt, in any Caſe, to be conſtructed as a Crime, for which, it is believed, no Precedent can be alledged, the Pannel muſt be fully juſtified in this Caſe, by the Authority already mentioned, of the honourable Judges and his Majeſty's Counſel, learned in the Law, who agreed in Opinion, that the levying this Regiment without his Majeſty's expreſs Warrant would be illegal.

And it is ſtill as extraordinary, that it ſhould be made a Point of Dittay in the ſecond Article, That Objections were made to the Legality of the Aſſociation of the Volunteers: They were aſſociated in Arms for the preciſe ſame Purpoſes for which the Regiment was to be raiſed, viz. for the Defence of the City and Support of the Government: And the Counſel for the Pannel muſt confeſs, they cannot obſerve any ſolid Diſtinction that ſhould make the one legal when the other is illegal and blameable: And therefore it is ſomewhat ſurpriſing it ſhould be laid as a Crime againſt the Pannel, that he did not at firſt View diſcover ſuch Diſtinction, eſpecially as he acquieſced inſtantly in the Opinion he got upon that Point, and, without the Delay of a Moment, proceeded to authorize the Volunteers to go on in their Aſſociation.

This ſhews that the Pannel had no Reluctancy or Averſion to this Meaſure, as the Libel would ſuppoſe. He took the very firſt Opportunity to inform himſelf of the Legality of it, and chearfully followed the Information he got. Had he demurred a little more, upon a Diſtinction by no means obvious, he could not have been liable to Blame, far leſs to Puniſhment. And it is unneceſſary to enlarge upon the reſt of this Article, which the Purſuer, in his Information, does not inſiſt upon, as indeed it is apparently too trifling to enter into a criminal Libel.

As to the third Article, concerning the Repair of the City-Walls, it has already appeared, from the Record of the Council, that the Direction of theſe Repairs was intruſted to a Committee under Bailie Robert Baillie; that they were often enjoined, from Time to Time, to carry on the Works with the utmoſt Diſpatch; that the Provoſt frequently viſited the Works; and, whenever it appeared there was any Want of Workmen, he always granted new Warrants to impreſs them. The Ditch at Wallace's Tower, which Mr. Mac Laurin complains, that, after being carried on right for ſome time, was, by Miſtake or bad Advice, caſt on the wrong Side of the Dyke, was owing to a Direction given by Bailie Gavin Hamilton, who altered the Orders given by Mr. Baillie the Overſeer, and, by Miſtake, cauſed caſt the Ditch upon the wrong Side of the Dyke: And the other Delay he complains, in not beginning the Communication he propoſed betwixt the Wall of the Town and the high Houſe without the Potter-Row Port, in due time, was owing to an Objection made to the Propoſal, that ſuch Communication might very probably afford an Opportunity to the Rebels to enter the Town; upon which Mr. Mac Laurin himſelf, at that time, agreed it was fit to drop it. And as to all the other Works, even by Mr. Mac Laurin's Account, which the Purſuer refers to in his Information, it appears they were carried on in due Time; for he admits they were almoſt finiſhed on Monday Afternoon, when they were told of the Meeting of the Inhabitants in the New Church.

And as to the Complaint of the Neglect in providing Gunners, and giving Orders to load the Cannon, the Lords have already been informed of the Pannel's Diligence, in conveening Men to aſſiſt at mounting them on the Walls, and ſending every where to provide Gunners, and ordering Matches in due Time to light them. They were loaded when the Rebels were at ſix Miles Diſtance from the Town, which was rather too early, as it is well known that Cannon do not ſerve ſo well after they have been long loaded.

But then, what Relevancy is there in all this, ſuppoſing the Facts true as laid in the Libel? Is it poſſible to plead that the Provoſt ſhould be anſwerable for the Execution of Works, which, by the Council, appear to have been committed to another Committee under a proper Overſeer? Or will it be laid as a Charge againſt him, that he did not think the Sailors proper Perſons to be employed as Gunners, if other Gunners could be had elſewhere? Or that he did not give Orders to load the Cannon on Sunday Morning, when it is allowed they were loaded that Evening, and too ſoon for any Uſe that could poſſibly be made of them againſt the Rebels?

The ſalutary Propoſition which the fourth Article charges the Provoſt with rejecting, will appear to every one, who coolly conſiders it, a moſt pernicious one. To make Diſtinctions among the Inhabitants, from Surmiſes their Enemies might throw out againſt them without any Ground, when their Minds are heated and divided into Factions, might contribute to ſet them by the Ears together, but never to unite or ſtrengthen their Hands in the Defence of the City, or Service of the Government. The Purſuer's Information ſays, that the Anſwer given to this Propoſal was, that the Town's Arms ſhould be put into the Hands of the moſt ſubſtantial Burghers. This Anſwer, if given, was ſolid and judicious: Men of Subſtance and Property are the fitteſt to be intruſted with the Defence of the Laws, on which the Preſervation of their Properties depends: And it is truly ſurpriſing that the Libel, upon this Article, ſhould prefer to this a Scheme of arming a Number of Tradeſmen's Servants, who were to be allured to come into this Service by the Bait of a Guinea to be given to each of them; which is ſtated as another ſalutary Propoſal offered to the Provoſt at this Time. Such Propoſals could only proceed from wrong-headed or ſiniſter Views. Had the Provoſt intruſted the City-Arms to ſuch low People, whoſe Principles could not be known; and denied them to the moſt ſubſtantial Burghers, whoſe Intereſt was principally concerned in Defence of the Town, he might juſtly have been charged with the Blame of the Conſequences: And therefore it is hardly neceſſary to obſerve, that, were there any Colour of Relevancy in this Article, it could not affect the Pannel, as it is not pretended that the Propoſers ever laid it before the Council, who were the proper Judges; and their not doing ſo is real Evidence that they were ſatisfied of the Unfitneſs of the Scheme, from the Objections that obviouſly occurred againſt it.

The fifth Article charges the Pannel with a cold Reception given to Sir Robert Dickſon, and a Propoſal made to him, that his Volunteers ſhould inliſt in the Edinburgh Regiment. The firſt is a very extraordinary Article in a criminal Libel, and the Pannel believes will be found not to be true. The other ſhews, the great Anxiety of the Purſuer to find fault with the Pannel, let him hold what Conduct he will. Had he neglected theſe Volunteers, and refuſed them Meat or Pay, he might juſtly have been found liable to Blame; but that cannot be ſaid: He took care to provide them with Victuals as ſoon as they arrived; and the Handle taken to charge him is, that he alſo offered them Pay. It is not ſaid that he inſiſted any ſhould inliſt that did not incline, or that he refuſed to accept the Services of ſuch as were diſpoſed to aſſiſt the Town without Pay: But, that Pay ſhould at all be propoſed to theſe Volunteers, or inliſting in the City Regiment, though it was raiſed for the very ſame Purpoſe they profeſſed to come for, viz. the Defence of the City, and were to be diſmiſſed as ſoon as that End was attained; this is the Charge: And it is ſubmitted, whether there was the leaſt Colour to make this an Article in a criminal Accuſation.

The Fact as to Andrew Alves's Meſſage has been already explained. The receiving it could be no Crime in the Pannel: He could not avoid it, unleſs he had ſhut his Ears before he knew what Mr. Alves was to tell him; and the Meaſure he took upon it was in conſequence of the Advice of Gentlemen of the Council, who thought it the moſt prudent Way to take no Notice of any thing that might diſpirit the Inhabitants at that Juncture. The Ground of the Accuſation is, That he did not immediately commit Mr. Alves: And if he had immediately committed him, which was the likelieſt Way to ſpread the Meſſage through the Town, he might with better Reaſon have been accuſed, that he had done it of purpoſe to intimidate the Inhabitants: So this Article, like moſt others in this Libel, turns ſtronger when it is inverted. If ſuch Accuſations are allowed againſt a Magiſtrate, he is in a bad Situation: For act he muſt; and whether he take the one Courſe or the other, he is ſure to be brought to the Bar as a Criminal.

The ſeventh and eighth Articles charge the Pannel with receiving a Petition from the Inhabitants, keeping a Meeting with them, and hearing a Letter read from the Pretender's Son. The receiving the Petition was unavoidable, unleſs he had ſhut himſelf up in a Cloſet, and then he might have been juſtly blamed for keeping out of the Way in Time of public Danger. As little could the calling of a Meeting of the Inhabitants, at ſuch a Juncture, have been faulty or blameable: But it has been already obſerved, he called no Meeting; but the Inhabitants, under Terror of the approaching Danger, preſſed in upon him wherever he went, and would have their Complaints and Remonſtrances heard, and the Pretender's Son's Letter read, after the Pannel had oppoſed it, and left their Company to avoid hearing it.

The Part the Provoſt acted at this Meeting, and the Pains he took to animate the Inhabitants to concur in Defence of the City, has been already ſtated, and, as it is notoriouſly known, muſt juſtify him in the Eyes of all Mankind againſt the Aſperſions now endeavoured to be thrown upon him: But then, taking the Articles as ſtated in the Libel, there is no ſort of Relevancy in them; neither the holding a Meeting of the Inhabitants, nor the ſuffering a Letter to be read from the Rebels, nor the ſending a Deputation to them, were they ſuppoſed the Acts of this Pannel, can be ſaid to be criminal in ſuch a Caſe. When Rebels are at the Gates, and have the Lives and Properties of the Inhabitants in their Power, the great Law of Neceſſity, which, in the Nature of Things, muſt make an Exception from every human Law, legitimates any Intercourſe that is neceſſary to ſave the Inhabitants from the threatened Deſtruction.

It is unneceſſary to enlarge upon this Argument; it is evident, not only from the Reaſon of the Thing, but the Hiſtories of all Countries in which Rebellions have ever been raiſed: It was never before pretended to be a Crime in the Subjects of any Country to treat with Rebels when their Lives were in their Power. The Laws forbidding Intercourſe with Rebels, can, from the Nature of the Thing, apply only to voluntary Intercourſe, and not to ſuch as is forced by invincible Neceſſity, when Subjects are deprived of the Protection of the Government, and not able to defend themſelves againſt a ſuperior lawleſs Force. Nay, in this very Rebellion, has it ever been conſidered as a Crime, in Gentlemen who were even in the immediate Service of his Majeſty, to treat with Rebels, or enter into Paroles or Engagements with them, when their Lives were in their Power? Has it been found criminal in Governors of Forts, which were built and intended for bearing Sieges, as the Town of Edinburgh never was, to enter into Capitulations with Rebels when they found it neceſſary? Was the Mayor of Carliſle tried as a Criminal for entering into an expreſs Capitulation with the Rebels, to ſurrender a City that is properly fortified, and might be preſumed to make a good Defence, or for making an expreſs Agreement to deliver up the Arms and Ammunition? Or was he tried for going, after the Surrender, as Mayor of the City, with the Sword and Mace before him, to attend the Proclamation of the Pretender? The Intercourſe this Mayor had with the Rebels was evidently of a much deeper Nature than any that is pretended to have been had by the Provoſt of Edinburgh: But yet ſo extenſive has been the Influence of the Miſrepreſentations of his Enemies, that he has for a Year and a Half ſuffered, and is now brought to Trial as a Criminal, while the other paſſes without Blame.

The other Circumſtance charged in this Article, with reſpect to the Pannel's refuſing to order the Dragoons to come into Town, has been fully explained explained in ſtating the Fact, and it would be improper to trouble the Court with repeating it. He was deſirous of the Aſſiſtance of the Dragoons, had ſigned an Application for them alongſt with the Lord Advocate, had brought in Proviſions to Town for ſuſtaining their Horſes: He told the very Meſſenger referred to in this Article, that the Dragoons would be made extremely welcome, and that all the Force he had would be ready to join with them in Defence of the Town: He ordered the Conſtables to mount the Walls, to obſerve their Approach, that the Gates might be forthwith opened to admit them. And, after all this, will it be charged as a Crime upon him, that he ſcrupled to ſign an Order to Troops, over which he had no Power, ſingly by himſelf, which, after what had paſt, he could take in no other Light, but as intended to make him anſwerable for the Conſequences that might attend this Meaſure; and when he had been told the Night before, by Gentlemen of undoubted Skill and Loyalty to his Majeſty, that the Conſequence would probably be to ſhut up the Dragoons, and oblige them to ſurrender Priſoners to the Rebels?

Great Reaſon has the Pannel to be thankful that he did not fall into the Snare the Purſuer here complains of him for avoiding, which might have turned out much heavier than all the Articles muſtered together in this Libel, and ſix times as many more. Had the Dragoons been brought in upon his Order, and taken Priſoners, as the Gentlemen of the Military foretold, there would have been another Kind of Colour to argue, than from any Thing that has been yet ſuggeſted, that the Pannel had given Occaſion to the unlucky Defeat at Preſton, by ſhutting up the Dragoons, and depriving the other Troops of their Aſſiſtance, by which they might have been enabled to get the better of the Rebels.

Unhappy then muſt be the Situation of every Magiſtrate, if he is to be judged after this Meaſure. It is doubtful and difficult what Courſe ought to be taken. People of Skill are divided upon it. If the Magiſtrate take either one or the other Side, by this Way of proceeding his Fate muſt depend upon the Succeſs: Nay, if he ſhall be yet more cautious, and decline to determine either, but leave it to others of more Skill and Judgment in theſe Matters, as the Pannel did in the preſent Caſe, ready to acquieſce and concur in whatever they ſhould determine, yet it ſeems he cannot avoid to be held as a Criminal: He had before given his Conſent to the bringing in thoſe Dragoons, and was at all Times ready to admit them, if it was thought proper to bring them; and yet he muſt be accuſed, becauſe he did not ſign an Order, ſubjecting himſelf to the Conſequences of a Meaſure which was judged, by People of the beſt Skill, to be dangerous and improper.

The ninth Article of this criminal Libel, charging the Pannel with neglecting to give Orders to the Volunteers, when they had been long ſtanding under Arms, has been already explained in point of Fact: That, without applying for Orders, they thought fit to determine themſelves to give up their Arms, and throw up the Service; which is a full Evidence of their Judgment, that the Defence of the City was an impracticable Meaſure; and an Evidence of ſo much the greater Weight, as neither their Zeal in the Undertaking, nor their Courage in going through with it, had it been found practicable, can at all be called in queſtion.

But, next, as to the Relevancy, were the Fact ſuppoſed to be true, the Anſwer is too plain almoſt to be ſtated. The Volunteers, and not the Pannel, were to blame, in that they either took or executed ſuch Reſolution without Orders from the Council. If they had applied to the Pannel for Orders, as the Libel alledges, it was no Wonder, in the Situation Things then were, that they did not get an immediate Return. The Lords have obſerved in what Situation the Provoſt and Council were at that Time, ſurrounded by the Inhabitants, who were alarmed with terrible Accounts of the Rebels, and frightful Threatenings of which they dreaded the immediate Execution; the Provoſt endeavouring to animate and ſtir them up to the Defence of the Town, by all the Arguments he could uſe; the Inhabitants declining to hearken to any Defence; and new Accounts coming every Moment, which made it uncertain what Reſolution to take. In ſuch Circumſtances it ought to have been no Surprize to the Volunteers, if they had been kept waiting Orders for a conſiderable Time; it was their Duty to have continued at their Alarm-Poſts, till Orders were ſent. And it cannot be laid as a Load upon the Provoſt or Council, that the Volunteers thought fit to take a contrary Courſe, and give up their Arms, without waiting the Reſolutions of the Council.

The tenth Article conſiſts of three Branches. The firſt is, The Refuſal of Orders to ſpike up the Cannon. As to which the Fact has been already fully ſtated, and it is obvious there is no Relevancy in it, when it was equally eaſy for the General to cauſe nail them without any Orders from the Provoſt or Council. And it is not pretended that any Perſon he ſent was oppoſed in the Execution of it, but, on the contrary, the Town-Officers were ordered to ſhew them where the Cannon were, and the Serjeant had actually begun to nail them, until he was ſtopt by a Meſſage from the General, after he had got the Account of Sir John Cope's Arrival, as has been already obſerved.

The ſecond is, 'The Orders alledged to have been given to Captain 'Dalziel to keep Guard on the 16th September, with One-third of the 'City-Guard, the uſual Complement in peaceable Times.' But neither is there any Relevancy in this, when your Lordſhips conſider the Circumſtances at the Time, as confeſſed on both Sides. The Volunteers had given up their Arms to the Caſtle, ſo had the Men who had been levied in the City-Regiment. No Proſpect of Defence of the Town, unleſs ſome Aſſiſtance ſhould come from without. In ſuch Circumſtances, it is a very odd Complaint, why was not this whole Company of 126 Men kept on Foot to fight the Army of the Rebels, which conſiſted of ſome Thouſands? It is plain the whole or a third was all the ſame in ſuch a Situation: And therefore it is unneceſſary to add, that the Guard had been ſo fatigued with the ſevere Duty they had undergone for ſome Days before, that the whole of them could not have been able to do Duty that Night, whatever Orders they had received.

The laſt Branch of this Article is, 'That the Pannel gave Orders to 'the Trained-Bands, who had been upon Guard at the ſeveral Gates of 'the City, to quit their Poſts, and diſpoſe of their Arms in ſuch Places 'where they muſt be expoſed to fall into the Hands of the Rebels.' This Article is too ambiguouſly laid to be admitted in a criminal Libel: The Crime is to be inferred from the Places where the Arms were to be left, and yet thoſe Places are not condeſcended on. This is directly inconſiſtent with the Nature of all criminal Procedure, which requires that the Libel be laid clear and unambiguous, ſo as the Pannel may know every Circumſtance of the Fact he is called to anſwer, and be prepared either to exculpate himſelf, or elide it by a contrary Proof.

But, 2dly, It is not conceivable what the Libel can mean, by ſpeaking of Places where Arms would be expoſed to fall into the Hands of the Rebels when they ſhould become Maſters of the City. It is evident, in that Caſe, in whatever Place of the City Arms were laid, they muſt be alike liable to fall into their Hands; an Order, under Pain of military Execution, would in a few Hours bring in all the Arms that were in any Town they became Maſters of, in whoſe-ever Poſſeſſion they were: And therefore the Libel, as to this Article, is not ſo conceived as to receive any diſtinct Meaning, or to admit of a proper Anſwer.

The eleventh Article ſets forth, 'That it was propoſed and urged in 'Council, that the whole City-Arms ſhould be lodged and ſecured with-'in the Caſtle of Edinburgh, in order to prevent their falling into the 'Hands of the Rebels; but the Pannel refuſed or declined to give any 'Order for that Purpoſe; neither in Fact were the City-Arms ſo lodged 'and ſecured, but were ſeized by the Rebels upon their entering the City 'the Day following.'

But this Propoſal, ſaid to have been made in Council with reſpect to the Arms, is intirely new; and it is ſomewhat ſtrange it ſhould be ſo, if truly made, as theſe Matters have been ſo much the Subject of Converſation for almoſt two Years paſt; nor can the Pannel recal any ſuch Propoſal to his Remembrance.

The true State of the Fact, with reſpect to the Burghers Arms, has been already laid before the Court: That the Provoſt did all that was in his Power to keep thoſe Arms, though of very little Value, out of the Hands of the Rebels: That he ſent a Meſſage to the Generals in the Caſtle, to ſend a Party to take them out of the Hands of the Inhabitants, as the Council could not, for the Reaſons already mentioned, compel them to deliver them up to the Caſtle: And it will alſo be proved, if any Proof is to be brought in this Caſe, that when the Provoſt was giving Directions to the Trained-Bands, he told them, that if the Rebels approached to the Place, he hoped they would do their Duty, and behave like Men in Defence of the City; and if the Rebels ſhould prevail, he expected that, at any Rate, they would take care to ſecrete their Arms, that they might not fall into their Hands.

But, abſtracting from theſe Facts, the Pannel is adviſed, that there is no Relevancy in this Article of the Libel: For, firſt, It is ſaid, That the Propoſal was made in the Town-Council, and it is not alledged, or pretended, that the Council approved of the Propoſal, or authorized the Pannel to grant the Order; and, if they did not, it was the Council, and not the Pannel, who declined to concur in this Meaſure; eſpecially as the Pannel had truly no Right to diſpoſe of the Arms, or to ſend them off without the Liberties of the Town, without Authority of the Council. It is a very new Ground of Accuſation againſt the Preſes of a Meeting, that, when a Propoſal was made to the Meeting, and either rejected, or not approved of by them, he was guilty of a Crime, becauſe he did not over-rule the Reſolutions of the Meeting, of which he was but one Member, and act beyond or contrary to the Directions they thought fit to give him in a Matter over which he had no Power to controul them: It is believed it will be difficult to find any Inſtance, where an Omiſſion of this Nature has been made the Foundation of a criminal Charge.

But, in the next place, when the Circumſtances of the Caſe are conſidered, which are notorious to all the World, and confirmed by the Production made by the Purſuer in this Caſe, every Mortal muſt ſee why the Council could not grant or authorize ſuch Orders as is here mentioned, had it at that Time been ſuggeſted or propoſed. Repeated Threatenings had been ſent from the Rebels to the Town, by Writings which the Purſuer has produced, and given out with the Libel; a like threatening verbal Meſſage was ſent by Mr. Alves, all tending to the ſame Import, That, if the Town ſhould ſend off the Arms or Ammunition in their Poſſeſſion, they ſhould be treated in the ſevereſt Manner, and ſuffer all kind of military Execution. The Inhabitants had no Means to defend themſelves from the Execution of theſe Threats: And was it to be expected, that, when the Rebels were at the Gates, and the Dagger in Effect at their Throats, they would expoſe themſelves to it for the ſake of preſerving Arms of whatever Conſequence, much leſs ſo inſignificant as theſe Burgher-Arms are known to have been in this Caſe?

It is eaſy for People at Eaſe and in Security to talk of ſuch Diſtreſſes without much Concern; but let them put themſelves in the Caſe of thoſe they are to judge of, and then ſay, whether it is agreeable to the Nature of Mankind, to expoſe themſelves, and all that is near and dear to them in the World, to ſuch Sufferings, upon any Conſideration whatſoever; whether it is to be expected of them, and whether they ought to be puniſhed for not having done it.

We are not now to judge of the Terror of the Rebels from what they afterwards did, but from the Impreſſions People were then under of the Diſtreſſes they might ſuffer from them: It is well known never Enemy was received with greater Dread, or painted out in ſtronger Colours of Cruelty and Barbarity: From the News-Papers, from the Pulpits, from all the beſt Accounts, nothing was to be expected from them but what was fierce, ſavage, and inhuman. Theſe Things had their good Effects, and perhaps were ſometimes a little exaggerated from well-meaning Motives: They tended to create in Men's Minds a great Abhorrence to the Rebels and their Cauſe; but then, at the ſame time, they raiſed an immenſe Terror, ſuch as ſtruck every City in the Nation, to which they approached, with the utmoſt Panick and Conſternation.

The black Friday is not yet out of Remembrance, and the Impreſſion the Approach of the Rebels then made, when they were removed from the greateſt City in the Iſland, at the Diſtance of of more Days March than they were of Hours or Quarters from this Town, at the Period now in Queſtion. Let it be ſuppoſed, that the Rebel Army had been marching down from Highgate-Hill, or had been at Weſt-Smithfield, and had ſent in ſuch threatening Meſſages to the Lord Mayor; if he had no Army at Hand to defend the City, and had found no Diſpoſition in the Inhabitants to defend it, would he have adventured to deſpiſe the Threatening, or to ſend up the Citizens Arms to the Tower, by which their Lives and Properties muſt be expoſed to the lawleſs Fury and Barbarity of the Rebels? Or would he have been brought to the Bar as a Criminal, becauſe he had been careful of the Blood of the Inhabitants, (an Expreſſion that is laid againſt the Pannel in the preſent Caſe) and becauſe he had not expoſed their Subſtance to Plunder, and themſelves and their Families to Maſſacre?

The Diſproportion is indeed great betwixt the Inſtance put, and that which is the Subject of the preſent Queſtion; but both muſt be governed by the ſame Rules. Every Man's Life and his All is equally dear to him; and it does not depend upon the Greatneſs or Smallneſs of a City, whether it is lawful for the Governors to expoſe it to the Hazard of being deſtroyed, but upon the Circumſtances it is under at the Time, and the Proſpect of Relief from the impending Danger, of which there was none in the preſent Caſe.

And, with great Submiſſion, where is the Foundation of the Doctrine now pled for the Purſuer, in the Law, or in the Cuſtom of any known Country in the World? When was it heard of, that, upon a Town or a Fort being obliged to ſurrender, whether to Enemies or to Rebels, the Garriſon or the Inhabitants were bound to expoſe themſelves to the utmoſt Reſentment of the Enemy, for the ſake of keeping their Arms out of their Hands? Has it at any Time been brought as a Charge againſt the Governor of a Place, that he gave up the Arms to the Enemy, when he could not keep out the Place? Were not Arms and Ammunition given up at Carliſle, and at every other Fort that has been delivered up to the Rebels, either in this or any other Rebellion? And is there any Inſtance where that has before been made an Article of Accuſation?

It is no Anſwer, That, where there is no ſeparate Caſtle or Citadel, or where that is given up at the ſame Time with the Town, the Arms muſt fall in conſequence, as there is no Place in which they can be preſerved: For the Pannel is not charged here for the Loſs of the Arms, but for this, that they fell into the Hands of the Rebels. And it is well known it is in every Man's Power to break his Gun, and make it uſeleſs to the Enemy, whether he has a Caſtle to carry it to or not: And therefore, were there any Pretence for the Charge brought in this Caſe, it muſt equally affect the Commanders of Carliſle, and every Fort that has at any Time been given up to Rebels, why they did not at all Hazards deſtroy their Arms, that they might be of no Uſe to the Rebels. But, if ſuch an Objection was never heard of till this Libel appeared, it is a Demonſtration that the Libel in this Article is without Foundation.

And therefore it is the leſs neceſſary to obſerve, that, in the preſent Caſe, had it been the Duty of the Magiſtrates or Council, to order the Burghers Arms up to the Caſtle, let the Conſequence be what it would to the Inhabitants, it is obvious it was not in their Power to make their Orders effectual. What Force had they to compel the Inhabitants to a Scheme ſo deſtructive to themſelves? The Volunteers had already diſarmed themſelves, and ſo could be of no Uſe for that Purpoſe; the City Regiment had alſo given up their Arms to the Caſtle; the Trained-Bands were the Burgeſſes themſelves, who had their Wives, their Families, and moſt of them the Bulk of their Properties in Town, which they were quite averſe to expoſe to Deſtruction by ſuch a Meaſure: And the only Force the Magiſtrates had to compel them, was the Company of the Town-Guard, who, if they had been diſpoſed to obey at ſuch a Juncture, could very ſoon have been tied Neck and Heel by one hundredth Part of the Inhabitants.

And, 3dly, It is proper to conſider, in this Caſe, the Uncertainty of the Situation to which the Magiſtrates and Council were reduced, during the laſt and moſt diſtreſſing Scene of this unlucky Affair; ſometimes terrified with the immediate Approach of the Rebels, at other Times encouraged with ſome Proſpect of Relief. Even towards the End of this Period, there were ſome Hopes of the Return of the Dragoons; Mr. Drummond and Mr. Groſet had gone in queſt of them: Nor was that Expectation quite over in the Meeting of the Council, until they heard the Rebels had entered the Town. Had the Dragoons returned to the City, and animated the People in its Defence, the Charge againſt the Pannel then would have been inverted, Why did he ſend up the Arms to the Caſtle? Why did he carry them out of the Way when they might be inſtantly wanted for Defence of the Town? And the near Approach of the Rebels made a Moment's Delay of great Conſequence; and the Citation might have been adduced, which is miſapplied in the preſent Caſe, Quòd punctò ſæpe temporis maximarum rerum occaſiones amittuntur.

Such was the unlucky Situation of the Governors of this City at that Time, that it would appear, by what has ſince happened, it was impoſſible they could eſcape Accuſation; the Event muſt make them criminal, however well-intentioned their Conduct might be: But their Anſwer is good, That no Law, no Cuſtom, requires the Inhabitants of any Place to expoſe their Lives, the Honour of their Wives and Daughters, and all that they have dear to them in the World, to the Fury of an incenſed Enemy, in order to keep Arms out of their Poſſeſſion. The Law of Humanity forbids it. That, in this Caſe, had the Magiſtrates been ſo minded, it was not in their Power to compel the Inhabitants to comply with it: Beſides, that the vacillant and uncertain State in which Matters then ſtood, made it very doubtful whether it was proper to have done it or not; and, in doubtful Caſes, it is againſt common Juſtice to accuſe or puniſh, becauſe of the after Event.

Theſe Anſwers would have been good to the Magiſtrates and Council, had they been brought to the Bar to anſwer for rejecting ſuch Propoſal as the Libel here ſuppoſes: They are all equally competent to the Provoſt, with this additional one, That he is only one Member of their Body, and cannot be accountable for omitting what the Council did not think proper to enjoin him, had they ever ſo much erred in their Judgment.

It would have ſounded very oddly in the Ears of the World, if the Generals in the Caſtle had been brought under Proſecution, becauſe they ſent to forbid the nailing of the Cannon, or becauſe they did not ſend a Party to ſeize the Burghers Arms upon the Meſſage already mentioned: It is believed the whole Nation would have been amazed at ſuch a Proſecution. And yet, with great Submiſſion, there is a Difference betwixt that and the preſent Caſe: The Generals run no Riſque by ſending Parties to execute any thing of that Nature within the Town, as little did their Parties, or the Garriſon under their Charge: But the Danger to the Inhabitants, who were committed to the Care of the Magiſtrates, was but too apparent, as well as too imminent, to be deſpiſed by any Sett of Men, who were as deſtitute of Defence and Relief as they were at that Time.

And the Pannel will be forgiven to ſay, that, if the whole Series of his Conduct, from the Beginning to the End of theſe Tranſactions, ſhall be conſidered, there will appear as little Reaſon to ſuſpect him of any bad Intention in this Caſe, as any other Subject within the Kingdom. The Court has already obſerved, that the Pannel, of his own Accord, ordered all the Ammunition that was in the Town's Magazine to be carried to the Caſtle ſome Days before the Rebels approached, and that he cauſed execute this Order ſo punctually, that it was neceſſary afterwards to ſend to the Caſtle for what was wanted for the Service of the Town. It has alſo appeared how averſe he was to bring Arms down from the Caſtle, when the Rebels were on their Approach to the City, unleſs he had the higheſt Probability that they were to be uſed in a proper Manner; and that accordingly he refuſed the Offer made by the Secretary at War, on the Part of the General, to ſend back the Arms which had been returned by the Volunteers and City Regiments, for this Reaſon, That he did not ſee a good Diſpoſition in the Inhabitants at the Time, to defend the City; and therefore was afraid the Arms, if ſent, might poſſibly fall into the Rebels Hands. How unjuſt then would it be, after ſuch Evidence of the Pannel's ſincere and upright Diſpoſition in this Matter, to ſuſpect him of a bad Intention, becauſe he did not enforce an Order upon his Fellow-Citizens, which, if obeyed, might have involved them in Miſery and Ruin, and which it was not in his Power to compel them to obey, and which is ſtated by his Accuſers as propoſed to the Council, to which he was ſubject, and is not alledged to have been by them approved or authorized?

The laſt Article of this Libel is full as extraordinary as any of the reſt, viz. 'That, by Occaſion of the ſeveral Inſtances of Miſbehaviour 'above recited, it came to be very notoriouſly known, that he was highly 'faulty and negligent in the Execution of his Office, and to be farther 'violently ſuſpected and believed, amongſt the faithful Subjects in that 'City, that he was ſecretly in the Intereſt of the Pretender, by reaſon of 'the Uniformity of his Behaviour, diſcovering a conſtant Unwillingneſs 'or Backwardneſs to provide for, or heartily proſecute the Meaſures that 'were in a Manner forced upon him, in order to the Defence of that 'City; at a Time when, if he had obſerved a contrary Conduct, there 'was at leaſt a high Probability that the City might have been preſerved 'from falling into the Hands of the Rebels.'

But it is hardly neceſſary to make any additional Anſwer to this Article, after what has been already obſerved. It is hoped it is apparent to the Court, that none of the Inſtances recited in this Libel, were they true, as moſt of them are not, could infer any Degree of Miſbehaviour againſt the Pannel: That his Conduct, from the Beginning to the End of theſe Tranſactions, has been uniform in the faithful Execution of his Duty: And that, from firſt to laſt, he never ſhewed any Unwillingneſs or Backwardneſs to concur in any Meaſure that could tend to the Service of the Government, but contributed more to foreward ſuch Meaſures, of his own free Motive and Accord, than can be pretended to have been done by any who may be pleaſed to entertain Suſpicions of him, or by all of them put together.

It cannot however eſcape Obſervation, that it is an unuſual Article in a criminal Libel, that a Pannel is violently ſuſpected by others to have been guilty. The Suſpicion of others can never infer Guilt, nor Evidence of Guilt, againſt any Man whatever, though the ſiniſter Views, which gave riſe to thoſe affected Suſpicions, had not been ſo apparent as they are in the preſent Caſe.

And, with Submiſſion, it is no good Anſwer that is made to this in the Purſuer's Information, That altho' they ſhould have carried their Suſpicion too far, in believing the Pannel to have been in the ſecret Intereſt of the Pretender; 'yet ſtill their entertaining ſuch Apprehenſion 'or Belief, is one Demonſtration, ſuppoſing that they had carried their 'Concluſion too far, that his Conduct was not ſuch as became a faith-'ful, vigilant, and zealous Magiſtrate on that Occaſion:' For an Apprehenſion founded upon Suſpicions, at firſt raiſed from indirect Views; and thereafter artfully propagated, and more eaſily ſpread thro' the Ferment of Men's Minds, during the Times of Diſtraction, can never be either Demonſtration or Evidence of any thing, other than the bad Origin from which they at firſt proceeded. Nor is it fair to lay any Streſs upon them at all, when it appears they have been carried the Length of falſe and injurious Concluſions; the ſame Diſpoſition which has been violent enough to carry them that Length, is to be preſumed at firſt to have given Riſe to them. The Pannel's Conduct ſpeaks for itſelf, and ſtands vouched by notorious Facts, which, independent of the Suſpicions either of the Wicked or of the Credulous, demonſtrate him to have acted a faithful Part in the Execution of his Office, vigilant and zealous for the Safety of the Town, and careful of the Welfare of its Inhabitants, of whom he had the Overſight in thoſe unlucky Times.

And it is truly ſurpriſing it ſhould be alledged, 'That if the Pannel had 'obſerved a contrary Conduct, there was high Probability that the City 'might have been preſerved from falling into the Hands of the Rebels, or 'that it fell into their Hands in a very ſtrange and ſuſpicious Manner, on 'the Morning of the 17th September 1745;' when it is as plain as Sunſhine, from the Facts already ſet forth, and which are notoriouſly known to be true, that, without the Interpoſition of a Miracle, it was impoſſible, as Circumſtances then ſtood, that this Town could miſs to fall into the Hands of the Rebels upon the 17th September 1745: It is notorious, that the Dragoons, and all the Military Force, had then left the Town; that the Volunteers, before that Time, had thought fit to give up their Arms to the Caſtle; that the Edinburgh Regiment, which was then hardly One-third full, and the Men only raiſed a few Days before, had alſo given up their Arms; that that the Burghers, or Trained-Bands, declined to go up and expose their Lives in keeping out the Walls, when the Military had wholly deserted them; and they had understood, by repeated Threatenings from the Rebels, that any Man that appeared in Arms would be put to death. The Court has already heard the Pains which was taken by the Pannel to animate all these different Setts of Men in the Defence of the City, and the Success: And when such was the Case, where was there any Probability that the Town could stand out against an Army of Half the Number of the Rebels? or where is there any thing strange or suspicious in the Rebels becoming Masters of the Town, when it was thus deserted? Was the Pannel to go up, with as many of the Company of the Town Guard as were able to stand, after the Fatigues they had undergone for two Days before, and make head against this Body of Rebels? Or, if he had attempted it, would the Inhabitants have permitted the Town to have been stormed and sacked, which behoved, in such a Case, to happen in less than an Hour? It seems evident, that, in such a Concurrence of Circumstances, nothing could save the Town from being taken, unless it had pleased Providence to strike the Rebels with such Dismay and Terror, as many were then unluckily struck with, whose Duty it was to have opposed them.

The Pursuer is pleased to ask, 'Why did the Pannel advise with the 'Inhabitants? Why did he give way to a general Meeting in the Church? 'Why did he not order them to keep within Doors? Why did he not 'advise with his Fellow-Magistrates and Councillors, or with the chief 'Officers of the Volunteers, and deliberate with them upon the supposed 'Change of Circumstances? And if, in such Council, it had been de'bated and resolved, by Plurality of Voices, to be impracticable or inex'pedient to persist any longer in the Measure of defending the City, that 'Resolution might have justified or acquitted him; but that nothing of 'this Kind is alledged, and thereby he has taken the whole upon himself.'

But, with great Submission, it is a little surprising these Questions should be asked, after the Notoriety of the Facts already stated. It is certain Fact, nor is the contrary alledged in the Libel, that the Pannel acted in this whole Matter in Concurrence with his Fellow-Magistrates and Councillors. It cannot be said, that, from the Beginning to the End of this Affair, he ever opposed or over-ruled them in any one Article. The Officers of the Volunteers were also consulted with, and your Lordships have heard what Accounts they gave the Pannel of the Disposition of their Men with respect to the Defence of the Town; and that, in consequence of this Disposition, their Arms were all given up soon after. The Pannel ordered the Inhabitants to keep within Doors, and caused the Drum to go round for that Purpose: But what Force had he to compel them? Numbers of Instances are to be found in History, where considerable Garrisons have been forced by the Inhabitants to surrender a Town: And here it is made a Ground of Accusation against the Pannel, that he was not able to over-awe the Inhabitants of this populous City, when he had no other Assistance, either to defend the Town, or to keep them in awe, but such as had been taken a few Days before from among themselves, and who were all equally impressed with the same Terror of the Rebels, and Belief of the Impracticability of making an effectual Defence.

It is apparent the Pannel did all that any Man could do in the like Situation: He tried to animate the People, sent for the civil Officers of the Crown for Advice, and, when he found they had withdrawn, which, whatever Gloss the Pursuer may think fit to put upon it, is an Evidence of their Judgment that the Town could not be defended, he sent for the best Advice and Assistance he could get, and never parted with the Gentlemen of the Council, nor in any thing controuled their Advice, until the End of the Transactions now in question: And therefore, according even to the Doctrine laid down by the Pursuer, his Conduct falls to be justified; for it cannot be thought material, that there are no Minutes of the Town-Council or Committee remarked in the Record after the 13th or 14th of September. The two following Days were too much crowded with the many various and important Transactions above set forth, which succeeded one another every Moment, to take down Minutes regularly in Writing: But still it is sufficient for the Pannel to say, that it neither is nor can be pretended, that in any one Particular he controuled or overruled the Opinion of the Committee or the Council.

In order to give a greater Colour to the Charge against the Pannel in this Case, the Pursuer endeavours to represent the Office he was possessed of in this City, as superior and independent of the rest of the Magistrates and Town-Council: That he is the High-Sheriff, Colonel of the Trained-Bands, City Guard, &c. and, in a word, that the whole Government and Defence of the Town was solely devolved upon him. From which it is inferred, that he must be answerable for all Miscarriages, as if there had been no other Magistrate or Authority in the Town but what was lodged in himself.

But the Pannel is at a loss to discover upon what Authority the Pursuer builds this absolute Power he thinks fit to vest in the Lord Provost of this City; for it does not seem to have any Foundation, either in the ancient Laws, or in the late Regulations laid down by his present Majesty with respect to the Defence of the Town. By the Common Law, as well as the Statutes relative to these Matters, the whole Magistrates are considered to have an equal Concern in the Government of the Burgh. So says the Statute, Ja. IV. Parl. 6. cap. 87. and Ja. VI. Parl. 18. cap. 17. which 'forbids all Persons, of whatsoever Rank, to convocate or assemble 'themselves without due Intimation to the Provost or Bailies of the 'Burgh, and their License obtained thereto: and ordains the Inhabitants 'of the Boroughs to assist and concur with the Magistrates and Officiars 'for settling the said Tumults and Turbulencies, and punishing the 'Authors thereof.' And, as far as the Pannel knows, the other Magistrates have a joint Right to concur with the Provost in every thing relating to the Government of the Borough.

It is of no Moment to the present Question, that the Provost is in use to sit on Trials as High-Sheriff; for it is not alledged that he acted any thing in that Capacity in the Matters now called in question before the Court.

It is true, that, by the Act of Parliament establishing the Company of the City-Guard, the Provost is appointed Captain of it; and he is also the Commander of the City Trained-Bands, as being the first Magistrate in the Town: But still, in these Commands, he has no absolute Power, but is subject to the Directions of the Council.

And so it was also regulated by the Sign-Manual granted by his Majesty, in September 1745, authorizing to levy this Regiment for the Defence of the City. It is appointed to be under the Direction of the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh; and the Magistrates and Council did accordingly take the Direction of it into their Hands; and though they paid the Compliment to the Provost, to name him Colonel of the Regiment, yet it was in their Power to turn him out, and name another, when they thought fit; and the Nomination bears, That he was to conduct and direct the Regiment, and the Officers who should be named to command under him, as the Council should think proper; and therefore, in this military Capacity, he acted under the Direction of the Town-Council, from whom his Authority proceeded. It is humbly submitted to the Court, how far it is at all congruous to single him out in a Trial of this Kind, when it neither is nor can be alledged, that at any time he ever varied from or opposed that Direction.

In the Information on the other Side it is observed, 'That Notice was 'taken by the Pannel's Counsel, that he was possessed of a very large 'Property, consisting of a Stock of Wines, at Leith, but that it did not 'appear whether they intended to mention it as an Argument to evince 'the Pannel's Sincerity in desiring to keep the Rebels at a Distance, or as 'an Excuse for his not opposing them with Vigour and Zeal, lest he might 'be hurt in that Part of his Property.' And upon this some Insinuations are thrown out that might have been spared.

But it was not easy to misapprehend the Meaning of the Pannel's Counsel, in the Mention they made of the large Property he was possessed of in this Country, which was no ways particularly referred to the Wines at Leith, which makes but a very small Part of it, but principally to his personal Estate, and Debts due to him, to a great Extent, by many Gentlemen in the Country, which could not fail to suffer considerably by such a Convulsion as must happen when a Rebellion arises in a Country. This was overly mentioned by the Pannel's Counsel, as a Circumstance that made it improbable, that any Gentleman of Common Sense, in this Situation, would deserve the Censure thrown out in the Libel, of secretly abetting such Disorders; but the Pannel's Counsel gave no Handle for drawing the other Inference here insinuated, which is so injurious to the Pannel's Conduct, and so disagreeable to his Character. His Conduct stands in no need of such Excuses; it will stand the Test: He has not shewn, by any thing that has ever past in this Affair, that he put an Over-value either upon his Life or his Property, when his Duty came in Competition. The Wines were of little Moment in respect of the other Risques he behoved to undergo upon such general Distress of his Country; and it is unjust to insinuate any Suspicion of such low Motive, when it is apparent he has given no Occasion for it from any Part of his Conduct, however strictly and rigorously examined.

The Pursuer is pleased to argue, 'That the Facts here charged, if done 'dolose animo, would have amounted to High-Treason; and therefore it 'is a great Lenity that the Pannel is only pursued for Misbehaviour; and 'Citations are brought from Sir Matthew Hale, to prove that the deliver'ing up the King's Castles to his Enemies, through Treachery, Bribery, '&c. is High-Treason; and from Herodius, to prove that Negligence in 'publick Officers may be severely punished.'

But the Pannel has little Occasion to trouble the Court with enlarging upon these Authorities, because he cannot discover they have the least Connection with the present Case: he has no Occasion to dispute, that the delivering up the King's Forts to Enemies or Rebels is High-Treason; or that wilful Faults and Neglects in publick Officers may be punished: But it is, nevertheless, equally true, that when a Fort is taken by a superior Force, which could not be resisted, there is no Crime at all in the Case: Nay, in the very Page quoted in the Pursuer's Information from Sir Matthew Hale, Vol. I. p. 168, it is laid down as a Rule, That if a Subject should swear Fealty to the King's Enemies, if it is done for fear of his Life, and he returns as soon as he can to his Allegiance, he is not punishable. It is incumbent on the Pursuer to reconcile with this Authority that Part of the Charge which is so much insisted on in this Case, and to shew how the same Law that excuses a direct Adherence to the King's Enemies, when compelled by fear of Death, can punish the leaving Arms to fall into their Hands, when compelled by the same Terror; or can punish an Omission to give an Order to abstract them in such Circumstances, which is the Charge laid in this Libel.

The Pannel shall not dispute, that it is a Lenity to prosecute for a lower Crime, when a higher is incurred; but he must be forgiven to think That does by no means apply to his Case, and that the Hardships he has suffered are of a pretty singular Nature: That, after having lived so long in the World with an irreproachable Character, and served his Country in Parliament with an intire Reputation, remote from every sinister View, and thereby deserved the Esteem of his Constituents, as a Mark of which they conferred on him the Office of chief Magistrate of this City: That, because he had the Misfortune to see his Country involved in publick Confusions before the End of his Administration, and the City irresistibly overpowered by lawless Force, after all the Precautions he had taken to prevent it, the Malice of his Enemies should have so far prevailed against him, as to bring him under a Suspicion of Guilt, and subject him to the heavy Sufferings he has already undergone: And now, when after the strictest Scrutiny and Inquisition into his Conduct for above twenty Months past, the Charge appears fully drawn out, the Bulk of it consists of supposed Omissions, or Errors in point of Conduct, which, if the contrary Steps had been taken, might have been equally found fault with, as the Event turned out; and the two Articles upon which the chief Stress is laid, when the Circumstances of the Case are considered, do truly resolve into no more but that he was not able to keep out the Town when all Assistance had deserted him, nor to prevail with the Inhabitants to secrete their Arms, when they were under the immediate Terror of their Lives. These Things he hopes will not be imputed to him as a Crime, but that he will be relieved from all farther Hardships by your Lordships Justice, in dismissing the Libel as irrelevant, and assoilying him from this Prosecution.

In respect whereof, &c.

ARCHIBALD STEWART of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provost of the said City, Pannel, Indicted and accused as in the former Sederunt.

The Lords, after arguing upon the Libel and Informations, pronounced the following Interlocutor: 'The Lords Justice-General, and Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the criminal Libel pursued at the Instance of William Grant of Prestongrange, Esq. his Majesty's Advocate, for his Majesty's Interest, against Archibald Stewart, of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provost of the said City, Pannel, with the foregoing Debate thereupon, they find it relevant to infer the Pains of Law, that the Pannel, at the Time and Place libelled, being then Lord Provost of the City of Edinburgh, wilfully neglected to pursue, or wilfully opposed or obstructed, when proposed by others, such Measures as were proper or necessary for the Defence of the City against the Rebels, in the Instances libelled, or so much of them as do amount to such wilful Neglect; and find it relevant, as aforesaid, separatim, That the Firelocks and Bayonets belonging to the City, or the Cannon mounted on the City-Walls, fell into the Hands of the Rebels through the wilful Neglect of the said Pannel; or that he refused or declined to take proper Measures, when required or demanded, which were in his Power, for securing or rendering useless to the Rebels the said Arms: And find relevant, as aforesaid, all such Acts charged upon the Pannel by the Libel, which shall appear to have been unnecessarily done by him, and which did manifestly tend to the preventing or weakening the Defence of the City, or the facilitating the Rebels getting Possession thereof, or their seizing the Arms therein. But allow the Pannel to prove all Facts and Circumstances alledged in his Defence for eliding or alleviating the Crimes charged upon him as above found relevant: And remit the Pannel, with the Libel as found relevant, to the Knowledge of an Assize.' Signed, ARGYLL, I. P. D.

Thereafter a Bill was presented to the said Lords for William Grant of Prestongrange, Esquire, his Majesty's Advocate, humbly shewing, That where he brought a criminal Libel, at his Instance, before their Lordships, against Archibald Stewart, Esq. late Lord Provost of Edinburgh, for the Crimes of Neglect of Duty and Misbehaviour in Office, as more fully enumerate and mentioned in the criminal Libel raised, and now depending at his Instance against him thereanent, that the first Diet for the Provost's Compearance being some time ago elapsed, and standing by Adjournment fixed from former Diets to this Day; and Walter Grosset, Collector of the Customs at Alloa, a material Witness in this Cause, and though given out in the List of Witnesses, along with others, to the said Archibald Stewart, being not then returned from London to Scotland, tho' daily expected, was not cited, and consequently no Execution given in against him to the Clerk of Court, whereby the Complainer would be prejudged for want of his Evidence, unless their Lordships provided a Remedy: That the Fact was, Mr. Grosset was out of the Kingdom, at least in England, and did not return to Scotland till the seventh of July last, when the Warrant in the criminal Letters for summoning Witnesses was useless, by the Elapse of the Day to which they were thereby directed to be cited, which was the third Day of the said Month of July; and as the said Archibald Stewart could qualify no Loss by allowing Mr. Grosset yet to be cited, and that, in the Prosecutor's Apprehension, it was no ways disagreeable, either to Law or Practice, to give a farther Warrant for citing the said Walter Grosset to any short Day they pleased to appoint: Therefore praying their Lordships for Letters of Diligence for summoning the said Mr. Walter Grosset, as a Witness in the said Cause, in common Form.

Which Bill being publicly read in Court, Mr. Alexander Lockhart, as Counsel for the Pannel, represented, That he had no Power from the Pannel himself to oppose this Bill, yet, as it was new and unprecedented, and might prove of dangerous Consequence in after Trials, if such a Practice was introduced in this Court, he therefore objected, that this Bill could not now pass, in regard that, by the constant and uniform Practice of this Court, all criminal Letters, with the Executions against the Party, Witnesses and Assizers, are lodged in the Hands of the Clerks of Court forty-eight Hours at least before the Trial, that the Pannel may have an Opportunity to see the same, and not only to object against the Formality thereof, but likewise to prepare himself to prove such Objections as he may have against the Witnesses that appear to be cited: That, if this Practice were allowed, it might be in the Power of a Prosecutor to protract a Process for ever; he might give a List of ten thousand Witnesses, and only return Executions against ten of these, and every now and then drop in a Bill, and tell the Lords such a Witness is a material Witness, and therefore must be cited; and, even in the midst of a Proof, supposing a relevant Objection sustained against a Witness, upon account of an Informality in the Execution, a Prosecutor has nothing to do, but to stop short, and tell the Lords this was a material Witness, and he must have a Diligence for citing him of new; and it was submitted to their Lordships, whether they would grant such an extraordinary Demand; and as little it was hoped they would comply with the present, which was altogether new and without Precedent, and might prove of such dangerous Consequence in general.

The Lord Advocate answered, That though the Diligence now sought was new, yet it was no ways unreasonable or unjust; if the Desire of it was granted, he was willing the Pannel be indulged with a convenient Time for preparing himself to prove, or bring any Objections he might have against this Witness; that of two Remedies the easiest was to be chosen: For, as Mr. Groset was a very material Witness, either he must be cited in this Way, or, if the Lords should not judge that proper, the Prosecutors would desert this Diet, and raise a new Prosecution, which would protract the Time; and therefore, as the Pannel could be no ways prejudged by this Demand, he hoped their Lordships would pass the Bill.

'The Lords Justice-General and Commissioners of Justiciary having 'heard this Bill, as also Parties and their Procurators hinc inde for and 'against granting the Desire thereof, as above, they refuse the Bill.'
Signed, ARGYLL, I. P. D.

His Majesty's Advocate, in respect the Lords have, of this Date, judged it not competent to give Warrant of new for citing Walter Groset, Collector of the Customs at Alloa, though he had been in the List given to the Pannel, Mr. Stewart, but omitted to be cited for the Reasons mentioned in the Bill given in for a new Diligence for that Effect, does not insist against the Pannel Archibald Stewart, pro loco & tempore, reserving Power afterwards to insist against him as accords.
Signed, WILLIAM GRANT.

'The Lords Justice-General and Commissioners of Justiciary, in respect his Majesty's Advocate does not insist against the said Archibald Stewart, they desert the Diet against him, and dismiss him from the Bar, reserving to his Majesty's Advocate to insist against him afterwards, as he shall see Cause.'
Signed, ARGYLL, I. P. D.

Thereafter Mr. Gilbert Elliot, Advocate, protested, that the said Archibald Stewart had fulfilled his Bond of Recognizance, by compearing from Time to Time at the several Diets of Court, and not departing this Court without Leave thereof, the Diet being now deserted, and he dismist from the Bar, that therefore the said Bond was voided; and thereupon took Instruments in the Hands of the Clerk of Court.

ARCHIBALD STEWART of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provost of the said City, Pannel,

Indicted and accused at the Instance of William Grant of Prestongrange, Esq. his Majesty's Advocate, for his Majesty's Interest, for the Crimes of Neglect of Duty, and Misbehaviour in Offices and Places of publick Trust, and the Violation of the Trust and Duty of such Offices, in Manner at length mentioned in the criminal Letters raised against him thereanent.

N. B. The Libel here mentioned, is the same with the former Libel, p. 11. of the first Trial.

The Libel being openly read, Mr. Archibald Stewart, Pannel, craved, That before he should be obliged to plead Guilty or Not Guilty to the Libel, he might be heard by his Counsel, whether or not he was obliged to answer to this second Libel at all?

Mr. Lockhart for the Pannel then insisted, That now, after a former Libel had been raised, the Cause debated, Informations given in, the Relevancy determined, and an Exculpatory Proof allowed to the Pannel, there could not, according to the Forms of the Court, any new Libel be raised: That any Processes of this kind, that have been deserted, and of new prosecuted, have been always considered as a Grievance upon the Subject: And by an Act of Parliament, James VI. Parl. 6. cap. 78. after repeating the many Grievances occasioned to the Subjects in the Execution of criminal Libels, and deserting of Diets when such Libels are executed, the Act directs, 'That, for the future, all Prosecutors shall find 'Caution to report their Letters duly execute, and insist in the Pursuit 'thereof, until the final End and Decision of the same, under the Penalty in the Act mentioned.' That however, in former Cases, the Crown-Lawyers have deserted Diets before pronouncing any Relevancy; yet there could not be an Instance shewn, where, after a Relevancy was determined, the Diet had been deserted; and if that were the Case, it might be in the Power of any King's Advocate, from a private Grudge, to raise a Process against a Subject, desert the Diet, raise a new Process, and so on ad infinitum; which would be equal to a Forfeiture upon the Party accused: That the Pannel did not of himself intend to make this Objection, but was advised to do so by his Lawyers; he being always unwilling to form any Objection that might in the least conduce to put off his Trial. At the same Time it was observed by his Lawyers, that it might prove of dangerous Consequence to the Lieges in general, were such a Precedent allowed of; and thereof, at the same Time that the Judgment of the Court was demanded upon this Question, represented, That he was willing to wave the Objection, provided the Pannel was reimbursed of his Expences in the former Trial, to shew their Lordships that the Pannel wanted nothing more than to have his Cause tried, and himself vindicate, by a full Trial.

The Lord Advocate answered, That the Counsel for the Pannel had mentioned no Law whereupon to found their Objection; that the Practice of the Court has been, Time out of Mind, to desert Diets, and allow of new Prosecutions; that there was no Difference of deserting a Diet before or after the Relevancy was determined. If indeed the Pannel had tholed * an Assize, then he might have had Ground to object against a Trial, and to complain that it was oppressive. That the deserting the Diet formerly, was owing to the Pannel himself, who took Hold of a trivial Objection, against citing a Witness when the first Diet of Compearance was elapsed. And both this Point, and the Costs acclaimed by the Pannel, were submitted to their Lordships. At the same time, he declined entering into any Contract with the Pannel upon that Head, but depended wholly upon their Lordships Determination.

* An old Scots Law-term, signifying a Party's having stood Trial, till the Jurors did inclose, or return their Verdict.

'The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary having considered the foregoing Debate, find the Pannel, Archibald Stewart, must still answer, and plead Guilty or Not Guilty to the present Libel, notwithstanding of the Objection moved for him thereagainst, arising from what is alledged of the deserting the Diet in the former Libel, after pronouncing Interlocutor on the Relevancy thereof.' Signed

ALEX. FRASER, I. P. D.

Thereafter Mr. Stewart and the Lord Advocate both represented, That as the Defences, and Answers thereto, were fully pled, and contained in the Informations upon the former Libel, and were the same they had now to offer to the present, they agree to refer themselves to the said Informations, without giving the Court or themselves any further Trouble.

Then the Court pronounced the same Interlocutor on the Relevancy, as that pronounced the 6th August last on the first Libel; and thereafter continued the Diet till next Day at Eight o'Clock in the Morning; and ordained Parties, Witnesses, and Assizers, then to attend, each under the Pains of Law.

Then the Lord Advocate adduced the following Witneſſes for proving the Libel againſt the Pannel.

I. George Drummond, Eſq; preſent Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh, ſolemnly ſworn, purged of Malice and partial Counſel*, examined and interrogate, depones, That, upon Sunday the 8th of September 1745, he was ſent by the then Lord Advocate to Provoſt Stewart the Pannel, to acquaint him, That his Majeſty's Sign-manual was come down for raiſing the Edinburgh Regiment of a thouſand Men; and, upon that Occaſion, he ſpoke to the Pannel about the Burghers aſſociating themſelves as Volunteers: but the Pannel doubted of the Legality of ſuch an Aſſociation, and deſired to have the Lord Advocate and Solicitor's Opinion thereupon; which was afterwards procured: But who procured it, or brought it to the Pannel, the Deponent knows not; but remembers, that he had a Converſation with the Pannel upon the Subject of that Opinion, after it came to his Hand: And at that Time the Pannel excepted to it, in regard the Opinion did not expreſsly mention, that it was not treaſonable; upon which an Addition to the former Opinion was obtained from the Advocate and Solicitor, bearing that the Aſſociation was not treaſonable: And which Opinion and Addition being ſhewn to the Deponent, depones, That they are the ſame which he has above deponed upon. Depones, That after it was reſolved to accept of the Volunteers, the Volunteers agreed among themſelves to have a Paragraph inſert in the News-papers; and which Paragraph was accordingly by them drawn up, and bore, That, upon the Receipt of his Majeſty's Sign-manual, authoriſing the Provoſt and Magiſtrates to raiſe a thouſand Men, and the inliſting the Volunteers, upon the King's Lawyers giving it as their Opinion, that this laſt might be warrantably done, the Provoſt chearfully ſet about it: And the Deponent was ſent from that Meeting, to ſhew this Paper to the Lord Provoſt; and he ordered the Deponent to ſtrike out the Words, chearfully ſet about it, and, in place thereof, inſert, acquieſced in it: And it was accordingly ſo put in the News-papers. Depones, That, the Night preceding the Meeting in the New Church Iſle, being the 9th September, the Pannel came to a Tavern where the Deponent and ſeveral other Volunteers were; and, after they had told him what they had been doing that Day, and what Succeſs they had in carrying forward the Subſcription, in order to aſſociate the Volunteers together, it was told the Pannel, that they had judged it proper to put on a Badge, or wear a Cockade, as a Mark of Diſtinction of their Loyalty to his Majeſty's Government: But this Propoſal the Pannel heard with a Sneer; and told them, he wiſhed they might not expoſe themſelves to the Ridicule of others: To which one of the Volunteers, who was the Deponent, made Anſwer, When we put on that Badge, we'll take Care no Man ſhall dare to inſult us, be his Character what it will. Depones, That upon September 10, at a Meeting of the Volunteers in the New Church Iſle, the Pannel came there, and a pretty large Liſt was given him by the Volunteers, out of whom they deſired to have their Officers named; and that, next Day, the Pannel delivered back the Liſt, he having named ſix Captains out of it; and deſired the Volunteers to name their own Subalterns: That, at the Meeting in the New Church Iſle, the Pannel, by ſeveral Expreſſions, ſignified his Approbation and Satisfaction with the Zeal which the Volunteers then ſhewed; but, at the ſame Time, and upon other Occaſions alſo, during that Week, ſeveral Things paſt, which denoted a Coldneſs in the Pannel as to the Meaſures which were then carrying forward. And, being interrogate by the Pannel, depones, He does not remember where it was, or who were in Company with the Pannel and him when that Converſation paſt betwixt them, concerning the Crown-Lawyers ſigned Opinion; but thinks it was on the Morning of Sunday the 8th. As to the third Article, depones, That the Deponent had ſeveral Converſations with the other Volunteers concerning the City-walls; which was occaſioned by Mr. Maclaurin's Remonſtrances to them, that the Work was not carried on faſt enough, he being employed by the Town-Council in directing the putting theſe Walls in a Poſture of Defence: That the Deponent went ſeveral Times, and viewed the Works as they were carrying on; and, in his Opinion, they were carried on in a ſlovenly and careleſs Manner, there being few Hands employed: And he remembers, that Mr. Joſeph Williamſon Advocate, was ſent by the Volunteers to the Provoſt and Magiſtrates, as he thinks, with a Remonſtrance, and to deſire that ſome Things might be forwarded, as contained in a Note relative to theſe Works; whereof Mr. Williamſon reported that ſeverals were granted, and at the ſame Time told the Provoſt's Treatment of him was a little rough. Depones, That, upon Sunday Night, the 15th September, the Pannel, Capt. James Murray, General Receiver of the Cuſtoms, and the Deponent, being together in Mrs. Clarke's, Vintner, Mr. Maclaurin came to get Orders from the Provoſt to load the Cannon, in order to try them: That Mr. Maclaurin waited ſome Time, the Pannel being then in a good deal of Hurry; but when he was going out, he told Mr. Maclaurin, That Mr. Drummond the Deponent would give him the proper Orders. As to Article fourth, depones, That it was ſeveral Times talked of to the Pannel in the Deponent's Hearing, to lay aſide the Trained-Bands; and for theſe two Reaſons; firſt, That ſeveral of the Trained-Bands were believed to be diſaffected; and, next, It was not convenient for the Volunteers to do double Duty, both in the Trained-Bands, and in their own Companies: That the Pannel diſapproved of this Propoſal, becauſe the Trained-Bands were the old Companies of the Town; and beſides, he thought it was imprudent to put a Mark of Diſtinction betwixt the different Inhabitants: That the Deponent remembers, that the Trained Bands of the City were laid aſide in the Year 1715, upon the Occaſion of the then Rebellion; and the Care of the City given to a Body of Volunteers, who had aſſociate themſelves much in the ſame Manner as thoſe did upon Occaſion of the laſt Rebellion. Depones, That he remembers a Propoſal made among the Volunteers, for employing a Number of able-bodied Lads, upon the Reward of a Guinea to be given to each of them, in order to fill up the Edinburgh Regiment; but knows not whether this Propoſal was made to the Provoſt or not. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That he knows not whether that Propoſal for laying aſide the Trained-Bands, was ever laid before the Council. As to Article fifth, depones, That he remembers, that, upon Sunday the 15th September, there was come to the Town of Edinburgh, of Volunteers, 42 from Dalkeith, 100 from Muſſelburgh, 180 Seceders, and 70 Exciſe-Officers; which, conjoined with above 400 Volunteers in the Town of Edinburgh, 200 of the Edinburgh Regiment, and 126 of the Town-Guard, made in all 1118 Men in the Town of Edinburgh, beſides the Trained-Bands. As to the ſeventh Article, depones, That, upon Monday the 16th of September, he heard from Lord Home, there was a Petition, ſuch as is mentioned in the ſaid Article, going forward; but he did not ſee it that Day: That, about Four o'Clock of that Afternoon, the Fire-bell rung, which was the Signal for the Volunteers to repair to their reſpective Poſts; and which the Deponent accordingly did, by repairing to his Poſt in the Lawn-market. As to Article Eighth, depones, That, previous to the ringing of the Fire-bell above-mentioned, the Deponent came into a Meeting of the Magiſtrates and Council in Goldſmiths-Hall, where Mr. Groſet was, who had come there to make offer of a Body of Dragoons being ſent into the Town, in caſe they were required: That, upon his coming in, he found the Council deliberating what was proper to be done upon that Occaſion: That the Pannel called to the Deponent, to give his Opinion concerning the giving up or defending the Town; the Deponent made anſwer, That there was no Occaſion to aſk his Opinion upon that Point, as he had given it formerly, and by his Actions teſtified his Inclination to defend the Town. That thereafter Provoſt Coutts came into the Meeting, and falling into Converſation with the Deponent, he frequently preſſed the Deponent to ſpeak: At laſt the Deponent carried him to a Corner, and ſaid to him, 'Why ſhould I ſpeak, conſidering the Lord Home told me, That he 'heard you ſay, on Saturday laſt, as you was coming up the New Bank 'Cloſe, and when he was looking out of the Lord Juſtice-Clerk's 'Dining-Room Window, That all the Buſtle and Work they were now 'making about defending the Town of Edinburgh, was idle, and Non-'ſenſe; for that the Provoſt had in his Pocket, three Days ago, the 'Terms ſettled in Writing upon which the Town was to be given up?' And Provoſt Coutts ſeemed concerned, and did not flatly deny it, but avoided owning it. Depones, That a little Time after he left this Meeting, he heard the Fire-bell ring; which made him go to his Poſt in the Lawn-market, as above deponed upon; and, after remaining with the Volunteers for about three Quarters of an Hour under Arms, and getting no Orders, the Officers amongſt themſelves thought proper to adviſe what was to be done; and at laſt came to this Reſolution, as they ſaw they could be of no Uſe to the Town, to return their Arms to the Government, from whom they had them; which was accordingly execute by the Volunteers, the Country Militia, the Seceders, and Exciſemen; who all marched up to the Caſtle, and delivered up their Arms, except two Companies of Volunteers, who remained upon Guard at the Netherbow Port; and when they returned from the Caſtle, it was about half an Hour after Sunſet. Depones, That, after coming from the Caſtle, he he went to ſome Place in the Town, where he expected to get Horſes brought him; and, while he was there, Word came to him, That Mr. Groſet was come from the Country, with an Account, that Sir John Cope was landed at Dunbar; and that he was gone to inform the Magiſtrates of it: And upon this the Defendant went to the Council-Chamber, where he met with the Provoſt, and Council, and Mr. Groſet. That Mr. Groſet, upon his coming in, put into the Deponent's Hand Lord Advocate's Letter, with one directed to the Provoſt, as the Deponent thinks, and another from Mr. Fall in Dunbar, directed to Lord Advocate, telling of Sir John Cope's Arrival off Dunbar. That, upon this, the Deponent told the Pannel, that he hoped he would now think of defending the Town, and ring the Fire-bell, to bring the People to their different Poſts: To which the Pannel made Anſwer, That we muſt be tender of the Blood of our Inhabitants; that they had ſent out ſome of their Magiſtrates to treat; and, ſhould the Rebels hear the Noiſe of the Fire-bell, they might hang them up. Then the Deponent propoſed, that a Drum ſhould be beat through the Town; but the Provoſt made Anſwer, That the Volunteers, and others, had delivered up their Arms, and the Military had left them; and they could not defend the Town by themſelves. The Deponent likewiſe told him, it was proper, ſince the Town could not be defended, that the Cannon which were mounted upon the Walls, and the Arms which the Inhabitants had, might be ſo ſecured, as that they ſhould not fall into the Hands of the Rebels. Upon this the Pannel handed over to the Deponent the Letter given in with the Libel, Number 1. and, upon reading it, the Deponent told the Pannel, That he did not know, but if they gave up the Town to the Rebels To-morrow, that the next Day the King's Troops might think they had a Right to uſe it as a Town taken from the Rebels. As to the eleventh Article, depones, beſides what is already ſaid, That the Number of Firelocks and Bayonets which were in the Town-magazine in the Years 1726 and 1727, when the Deponent was Provoſt, were about 1200; and that the Deponent believes the Trained-Bands uſed to be ſupplied out of that Magazine. And the Repreſentation given out with the Libel, Number Seven, being ſhewn to the Deponent; and he being interrogate, whether he knows any thing of the ſaid Repreſentation? depones, He remembers it to have been drawn up at one of the Meetings of the Volunteers where he was preſent; that it was read over to them, and afterwards ſent to the Pannel by Mr. Williamſon, one of their Number. And, being read to the Deponent, depones, That it is the Remonſtrance before-mentioned in his Oath. And being interrogate by the Pannel, whether or not the Deponent knows that Orders were given for all theſe Particulars by the Provoſt? depones, That the Repreſentation contains four Articles, viz. the firſt, concerning the Guards of the Town, of which the Deponent never heard afterwards any Complaint; the ſecond, concerning Ladders; and the third, concerning the inbringing of Meal; both which he believes were complied with, and immediately done; the fourth concerned the Wrights and Maſons being ſet to work; as to which, the Deponent knows, that Bailie Robert Baillie had the Town-Council's Orders, and their full Power veſted in him, to ſee to the Execution of theſe things relating to the City Walls: And the Deponent does not doubt but theſe Orders were given, though in fact very few more Workmen were employed, and ſet to Work. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

* Partial Counſel, by the Law of Scotland, is, the inſtigating the Proſecution, or offering the Party to depone in his Favours; or being preſent with Lawyers at the Conſultation, where it might be ſhewn what was neceſſary to be proved.——And every Witneſs, by that Law, is obliged upon Oath to ſwear, that he did neither of theſe Particulars, which is called purged of partial Counſel.

II. Mr James Leſlie Advocate, and one of the Commiſſaries of Edinburgh, depones, That, upon Monday the 16th of September 1745, about Ten o'Clock Forenoon, the Deponent having ſome Buſineſs with Mr. Gordon Merchant, and not meeting with him, and ſeeing the Pannel, he deſired the Pannel to go into Loch's Coffee-houſe, and have it ended with him; and as they were going in, Andrew Alves, Writer to the Signet, followed them, and went in with them; who told them, That he had been out at Linlithgow the Day before, where he ſaw the Rebel or Highland Army, and ſeveral of his Acquaintances, particularly the Perſon then called Duke of Perth; who aſked him, What they were doing in the Town of Edinburgh? that they had need to be careful; for, if they ſtood to their Defence, he would not anſwer for the Conſequences: And, that Mr. Alves was afterwards carried up to the Pretender's Son, who told him much to the ſame Purpoſe: That, upon this, the Deponent ſaid, This was a very odd Meſſage; but does not remember, that the Pannel ſaid any thing.

III. Mr. Robert Craigie of Glendoick, Advocate, depones, That, in the laſt Week of Auguſt 1745, he was preſent at a Meeting of ſeveral of the Friends of the Government, and Inhabitants of Edinburgh, in the Lord Juſtice-Clerk's Houſe, where was preſent alſo Provoſt Stewart, now Pannel; where the Propoſal for levying a Regiment of a thouſand Men for Defence of the City of Edinburgh was talked of: That the Perſons preſent ſeverally gave their Opinions; as did likewiſe the Pannel; at leaſt ſpoke of the Subject; but the Deponent did not take notice of any thing as remarkable in what the Pannel ſaid: That the Deponent underſtood the Purpoſe of that Meeting was, in order to adviſe the Magiſtrates of Edinburgh concerning the Lawfulneſs of that Meaſure: That the Meeting generally agreed, that it was proper to apply for his Majeſty's Warrant for that Purpoſe; and the Deponent, being then his Majeſty's Advocate, undertook to write for it, which he did that very Night; and received his Majeſty's Sign-manual, by Expreſs, on Sunday the 8th September. Depones, That there were preſent at that Meeting, ſo far as the Deponent remembers, the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, Lord Tinwald, Provoſt Macaulay, William Alexander, Merchant, and ſeveral others. Depones, That Provoſt Macaulay and Mr Alexander followed the Deponent from that Meeting, who aſſured him, that no Scruple needed to be made for fear of Want of Money to ſupport that Regiment; for that they would undertake to find Subſcriptions enough to ſupport it: and the Deponent accordingly wrote to one of his Majeſty's Secretaries of State. Depones, That, upon Friday the 6th September 1745, a Gentleman who had been a Magiſtrate of Edinburgh, brought to the Deponent a Petition, propoſed to be ſigned by ſeveral of the Burgeſſes, to be preſented to the Provoſt and Magiſtrates, and deſired the Deponent's Opinion, whether the Petition contained any thing illegal or improper? and that the Deponent gave his Opinion that it did not: That next Day, the 7th September, one of the Magiſtrates came to the Deponent's Houſe, and told him, that the Provoſt, and ſome of the Magiſtrates, wanted to wait of him for his Opinion, and deſired to know his Time: That he ſaid, the Magiſtrates might come when they pleaſed; that accordingly, very ſoon after, the Provoſt, and three or four of the Magiſtrates, came, and laid before the Deponent the Petition now produced in Court; and which was a Copy of the ſame Petition he had ſeen the Day before: That Provoſt Stewart, the Pannel, ſuggeſted, that it was unlawful, and, as he was informed, treaſonable, to comply with the Petition: That the Deponent ſaid, That whatever might be the caſe in ſome Circumſtances, yet at preſent, when there was a Rebellion in the Country, it was not only lawful, but the Duty of every Subject to take Arms in ſupport of the Government. That the Magiſtrates deſired the Deponent, and Mr. Robert Dundas, then his Majeſty's Solicitor, their Opinion in Writing: That the Deponent thereupon ſent to Mr. Dundas, who immediately came; and, after talking with him, did, in his Preſence, dictate to his Clerk their Opinion, which he took down in Writing, That it was lawful, in the then preſent Juncture, for the Magiſtrates to authoriſe the Petitioners, and others, to take up Arms in Defence of the City, and of the Government; and that the Deponent and Mr. Dundas ſigned the Opinion, and ſent it with the Petition to the Magiſtrates That, ſoon after, one of the Magiſtrates brought back the Opinion to the Deponent's Houſe; and told him, that the Opinion did not ſatisfy the Provoſt, meaning the Pannel; and that he declined to proceed upon the Petition, unleſs the Deponent and the Solicitor would give their Opinion, That the taking up Arms was not treaſonable: That the Deponent teſtified ſome Surpriſe at the Scruple; however, in order to ſatisfy it, the Deponent and Mr. Dundas ſigned a ſecond Opinion, That it was not treaſonable for the Magiſtrates to grant the Deſire of the Petition. Depones, That, on Monday the 16th September 1745, Mr. Dundas came to the Deponent's Room, about Mid-day, and brought along with him Andrew Alves, Writer to the Signet, and told the Deponent, he found him delivering a Meſſage from the Pretender to the People in the Street; and that he had brought him to the Deponent to be examined. The Deponent does not remember whether Mr. Dundas brought any Guard along with him. That the Deponent accordingly examined Mr. Alves; who told the Deponent, that he had fallen in with the Highland Army on this Side of Linlithgow that Morning, and that he had been ſome time with them: That the Perſon called the Duke of Perth ſpoke to Mr. Alves, and deſired him to deliver a Meſſage to the Provoſt of Edinburgh, importing, That he expected to be received into the City without any Oppoſition or Reſiſtance; in which caſe the City might expect his Protection; but, if he met with any Oppoſition, the City might expect Treatment that neither he nor they would wiſh: That the Perſon whom they called the Prince, was near by when this Meſſage was delivered by the Duke of Perth, and aſſented to the Meſſage: That Mr. Alves came into Edinburgh, and, having met with the Provoſt, the Pannel, he delivered this Meſſage to the Provoſt; and that he had repeated the ſame thing to ſeveral People he met with on the Streets. That the Deponent remonſtrated to Mr. Alves, that it was treaſonable in him to carry ſuch a Meſſage from the Rebels; and the Deponent, as he thought it might be attended with bad Conſequences, to raiſe Sedition and Diſſention in the Town, by ſpreading this Meſſage, he reſolved to commit Mr. Alves to Priſon; and accordingly cauſed his Clerk to make out a Warrant for that Purpoſe. That, in the mean time, the Lord Juſtice-Clerk had come to the Deponent's Houſe, and was in the Room with General Gueſt: That the Deponent having come in to them, told them what had happened, and his Reſolution to commit Mr. Alves: That they approved; only, Lord Juſtice-Clerk ſuggeſted, That it would be proper to ſend to the Provoſt; and, if the Fact of delivering the Meſſage to the Provoſt, was ſuch as Mr. Alves repreſented, that it would be proper that the Commitment ſhould be by the Provoſt. That accordingly the Deponent ſent his Clerk with a Meſſage to the Provoſt, in the Name of the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, Mr. Gueſt, and his own, deſiring he would come to them: That the Provoſt came very ſoon after; and the Deponent underſtood it was in compliance with the Meſſage. That, upon the Provoſt's coming in, my Lord Juſtice-Clerk told him what Mr. Alves had ſaid with reſpect to his delivering the Meſſage to him. And the Provoſt acknowledged the Meſſage had been ſo delivered; that the Provoſt had repeated it to one of the Magiſtrates, the Deponent thinks he ſaid it was to Dean of Guild Hathorn; and that he aſked his Opinion, whether it was proper to mention it to any of the reſt of the Council? That the Dean of Guild ſaid, it was by no means proper. That the Lord Juſtice-Clerk aſked him, why he did not take Notice of Mr. Alves? why he did not commit him? that it was a treaſonable Practice. That the Provoſt made ſome Excuſe; that he did not know, or did not think it was Treaſon. That he was told by the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, that he ought ſtill to commit him; and in this Opinion the Deponent concurred with him. That the Provoſt deſired Directions in what Manner: That thereupon the Deponent gave him the Warrant that he had made out. That thereupon the Provoſt went away; and, ſoon after, one from the Provoſt brought to the Deponent a Warrant of Commitment; but the Deponent deſired the Meſſenger to get proper Officers to execute the Warrant; and ſoon after Mr. Alves was carried off Priſoner from the Deponent's Houſe; and the Deponent believes he was committed to Priſon. Depones, That, upon the ſaid Monday, the 16th September, while General Gueſt was in the Deponent's Houſe, it was ſuggeſted to the Deponent, that ſome Confuſion ſeemed to ariſe upon the Streets: That it occurred to the Deponent, and to General Gueſt, and others, who were coming and going to the Deponent's Houſe, that it might be of uſe to ſuppreſs diſorderly People, and to encourage thoſe who were in Arms for the Government in the City, that a hundred Dragoons ſhould be brought into the Town; and that this might, at the ſame time, be no Loſs to the Service of the Dragoons, if ſo many were choſen out of Colonel Gardiner's Regiment, whoſe Horſes were rendered unſerviceable by their great Fatigues. That the Reſolution was accordingly taken; and Sir John Inglis, with the Aſſiſtance of ſome other Juſtices of Peace, provided a Quantity of Hay for the Subſiſtence of the Dragoons. That Colonel Clayton, who, as the Deponent underſtood, acted as Aid de Camp to Brigadier Fowkes, came ſeveral times that Forenoon to General Gueſt for Orders; and that, at one of theſe Times, General Gueſt gave Orders to ſend in the hundred Dragoons, by a verbal Meſſage to the Brigadier. That General Gueſt went to the Caſtle before Two o'Clock. That, before Three, Colonel Clayton came to the Deponent's Houſe, and told the Deponent, that Brigadier Fowkes declined to obey the verbal Meſſage touching the ſending in the Dragoons; and that that he desired a written Order from Mr. Gueſt: That, upon this, Mr. Dundas the Solicitor, and the Deponent, went along with Colonel Clayton to the Caſtle, and ſtated the Caſe to Mr. Gueſt: That Mr. Gueſt agreed to give the written Order, but desired as a Condition, that the Provoſt of Edinburgh, Mr. Dundas, and the Deponent, ſhould give to him their Opinion in Writing, that it was for the Service of the Government that the Dragoons ſhould be ſent into the Town: That, as the Provoſt was not preſent, the Expedient propoſed and agreed to, was, that the General ſhould ſign the Order for the Dragoons, and ſhould put it in the Hands of Mr. Lindſay, the Secretary at War, who wrote the Order; that the Deponent ſhould procure the Provoſt's Subſcription to the Opinion, and his own and Mr. Dundas's; and, upon delivering this Opinion to Mr. Lindſay, Mr. Lindſay ſhould deliver the Order to Colonel Clayton. That the General accordingly ſigned the Order, and delivered it to Mr. Lindſay; and the Opinion deſired was wrote out by Mr. Lindſay. That Colonel Clayton, Mr. Dundas, Mr. Lindſay, and the Deponent, came down from the Caſtle, and called for the Provoſt at his Houſe, and miſſed him; but met him in the Lawn-market, oppoſite to the Entry to Fiſher's Land: That the Deponent told the Provoſt what had paſſed; and that it was proper he ſhould ſign the Opinion, in order to procure the Dragoons. That the Provoſt appeared in ſome Confuſion, and ſaid he was haſtening to the Weſtport to ſhut it; that the Highlanders would be there before him. That the Deponent ſuggeſted, that the Meaſure might be of uſe againſt the Highlanders; and that it would be no loſing of Time. The Provoſt agreed to ſtep up to the Deponent's Houſe; and the Provoſt, in the Deponent's Conſulting-room, ſigned the Opinion, and after him it was ſigned by the Deponent and Mr. Dundas; and the Deponent having delivered the ſigned Opinion to Mr. Lindſay, Mr. Lindſay delivered the Order by Mr. Gueſt to Colonel Clayton, in order to be carried to Brigadier Fowkes. Depones, That Colonel Clayton, upon his coming to the Deponent's Houſe, did inform the Deponent that the Rebels were on their March, and were come the Length of Kirkliſton Water. And when the Deponent was in the Caſtle, he obſerved the Dragoons marching Eaſtward by the long Dykes; and this determined the Deponent to follow them down to Leith, where he ſuppoſed they were marching to ſolicit the Execution of Mr. Gueſt's Order. That he believes this might have been about Four o'Clock at Night. That he met Mr. Walter Groſet, then Collector at Alloa, between the Watergate and the Abbay-hill: That Mr. Groſet told the Deponent he was coming with a Meſſage from the Lord Juſtice-Clerk to the Provoſt, offering him the Aſſiſtance of the two Regiments of Dragoons, or ſuch a Number of them as the Provoſt ſhould deſire, in Defence of the Town: That the Deponent told Mr. Groſet, that the Provoſt had agreed to demand, and obtained an Order to bring in a hundred Dragoons; but he might proceed with his Meſſage. That Mr. Groſet did not ſay, nor did the Deponent underſtand, that he had any written Meſſage from the Lord Juſtice-Clerk. That the Deponent found the Dragoons had not gone to Leith, but were in their Road to Fiſher-row: And he underſtood from Colonel Clayton, that Mr. Fowkes did not incline to divide his Dragoons. However, before the Deponent had come up with Mr. Fowkes, Mr. Stark, Commander of the Cuſtom-houſe Sloop, delivered a Letter to the Deponent from the Provoſt of Dunbar, acquainting him, that the Fleet, on board of which Sir John Cope's Troops were, was ſeen within the May about Two o'Clock; and that they would be at Leith with the next Tide, which would happen in the Night-time. That as the Deponent read his Letter aloud, it was ſoon known through the whole two Regiments, and to Mr. Fowkes. That Mr. Fowkes thereupon alighted, and went into Mr. Forbes's Houſe; and, as the Deponent underſtood, he there wrote Letters to Sir John Cope, acquainting him of the Situation of Matters: and the Deponent found Mr. Fowkes not at all diſpoſed to divide his Regiments, or to comply with Mr. Gueſt's Order. While the Deponent was in Mr. Forbes's Houſe, and Mr. Fowkes was writing his Letters aforeſaid, Mr. Groſet returned from Edinburgh, and delivered to the Deponent a Letter from the Pannel, addreſſed to the Deponent and Lord Juſtice-Clerk, which he now produces, and is marked by him and the Lord Examinator; wherein he deſires a new Opinion from the Deponent and the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, before he would receive any Dragoons. That this was a Diſappointment to the Deponent, and made him not think it proper to preſs the ſending the Dragoons, as it perſuaded him that Matters were changed from the Time he had left Edinburgh. However, Mr. Groſet was ſent back to Edinburgh, with the Accounts of Sir John Cope's Arrival; and the Deponent delivered him his Letter, with a Certificate that the Letter and Account were genuine. And depones, That he heard Mr. Fowkes mention what he had wrote to Sir John Cope; and that he had adviſed him rather to land his Troops at Preſton-pans or North-Berwick than at Leith, as he would be nearer the Aſſiſtance of the Dragoons, who were to be quartered that Night at Preſton-pans, or thereabouts; and being interrogate for the Pannel, What he thinks was intended by the Councils mentioned in the Provoſt's Letter above deponed upon? depones, That he apprehends the Councils therein mentioned is what paſt at a Meeting in the Lord Juſtice-Clerk's, in Edinburgh, on Sunday Evening the 15th, when General Gueſt, Brigadier Fowkes, Lord Juſtice-Clerk, the Pannel, the Deponent, and ſeveral others were preſent: that the Deponent underſtood, that it was then agreed upon, that the Dragoons ſhould incamp that Night on this Side the Colt Bridge; that ſome time after a Queſtion was ſtated, Whether the Town of Edinburgh might not be a proper Quarter for the Dragoons, to wait there the landing of Sir John Cope? and, whether they could not at Pleaſure join him, whatever Situation the Rebels might be in? That the Deponent remembers that Captain Murray, the Receiver of the Cuſtoms, anſwered, That he thought it would not be a proper Quarter; for that if the Rebels were poſſeſſed of the Suburbs, and ſhould ſet fire to the Potter-Row and Briſtow Ports, the Dragoons could not poſſibly march out. That this was all the Deliberation that the Deponent and the Provoſt together were Witneſſes to concerning the Dragoons coming into Edinburgh; and, to the beſt of his Memory, theſe were the very Expreſſions. Whether there was any other Concert upon that Subject the ſaid Sunday Evening, the Deponent cannot ſay; as the Deponent went to another Room to examine Priſoners, after the Reſolution was taken touching the Incampment that Night; and when the Deponent returned to the Company, he heard Captain Murray's Opinion laſt deponed upon; and very ſoon thereafter the Company parted. And depones, That the Petition by the Burgeſſes to the Magiſtrates and Council, and the two Opinions thereon, now produced in Court, and ſigned by Mr. Dundas and the Deponent, are the Petition and Opinions referred to in the above Depoſition.

N. B. The Letter referred to in this Oath, and produced by Mr. Craigie, is fully ingroſſed in the Information for the Proſecuter, p. 53. except a Poſtſcript, in theſe Words: I am determined by your Orders.

IV. Mr. Robert Dundas younger of Arniſton, Advocate, depones, That the Deponent went for a few Days out of Town about the End of Auguſt 1745. That, on his Return, he underſtood, that there had been a Meeting concerning the raiſing a Regiment for the Defence of the City, and likewiſe concerning a Propoſal by ſome of the Burghers and Inhabitants, to ſerve as Volunteers in that Service: That ſome of thoſe concerned in the Propoſal came to the Deponent's Houſe, to aſk his Opinion concerning the Lawfulneſs of it; and told him, that ſome Difficulties were made about it, particularly by ſome Lawyers. That the Deponent ſaid, He had no Difficulty of its being lawful. In conſequence whereof a Meſſage was thereafter ſent by the Town-Council to get the Opinion of Mr. Craigie, then Lord Advocate, and the Deponent's; which they accordingly gave in Writing, and ſubſcribed. But, as the Deponent was going away out of Town, ſome Hours after that, he met Robert Baillie, then one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, and another Member of the Town-Council, whoſe Name the Deponent cannot recollect; who told him, That the Provoſt was not ſatisfied with the Opinion; that he excepted to the Manner in which it was expreſſed; becauſe, though they had ſaid it was lawful, they had not ſaid it was not Treaſon: And that thereupon Mr. Craigie had already ſubjoined an additional Opinion; but that ſtill Provoſt Stewart was not pleaſed, unleſs he got the Deponent's Subſcription. And the Deponent accordingly ſigned that additional Opinion alſo: And that the Opinion, and additional Opinion, in the Clerk's Hands, ſhewn to him, are the ſame that were ſigned by him. Depones, That upon Monday the 16th September 1745, the Deponent came down to the Street from Mr. Craigie's Houſe about Eleven o'Clock in the Forenoon: That he met Sir John Inglis of Cramond at the End of the Luckenbooths; who told him that Andrew Alves Writer to the Signet was at the Croſs, telling to every body, That he had brought a Meſſage from the Rebels at Linlithgow, That, if the Town of Edinburgh was peaceably given up, there ſhould no Miſchief be done to the Inhabitants; but, if any Reſiſtance was made, the Conſequence might be fatal to them. That the Deponent went immediately in ſearch of Mr. Alves; and, having found him, aſked, What Tale he was thus ſpreading about; and how he came to carry a Meſſage from Rebels? That Alves repeated the Meſſage, as above; and excuſed himſelf for bringing it, ſaying, That he accidentally had been taken Priſoner by the Rebels. That the Deponent immediately carried Mr. Alves to Mr. Craigie's Houſe, and there left him; and, returning ſome Time after, he found together the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, Mr. Craigie, and the Pannel, Mr. Alves being then in another Room: That he was then told, Alves had delivered the Meſſage to the Pannel about an Hour before; and, as the Deponent thinks, the Lord Juſtice-Clerk ſaid, that he and Mr. Craigie had ſent for the Pannel as the propereſt Perſon to ſign the Warrant for committing Alves: That, in a very little, the Pannel left the Room; and, ſoon thereafter, a Party of Volunteers came with the Pannel's Warrant, and carried off Mr. Alves to Priſon. Depones, That, about Four o'Clock of Monday the ſaid 16th September, Major Clayton brought the Account to Mr. Craigie's, where the Deponent then was, that the Rebel-Army was advancing; and that it was thought proper for the Dragoons to retire to the plain Ground between Leith and Edinburgh. That thereupon Mr. Craigie and the Deponent went to Lieut. Gen. Gueſt in the Caſtle; who agreed to order a hundred Dragoons into the Town of Edinburgh, if the Demand was made in Writing: That Mr. Craigie and the Deponent, returning from the Caſtle, met with the Pannel at the Bowhead Well; whereupon the Deponent told the Pannel, That they were well met, for they were going juſt to ſend for him, to communicate to him ſomething of Importance: That the Pannel anſwered, That it was not now Time for Conſultation, but for Execution, when the Enemy was at their very Gates: To which the Deponent replied, That it was not for Conſultation, but Execution, that he was wanted; and then the Pannel went up to Mr. Craigie's Houſe: And upon his being told that he might have a hundred Dragoons into the Town, if he thought proper; he anſwered, That it was certainly right, and that he was very deſirous of it. Upon which a Letter was wrote and ſent to Lt. Gen. Gueſt, ſigned by Mr. Craigie, the Deponent, and the Pannel, requeſting the aforeſaid Number of Dragoons to be ſent into the Town.

V. Mr. George Logan, one of the Miniſters of Edinburgh, depones, That, in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th September, the Deponent, and ſome others of his Brethren Miniſters, being told in the Coffee-houſe, that there was a Meeting of a great many of the Inhabitants in the New Church Iſle; and that it was the Opinion of the Meeting, that the Town could not be defended againſt the Rebels; the Deponent therefore went to the ſaid Meeting: That he found there the Pannel acting as Præſes of the Meeting: That the Meeting was very numerous: That he could not ſay, that they were compoſed of ſuch as he thought the beſt affected to his Majeſty's Government: That many of them he did not know; but of thoſe he knew, ſeverals were ſuch as he always thought diſaffected: That the Deponent does not remember to have ſeen any of the Volunteers there, except Mr. Glen the Miniſter; but where they were, he knows not: That as the Deponent, or at leaſt his Wife, had a conſiderable Intereſt in the Town, which he was very willing to riſk for the Service of the Government; he propoſed to the Pannel, then Præſes of the Meeting, that the Dragoons ſhould be brought into Town, for the Defence of it: But the Pannel anſwered, The Dragoons were gone too far to be brought back again.

VI. Dr. William Wiſhart, Principal of the College of Edinburgh, depones, That in the Month of September 1745, the Deponent was preſent at a Meeting of ſeveral of the Miniſters of Edinburgh, when it was concerted, that a Paper ſhould be drawn, and ſigned by them, approving of the Deſign of raiſing the Edinburgh Regiment for the Defence of the Town, and engaging to contribute towards defraying the Expence. That the Paper was accordingly drawn, and ſigned by the Deponent, and ſeveral other Miniſters in the Deponent's Preſence, of the Date it bears, the 6th Day of the ſaid Month of September; and that the Writing ſigned by the Miniſters in the Clerk's Hands, being No. 4. of the Liſt of Writings ſubjoined to the Libel, is the ſame Paper that was ſigned by the Deponent. [Vide Lord Advocate's Information, p. 635.] Depones, That in the Afternoon of the 16th September, about Four Afternoon, the Deponent went to Goldſmiths-Hall, where he found the Pannel, then Lord Provoſt, ſeveral of the Magiſtrates and Councillors, and ſome others of the Inhabitants of the Town. That ſome of the Meeting, but, as the Deponent thinks, none of the Council, ſaid, That ſeveral of the Inhabitants were in Terror, both for their Houſes and Perſons, ſhould any Defence be made of the Town againſt the Rebels; and therefore were for delivering it up. That no Anſwer was made to this Suggeſtion: But, at that Time, Walter Groſet, Collector of the Cuſtoms at Alloa, came into the Meeting, with a Meſſage to the Pannel from the Lord Advocate and Lord Juſtice-Clerk, that there were a hundred Dragoons in Town, and the reſt might be brought in, if his Lordſhip deſired it. That the Pannel anſwered, That that was putting the Thorn in his Foot, but that he would return it; and appealed to Provoſt Drummond, then preſent, whether, at a Meeting that had been held the laſt or the other Night, he had not heard it ſaid, that, if he brought any of the King's Troops into Edinburgh, it was bringing them into a Poindfold to be catched by the Rebels? and upon that account he would give no Orders. That Groſet anſwered, That thoſe who ſent him were ready to give the Orders, if his Lordſhip deſired it. That thereupon he gave Mr. Groſet a verbal Anſwer to return to the Lords Advocate and Juſtice-Clerk, which Mr. Groſet ſeemed to underſtand as a Refuſal, and repeated it as ſuch: That the Pannel ſaid he had miſtaken him, and that he would give it him in Writing; and called for one Henderſon to write the Anſwer, which the Pannel began to dictate: But the Deponent thinks the Meeting broke up before it was finiſhed. That the Occaſion of the Meeting's breaking up, was, that more People came in preſſing to give up the Defence of the Town. Upon which the Pannel ſaid, We cannot ſtay here; let us ring the Bell, and go into the New Church Iſle. Upon which the Fire-bell was rung. And the Deponent, having gone firſt home, returned immediately to the New Church Iſle, where he found the Pannel ſeated in the Moderator's Chair, and a pretty numerous Meeting, moſt Part of them not known to the Deponent, not even by Sight: Such as he did know, ſeverals of them were ſuch who frequented Nonjuring Meeting-houſes; but others who attended the Eſtabliſhed Church. Depones, The firſt thing the Deponent obſerved at that Meeting was, the preceding Witneſs, Mr. Logan, ſtanding upon a Form, and ſaying, That the ſending out to treat with the Rebels, was inviting them to Town; and that he heard his Majeſty's Troops were nigh at hand to aſſiſt the Defence of the Town: But that this was generally houted in the Meeting, and a Cry raiſed, They were gone, they were fled, they were gone to Haddington. Depones, That the Deponent then ſpoke to the Pannel, and put him in mind of the Propoſition that had been about half an Hour before made to him by Mr. Groſet, as from Lord Advocate and Lord Juſtice-Clerk, and deſired to know what Anſwer had been made. That the Meeting raiſed the former Cry, They were gone, they were fled. But the Pannel very civilly interpoſed, and ſaid, The Deponent's Queſtion deſerved an Anſwer; and then repeated in Subſtance what he had before ſaid in Goldſmiths-Hall to Provoſt Drummond. To which the Deponent replied, That, by the Meſſage he had got, it would ſeem that the Troops could not yet be ſo far off as was alledged at that Meeting. Depones, That thereafter the Deponent, directing his Diſcourſe to the Præſes, ſaid, That he hoped no Gentleman in that Meeting would dare to propoſe the delivering up the Town to the Rebels, or Words to that Purpoſe. The Pannel anſwered, Yes, it is propoſed. Another Gentleman replied, No, Sir, it is not propoſed to deliver up the Town to the Rebels, but to ſend out to treat with them; and then they will go by the Town. Upon which the Deponent ſaid to the Præſes, That, before making a Propoſal of that Kind, or, which the Deponent thinks was his Words, before putting a Queſtion of that Kind to any Meeting, he ſhould have firſt purged the Town of the known Enemies to the Government that were in it. Againſt which a Hout was raiſed in the Meeting; and one of them ſaid to the Deponent, Then you ſhould be amongſt the firſt that ſhould be put out of it; which raiſed a great Laugh. That, at the ſame Meeting, Bailie Hamilton ſaid to the Pannel, That if it was propoſed to deliver up the Town to the Rebels, his Lordſhip ſhould firſt ſend Orders to the Volunteers to deliver up the Government's Arms, that they might not be ſurpriſed by the Rebels: But the Deponent heard no Anſwer made to it. Depones, That Sir George Preſton of Valleyfield, who had the Command of a Company of Volunteers then planted at the Netherbow, came into the Meeting, and deſired to know from the Pannel, What he was to do with his Company? or what Orders he was to give him? That the Pannel anſwered, I cannot anſwer that yet; by and bye. That Sir George ſaid, That, if they were propoſing to deliver up the Town to the Rebels, it was Time for him to know what he was to do, for he could not ſtay; and deſired an Anſwer. That no Anſwer was given him, ſo far as the Deponent heard. That then the Pannel put the Queſtion to the Meeting, Who are for defending or holding out the Town? If any, let them ſpeak. To which the Deponent ſaid, That he was, though he ſhould be alone there: That Sir George Preſton ſaid, And I; and that one or two more ſaid the ſame: But the Generality of the Meeting were of another Opinion. Depones, That the Pannel then put the Queſtion, Shall we ſend any to treat with them? Upon which the Deponent ſaid, That he hoped not to have lived ever to have heard ſuch a Queſtion put by a Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh. But no Reply was given. And then the Pannel put the Queſtion, Who ſhall we ſend to treat with them? Upon which the Deponent and Sir George Preſton left the Meeting: And, upon their coming out, the Deponent ſaw ſome of the Captains of the Volunteers leading up their Men to the Caſtle to deliver up their Arms. Depones, That, upon Saturday the 14th, the Deponent was told, that the Ringing of the Fire-bell was appointed as a Signal for the Volunteers conveening in the Lawn-market, there to receive their Orders from the Pannel: And the Fire-bell having been rung in Time of divine Worſhip on Sunday the 15th, in the Forenoon, the Deponent was told, it was to conveen the Volunteers as above; and that they met accordingly: and as the Deponent went from Church, he ſaw ſome of them in the Lawn-market, and ſome of them that had marched down to the Graſs-market. And being interrogate for the Pannel, What Anſwer Provoſt Drummond made to the Appeal that the Pannel made to him in Goldſmiths-Hall? depones, He does not remember he heard any Anſwer made. And further depones, That the New Church Iſle was pretty full at the above Meeting, though the Deponent has ſeen it more crowded: That they were all Men, and no Women; but the Deponent cannot give any Judgment what Number they might have been.

VII. Mr. John Glen, Miniſter of the Goſpel at Edinburgh, depones, That the Repreſentation of the Miniſters of Edinburgh to the Lord Provoſt and Magiſtrates, marked No. 4, in the Liſt of Writings produced againſt the Pannel, now ſhewn to him, was ſigned by him; and that he ſaw others, whoſe Names ſtand there, alſo ſign the ſame: Believes, that all of them did ſo whoſe Subſcriptions appear; but cannot be poſitive: but ſays, that whether this Repreſentation was given in to the Provoſt and Magiſtrates, does not conſiſt with his proper Knowledge; but that he advanced Money in conſequence of his Subſcription, as the ſame was demanded. Depones, That he was preſent at a Meeting of the Inhabitants in the New Church Iſle, in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th September 1745: That the Pannel was then in the Chair: That the Deponent ſtaid but a very little Time there. And being interrogate, Of what ſort of Perſons he judged the Meeting was compoſed? ſaith, That the Bulk of them appeared to him not of the beſt affected in the Place; and that the Reaſons of this his Opinion were, That he ſaw ſeverals of them who, he was informed, had concurred in a Petition to deliver up the Town to the Rebels; and ſeveral others who had not contributed Money towards defending the Town, as the other zealouſly well-affected Subjects had done. That as the Deponent ſtaid but a very little Time there, he cannot pretend to give any particular Account of the Tranſactions in that Meeting: Only, the Pannel, while he was there, from the Chair, told the Aſſembly, That he had called them together, to take their Opinion what was proper to be done in the preſent Situation of Affairs: But that the Deponent left the Meeting before any Reſolution was come to, by thoſe who were there aſſembled. That the Deponent obſerved very few of the Volunteers at that Meeting: That ſeveral of them were then in the Lawn-market, the Deponent having come down that way to the Church; and others of them at the Netherbow Port, whom the Deponent ſaw there when he went out at the Port, in order to go to the Country. Depones, That he was informed by the Officers of the Volunteers, or by his Fellow-Volunteers, he himſelf being one, that the Signal for them to meet at their Alarm-poſt in the Lawn-market, was, the tolling of the Fire-bell. And being interrogate for the Pannel, What the Reaſon was why he who was a Volunteer left his Corps, and went away, in time of Danger? ſaith, That he had waited ſo long upon the Street among the Volunteers, without any Orders or Directions, not knowing what was to be done, that he begun to believe the Town was to be delivered up, and the Volunteers, with their Arms, put into the hands of the Rebels; and therefore, though perhaps it was not very agreeable to military Diſcipline, he thought it the ſafeſt and beſt for him, to retire: And alſo ſaith, That when he came to a Reſolution to go away, he applied to one of the Officers of the Volunteers, to have Leave to put his Gun into the hands of a Caſtle-ſoldier who was there attending, and had been with him frequently before, in order to teach him ſomewhat of the military Diſcipline: which the Officer agreed to; and the Gun was accordingly put into the Soldier's Hands, with Sixpence for his Trouble in carrying it to the Caſtle.

VIII. James Stewart, Merchant, and one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That there was a Propoſition, in the End of Auguſt, or Beginning of September 1745, for raiſing a Regiment of a thouſand Men, by Subſcription, for Defence of the City againſt the Rebels; but that the Deponent can ſay nothing from his proper Knowledge, by whom ſuch Propoſal was made to the Pannel, or how it was received by him, not having been preſent; nor does he know of any Objections made by the Pannel againſt it, otherwiſe than by Hearſay from others. And further ſaith, That upon the 5th September 1745, which was a Day of publick Faſting in the City of Edinburgh, the Deponent, reflecting upon the preſent Danger that threatened the City and the Kingdom, began to think, that proper Meaſures were neglected, which ought to have been taken: And therefore he applied himſelf to ſet down in Writing what occurred to him as proper to be done on the Occaſion. And the Reſult of this was, a Memorandum he wrote, and carried with him to a Meeting of a great many of the Inhabitants, who commonly uſed to aſſemble themſelves in an Evening, to talk together of the preſent Poſture of Affairs, and to conſider what was proper to be offered for the Defence of the City, and for oppoſing the Progreſs of the Rebels. That, upon reading and conſidering the foreſaid Memorandum, they came to a Reſolution, to form a Petition and Addreſs to the Lord Provoſt and Magiſtrates, That ſome of the Burgeſſes and Inhabitants of the City, who offered to ſerve as Volunteers, in Defence of the City, againſt the Rebels, might be properly diſpoſed of, and commanded by Officers to be appointed. And, for this end, a Committee was appointed to draw up ſuch a Petition, and Addreſs; who accordingly did meet, and form the Petition and Addreſs now ſhewn to the Deponent, marked No. 5, in the Liſt of Writings produced for proving the Libel; which Petition and Addreſs were wrote that Night, and ſigned by the Deponent, and ſeveral others, and next Day by more Perſons; when a Deputation from the Meeting was ſent with the ſaid Petition to the Pannel, then Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh. That the Gentlemen who went to carry the Addreſs to the Pannel, returned again to the Company, where the Deponent remained; and the Pannel came along with them; who, when he entered into the Company, ſeemed to be out of Humour, and complained that any ſuch Paper ſhould have been concerted and drawn up without acquainting him; and addreſſed himſelf particularly to the Deponent, telling him, He was greatly ſurpriſed, that he ſhould have had any Concern in it, without giving him any Notice of it. That the Deponent anſwered, It was late upon the 5th of the Month before the Paper was concerted and drawn up, or ſigned by any body: That next Morning he was employed in getting Subſcriptions to it, that it might be preſented to the Pannel with greater Weight. To which the Pannel replied, That the Matter of this Addreſs was what he was to conſider, and not the Number of Perſons who ſubſcribed it; and that, in his Judgment, it was treaſonable; and that he himſelf had taken the Oath of Abjuration, which obliged him to oppoſe every thing that was treaſonable: And further added, with a Sneer, That he knew of nothing to be Treaſon, but what the Law had made ſo. Upon which, ſome of the Company and the Pannel had ſome pretty high Words, arguing about the Nature of the Paper, and whether it was treaſonable or not. Thereupon the Deponent ſaid, He was afraid it would require ſome Time and Pains to convince the Pannel of the Reaſonableneſs of it; but that he now had a Paper put into his Hands, ſigned by a Number of Gentlemen of Character; and that the Deponent hoped, that he would not reject it, without taking Advice; which if he did, and conſidered it thoroughly, the Deponent hoped he would alter his Opinion. That the Deponent, upon this, left the Company, and went to Mr. Solicitor Dundas's Houſe; where he found Bailie Gavin Hamilton, and ſome other Perſons, with Mr. Dundas; to whom he related what had paſſed in the Company, and what he has above ſaid; and added, That he was perſuaded Provoſt Stewart would not venture to reject the Propoſition made to him, without calling for the Advice of the Crown-Lawyers; and therefore he, the Deponent, hoped Mr. Solicitor would be ready to give the proper Anſwer, if the Queſtion was laid before him. Mr. Solicitor Dundas then ſaid, He ſhould early in the Morning wait on Mr. Craigie, then Lord Advocate, and concert with him what was fit to be done. Depones, That, at this Time, in Mr. Dundas's, it was concerted between the Solicitor, Bailie Gavin Hamilton, and the Deponent, that in caſe the Provoſt ſhould reject the Petition, that Bailie Gavin Hamilton, being next Magiſtrate, ſhould call the Council together, and lay the Matter before them, and endeavour to get the Advice of the Crown-Lawyers. Depones, That, upon Saturday the 7th of September, the Gentlemen who uſually met together to conſider what they could do for the Defence of the Place, thought it fit to publiſh a Paragraph or an Advertiſement in the Edinburgh News-papers, in order to encourage People to aſſociate themſelves for the Defence of the Place. And ſuch a Paragraph having been drawn up, narrating, that an Addreſs having been made to the Magiſtrates, they had taken the Opinion of the Crown-Lawyers, who approved of it; and that it had likewiſe met with the Lord Provoſt's hearty Approbation and Concurrence, or Words to that Purpoſe; the Paragraph was ſent by two of their Number, Provoſt Drummond, as the Deponent thinks, and the Deponent himſelf. Upon ſhewing it to the Pannel, he cauſed daſh out that Part of it relating to his hearty Approbation and Concurrence; and inſert in place of it, which he heartily acquieſced in. That the Deponent, and the Perſon who went alongſt with him, repreſented, That the Reaſon of their uſing the Words which were altered by the Pannel, was, to encourage People to enter into the Aſſociation. However, the Pannel ſtill continued of the Opinion he had expreſſed. Depones, That, about the Middle of the Week which preceded the Rebels Entry to the City of Edinburgh, at a Meeting of the Inhabitants, who uſually came together in the Evening to conſider of what was proper to be done for the Defence of the City, the deceaſed Mr. Maclaurin and the Deponent were preſent; when it was ſuggeſted, that ſeveral Things were left undone that ought to be taken care of for the publick Safety; and that it was proper theſe Matters ſhould be laid before the Lord Provoſt. And it was propoſed, the Deponent ſhould go from the Meeting, and, in their Name, lay them before the Lord Provoſt. That the Deponent ſaid he was willing to follow their Directions in that Matter, but did not care to truſt to his Memory; and therefore called for Paper, Pen, and Ink, and took down in Writing ſuch Particulars as Mr. Colin Maclaurin dictated to him. And, when that was done, as the Deponent thinks, Mr. Mark Sandilands went along with him to find out the Provoſt, who was then in a Tavern; and, as the Deponent thinks, in Walker's Houſe. That they went to another Room in the Houſe, where the Provoſt came to them; and they communicated to him what was contained in their Paper. Among other Things, that the Meeting they came from thought, it was proper there ſhould be a general Search in the Town for Arms, leſt there might be ſome concealed for the Uſe of the Rebels; as alſo, that the Lord Provoſt ſhould concert with the Lord Advocate, or any proper Perſon, that a Search ſhould be made in the Places adjacent to the Town, which were not within the Royalty. That to this the Pannel anſwered, That Edinburgh, and the adjacent Parts, could with very great Difficulty be ſearched ſo narrowly, as that concealed Arms ſhould be diſcovered; and that he did not ſee any good Purpoſe it could ſerve to make a Search; or Words to that Purpoſe: But, if they inſiſted upon it, Orders ſhould be directed for ſuch a Search. Depones, That the laſt of the Particulars taken down in the Paper was, a Demand that the Pannel by himſelf, or others of proper Authority, ſhould procure fifty, forty, or at leaſt thirty Sailors, out of his Majeſty's Ships, who were moſt expert in managing of Cannon, in order to be aſſiſting in the Defence of the City, by taking the Direction of the Artillery that were placed upon the Walls, or in the Town. Upon reading of which, the Pannel fell into ſome Heat of Temper, and ſaid, 'By God, Sir, while I 'am Provoſt of Edinburgh, Sailors ſhall not be admitted.' And the Deponent having repreſented to him, That there were none in Town that knew how to manage Cannon; and that Application had been made at the Caſtle, but no Gunners could be ſpared from thence; and aſked, What he would ſubſtitute in their Place? he made no Anſwer, but the former repeated, That, by God, while he was Provoſt of Edinburgh, no Sailor ſhould be admitted. And the Deponent being greatly ſurpriſed, as ſome time before, when he the Deponent had been inſiſting with him that Cannon ſhould be provided for the Defence of the Place; he objected againſt it, and ſaid, He could not ſee they could be of any Uſe, as we had Nobody that knew how to manage them: The Deponent therefore, raiſing his Voice, demanded to know the Reaſon of ſuch an extraordinary Piece of Conduct. To which the Pannel replied, with ſome Heat, 'My 'Reaſon, Sir, is plain. If they ſhould be admitted here, it would be, 'Damn your Blood, Jack; fire away, and be damn'd; and ſo they would 'fire upon, and murder the Inhabitants: And it is my Duty to protect 'the Lives of the Inhabitants, as well as to defend the Town againſt the 'Rebels;' or Words to that Purpoſe. Whereupon the Deponent left him.

IX. James Grant, Merchant, and preſent Town-Treaſurer of Edinburgh, depones, That, in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th of September 1745, which was the Day that immediately preceded that upon which the Rebels entered the City, the Deponent was in the Goldſmiths-Hall, where the Pannel, and a good many other People, were met together; and heard two or three of thoſe who were preſent, whom the Pannel publickly deſired might give their Opinion, whether it was proper to defend the Town, or not, and who declined to explain themſelves upon that Matter, obſerve to him, that if the Town was to be delivered up, proper Meaſures ought to be taken for preſerving the Arms from falling into the Hands of the Rebels. And being interrogate for the Pannel, whether it related to the Government's Arms, or to the Arms of the City? depones, He does not remember any Diſtinction was made; or further, than that the Arms in general were mentioned. And further ſays, That this Obſervation was made by Major Thomas Cochran and Captain James Murray, and, as the Deponent thinks, by Dean of Guild Hathern. And depones, That he does not remember, whether any thing was ſaid further upon that Subject. Depones, That when ſeveral of the Perſons preſent had declined to give their Opinion as to defending the Town, the Provoſt declared, That it was his Opinion it ought to be defended; and that they might hope for better Terms, in caſe the Town were at laſt to be ſurrendered, with Arms in their Hands. That, betwixt Three and Four in the Afternoon, while the Deponent was at this Meeting, Mr. Groſt came in, ſent, as the Deponent believes, from the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, or ſome other Perſon; and made an Offer to the Pannel of a hundred Dragoons, to aſſiſt in defending the City, if he would ſend an Order for their entering the ſame. To which the Pannel anſwered, He would ſign no Order; but if they came in, they ſhould be made very welcome. And depones, That he left the Meeting, and went home. And being interrogate, Why he left the Meeting, when they were deliberating concerning the Defence of the Town? ſaith, That he went away in the Belief that the Town was to be ſurrendered; induced to think ſo from the Dragoons marching Eaſtward; and that he perceived the Well-affected in the Town had a Jealouſy of the Provoſt: And the Deponent likewiſe perceived, that the Removal of the Dragoons had made People's Spirits ſink. Depones, That, ſome few Days before the Rebels entered the Town, the Pannel ſpoke to the Deponent in the Parliament-cloſe, and told him, That, as the Volunteers had made the Propoſal of bearing the Charges of repairing the City-walls, he thought it was proper the Money ſhould be immediately advanced, becauſe he doubted, if that was not done, it would in the end fall upon the Town. To which the Deponent anſwered, That it could not be expected they could advance the Money at that time. Further ſays, That Mr. Alexander Webſter joined them at this Converſation; and the Pannel made the ſame Propoſition to Mr. Webſter that he had made to the Deponent; who made the ſame Return as the Deponent had done. And being interrogate for the Pannel, Whether this Converſation related to the Reparation of the Walls, as to which Orders had been given by the Council to repair the ſame, and the Reparation was going on; or as to ſome additional Fortification, which had been propoſed by the Volunteers? depones, That he knows Orders had been given by the Council for repairing the Walls before that Converſation happened; but that this Converſation related to the Expence of the Work: But whether it was the Expence of the Reparation of the Walls, or of ſome new projected Piece of Fortification, the Deponent cannot be poſitive.

X. Mr. Joſeph Williamſon, Advocate, one of the principal Clerks of the City of Edinburgh, depones, That he was preſent at a Meeting of ſeveral of the Burgeſſes of the City of Edinburgh, upon the 5th September 1745; when it was agreed, that a Petition ſhould be preſented to the Lord Provoſt, for Leave to ſuch of the Citizens as ſhould pleaſe to aſſociate themſelves as Volunteers for the Defence of the City. That accordingly ſuch a Petition was framed; and the Deponent aſſiſted in framing it. And the Paper marked Number 5, in the Liſt of Writings ſubjoined to the Libel, being ſhewn to him, depones, It is the ſame framed as above; which was ſigned by all the Company preſent that Night. That he did not ſee this Application offered to the Pannel the next Day; but had Occaſion to converſe with him on the Subject of it in the Evening of that Day; when he told the Deponent, that he looked upon the Paper as treaſonable; and aſked his Opinion thereanent. To which he anſwered, He did not think it treaſonable, to take up Arms in Defence of the King and the Country, though without Warrant, there being a ſubſiſting Rebellion in the Country. Depones, That, after the Petition was approved of, he was preſent at making a Draught of an Advertiſement to be inſerted in the News-papers; in which there were Words to this Purpoſe: That the Pannel heartily agreed or concurred with the Deſire of the ſaid Petition. That two of the Company, when the Draught was made, were ſent to wait upon the Pannel with it. That they went; and, when they returned, reported the Draught with an Amendment made by the Pannel's Order, by daſhing out the Words, heartily agree or concur; and putting in place thereof, acquieſced in: And that he heard the ſaid Report, and ſaw the ſaid Amendment. Depones, That he was preſent at a Meeting in the New Church Iſle, upon the 9th September foreſaid; to which the Pannel came, and named the ſix Captains; and, as the Deponent remembers, expreſſed his Satisfaction with the Zeal of the Petitioners; but in what Terms, he does not remember: Nor did he himſelf obſerve any contrary or diſreſpectful Behaviour of the Pannel's on that Occaſion, tho' he heard others talk differently of it. Depones, That, upon Wedneſday the 11th September foreſaid, the Deponent went round the City-wall, from the Briſtow Port to the Weſt Port; upon which he ſaw but four or five Men working. That, on Friday thereafter, the 13th, he was deſired by ſeveral of his Brethren Volunteers, to remonſtrate to the Provoſt and Council, that the Reparation of the City-walls was carried on ſlowly; and to lay before them ſome Propoſals that were thought neceſſary for that Purpoſe: Some of which the Council agreed to, and ſome were diſagreed to: But that he remembers only one Article diſagreed to, relating to a Houſe at the Potter-row Port, which was propoſed to be taken down, or ſo built up as not to infeſt the Walls at that Port. That the Deponent and the Pannel had ſome warm Words with reſpect to the Works going on ſlowly: And he propoſed to the Pannel, that Bailie Hamilton ſhould be authoriſed to overſee theſe Works; but the Pannel replied, That that Truſt was already committed to Bailie Robert Baillie. Depones, That he was not preſent when the Propoſal for putting Arms only in the Hands of ſuch of the Trained-bands as were well-affected to the Government, was first made: But some time after, he heard the same Proposal renewed to the Pannel; and his Answer was, He could not think of distinguishing or discriminating one Part of the Trained-Bands from another. That upon Wednesday the 11th of September, he and, he thinks, Bailie Wilson carried a Proposal to the Pannel, to search for Arms within and in the Neighbourhood of the City; and he believed a former Message had been carried to the Pannel for that Effect. That the Pannel answered, He was willing a Search should be made in the Neighbourhood; but he could not agree to make it within the City, because it would create a great deal of Confusion, as he said. Depones, That he was not at the general Meeting held in the New-Church Isle, upon the Afternoon of the 16th of September; because, just before it, the Fire-Bell was rung, which was the Signal to the Volunteers to repair to their several Posts; and which he accordingly did: And that neither before his repairing thither, nor while he staid there, was there any Orders sent by the Pannel, to the Volunteers how to dispose of themselves, so far as he knows: And that Provost Drummond, then a Captain of one of the Companies of Volunteers, having represented to the other Officers, that no Orders had come how they were to dispose of themselves, suggested, that he thought it was proper, since they got their Arms from the Government, and it seemed were not to use them, or were not at Liberty to use them, or Words to that Purpose, that therefore it would be proper for them to return them to the Castle. Upon which they immediately marched up to the Castle, and delivered up their Arms. And being interrogate, how long he thinks they might have been at the Alarm-post, before they marched up and delivered the Arms; and how the Volunteers came to take upon them, without Orders from the Pannel, their Colonel, or without knowing that they were to receive no Order, to deliver them up? depones, That he cannot precisely tell how long the Volunteers were upon the Alarm-post; but that he went to Captain (Provost) Macaulay's House, whose Lieutenant he was, desiring him to go to the College-Yards to their Company; that after going there, and finding the Company was gone, they returned to the Lawn-Market; but by the Way, the Deponent stepped into the Goldsmiths-Hall, where he staid hardly so much as a Quarter of an Hour: That, when he came to the Lawn-Market, the Company was there: And that there were two Chests of Arms in the College-Yards, and the Carts, Carters and Horses, which had brought them, standing by, without so much as a Centry; which Mr. Macaulay and he insisted they should carry back again; but which the Carters refused at first to do: And an Officer, who came from the Castle, also declined to have it done; because his Orders were to leave them there: And what betwixt persuading the Officer to allow them to be carried back, and threatening the Carters to yoke their Horses to carry them, which at length was complied with, a good deal of Time was spent: And when the Arms were delivered into the Castle, it began to be duskish. And to the latter Part of the above Interrogatory, depones, That about the Time that, without Command, the Volunteers delivered up their Arms, it was whispered by severals among them, though he himself did not say so, that they were betrayed; and they would be cut in Pieces, without doing any good Service: But the publick Reason given as above was, That they had got no Orders, and had no Reason to expect any. Depones, That one Part of the Proposals made by the Deponent to the Pannel, was in relation to bringing in long Ladders in the Suburbs of the Town; to which the Pannel agreed, and said, He would issue Orders accordingly. He does not know if such Orders were given or not; but he, upon Application to the Bailie of Potter-row, and by his Warrant, seized, and brought into the Town, several long Ladders, about fourteen or sixteen, from the Potter-row, and thereabouts, upon the 16th September.

XI. Sir Robert Dickson, of Carberry, Baronet, depones, That in the Evening of Sunday the 15th September 1745, he came to the City of Edinburgh upon the Head of one hundred and fifty Volunteers from Inveresk, Musselburgh, and the Neighbourhood, according to the Report of Daniel Matthison, an old Serjeant, who had drawn them up to number them. That he acquainted the Pannel that Night about Ten o'Clock, that he had marched these Volunteers to assist in Defence of the City, under his Command, against the Rebels; and desired that the Pannel might furnish him and them with Arms for that Purpose. That the Deponent met with a so and so Reception; that is, not such as he expected: For that he did not thank him for bringing in the Men, but carried him into a Room in Mrs. Clarke's House, where there were several of his Acquaintances. That the Pannel said, It was too late to give out Arms to them that Night, but that they should have them next Morning. That the Pannel ordered a Refreshment for the Men; and they were quartered in the New-Church Isle. That no Arms were delivered to them next Morning. That the Deponent applied to the Pannel on the Monday Morning for Arms; and he answered, They should have them by Nine o'Clock: But they were not then delivered; and the Men staid in the Town till about Mid-day, Monday; and he believes went then home. But that an Hour after the Deponent had been with the Pannel that Morning, he desired Bailie Lindsay of Musselburgh to go to the Pannel, and inquire for the Arms; for he the Deponent would not go near him again. That when the Deponent talked with the Pannel that Morning, he the Pannel proposed to the Deponent, that his Men he had brought to Town should inlist in the Edinburgh Regiment.

XII. Gavin Hamilton, Bookseller, and late one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That he was desired by some of the Meeting which had formed and presented the Petition to the Pannel and Council of Edinburgh, in relation to the Association of Volunteers, to meet with them, to talk on that Subject, on the Evening of the 6th of September 1745. That the Pannel declined going, upon account of his being tired going round the Walls of the City, with this Deponent, the deceased Mr. Colin Maclaurin, and several others. And the Deponent replied, That the Gentlemen of that Meeting positively expected him there. To which the Pannel made no Reply; but he understood the Pannel went to the Meeting, though he the Deponent was not there. Depones, That after the Council of Edinburgh had ordered the City-Walls to be repaired in September 1745; this Deponent upon the 6th of September, walked round the whole of them with the Pannel. That on the 7th of September, he again went to visit the said Work; and found but nine Men working at that Work, although he expected to have seen two or three hundred; and that meeting with Deacon Mack, who had the Charge of the Workmen, he asked the Deacon, How it came there were so few People employed in the said Reparation? And he thinks the Deacon answered him, That the Pannel had told him, that unless he had a more special Warrant for his Work, he might get it for his Payment. That that very Day, this being complained of in Council, that the Work was carried on very slowly, the Deacon obtained a more special Warrant for making Reparations of the Walls, and obtained Press-Warrants against Workmen. That the next Day, being the 8th of September, he again made the Round of the Walls, and found only fourteen Men at Work. That several Complaints were made of the Slowness of the Work to the Deponent, and several others of the Council: But the Deponent knows not whether any such Complaints were made to the Pannel. Depones, That when the Reparation of the Walls was first proposed, the Pannel objected to it, on account of the Expence, and the Lowness of the Town's Funds: But the Deponent recovered, from Bailie Hope, he thinks, the Account of the like Expence which was incurred in the Year 1715, amounting to but about two hundred Pound, or three hundred Pound: That this Objection was dropped, and the Work begun. That he knows nothing of the Proposal that was made to the Pannel, for getting Sailors expert in Gunnery to serve the City-Cannon; but some time after he heard of that Proposal, he saw upon the Council-Table a Letter lying from the Commander of the Ursula, one of his Majesty's Ships, addressed to the Pannel, acquainting him, that he had no Gunners to spare for the Service of the City: And the Deponent supposes that this was an Answer to a Letter wrote by the Pannel demanding Gunners. Depones, That he himself made a Proposal to the Pannel, for laying aside the Trained-Bands from the Service of the City, because he believed there were too many disaffected to the Government amongst them. That the Pannel rejected it; and said, he would stand for the Honour of the Trained-Bands. Depones, That some Volunteers came from the Neighbourhood of Musselburgh, Dalkeith, and other adjacent Places, on the 15th of September; and that the Deponent had Occasion to meet with Dr. Tait, just as he parted with the Pannel: That the Doctor complained, that the Pannel had used him roughly, and was in a Passion at him, for no other Reason, as he said, but for bringing in his Men. Depones, That at a Council-Meeting upon the 16th September 1745, in the Goldsmiths-Hall, he saw a Petition signed by several of the Inhabitants of Edinburgh, and particularly by some of his own Acquaintances, (whom he chided for having signed it) desiring a general Meeting to be called, to consider what was proper to be done. That he does not know how the said Petition came in; nor does he remember whether it was read or not; nor can he say, that it was presented, or put in the Hands of the Pannel, though he saw it in his Hand. And the Paper, marked Number 8. in the List subjoined to the criminal Letters, being exhibited to the Deponent, depones, It is the same which he saw on the Table, in the Goldsmiths-Hall, and in the Pannel's Hand. That the Meeting in the Goldsmiths-Hall soon broke up, and another was immediately held in the New-Church Isle; at both which the Pannel presided. That in this last Meeting, there was a great deal of Confusion; the Petition was again talked of; but he does not remember it was read: And it was under the Consideration of that Meeting, whether the Town should be defended, or delivered up to the Rebels? and the far greater Number of the Meeting were for the latter. It was also under Consideration, if some Dragoons should be brought into the Town for the Defence of the City, in consequence of Offers to that Purpose, severally made by Mr. Groset, and Mr. Lindsay, Secretary at War; but the Cry of the Generality was, No Dragoons, No Dragoons: and he heard the Pannel repeat these Words, No Dragoons; but whether as his own Opinion, or as the Sense of the Meeting, he cannot say: But the Meeting rested in that Opinion. That in the same Meeting, the Deponent proposed, that the Arms of the City should be secured in the Castle, since the Meeting had resolved not to defend it; and the same Proposal also comprehended the King's Arms then in it: Which Proposal the Pannel repeated to the Meeting, as coming from the Deponent; and was agreed to. But afterwards it being moved, and insisted on, that if the Arms were delivered into the Castle, they could expect no Capitulation or Terms, the Resolution of delivering them into the Castle was altered. After which, such of the Members of the Council as were in the Meeting, went to the Goldsmiths-Hall; where, and in the Council-Chamber, they remained all Night. Depones, That at the Meeting in the Goldsmiths-Hall, before that in the New-Church Isle, and at the said Meeting in the New-Church Isle, there was an Offer of Dragoons made to the Pannel twice, once by Mr. Groset, and another Time by Mr. Lindsay, Secretary at War; to one of which (he thinks it was to Mr. Lindsay, in the New-Church Isle, who pressed the Offer much upon the Pannel) he answered, If the commanding Officer would send in Dragoons, he might do it; but he, the Pannel, would give no Orders for that Purpose. The other Offer by Mr. Groset, which he also pressed much, and which the Deponent thinks was the first, being made in the Goldsmiths-Hall, the Pannel refused to accept of. Depones, That at the Meeting in the New-Church Isle, there was a Letter from the Pretender's Son brought in, in what Manner he knows not, further than it was said to be handed in from the Door: And the first Time he saw it, was in the Hands of Deacon Orrock; who broke it open, and looked at the Subscription, and was going to read it; but a Cry being made against reading it, the Members of the Council insisted it should not be read; and the Pannel forbid it to be read. And it was not read at that Time; but it was read in the Goldsmiths-Hall, to which, as said is, the Pannel and the Council retired. That, upon reading this Letter, it was proposed what kind of Answer should be made to it: And it was moved, That the Advice of the Assessors should be taken upon it. That they were accordingly sent for; but none of them were in Town, except Mr. Patrick Haldane; who came down to them a little, but declined to give any Advice. And, in Explication of what he has already said, depones, That the Motion for sending for the Assessors, arose upon a Proposal which had been made, That the City should capitulate or surrender upon Terms; and that the Pannel having asked at several of the Council, if they would go and capitulate? which they declined to do, it was then, or about that Time, that the Motion for taking the Advice of the Assessors was made. That Mr.

Haldane was sent for, and came; and then one of these two Things was proposed to Mr. Haldane to give his Advice upon, either what was proper to be done in the present Juncture in general, or what should be done in relation to answering the said Letter, he does not remember which; to which he thinks Mr. Haldane said, These things are too difficult for me to give any Opinion of; and thereupon rose from his Seat, and walked off; but does not remember if the Letter was read or shewn to Mr. Haldane. That afterwards the Pannel changed the Terms of his Proposals; and suggested, that it might be proper to send out some of their Number, to gain Time: And a Committee of the Council of four, was appointed to go, whereof the Deponent was one; and their Instructions were, to call only for such of the Gentlemen in the Rebel Army as they were acquainted with; and to propose to them, if they would send some of their Number into the City, to tell what they proposed to have done; and to assure, upon the Part of the Pannel, such as should be sent in, that they should be allowed to return safely. That the said Deputation accordingly went out; and the Paper, marked No 2. signed and sealed by John Murray, the Pretender's Son's Secretary, now exhibit and shewn to the Deponent, was given to him, as the Answer to the first Deputation; which he refers to as Part of his Deposition. That the Deponent having given in this Paper, as the Report of the said Deputation, it was objected to it, That it could not be agreed to by the Council; and John Coutts, then one of the Councillors, and late Provost of the City, said, That it was impossible to agree to it; and that they must send back again another Deputation, to see and get better Terms. Depones, That, when he returned, he was told by some Members of the Council, That Sir John Cope, with the Fleet in which the Troops under his Command were, were arrived at Dunbar. That then it was proposed, that a fresh Deputation might be sent to obtain better Terms; which was agreed to. The Deponent was proposed to be one of the Deputies; but refused it, and very soon thereafter left the Council: But he understood, that a Deputation of four did go, and was told so by one of the Deputies; and saw the Paper marked N° 3. mentioned in the List of Writings; which was the Result of that second Deputation. Depones, That of the City-arms there were between thirteen and fourteen hundred Firelocks and Bayonets; about a hundred of which Number were in bad Condition. Depones, That, after the Pannel, and the Deponent, with the other Members of Council, retired out of the New Church Isle, to Goldsmiths-Hall, or Laigh Council-House, he was deputed by the Pannel, and the other Councillors, to wait of the Lord Justice-Clerk, that he might give his Advice, either to the Council, or to as many of them as should wait upon him, what it was proper for them, at that Juncture, to do; and others at the same time were appointed to carry the same Message to the Lord Advocate and Solicitor for the Time. The Deponent went, in obedience to this Order; but, before he had gone a little Way from the Goldsmiths-Hall, he received certain Information, that the Lord Justice-Clerk had left the City; which he reported to the Pannel, and the Council, in the Goldsmiths-Hall. And depones, That the same Answer with respect to the then Lord Advocate and Solicitor, was returned in the Deponent's Hearing, That they had left the Town.

XIII. John Wilson, Merchant, and late one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That, upon a Saturday towards the End of August, the Deponent was pressed by several of the Burghers to go to the Provost, and complain, that nothing was a-doing for the Defence of the City, notwithstanding that it was then certain that the Pretender's Son was landed in the North, and on his March Southwards. That the Deponent accordingly went the same Day; and for the above Reasons, proposed, that the Provost should forthwith call a Meeting of the old and substantial Burgesses of the Town. That the Provost at first received the Proposal with a little Laugh; but, after Reflection, agreed to it. That the Deponent proposed that the Meeting should be called that same Night; but the Pannel said, the Burghers would be gone to their Diversions, and would not be got together. To which the Deponent answered, That no Time was to be lost; and, if the Meeting was not called that Night, it should be early Monday Morning. That the Deponent, at the same time, told the Pannel, that, during the Rebellion in the Year 1715, the Town of Glasgow had raised a Regiment of 500 Men, and he was sure that the City of Edinburgh could raise 1000; but the Pannel seemed to laugh at the Proposal, believing that Money could not be got to pay them; and said to the Deponent, You remember, John, that upon a certain Occasion, we could not raise a small Sum for a particular Purpose; and how do you imagine we should be able to maintain 1000 Men? He added further, That they could not raise such a Body of Men, without being guilty of Treason, unless they had the King's Sign-manual. To which the Deponent answered, That he knew that very well; but, if That were applied for, it might be got. Depones, That the Meeting of the Inhabitants was not called till the Tuesday; and then it was held in one of the Church Isles, where two or three hundred Burgesses were present, and the same Proposal was again made of raising a Regiment of 1000 Men; and several other Proposals were made for putting the City into a Posture of Defence. That the Pannel did not seem to oppose any of these Proposals. That it was agreed by the Meeting, to apply to the Crown-Lawyers to procure his Majesty's Sign-manual for raising the Regiment; and also, to take their Opinion concerning certain Volunteers who offered their Service. Depones, That, in that Meeting, the Pannel, who presided in it, directing his Discourse to the Deponent, said, in a jocular Way, John, this is your Meeting. To which the Deponent answered, My Lord, I am not ashamed of it. Depones, That, after the said Meeting, a Petition was drawn up, to be signed by such of the Inhabitants as were so disposed; praying the Magistrates and Council's Allowance to associate themselves as Volunteers in Defence of the City; and several different Copies of the same Petition were left in the New Church Isle to be signed, from time to time, by such of the Inhabitants as inclined: And the Petition in the Clerk's Hands, now shewn to the Deponent, being the 5th in the List of Writings subjoined to the Criminal Letters, is the Petition that was signed by this Deponent. That, when they had got about two hundred Subscriptions, a Committee of four or five of them were sent to the Pannel, to desire he would be pleased to name their Officers: That the Deponent and Bailie Nimmo were two of those who were sent: That they thought the Pannel was very dilatory in naming their Officers. That the Deponent himself applied two or three different Times to him for that Purpose; and several Days intervened betwixt the first Application, and his naming any of them; and, at last, he named the Captains, and allowed them to name their Subalterns: But it was then but about ten Days before the Rebels got Possession of the Town. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That they had several Meetings in the New Church Isle with the Pannel; and he doubts not but the Pannel may have named the Captains on Saturday the 7th of September, though the Deponent cannot be certain of the Day of the Week or Month; but is sure, that a List had been given to the Pannel, out of which he might name these Captains, five or six Days before he named them. And, being further interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That it was understood, that the Field-Officers were to be named, not from among the Volunteers themselves, but proper Persons to be found who were more skilled in military Affairs. Depones, That there were many Complaints, that the Reparation of the Town-Walls went on very slowly; and particularly remembers, that that Part of the Wall which seemed most dangerous, to wit, at the College Kirk, and from the New Port to Leith Wynd, was not repaired or barricaded till Monday the 16th of September, the very Day before the Rebels entered the Town: And the Deponent, on that Monday, went to the Council himself, and complained, and got proper Warrants to press Workmen; one whereof was signed by Bailie Robert Baillie, and another of the Volunteers got a Warrant, signed by Bailie Mansfield. That Bailie Robert Baillie was the Second Bailie that Year; and the Second Bailie is called The Bailie of the Publick Works; because, by his Office, he has the Over-sight of these Works. That the Deponent had several Times complained to the Pannel, and others of the Magistrates, that these Works went on very slowly: And particularly remembers, that he once complained to the Pannel himself on that Account; and the Pannel answered, That he had given Orders to Bailie Baillie about the Works, and Power to press Workmen. But depones, That, about that Time, the Election of the Deacons was going on, which happened upon a Saturday; and then the Work went much slower on than at other times; and the Trades-people were so taken up about their Elections, that the Deponent believes it was hardly in the Power of the Pannel or Magistrates to get the Tradesmen to work. And being further interrogate for the Pannel, Whether that Part of the Wall above deponed upon, at the College Kirk, and from the New Port to Leith Wynd, was not so far repaired before the 16th of September, that the Breaches were made up, and the Parapet built, so that nothing was wanting, but the barricading the Ports? depones, That it was another Person, and not the Deponent, who was employed to see that Part of the Repairs made on the 16th; and therefore the Deponent cannot with Certainty answer the Question: But knows, that these Ports had not been barricaded as some of the other Ports of the Town had been (which was all the Deponent meant in the former Part of his Oath on this Article); and knows that a great many Hands were got, and a great deal of Work done that Day; and the Tradesmen themselves said, That they had done more that Day than for some Days before. Depones, That the Deponent was present at a Meeting that several of the Burghers in Town had with the Pannel in the House of Mr. Wilson, Taverner in Edinburgh; and which Meeting was held in consequence of a Request made by some of these Burghers, that the Pannel should meet with them: And there were present at the Meeting a good Number, the Deponent cannot be positive how many; but there were, he thinks, twenty, or thirty, or forty of them: And that Meeting desired of the Pannel, that he would discriminate the Trained-Bands one from another, and put Arms only in the Hands of such as were known, by the old Burghers, to be well-affected to the Government: But the Pannel said, That that was too delicate a Point for him to meddle with. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, He knows nothing of that Proposal's being made to the Council. Depones, That he knows there came in several Volunteers from Musselburgh and Inveresk, along with Sir Robert Dickson; and another Body of Volunteers from Dalkeith, under the Command of Mr. Lewis Douglas Advocate, and Dr. Tait. That the Deponent knows nothing of their Reception by the Pannel, further than that the Body that came from Dalkeith, on Saturday the 14th, were lodged in the High School, and ordered to keep Guard at the High School Yards; but were not joined to any other Body of Troops till Monday at Two o'clock Afternoon, that the Deponent went to the Pannel's House, and proposed that they should be joined to some other Company: And the Pannel desired him to join them to any Corps that he thought proper; and the Deponent accordingly joined them to that Company of Volunteers where he himself served, and which was commanded by Sir George Preston. Depones, That, in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th of September, as the Deponent was keeping Guard at the Netherbow Port, he was informed, that there was to be a Meeting of the Inhabitants in the New Church Isle; and it was reported that the Town was to be delivered up: Upon which the Deponent asked Leave of his Captain, Sir George Preston, to go to see what was doing. That the Deponent came, and found the Pannel, and most of the Magistrates, with several of the Inhabitants, in Goldsmiths-Hall. That the Deponent said to the Pannel, What, are you a-going to give up the Town, when we have thirteen hundred Men in Arms, that are ready and willing to defend it to the utmost? To which it was answered, either by Mr. Lauder the Surgeon, or by Mr. Orrock, Your Champion Mr. Williamson has given up the Defence of the Town; and do you pretend to hold it out? The Deponent replied, That he would not believe that, unless he had it from Mr. Williamson's own Mouth; for none but a Coward, or a Jacobite, would give it up. Upon which Mr. Williamson appeared; and said, He was willing to hold it out to the utmost, if his Men would stand by him; but that he had not above ten or twelve Men that appeared where they should have been. And the Deponent says, Mr. Williamson was Lieutenant to a Company of Edinburgh Volunteers. That he knows not what the Number of that Company was; but that he believes it was fifty, sixty, or seventy Men. That the Deponent then asked the Pannel, What he was resolved to do? And he said, That he would take the Advice of his Brother-Burgesses. That, about this Time, Mr. Grosset came into the Meeting with a Message from some of the Crown-Lawyers, offering the Dragoons for the Defence of the City, if the Provost would order them: And the Pannel answered,

That he would give no Orders; but that, if they were ſent in, he would receive them. Depones, That Mr. Laurence Dundas, being in the Meeting, inſiſted, that the Pannel, as Provoſt, ſhould give the Orders for bringing them in: That the Pannel repeated his former Anſwer; and Mr. Dundas, or ſome one of the Meeting, ſaid, That, if he refuſed, he behoved to anſwer for it, if the Town was given up. Depones, That the Deponent was ordered by the Pannel to his Poſt at the Netherbow; and that Inſtant, or in a very little Time, the Fire-bell rung; ſo that the Deponent was not preſent at the Meeting in the New Church Iſle. Depones, That, upon the Deponent's Return to the Netherbow, he acquainted Sir George Preſton of what had paſſed; who thereupon immediately left him, to go to the Meeting; and did not return for Half an Hour, or an Hour; during which Time the Deponent knew nothing of what was doing. That, upon Sir George's Return, he ordered the Deponent, and the reſt of the Company, and another Company alſo upon Guard there, to march to the Alarm-poſt, which was in the Lawn-market. That, when they came to the Croſs, they got Notice, that the other Companies of Volunteers had gone to the Caſtle, and delivered up their Arms; and, when they came to the Alarm-poſt, finding none of the Volunteers there, they alſo marched up to the Caſtle, and delivered up their Arms; and thinks it was then about Sun-ſetting. Depones, That the thirteen hundred armed Men that he mentioned to the Provoſt, as above deponed, were compoſed of the City-Guard, the Edinburgh Regiment, the Edinburgh Volunteers, the Seceders, the Inverеſk, Muſſelburgh, and Dalkeith Volunteers. That the Deponent cannot, from his Memory, now ſpecify the particular Number of each Corps: But he is ſure, that, at that Time, he did count them, and they did amount to the foreſaid Number; and were all well armed with Guns, Swords, and Bayonets. Depones, That, by counting, the Deponent means no more than adding the Numbers of the ſeveral Corps as reported by their Officers.

XIV. Walter Groſet, late Collector of the Cuſtoms at Alloa, now one of the General Inſpectors of the Cuſtoms of Scotland, depones, That, upon Monday Afternoon the 16th of September 1745, as the Deponent was coming to Town in Company with Lord Juſtice-Clerk, they met ſeveral People coming full Speed out of Town; who informed them, that the Rebels were by that Time at the Weſt Port. That thereupon Lord Juſtice-Clerk ſent the Deponent with a Meſſage to the Pannel, then Lord Provoſt of the City, while at the ſame Time the Lord Juſtice-Clerk himſelf rode to meet the Dragoons, who were then a Mile North-eaſt of the City of Edinburgh: That the Meſſage to the Pannel was, to know whether he was reſolved to defend the City of Edinburgh; to preſs his defending it; and to aſſure him, if he was to defend it, he ſhould have a hundred Dragoons, or as many as he pleaſed to deſire; and to get the Pannel's Anſwer. That the Deponent, in his Way to the Town, met the then Lord Advocate, to whom he reported the Meſſage he was ſent with; who approved of it, and preſſed him to haſte to deliver it. That the Deponent found the Pannel in the Goldſmiths-Hall, with ſeverals of the Magiſtrates and Council, and other Perſons, it being then betwixt Three and Four Afternoon; and the Deponent delivered his Meſſage to the Pannel in the above Terms, as from both the Lord Juſtice-Clerk and Lord Advocate. That the Pannel ſhifted to give a direct Anſwer to the Meſſage: And, being preſſed to it by ſeverals of the Meeting, he at laſt made a Speech; in which he ſaid, He would do nothing unworthy of the Station which he was in: He urged the Uncertainty of Sir John Cope's coming to their Relief, and the Danger of the Lives and Properties of the Inhabitants; and concluded, That he was againſt defending the Town; but ſaid he would be adviſed by his Council. And being interrogate for the Pannel, What were the Expreſſions that imported his being againſt the Defence of the Town? depones, That he cannot remember the particular Words; but the whole Purport of his Speech tended that Way. Depones, That, as there were ſeveral Altercations betwixt the Deponent, as well as other Perſons preſent, and the Pannel, the Deponent deſired an Anſwer in Writing: Which the Pannel declined to give, ſaying, That the Deponent was very capable to return a verbal Anſwer. That the Deponent ſtill inſiſted for an Anſwer in Writing; and the Pannel repeated the ſame Anſwer. Then the Deponent ſaid, He could make nothing elſe of the Pannel's Anſwer, but that he refuſed to defend the Town, and admit the Dragoons. And, upon that, the Pannel agreed to give him a written Anſwer; and believes might have ſaid, That the Deponent miſtook him. That the Pannel accordingly gave the Deponent an Anſwer in Writing, directed to the Lord Advocate and Lord Juſtice-Clerk. And being ſhewn the Letter in the Clerk's Hands, produced in this Trial by Mr. Craigie, a preceding Witneſs, depones, That that Letter is the Anſwer he then got from the Pannel. Depones, That, upon receiving that open Letter, and reading it, he ſaid to the Pannel, That he had already aſſured him from Lord Advocate and Lord Juſtice-Clerk, that it was their Opinion that he ſhould defend the Town; and that he ſhould have a hundred, or as many Dragoons as he ſhould deſire, to aſſiſt in the Defence of it; and that he muſt anſwer for the Conſequence of that unneceſſary Delay. Upon which the Pannel left the Meeting, and the Deponent came off with the written Anſwer. Depones, That, at the above Meeting, in anſwer to what the Pannel had ſaid of the Uncertainty of Sir John Cope's coming in Time, the Deponent ſaid, That as they had certain Advice, that Sir John Cope and the Troops were at Aberdeen, and were to embark for Leith, they had Reaſon every Hour to look for their Landing. Depones, That, at the ſame Meeting, ſome of the Company, and, the Deponent thinks, Capt. James Murray, ſaid, That, if the Town was not to be defended, it was neceſſary that Care ſhould be taken of the Arms in it, ſo as they ſhould not fall into the Hands of the Rebels: And, as the Deponent underſtood it, that Speech was directed to the Pannel, as was every thing elſe ſpoke out in that Meeting, in which he preſided; but the Pannel made no Anſwer to it. Depones, That the Deponent returned from that Meeting to the Lord Juſtice-Clerk's at Brunſtaine, and ſhewed him the aforeſaid written Anſwer. That the Lord Juſtice-Clerk ſent him immediately with it to the Lord Advocate, and Brigadier Fowkes, then at Muſſelburgh. That the Deponent delivered the ſaid written Anſwer to Lord Advocate. That by that Time Lord Advocate had got Advice by two Letters from Dunbar, of the Arrival of Sir John Cope with the Tranſports, and Troops under his Command, off that Place; and Lord Advocate inſiſted, that the Deponent ſhould immediately return to Edinburgh, and ſhew the Pannel thoſe Advices he had got; and at the ſame time wrote a Letter, certifying, that theſe Letters carried by the Deponent were the original Letters carrying the Account of Sir John Cope's Arrival. That the Deponent forthwith ſet out from Muſſelburgh, it beginning then to grow dark, and came with all the Speed he could make to Edinburgh; and found the Pannel, with his Council, in the Council-chamber, and put into his Hands the Lord Advocate's Letter, with the foreſaid Letters of Advice. That the Pannel, upon reading them, ſaid, They were come too late; for they had agreed to capitulate, and had ſent ſome of their Number to treat about the Terms; and at the ſame time reached to the Deponent a Letter, which, upon opening it, the Deponent found to be ſigned, Charles, P. R. and is the ſame Letter mentioned in the firſt Article of the Liſt of Writings ſubjoined to the criminal Letters; the ſame being now ſhewn to the Deponent. Depones, That the Deponent then propoſed, that as probably the People ſent out to the Rebel-Camp could not by that Time be got the Length of the Camp, a Meſſenger ſhould be immediately ſent to bring them back; which the Pannel agreed to; and it was done accordingly. That, about that Time, Provoſt Drummond came into the Council-houſe, and he and Provoſt Macaulay inſiſted, that they ſhould then reſume the Defence of the Town; that, for that End, the Fire-bell ſhould be rung, That being the Signal for convening the Inhabitants, or bringing them to their Poſts. That the Pannel anſwered, That they muſt be tender of the Blood of their Fellow-Burghers: That, ſhould they ring the Alarm-bell, the Rebels might hear it; and ſhould thoſe of their Number, who were ſent out to treat with them, be arrived at the Camp, they might hang them, or uſe them ill; or Words to that Purpoſe. That ſome others in the Meeting ſaid the ſame thing; particularly Dean of Guild Hathorn, as the Deponent thinks, but cannot be poſitive. Depones, That ſome of the Company, the Deponent thinks Provoſt Drummond, anſwered, That the City ought not to lay down their Arms till the Treaty was concluded; and the preparing for their Defence, was the beſt Way for obtaining good Terms: And, at the ſame time, propoſed, that, if they did not incline to ring the Fire-bell, a Bank might be ſent through the Town (by which the Deponent underſtood beating a Drum), or any other Method for bringing the Inhabitants together. To which the Pannel anſwered, That that was a Matter of too great Importance for him to take upon him by himſelf, for he would be determined by his Council. That Provoſt Drummond ſaid to the Pannel, That he was the Perſon that muſt give the Orders, and muſt anſwer for them; and the Council had nothing to do in it. Depones, That the Council, at leaſt ſeverals of them whom he knew, were preſent in the Meeting, but none of them ſpoke. That then the Pannel was going to leave the Chair; but ſome of the Council inſiſted that he ſhould keep it; which he did accordingly. Depones, That thereafter the Pannel, and ſome others of the Council, particularly, as the Deponent remembers, Mark Sandilands, urged, that the Town was not defenſible. To which the Deponent anſwered, That he well knew the Situation of the Town, and likewiſe knew the Condition of thoſe who were to come againſt it, who had no Cannon, and were very ill armed; and that he would undertake to be one of fifty to defend the weakeſt Part of the Town: And ſome of the Council joined the Deponent, particularly one Mr. Currie, who offered to make one of the fifty, and to find the reſt of them within the Town. That thereupon the Pannel ſeemed to come to a Reſolution to defend the Town, provided General Gueſt would give them what Arms were neceſſary. That the Deponent offered to go to General Gueſt; and that the Pannel might be ſatisfied, that he did not miſtake or miſrepreſent his Meſſage, deſired that one of the Council, who the Pannel could confide in, might be ſent alongſt with him; and accordingly Provoſt Coutts was ſent. That, upon delivering the Meſſage to General Gueſt, he expreſſed his Satisfaction with the Reſolution of defending the Town; aſſured them they ſhould want no Aſſiſtance that was in his Power to give them; and that how ſoon they ſhould diſtribute the Arms properly belonging to the City, they ſhould have what more Arms they had Uſe for: That he had already given Orders to ſpike up the Cannon on the City-walls, and beat off the Trunnions; but that now he would countermand theſe Orders. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That no Part of the Meſſage, ſent by the Pannel to General Gueſt by his Hands, was touching the Dragoons; neither did the Deponent make any Propoſition to the General relating to them. Depones, That, upon Provoſt Coutts and the Deponent's Return from the Caſtle to the Council-chamber, the Pannel told the Deponent, That, as the Meſſenger they had ſent after their Deputies had not overtaken them, the Council were come to a Reſolution not to defend the Town: And the Council, at leaſt ſeverals of them known to the Deponent, were preſent at the Time. Depones, That thereupon it was propoſed, and, as the Deponent thinks, by Provoſt Drummond, That, if the Town was not to be defended, Care at leaſt ſhould be taken to ſecure the Arms, that they ſhould not fall into the Rebels Hands. Upon which the Pannel reached to Provoſt Drummond the before-mentioned Letter, ſigned Charles, P. R.; by which, he ſaid, Mr. Drummond would ſee, that if the Arms were put out of the Way, the Highlanders would plunder the Town. To which Provoſt Drummond anſwered, That if the Town ſhould furniſh the Rebels with Arms to fight againſt the King's Troops, had they not Reaſon to expect, that when the Town ſhould be retaken by the King's Troops, they would look upon the Town as Enemies, and uſe them as ſuch? That thereupon the Deponent inſiſted to have the Pannel's Anſwer in Writing to the Meſſage he had brought him from Lord Advocate. To which the Pannel anſwered, That he had already put too much in Writing that Day, and he would write no more upon the Subject. And thereupon Provoſt Drummond and the Deponent came away. And being interrogate, Whether at this Time, when he left the Pannel in Council, he did not ſay, he was going to bring in the Dragoons? depones, That he was ſo far from ſaying ſo, or intending it, that had he met the Dragoons coming in, he would have turned them back, in reſpect of what had paſſed in his laſt Converſation with the Pannel.

XV. Mr. Lewis Douglas, Advocate, depones, That betwixt Two and Three o'Clock Afternoon of Sunday the 15th September 1745, the Deponent, and one Mr. Tait, a Phyſician in Dalkeith, came with 47 Men, being, ing, as the Deponent thinks, all Inhabitants of Dalkeith, to offer their Service to Provoſt Stewart, to aſſiſt in the Defence of the City of Edinburgh, againſt the Rebels. That, in their Way to Edinburgh, Mr. Tait left the Deponent with the Men, in order to find out the Pannel, to get Arms for them. But about Six o'Clock Mr. Tait returned to the Deponent, and told him, that the Pannel ſaid he had no Arms to give them; and that upon this Mr. Tait had applied to the then Lord Advocate; who told him, that it would be neceſſary for him to draw a Petition, addreſſed to him the Lord Advocate: Which Mr. Tait accordingly did; and the Lord Advocate ſubjoined a Recommendation on the Foot of the Petition, directed to General Gueſt. Which Petition and Recommendation being preſented by Mr. Tait to General Gueſt, General Gueſt granted a Warrant upon Mr. Lyon Storemaſter, to deliver to the Deponent, and the Men that came along with him, fifty Stand of Arms, a Barrel of Ball, and a Barrel of Powder: And that about Six or Seven o'Clock they were accordingly received. Depones, That Mr. Tait informed the Deponent, that when he Mr. Tait converſed at firſt with the Pannel, and was told, as above, by the Pannel, that he had no Arms to give the Men who were coming from Dalkeith; Mr. Tait, upon that, aſking, If the Men might notwithſtanding come into the Town of Edinburgh? the Pannel ſaid, They ſhould be very welcome. That, upon their Return from the Caſtle, the Deponent, with the Men that came along with him, went to the Parliament-Cloſe, where they remained until that Mr. Tait, who had gone in Search of the Pannel, ſhould receive Orders from him, both as to their Quarters, and the Place of the Town which they were to defend. That it was ſome time before Mr. Tait returned; and when he returned, he told the Deponent, that the Pannel declined for ſome time to give any Orders; but at laſt, by the Intereceſſion of Provoſt Drummond, the Quarters which were allotted for them was the High-School; and the Place of the Town they were to defend, was from the Cowgate Port to the Back of the Infirmary. That they remained there, and kept Guard all Night: But in the High-School, where their Quarters were allotted them, they had neither Meat, Coal, or Candle. Depones, That betwixt One and Two o'Clock, as the Deponent thinks, the Pannel made his grand Round: And that then the Deponent, with his Men, turned out their whole Guard to him. That he is poſitive the Pannel did not ſpeak to him; and, ſo far as he remembers, he did not ſpeak to any of the Men: And that Mr. Tait, with a Party of ſixteen Men, eſcorted him from their Guard to the next Guard. Depones, That a Meſſage coming to Mr. Tait about Twelve o'Clock on Monday the 16th of September, giving an Account that his Wife was dangerouſly ill, and who accordingly died that Day, Mr. Tait was obliged to leave the Town, and the Command of the Men wholly upon the Deponent: And the Deponent having gone to wait of the Pannel, to acquaint him of what had happened to Mr. Tait, and to deſire that the Pannel might appoint ſome proper Perſon to command the Men who came along with the Deponent in Conjunction with himſelf; the Pannel made Anſwer, That your Men were in ſo good Order laſt Night, that I do not think you ſtand in Need of any Aſſiſtance; but if you know of any proper Perſon, you may name him, and I will appoint him. Upon this Bailie Wilſon came in, and told he was very glad to ſee the Deponent with the Pannel; for it was upon the ſame Errand he was come to ſpeak to him, to know how theſe Men were to be quartered. The Provoſt's Anſwer was, That he had ſo many Things in his Head, and was ſo much hurried, that he deſired the Bailie might give Orders thereanent himſelf. Depones, That betwixt Ten and Eleven of the Sunday Night, Bailie Wilſon's Wife ſent to the Deponent and Mr. Tait, deſiring that they might come and eat ſomething with her. They accordingly went; and, when in her Houſe, ſhe ſaid ſhe was ſorry they had been ſo little taken Notice of. That the Deponent and Mr. Tait were a good deal ſurpriſed, that none of the Magiſtracy, or thoſe who had the Direction of the Affairs of the Town of Edinburgh, came near them; conſidering the Place which they were ſent to guard, and which, in the Deponent's Apprehenſion, was of very great Importance to the Town of Edinburgh. This made the Deponent believe, and ſay to Mr. Tait, That the Defence of the Town was altogether a Joke; and that he would return next Morning back to Dalkeith. Mr. Tait, in Anſwer to this, ſaid, That he was wrong in thinking in that Manner; for ſuch a Piece of Conduct would appear fooliſh, if they ſhould come the one Day and return the other: And, beſides, if they acted a Part becoming themſelves, they were not anſwerable for the Conduct of others. And being interrogate for the Pannel, How they were provided in Meat, Drink, Coal, and Candle, the Time they remained in the Town of Edinburgh, and when it was they left it? depones, The whole Time they remained in Edinburgh they were obliged to provide for themſelves. And, upon hearing the Fire-bell ring upon Monday Afternoon, he immediately ſent up to know what was the Matter; and the Perſon he ſent, meeting with James Carmichael, Writer to the Signet, Mr. Carmichael ſent the Deponent Word, that it was his Buſineſs to march up his Men forthwith to the Lawn-market. And the Deponent upon this imagined, they were immediately going out to fight the Rebels; and therefore marched up his Men, without Loſs of Time, to the Lawn-market. And when he came there, he found the Volunteers all coming down from the Caſtle, after having delivered up their Arms. Upon which the Deponent marched up his Men to the Caſtle, and delivered in his Arms alſo. And, upon this, the Men got Ladders, ſcaled the Walls, and went to Dalkeith that Night; but he himſelf ſtaid in the Town all that Night.

XVI. Mr. John Tait, Doctor of Medicine in Dalkeith, depones conform to the preceding Witneſs, in ſo far as concerns the Facts which happened while the Deponent was in the Town of Edinburgh; with this Variation, That he does not remember that he uſed the Word declined to Mr. Douglas, when he was giving him an Account of the Orders he then received from the Pannel with reſpect to the Men's Quarters who came along with him, and the Place of the Town they were to guard; but he told Mr. Douglas, that the Pannel delayed giving Orders for ſome time. Neither does he remember, that he uſed that Expreſſion to Mr. Douglas, That it was by the Intereceſſion of Provoſt Drummond that the Orders were then procured; but told him theſe Orders were wrote by Provoſt Drummond, and ſigned by the Pannel. Nor does the Deponent remember the Expreſſion which Mrs. Wilſon had to Mr. Douglas and the Deponent upon their not being ſo much taken Notice of as they ought to be; but remembers there was then ſome ſuch Expreſſion by ſome of the Company.

XVII. Archibald Macaulay, Eſq. late Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh, depones, That he reſided in the Town of Edinburgh in the Months of Auguſt and September 1745, when Accounts were brought that the Pretender's Son was landed in the Weſtern Iſlands, and that he was marching with a Body of Rebels Southward. That the Deponent, being in the Town of Edinburgh in the Year 1715, obſerved then a Zeal and Warmneſs in the Inhabitants, which proceeded from that Diſpoſition appearing firſt in the Magiſtracy, and which ſoon ſpread itſelf among the other Ranks of People. That the Method taken at that Time for the Defence of the City, was by Pariſh-guards, there being four hundred Volunteers, who had aſſociated themſelves together beſides, and who were very well diſciplined before the Rebels came then near to the Town. That the Trained-Bands were laid aſide, as being a promiſcuous Sett of People, whereof many were diſaffected; and the Care of the Town was given, in place of them, to the Pariſh and City-Guards, in whoſe Hands Arms were put, as being known to be People well-affected to the Government. That, upon the late Rebellion, the Deponent did not obſerve in the Town of Edinburgh, ſuch a Keenneſs and Zeal for the Support of his Majeſty's Government; and at this Time nothing but Coldriſeneſs [i. e. Lukewarmneſs]. But hearing that the Rebels intended to come to the Town of Edinburgh, although at firſt it was reported they intended to paſs another Way, the Deponent met with ſome other well-affected People of the Town, and expreſſing his Concern for the Welfare of it, they propoſed the raiſing of a Regiment of 1000 Men, and to get ſome People to aſſociate themſelves into Companies of Volunteers, as was done in the Year 1715. The Pannel about this Time did call a Meeting of the principal Inhabitants of the Town of Edinburgh, to conſult what was proper to be done then: And at that Meeting it was agreed, That a Committee of the Town-Council, in Conjunction with ſome other of the Citizens, ſhould wait upon the Lord Advocate, Juſtice-Clerk, and other People about the Town of Diſtinction, and conſult with them, both as to the Legality and Expediency of raiſing the Regiment of one thouſand Men, and aſſociating ſome Companies of Volunteers. That, in this Meeting, there were ſeveral Difficulties ſtarted, and even among the Lawyers; but they all agreed in this, that they could not ſet about the levying of the Regiment of one thouſand Men, without procuring firſt from the Regents a Warrant for that Effect. Upon this ſeverals of the Meeting preſſed, that an Expreſs ſhould be immediately diſpatched, in order to procure it: But the then Lord Advocate ſuggeſted, they would appear ridiculous, if they ſhould obtain any ſuch Licence, when, at the ſame time, they were not aſcertained of the Money that was ſufficient to pay the Regiment. Upon this it was propoſed at that Meeting, that the Provoſt ſhould make a Trial how the Money ſhould be raiſed: And the Provoſt ſuggeſted, that the proper Method for doing this would be, by recommending it to the Miniſters and Kirk-Seſſions. Againſt which Propoſal no Objection then was made. That the Meeting upon this broke up. And the Magiſtrates and Council accordingly recommended it to the Miniſters and Kirk-Seſſions to make a Trial how the Money could be raiſed: But the Miniſters, upon receiving the Warrants for ſo doing, objected to the Warrants, as not being properly ſigned by the Town-Clerks. But the Deponent, and ſome others of the Inhabitants, hearing that the Miniſters made this Scruple, met together, and called for their Stent-Books, and made out a Liſt of ſuch People as they thought would willingly contribute for the Support and Maintenance of the Regiment: And, upon conſidering the ſaid Liſt, they were of Opinion, there would be no Difficulty of raiſing a Sum ſufficient for that Purpoſe. That next Day the Deponent coming to the Street, he met with the Pannel, who, it would appear, had by that time got Notice that the Deponent, and ſome others, had been making out the above Liſt; and told the Deponent, That he found ſome People were taking a good deal upon them; that, as he was Provoſt of Edinburgh, he would maintain it; and although he had a great Regard for the Conſtitution of his Country, he had alſo a Regard for the Honour of the Magiſtrates, and Liberties of the Town of Edinburgh; and that Nobody ſhould wreſt the Dignity of Provoſt out of his Hands. And this he ſeemed to ſay in a Paſſion. To this the Deponent made Anſwer, That there were three of his own Magiſtrates in Company; and they only propoſed to do that in a more expeditious Manner, which he himſelf wanted to have done. That the Forenoon of that Day, as the Deponent thinks, he met Mr. William Alexander Merchant; and talking of the Payment of the Regiment of the thouſand Men, how it was to be aſcertained, Mr. Alexander ſaid, 'Why 'ſhould there be any Occaſion of Delay on that Account? I am willing 'to give my Bond for three thouſand Pounds, if any body will join with 'me;' and the Deponent made Anſwer, That he was not a very rich Man, but he would join with him. Upon this they both agreed to go up to the then Lord Advocate, and tell him ſo much; which, after they had done, the Advocate told them, That he could only tranſact with the Magiſtrates; but he was very glad to hear of their Propoſal, and he would immediately write about it: As he was then juſt ſending off an Expreſs, and had wrote his Letter, he then added a Poſtſcript to it; which in Subſtance was, telling the Offer that had been made by two Citizens of the Town, which he thought were good for Three thouſand Pounds, and deſired therefore, that the Warrant or Order for levying the Regiment might be forthwith ſent down. Depones, That two or three Days before the Rebels came to the Town of Edinburgh, the Deponent remembers to have heard ſome Propoſals made to the Pannel, for ſearching the Inhabitants Houſes for Arms: And upon theſe Occaſions he heard the Provoſt always ſay, That there ought to be no Diſtinction made, but all Houſes ſearched without reſpect of Perſons; but the Deponent does not remember to have heard of ſuch an Order granted. Depones, That he happened to be with ſome others, in Mrs. Clarke's Houſe, where the Provoſt and Mr. Maclaurin were preſent; and it was then propoſed, that the City-walls ſhould be put in ſome tolerable Poſture of Defence: And Mr. Maclaurin, at that Meeting, produced a Scheme of what was neceſſary for that Purpoſe. To which the Pannel agreed; but made ſome Difficulty with regard to the Expences that were neceſſary for doing ſuch a Work. The Deponent thinks, that the Provoſt might in this have acted a prudent Part for the Town of Edinburgh; but the Deponent thought this ought at that Time to have occaſioned no Delay; and Mr. Maclaurin ſaid ſo too.

too. Depones, That he heard the Reverend Mr. Alexander Webster once and again make a Propoſal to the Pannel in the Council-Houſe, where there were a good many of the Council preſent, and a great many other Inhabitants, of raiſing, upon his own Credit, five hundred Guineas, to be diſtributed to five hundred of the ableſt-bodied Journeymen of the ſeveral incorporated Trades in the Town; who, as they were very bold and hardy in the extinguiſhing of Fire, he believed would willingly undertake to mount the City-walls, and aſſiſt in the Defence of them, in caſe they ſhould be attacked by the Rebels, and judged them much more proper for that Purpoſe than the Volunteers were. That the Anſwer which the Deponent heard the Lord Provoſt make was, That, if Mr. Webſter would undertake to raiſe the Money, he would be Caution that Mr. Webſter would perform it. Depones, That he was preſent, both when Mr. Lindſay Depute Secretary at War, and Mr. Groſet Collector of the Cuſtoms at Alloa, made a Propoſal to the Pannel, for bringing into the Town a hundred Dragoons for the Town's Defence; and Mr. Groſet added, if he deſired, even the whole two Regiments, provided that the Provoſt would deſire it in Writing. The Pannel's Anſwer was to both theſe Gentlemen, That if the Dragoons would come into the Town, they ſhould be welcome; but he would ſign no ſuch Deſire. Depones, That he was preſent in the Council-Houſe on Monday Evening the 16th of September; when he heard it propoſed, that there was a Neceſſity for ſecuring the Town's Arms, Ammunition, and Cannon on the Walls, from falling into the Hands of the Rebels: But as there was very great Confuſion that Night, the Deponent does not remember any more of the Matter. Depones, That the Number of his Company, to the beſt of his Knowledge, conſiſted of Sixty or Seventy; and that Mr. Joſeph Williamſon was his Lieutenant.

XVIII. James Nimmo, Eſq. late one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That, upon Monday the 16th September 1745, as the Deponent was upon Guard at the Netherbow Port, with Sir George Preſton of Valleyfield, he received a Meſſage from the Pannel, he thinks between Four and Five at Night, to come and ſpeak with him, and ſome of the Town-Council, then in the Goldſmiths-Hall. That, when he came there, in obedience to the ſaid Meſſage, he underſtood, the Pannel, his Council, and ſome of the Inhabitants, were engaged in an Argument, what Anſwer ſhould be returned to a Letter which the Pannel had received from the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, or the then Lord Advocate; by which Meſſage an Offer of a hundred Dragoons was made to the Pannel, or more if he pleaſed, to aſſiſt in the Defence of the City. That, after ſome time ſpent in this Debate, the Pannel obſerved, that a Thorn had been put in his Foot; for that if he ſhould accept of that Offer, and the Town ſhould be taken, he might be charged with having enſnared ſo many of his Majeſty's Troops; and, on the other hand, if he ſhould refuſe to accept of the Offer, he might be blamed, if the Town was taken, for having loſt it by not receiving that Succour. That, in Anſwer to this, the Deponent obſerved, that it was an eaſy Matter for the Pannel to put the Thorn in their Foot, by making an Anſwer to this Offer, That if the Lord Juſtice-Clerk or Lord Advocate ſhould think it fit, and for the Service of the Government, to ſend a hundred Dragoons, or the whole of them for the Purpoſe aforeſaid, the Pannel ſhould be ready to receive them; which Expedient the Pannel, and ſeverals of the Gentlemen then preſent, ſeemed to approve of; and the Pannel ſet about writing an Anſwer, as the Deponent imagined, to that Purpoſe: But, when he heard the Anſwer read, he did think it did not fully come up to his Propoſal. Upon which he left the Meeting, and repaired to his Poſt; and, about Five o'Clock, the Alarm-bell rung, the Signal for calling the Volunteers to repair to the Lawn-market: But, before the Deponent left his Poſt, he ſent ſeveral Meſſages to the Pannel, to receive Orders what to do; and to the third Meſſage, he thinks, for the firſt Time, received an Anſwer, to repair to the Alarm-poſt; which accordingly he did: and that he was not preſent at the Meeting in the New Church Iſle, held much about this Time, judging it more his Duty to remain at his Poſt; beſides, he ſaw a great many People crowding into that Meeting, whom the Deponent did not look upon as proper Perſons to conſult with in a Juncture of that ſort, when the Rebels were reported to be at the Diſtance of only about two Miles from the City.

XIX. Mr. Alexander Webſter, one of the Miniſters of Edinburgh, depones, That the Week before the Rebels got Poſſeſſion of the City of Edinburgh, he was preſent at a Meeting in Mrs. Clarke's with the Pannel, ſome Officers of the Army, and well-affected Inhabitants of the City. That in it the Deponent obſerved, that the Reparation of the City-walls was carried on by much too ſlowly; and that the Tradeſmen ſhould be called to give a Reaſon why they were ſo ſlow in executing the reſpective Parts of the Works to them aſſigned. That the Pannel obſerved, That, being about the Election-time, and pretty late, it was very probable the Tradeſmen might have got a Cup too much for Buſineſs that Night; and it would be better to defer that Inquiry 'till next Morning: And, at the ſame time, obſerved, That the Care of theſe Works had been appointed to a particular Committee named by the Council for that Effect. At the ſame time ſome of the ſaid Officers who were preſent complained, that what they called the Baſtions of the Town-wall were too weak; that is, the Scaffolding upon which the Cannon was placed, was not ſtrong enough; the Parapet round the Wall, in ſome Places, was too narrow; ſo that one Man could not paſs another; nor were the Parapets ſufficiently cleared. That the Deponent knows there was a Plan made by the deceaſed Mr. Colin Maclaurin of the City-walls, and Baſtions, and other Works neceſſary to be made for the Defence of the City; which was agreed to by the Council, as the Deponent was informed, and a Committee named for bringing it to Execution. That the Deponent obſerved, upon the 9th of September, as he thinks, that a Ditch near Wallace's Tower, which had been projected by Mr. Maclaurin to be made on the North-ſide of a Wall there, was erroneouſly made on the South-ſide of the Wall; whereby it became rather a Security for, than a Defence againſt the Rebels; and which Miſtake, ſo far as the Deponent remembers, was never corrected, but rather carried on, as the Deponent obſerved, upon viſiting the ſame upon Wedneſday the 11th of September: But, as he did not mention this as any Article of Complaint in the foreſaid Meeting in Mrs. Clarke's, he does not know, that any Part of this Miſtake could be charged againſt the Pannel. Depones, That, at the Meeting in Mrs. Clarke's above mentioned, the Deponent remembers, that Bailie Robert Baillie came into the Room: Upon which the Deponent renewed this Complaint againſt the Workmen for carrying on the Works ſo ſlowly; which he did, becauſe he was informed, that Bailie Baillie was the chief of the Committee above mentioned. Upon which the Bailie ſent for one of the Tradeſmen; who made the following Excuſes: That they had made the Baſtions as ſufficient as the Timber they could find for that Purpoſe would admit of; and that they had carried on the Work as faſt as they could find Hands to do it. Depones, That ſome time of the ſaid Week, he caſually met with the Pannel in the Parliament-Cloſe, and again renewed his Complaint to him about the Slowneſs of carrying on the ſaid Works; which appeared to him ſhould have been carried on without Loſs of Time: And the Pannel mentioned ſomething about the Expence of the Work, and propoſed, that the Volunteers would advance the Expence thereof according to their Engagement. To which the Deponent replied, That he did not doubt but the Volunteers would fulfil their Engagements, though he ſuſpected it might be a Difficulty for them at preſent to advance the Money. Depones, That he was preſent at a Meeting in Mr. Wilſon's Houſe, when a Petition, ſigned by a conſiderable Number of the well-affected Inhabitants of the City, was preſented to the Pannel, for aſſociating themſelves as Volunteers; which the Pannel objected to as High Treaſon; but added, that he ſhould conſult the Crown Lawyers about it: And that he expreſſed his Diſſatisfaction at the Manner of promoting that Petition, and in attaining ſo many Subſcriptions, without previouſly conſulting with him. Depones, That it was obſerved, that thoſe Parts of the Walls near Potter-row Port, and St. Mary and Leith Wynds, were commanded by the adjacent Houſes; and it was thought, that it was proper to build up the Doors and Windows of the ſaid Houſes, to make the Defence of thoſe Parts of the Walls practicable; or to poſſeſs thoſe Houſes with Parties of the Volunteers. It was alſo propoſed, to poſſeſs the Houſes at the Potter-row Port with a Party, and to make a Communication by a Bridge, by which they could retire to the Walls in caſe of being diſlodged. But nothing of this kind was executed; nor did the Deponent make the Non-execution of this any Part of his Complaint. Depones, That, ſome time in the Week before the Rebels entered Edinburgh, the Deponent had Occaſion to meet with the Pannel, and others, in the Exchequer-Chamber, and in Mrs. Clarke's; when he propoſed to the Pannel to find Security, or, if it was thought neceſſary, even to advance 4 or 500 Guineas, to be diſtributed among the able-bodied Journeymen of the Brewers, Bakers, and other Tradeſmen of the City, to encourage them to join with the Volunteers in defence of the City that Night in which it ſhould happen to be attacked by the Rebels; which Propoſal the Pannel ſeemed to approve of; and ſaid, That the Deponent needed no Security for his Advance, for he the Pannel would become Caution for the Deponent's paying it. That the Deponent then propoſed, that the Maſters of thoſe Journeymen, and others, ſhould be ſent for, to concert a Plan for the Execution of that Propoſal: But the Pannel alledged, that it was too late for that then; and that ſome of them would readily be about their Bottle; but next Day he would do it. That, on Sunday the 15th, the Deponent aſked the Pannel, If he had met with the Maſters of the ſaid Journeymen? &c. He anſwered, That, in the Multiplicity of Affairs, it had eſcaped his Memory, but that he would do it; but does not know if it was done or not. Depones, That, in the Afternoon of the 16th of September, he heard, that there was to be a Meeting of the Inhabitants in the New Church Iſle, or that ſuch a Meeting was then met; and juſt about this Time the Alarm-bell rung, which was the Signal for the Volunteers to repair to their reſpective Poſts. That the Deponent, being one of them, went to the Poſt aſſigned to the Company in which he ſerved; ſo that he can give little Account of what paſt at that Meeting; But having ſtepped in to ſee what was going on, he thought it a very tumultuous Aſſembly. That the Deponent obſerved, very few of the well-affected Inhabitants that he knew were in it: That there were ſeverals of the Meeting, who, in his Opinion, were not well-affected to the Government; and that the Generality conſiſted of People, who, to the beſt of his Remembrance, he had never before ſeen. That the few who ſpoke for defending the City, were treated with very ſcurrilous and opprobrious Language; particularly the Reverend Mr. George Logan, who was ſpeaking to that Purpoſe, ſeemed to him to have been pulled down from the Form on which he was ſtanding, by Force. Upon which the Deponent left the Meeting, and repaired to his Poſt. Depones, That on Monday the 16th he went round the Walls of the City upon which the Cannon was planted; and obſerved there were two of them, one at the Briſtow Port, and another at the South-Eaſt Corner of the Wall near Bedlam, upon which no Centinels were then attending; and it was obſerved, theſe Cannon could not be fired, without drawing the Shot; becauſe they might be unloaded, or the Shot altered during the Time the Centinels were abſent: But that, after the Deponent ſtaid a conſiderable Time at the Cannon on the South-Eaſt Corner, as above, a Centinel at laſt appeared, who ſaid, He had been planted as Centinel upon the ſaid Cannon. Depones, That, upon the Evening of the ſaid 16th September, he went along with the other Volunteers, to deliver up his Arms to the Caſtle; and, in his Return, met with Enſign Roberton on the Head of a Party of Men, ſent by Gen. Gueſt or Gen. Preſton, with Orders, as the Enſign told him, to ſpike up the Cannon on the Walls of the City; but that he was ordered, before entering the City, to apply to the Pannel for his Authority to do ſo. That he had diſpatched Robert Griffith, a Gunner, to acquaint the Pannel thereof, and to aſk his Authority. That the Deponent ſaw the ſaid Robert Griffith return, who reported, that he had waited upon the Pannel, and that his Anſwer was, That he would give him no Authority; adding ſome Words which he at preſent cannot recollect; but the Impreſſion they made upon him at the Time, and which he ſtill retains, was, that they imported a Diſcouragement of the Execution of the Order; for that the Enſign immediately ſaid, being in Converſation with the Deponent, Should I force? or, I will force my Way into the Town; or Words to that Purpoſe. But the Deponent ſuggeſted to him, It would be more proper for him to make a Report of what had happened, to one of the Generals; which having been done by ſome one of the Party ſent for that Purpoſe, they were recalled, and marched into the Caſtle. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That he gave it as his Opinion, at Eleven o'Clock at Night of Monday the 16th, in the Laigh Council-House, that the Town could not then be defended, without the Assistance of the Dragoons, in regard that the Volunteers had lodged their Arms in the Castle; and that a great many of them were either gone into the Castle, or had left the City, upon the Resolution of delivering up the Town; and that he thought it extremely odd, to propose now a Defence of the City in their present Circumstances, when, it seemed, it had been judged not tenable, even when the whole Volunteers were in Arms, and an Offer made for the Dragoons to come in to its Defence: And therefore, upon the whole, was of Opinion, that a Message should be sent to the Dragoons to return, and some proper Methods taken, in the mean Time, to gather together as many Volunteers as possible. Depones, That the Deponent either heard Mr. Drummond himself, or some other Person, say, That he Mr. Drummond was going out to bring back the Dragoons; and he did not return while the Deponent was there. And depones, That he did not think the Alarm-bell a proper Signal for collecting the Volunteers, while the Dragoons were at so great a Distance, and the Rebels so nigh. That this he considered as an Intimation to the Rebels to make the Attack on the City ere it was possible for the Dragoons to come to its Defence; and any Intimation to the Rebels, of a Design of defending the City, would probably prove a Hardship on the Deputies that had been commissioned by the Town-Council to capitulate with them about the Surrender of it, and who were at that Time at the Rebel Camp.

XX. Alexander Scot, Merchant in Edinburgh, depones, That, in September 1745, he served as an Officer of Volunteers, for Defence of the City of Edinburgh, in the Company commanded by the present Lord Provost of Edinburgh. That some Day of the second Week of September, and, as he thinks, about the Beginning of that Week, the Deponent was present in the New Church Isle; when he heard a Question put to the Pannel, Whether such of the Volunteers as belonged to the Trained-Bands ought not to be exeemed, during their Service as Volunteers, from doing any Duty with the Trained-Bands? To which the Pannel answered, That, when both a Company of Trained-Bands, and a Company of Volunteers, were upon Duty at the same Time, any Person belonging to both these Companies, might have his Choice which of them to serve in at that Time. And, upon a further Question put to the Pannel, he answered, That, when a Company of Trained-Bands, and a Company of Volunteers, to both which one and the same Person belonged, should happen to do Duty on different Days, such Volunteer should do Duty on both. That the Deponent does not remember to have heard any Objection made to these Answers, or any thing further said on the Subject in that Meeting: But the Deponent had Occasion to converse with some of the Volunteers, who thought it a Hardship; and doubts not, but it may have discouraged others from engaging as Volunteers. And, upon an Interrogatory put by the Pannel, depones, That he did converse with some of the Trained-Bands, to whom he proposed to enlist as Volunteers; who answered, That would bring upon them double Duty; that they were already bound to do Duty in the Trained-Bands; and, should they engage as Volunteers, they might be obliged to do Duty also in that Capacity, when the Trained-Bands were not upon Duty; but, were it not for that Hardship, they would have chosen rather to have served as Volunteers, than with the Trained-Bands. And being desired to condescend upon any Person who gave him such Answer, depones, That he cannot, at this Distance of Time, charge his Memory with the Persons Names; but thinks that he talked on that Subject once to a Friend of his, William Scot, Merchant, or in a Company where he was; and that either William Scot, or some other in that Company, gave the Deponent that Answer. Depones, That the Company to which the Deponent belonged were ordered to meet in the College-yards, in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th of September. That the Deponent, having been out of Bed all the preceding Night, and having gone only to Bed at Ten o'Clock that Day, it was about Two Afternoon before he came to the Place; and found some others of the Company there before him. That they had got no Orders what to do; and continued in the College-yards about an Hour after the Deponent came, and still received no Orders: And at last they consulted together, and marched to the Lawn-market; but the Deponent cannot charge his Memory, what were the Reasons that induced them to march thither, whether it was the ringing of the Fire-bell, because he does not remember, whether that Bell was rung before they marched, or if it was only rung after they marched; or if their Reason was, to be near the proper Place where they might receive Orders, for the Company was anxious or uneasy for Orders. That there were other Companies of Volunteers in the College-yards, who marched to the Lawn-market at the same Time, and the Deponent thinks for the same Reason. That, after coming to the Lawn-market, they waited there for a considerable Time without receiving Orders; till at last the Deponent, at the Desire of some other Officers of the Volunteers, went to the Goldsmiths-Hall, to desire the Pannel's Orders for those Companies of Volunteers. That the Deponent found a Crowd in the Goldsmiths-Hall, with some Difficulty got to the upper End of it, and told the Pannel, That he was sent by the Officers of the Volunteers, who were standing in the Lawn-market, to ask his Lordship what Orders he would please to give them: That the Pannel answered, That he was at a Loss to know what Orders to give them; and thinks he further added, That they were then deliberating about that Matter. That the Deponent waited some little Time, to see whether he would get Orders; but getting none, he left the Hall, and returned to his Company in the Lawn-market, and acquainted the other Officers of the Volunteers what had passed. That, not long after the Deponent's Return, he saw the Officers of the Volunteers that were in the upper End of the Lawn-market in a Knot together, and, as he supposed, consulting what Measure they should take; and the Deponent was soon thereafter told, That they had resolved to deliver up their Arms to the Castle: And, upon the Deponent's going up the Lawn-market, the Officers informed him of their said Resolution; and, agreeable thereto, the Deponent went up to his Company, which was the Westmost in the Lawn-market; and the whole of them marched up to the Castle. And the Reason given the Deponent for taking that Resolution, was, Because no Orders were given them, and they were apprehensive that their Arms might fall into the Rebels Hands.

XXI. Archibald Stevenson, Writer in Edinburgh, depones, That he was an Officer of the Volunteers, for Defence of the City, in September 1745. That he was present at a Meeting that the Pannel had with some of the Volunteers in Mrs. Clarke's; where Mr. Webster the Minister was also present; and which, he thinks, was upon Saturday the 14th September. And depones, That he there heard Mr. Webster propose to the Pannel, that a Number of the Servants and Journeymen of the Brewers and Bakers in the Town should be hired to assist in the Defence of the City any Night it should be attacked, at the Premium of a Guinea each in hand; and a further Reward to be given them, according to their Behaviour, when the Matter was over. That Mr. Webster undertook to raise, by Subscription, a Sum of 500 l. to defray the Expence; and offered to give Security for Payment of the Money. That the Deponent did not hear what Answer the Pannel gave; but supposed that the Proposal had not been gone into, because he heard no Resolution taken upon it in that Meeting, nor did he afterwards hear any more of that Matter. Depones, That, in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th of September, and, as he thinks, about Four o'Clock, while the Volunteers were drawn up in the Lawn-market, he was sent by them with a Message to the Pannel, to ask what Orders he had to give to them? and likewise to ask, in case the Town was not to be defended, where they were to deposit the King's Arms? or Words to that Purpose. That he found the Lord Provost in Goldsmiths-Hall. That to the first Part of his Message he received no Answer, and got no Orders for the Volunteers, what they were to do: But to the second Part of the Message, the Pannel answered, That he would give Orders to receive the Arms at the Court of Guard. Depones, That the Deponent waited till the Pannel left Goldsmiths-Hall, and went to the New Church Isle; and, on the Way thither, in the Parliament-Close, the Deponent saw Alexander Cunningham, Surgeon, come up to the Pannel, and deliver the following Message: 'That the Dragoons found 'that the Number of the Rebels were so far superior to them, that they 'were obliged to retire;' but the Deponent does not remember the Place he named where the Dragoons had gone to; and said, That the Number of the Rebels, so far as they could judge by Appearance, could not be under eight thousand strong. Depones, That thereupon he heard the Pannel say, If the Troops were retired, then all was over. That he believes the Occasion of Mr. Cunningham's being with the Dragoons was, that he expected there was to be an Action, and he attended them in the Way of his Business. And being further interrogate, depones, That he left the Provost as he was going into the New Church Isle, and returned to the Lawn-market, and reported to the Officers of the Volunteers the Answer he had got to the Message they had sent by him. That thereupon they consulted together; and some were for immediately delivering up their Arms into the Castle; but Provost Drummond, who was one of their Officers, insisted, that, before taking that Step, they should send a second Message. That a second Message was accordingly sent; but by whom, the Deponent does not remember; and the Messenger returned without any Answer: Whereupon the Volunteers marched up to the Castle, and delivered up their Arms.

XXII. Ensign William Roberton, of Edinburgh Castle, depones, That, in the Evening of the 16th September 1745, he being then an Officer in the Castle of Edinburgh, was sent by Gen. Preston about Six o'Clock at Night, after that the Volunteers delivered up their Arms in the Castle, with a Party, to bring up to the Castle the Cannon that were on the Walls of the City, or otherwise to render them useless, by spiking them up, and knocking off the Trunnions; and, for this Purpose, he had Carts and Horses along with him, and proper Instruments for spiking the Cannon, and beating off the Trunnions: But then, his Orders were restricted, not to do this without Licence and Order from the then Lord Provost of Edinburgh. Depones, That, with his Party, he marched down to the Reservoir; and then he first sent the Serjeant of his Party, and after that one Griffith, a Gunner in the Castle, with a Message to the Provost, to know whether he might enter the Town for the above Purpose; and the Answer which was returned to him from the Pannel, by both the Messengers, was, That he would give no Orders concerning the Cannon; but the Deponent might do as he thought proper. Upon this he sent to General Guest, to know how he should behave; and Orders were brought him to return to the Castle. Depones, That Mr. Webster was with him, procured him a Flambeau, some Smiths, Carts and Horses; and that, without going further, the Deponent returned to the Castle.

[29th October, betwixt One and Two o'Clock in the Morning.] It was now moved by some of the Jury, That they might have Leave to make a Motion in Court before any further Procedure in the Trial: Which being allowed of by the Lords, Sir Alexander Nisbet of Dean, Patrick Crichton of Woodhouslie, John Nisbet Portioner of Water of Leith, and Edward Lothian Jeweller in Edinburgh, four of the Gentlemen upon the Assize of the said Archibald Stewart Pannel, humbly represented and moved in Court, in their own, and in Name of the whole other Assizers, That the Court had now continued upon this Trial, without any Respite, since Tuesday Morning at Eight o'Clock, being upwards of forty Hours: That, by this Sederunt, several of the Assizers were already greatly fatigued, and one or two of them altogether unable to hold it out any longer, without some Relief: That the Assize could not imagine it to be the Intention, either of Prosecutor or Pannel, to kill or destroy them; which behoved to be the Consequence, should they insist upon finishing the Trial at one Sederunt: That their Lordships, as well as the Pannel, and other Members of Court who had attended this Trial, must be sensible, from what they had suffered themselves, of the Hardships undergone by the Assize, and consequently of the Reasonableness of their Demand: That, altho' other People's Situation and Strength might enable them to go on without Relaxation, the said four Gentlemen did, with great Candour and Ingenuity, assure the Judges, That they were no longer able to go on in their Duty upon this Trial: And therefore begged Leave to acquaint their Lordships thereof; at the same Time flattering themselves, that both the Pannel, and his Majesty's Advocate, would concur and agree, that the Trial might be put off, and continued for such a short Space of Time as the Lords should please to appoint, that in the mean time the Assize, and all concerned, might have a little Reſt. And, with the greateſt Submiſſion, moved the Court, That they would pleaſe to take this their Requeſt into Conſideration, and grant the Deſire thereof accordingly.

'Upon hearing of which Motion, Mr. Archibald Stewart Pannel, and 'his Counſel, in reſpect of the Diſtreſs which the Length of this Trial 'has already brought upon ſeveral of the Aſſize, and that it ſeems impracticable to finiſh the Trial at one Sederunt, conſent to the granting the 'Deſire of the Motion made as above by the Aſſizers, in caſe the Lords 'ſhall think proper ſo to do.'

Signed ARCH. STEWART. JAMES FERGUSON.

'Mr. William Grant, his Majeſty's Advocate, does not oppoſe the 'granting the Deſire of the foreſaid Motion, agreed to by the Pannel and 'his Counſel; and hereby conſents that the Lords grant the ſame, in caſe 'they ſo think fit; and that in regard the Jury have already attended forty 'Hours; and that ſeveral of them are ſo valetudinary, that they are unable to ſtand out the Trial, without ſome Reſpite; and alſo that ſeveral of the Proſecutor's Witneſſes have given him Notice, that they are 'not able to attend longer without endangering their Healths.'

Signed WILL. GRANT.

'The Lords Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, having heard the Motion of 'the Aſſize, and the Conſent to granting the Deſire thereof, both of the 'Pannel and his Majeſty's Advocate, as above, and fully deliberated and 'argued thereon, they, in reſpect thereof, and of the Neceſſity of the 'Caſe, continue the Diet 'till Eleven o'Clock of the Forenoon of this 'Day; and ordain the Pannel and Witneſſes to attend then, each under 'the Pain of Law; as alſo the haill fifteen Aſſizers then alſo to attend, 'each of them under the Penalty of five hundred Pounds Sterling: And 'the ſaid Aſſizers, in Token of their Acquieſcence, hereby become bound 'and enacted, each for themſelves, their Heirs and Succeſſors, that they 'ſhall appear and give Attendance at the foreſaid Hour, in this Place, 'each under the foreſaid Penalty of five hundred Pounds.'

ARCHIBALD STEWART of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Provoſt of the ſaid City, Pannel, indicted and accuſed as in the former Sederunt.

The haill fifteen Aſſizers being called over, and anſwering to their Names, his Majeſty's Advocate proceeded to the remaining Part of his Proof, by adducing the following Witneſſes, viz.

XXIII. Robert Griffith, one of the Gunners of the Caſtle of Edinburgh, depones, That, about Five or Six of the Clock in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th of September 1745, after that the Volunteers had delivered their Arms in the Caſtle, it was thought proper, by the Commanding Officer of the Caſtle, to give Orders for bringing up the Cannon, and other Arms, ſuch as Patteraroes, that were on the City-walls, or otherwiſe to render them uſeleſs, that ſo they might not fall into the Hands of the Rebels. That a Party was ſent from the Caſtle for this Purpoſe, under the Command of Enſign Roberton; and the Deponent was ſent by General Gueſt to follow that Party, to inquire if the ſaid Mr. Roberton had Provoſt Stewart's Liberty to go on with the ſaid Work: That Mr. Roberton declared he had no ſuch Concurrence; but had ſent his Serjeant to the Provoſt for that Effect. That the General ordered the Deponent alſo to go forward, and demand the Pannel's Licence or Concurrence to effectuate the ſame. Accordingly the Deponent waited on the Pannel, and demanded from him his Licence or Authority to go on, and bring to the Caſtle, or demoliſh, theſe Cannon, &c. which were then mounted on the Town-walls, leſt they ſhould fall into the Hands of the Enemy. That the Pannel's Anſwer was: He had no Authority to give, as the Dragoons were gone Eaſtward, and his Volunteers had laid down their Arms. That he had lately received a Letter from the Enemy, which he deſired the Deponent to read. That the Deponent told the Pannel, that his, the Deponent's Duty was not to expoſtulate, or loſe time with the Pannel, but in a poſitive Manner to have his Concurrence; which the Pannel poſitively refuſed; but added, 'That we might do as we would, without his Liberty.' That when the Deponent left the Pannel, he found Enſign Roberton and his Party ſtanding in the Lawn-market Street, with a Couple of Carts, and ſome Blackſmith-Boys, with Fore-hammers in their Hands, whom Mr. Roberton had impreſſed to facilitate his Work. That the Deponent went to General Gueſt, and acquainted him, that he could not procure the Provoſt's Licence to bring in, or demoliſh the foreſaid Cannon: That the General was then in Converſation with George Lauder, Surgeon in Edinburgh, whom the Pannel informed the Deponent, that he had ſent to the General. That the General ordered the Party to return to the Caſtle; and, at the ſame time, told the Deponent, that the proper Time was over for effectuating the foreſaid Work, it being then dark. Depones, That, when he entered the Door where the General and Mr. Lauder were in company, he heard the General ſay, 'I am ſorry the Provoſt has not granted my Requeſt.' And being interrogate for the Pannel, Whether he reported to General Gueſt the laſt Words of the Pannel's Anſwer to him, particularly that they might do as they would, without his the Pannel's Authority? depones, He did. And the Deponent further deſired of General Gueſt to give the Party his Authority to go on with the foreſaid Work, without the Pannel's Liberty. To which the General anſwered, The Provoſt had loſt the proper Opportunity; and, if the Party remained any longer in Town, they might fall into the Hands of ſome flying Party of the Enemy. And, being further interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That the Garriſon of the Caſtle of Edinburgh conſiſted then of the Caſtle-company, which ought to be a hundred Men; and two Companies of Colonel Laſcelles's Regiment, which ought to be ſeventy Men each; but none of the above Companies were compleat. That the Party ſent for the Cannon, conſiſted of an Officer, two Gunners, a Serjeant, and twenty Men; and their falling into the Hands of the Rebels, would very much have weakened the Garriſon.

XXIV. Joſeph Mead, one of the Serjeants of the Caſtle of Edinburgh, depones, That, upon the Evening of the 16th of September 1745, he was deſired, by Enſign Roberton, to get ready a Party of twenty Men; which, after the Deponent did, Enſign Roberton ordered him and the Party to follow him; which accordingly they did; and, after they were come a little way down the Caſtle-hill, Enſign Roberton ordered the Deponent to go to the Pannel, and acquaint him, that the Enſign was come with a Party, in order to render uſeleſs the Cannon that were on the City-walls, and wanted the Pannel's Commands thereanent. The Deponent accordingly went to the Pannel, and delivered his Meſſage. To which the Pannel made Anſwer, That Enſign Roberton might do as he would. That, upon this, one Dr. Lauder, who was then in company with the Pannel, roſe up, and deſired Liberty to go and ſpeak to the General; and that the Pannel ſaid he might go. And accordingly Mr. Lauder and the Deponent left the Provoſt, who was then in the Council-Houſe; and, when they came to the Caſtle, they met Major Roberton, who deſired them to go to General Gueſt; which accordingly they did. And Mr. Lauder, addreſſing the General, told him, That there was a Party come down to deſtroy and render uſeleſs the Cannon that were upon the Walls. To which the General made Anſwer, Why not? The Provoſt has not done what he ought. To which Mr. Lauder replied, What could he do? or, What could we do, ſince the Forces have left us? And the Deponent telling the General the Meſſage he had been ſent with by Enſign Roberton to the Pannel, with the Pannel's Anſwer, the General ordered Enſign Roberton, with his Party, to return to the Caſtle; and which Meſſage to the Enſign was ſent by Mr. Lauder; and the Deponent believes Mr. Lauder delivered that Meſſage to the Enſign, becauſe the Deponent remained with the General 'till Mr. Lauder was gone, and then aſked the General, what Commands he had for his Officer, Enſign Roberton? To which the General made anſwer: You may go and tell him to withdraw his Party to the Caſtle: And the Deponent having gone, found that the Enſign and his Party were already returned.

XXV. Patrick Lindeſay, Depute-Secretary to the Forces in North-Britain, depones, That, about Two o'Clock of Monday the 16th of September 1745, he being in company with General Gueſt, the then Lord Advocate and Solicitor came into the Room, and told the General, That it was thought proper that a hundred Dragoons ſhould be brought into the City of Edinburgh, to aſſiſt in the Defence of it; and deſired that he might give a Warrant for bringing them into it. The General agreed to the Propoſal; but thought it was proper that a Petition ſhould be ſigned by the Pannel, the Lord Advocate, and Solicitor, requeſting the Thing from him; which Petition the Deponent wrote: And the Lord Advocate carried it down, as the Deponent thinks, to have it ſigned by the Pannel; and deſired that the Deponent might come in a Quarter of an Hour to his Houſe to get the Petition when ſigned. That, after this, the Lord Advocate and Solicitor left the General, and Colonel Clayton came into his Room, who was going that Day to Brigadier Fowkes. That the General told him what the Lord Advocate and Solicitor had been with him about; and, at the ſame time, gave him Orders, upon his ſeeing the foreſaid Petition ſigned and delivered to the Deponent, to acquaint Brigadier Fowkes, that it was his Orders that a hundred Dragoons ſhould be forthwith ſent into the Town of Edinburgh. The Deponent and Col. Clayton went from the Caſtle to Lord Advocate's Houſe in a very ſhort time after this; and calling for the above Petition, he received it, ſigned by the Pannel, Lord Advocate, and Solicitor, and ſhewed it to Colonel Clayton; who immediately left the Deponent, in order to go to Brigadier Fowkes. Depones, That, about an Hour after this, the Deponent, being with General Gueſt, and the General, hearing that there was ſome Deſign among the Inhabitants for delivering up the Town, ſent the Deponent to the Pannel, to know, whether he ſtill deſired that the hundred Dragoons ſhould come to Town in Terms of the above Petition or Requeſt; becauſe, if he did not, he would ſend contrary Orders to Brigadier Fowkes. The Deponent accordingly went, and delivered his Meſſage to the Provoſt, whom he then found in a very numerous Meeting of the Inhabitants in the New Church Iſle; but does not remember that he told the Pannel the General's Reaſon for ſending this Meſſage. That the Pannel demanded the Opinion of the Meeting, whether the Dragoons ſhould be brought in, or not? Whereupon a great Number cried out, No Dragoons. And the Pannel upon this told the Deponent, that he would neither bid nor forbid them, but that the General might do what he thought proper. The Deponent upon this, having the Petition or Requeſt in his Cuſtody, took it out of his Pocket, and wrote upon the Back of it, The Generality of this Meeting are not for receiving the Dragoons. This ſhort Note he preſented to the Pannel for him to ſign; but this he refuſed, and ſaid, Why will ye diſtreſs me about theſe Dragoons? or Words to that Purpoſe. And depones, That at that Time, or ſome time after, ſpeaking to the Pannel upon the Subject of admitting the Dragoons, the Deponent aſked him, ſince he had once ſigned a Requeſt for bringing in the Dragoons, why he would not either continue the ſame Requeſt, or counter-order it? And the Pannel's Anſwer was, That he ſigned the Requeſt at the Deſire of the Advocate or Solicitor. Depones, That, when he wrote the above Note, he did not tell the Pannel that the Paper upon which the Note was wrote, was the Requeſt, which he, the Advocate, and Solicitor, had formerly ſigned; nor did he ſhew him any more than the Back-ſide of the Paper. And being interrogate by the Pannel, What it is the Deponent means, by his ſaying, that he had a Converſation with the Pannel, at that Meeting, or ſome time after, about admitting the Dragoons; whether he means that Day or ſome Day thereafter? depones, depones, He cannot be positive as to the Day. And depones, That, upon delivering General Guest's Message to the Pannel, he did it aloud; and is positive, that the Meeting delivered such an Opinion as he has already deponed upon; and thinks the Provost put the Question as he has already deponed; but as to this last Particular he is not positive.

XXVI. Donald Mackay, Cadie in Edinburgh, depones, That, on Monday Afternoon, the 16th of September 1745, William Henderson gave the Deponent a Letter to be carried to Leith, to one William Ross a Gunner; which the Deponent was told was to bring him up from Leith to the Pannel, then Lord Provost of Edinburgh. That, after the Deponent had delivered his Message, and returned, as he was walking about the Luckenbooths, a Man dressed in black Cloaths came to the Deponent, and asked him, If he knew him? The Deponent answered, 'I do not know you, Sir.' The Man replied, 'What, do you not know me?' And the Deponent said, 'I be-'lieve I may have seen you once or twice; but I do not know your Name.' Then the Man said, 'Here is a Letter to the Provost; you must find him 'out, and give it him; and here is Three-pence for your Pains, and next 'time I see you I will give you a Shilling.' That the Deponent went in quest of the Provost, and saw Mr. Charles Erskine Advocate, Charles Fraser Merchant, and the deceased Mr. Robertson Minister, standing together. That the Deponent came up to them, and asked them, if they knew where the Provost was; for here was a Letter he had to give him. Mr. Charles Erskine said, 'Give me the Letter, and I'll deliver it to him:' And the Deponent gave the Letter to Mr. Erskine. Then Charles Fraser said, 'I 'am lighter-footed than you; give me the Letter, and I'll carry it to 'him:' And Mr. Erskine gave him the Letter, and Charles Fraser went off with it. And depones, That the Deponent did not then know, nor does he yet know the Contents of the Letter, nor from what Person it was. And depones, That after the Rebels had got Possession of the City of Edinburgh, he saw the same Person who had given him the Letter as above, who was then an Officer in the Service of the Rebels, and craved him for his Shilling that he had promised him; but did not get it.

XXVII. Mr. Charles Erskine of Edinshead, Advocate, depones, That, upon the Evening of Monday the 16th of September 1745, as he believes, though he cannot be positive of the Day, the Deponent, Charles Fraser Merchant, and the now deceased Mr. Robertson Minister, were standing together opposite to the Tolbooth; when a Street-Cadie came running up in some Haste, and said, 'Who is there? Where is the Provost?' And the Deponent turning about his Face to the Cadie, said, 'Why, what do you 'want the Provost for?' The Cadie answered, 'Here is a Letter I have 'to give him.' The Deponent said, 'From whom is the Letter?' The Cadie answered, 'I do not know; a Man in black Cloaths gave it me to 'give him.' The Deponent replied, 'I believe the Provost is just now 'in the New-Church Isle:' And then Charles Fraser said, 'I believe the 'Provost is in the New-Church Isle; if you will give me the Letter, I 'will carry it to him.' And the Deponent having before taken the Letter out of the Cadie's Hand, he, at the Cadie's Desire, then gave it to Charles Fraser. That the Deponent looked at the Back of the Letter, and saw that it was addressed to the Lord Provost; but cannot say, that, in the Hurry they were then in, he observed what more was in the Address, nor did he look at the Seal. And being shewn the Letter in the Clerk's Hands, which is the first in the List of Writings subjoined to the criminal Libel, depones, That he cannot say, whether it is the same with the Letter above deponed upon, or not.

XXVIII. Charles Fraser, Merchant in Edinburgh, depones, That, between Five and Six o'Clock of the Evening of the Day before the Rebels came into the City of Edinburgh, the Deponent being standing on the Street, with Mr. Erskine the preceding Witness, a Cadie came up to them, asking, where was the Lord Provost? Mr. Erskine answered, 'What do you want with him?' The Cadie said, 'I have a Letter to give him.' Mr. Erskine said, 'Let me see it.' The Cadie gave him the Letter, and Mr. Erskine said, 'The Provost is in the New-Church Isle; I'll go in with 'it to him.' Then the Deponent said to Mr. Erskine, 'Sir, Don't 'trouble yourself; give it me, and I'll carry it to him.' And the Deponent got the Letter, and went with it to the New-Church Isle; when the Deponent found a great Crowd of People there, and some Difficulty to get at the Pannel; and therefore gave the Letter to Mr. Polson, a Vintner in Town, to hand it to the Pannel: And the Deponent saw it handed accordingly; and staid till it was broke open. That the Deponent cannot say, he saw it in the Pannel's Hands, nor knows he by whom it was opened. And the first Thing the Deponent noticed in the Reading, after they had read a Line or two of the Letter, was, that they said it was from Charles P. R. Upon which there arose in the Meeting a great Noise and Murmuring, some calling out, not to read it: And then the Pannel, and the rest of the Meeting, dismissed; and the Magistrates, as the Deponent thinks, went to the Goldsmiths-Hall. And being shewn the Letter, which is the first in the List of Writings subjoined to the criminal Libel, depones, He believes it may be the very same that he has deponed upon, though he did not then either observe the Seal, or that it was addressed to the Magistrates and Town-Council, as well as to the Lord Provost of Edinburgh.

XXIX. William Henderson, Writer in Edinburgh, depones, That, upon Monday the 16th of September 1745, the Deponent was in the New-Church Isle; where he saw the Pannel, and a Number of other Persons, met together; but remaining there for a very little Space, he did not know what was transacted amongst them. That he went from that Place towards the Castle-hill, and returned from thence to the Goldsmiths-Hall about Six o'clock at Night; where he found the Pannel, the other Magistrates, and most of the Council met. That he saw a Letter lying upon the Table; which, from Curiosity, he took up, and looked at: and the Letter marked Number 1. which is now shewn to him, he says, is the Letter he so looked at; and which Letter, he was told by some Person in the Hall (the Deponent does not call to mind who that Person was) had been brought in to the Meeting in the New-Church Isle. That, very soon after the Deponent came to this Place, the Pannel proposed, the Town's Assessors should be sent for, for their Advice; which was agreed to: And the Deponent went for the deceased Mr. James Graham, and Mr. Robert Pringle; but found none of them. That, after he returned, he reported, that Mr. Graham was not to be found, and that Mr. Pringle was out of Town; and thereafter Mr. Solicitor Haldane, one of the Town's Assessors, who had been called upon by the Provost and Magistrates, came in to the Meeting; and the Pannel then took the Chair; and the Deponent was ordered, he believes by the Provost, to read the Letter; and having read the Address, and the Subscription, which is Charles P. R. and begun to read a Line, Mr. Haldane withdrew, and said, That these were Matters too high for him. Upon this the Provost said, Good God! I am deserted by my Arms, and by my Assessors. That then there was a Pause; and the Pannel having demurred about reading the Letter, one of the Meeting said, He thought there could be no Harm in having it read. Whereupon the Deponent proceeded, and read the Letter. That then a Motion was made, to send a Deputation to the Rebels Camp, as the only Means to save the Town from the Menaces contained in the Letter. And being interrogate, who it was that made the Motion? says, That several of the Members of the Meeting seemed to be of that Opinion; but who it was that made the Motion, the Deponent cannot tell; but, as he remembers, there was a good deal of Confusion among them. However, this Motion was agreed to by the Meeting. And at this Time the Deponent was called upon by Dean of Guild Allan, and by him desired to go to the Parliament-Close, where the Edinburgh Regiment was, and tell the Officer, without Loss of Time, to march his Men up to the Castle, and to deliver in their Arms. That the Deponent accordingly went, and found one Mr. Burns, who was Adjutant to the Regiment, and acquainted him with the Message sent by Dean of Guild Allan. But he having asked of the Deponent, whether the Pannel had given Orders for that Purpose? and the Deponent having received no Commission, but from Dean of Guild Allan, Mr. Burns demurred to follow the Advice given. That the Deponent immediately returned, to acquaint the Dean of Guild of what Mr. Burns had said. Whereupon he immediately went down Stairs to speak to Mr. Burns; who they met coming up to the Goldsmiths-Hall. What passed between them the Deponent knows not; but, in a very little after, he saw the Regiment march to the Castle. Depones, That after he returned with his Answer to Dean of Guild Allan, he was informed in the Meeting that four Persons had been named as Deputies to go to the Rebels Camp, namely, Bailie Gavin Hamilton, Bailie Yetts, Conveener Norrie, and Deacon Orrock. Whether there were more named or not, the Deponent knows not; nor does he know further as to any Instructions given them, but that they were to find out upon what Terms or Conditions the Rebels were to enter the Town. That, in pursuance of this, the Deputies went out; and returned again betwixt Nine and Ten o'Clock at Night, with a written Answer, Number 2, in the List of Writings subjoined to the Libel: Which having been shewn to the Deponent, he says, it is the Answer the Deputies brought in. After this Answer was delivered by them to the Meeting, which by the Time the Deputies had returned, had gone from the Goldsmiths-Hall to the Laigh Council-House, it was observed, that it contained a Limitation of Time, namely, Two o'Clock in the next Morning, within which a precise Answer was to be given by the Magistrates and Council. And as, by this Time, the Magistrates had some Information, that Sir John Cope, and his Majesty's Forces, were off Dunbar, and that it was believed by that Time they would be landed, the Meeting came to a Resolution to send a second Deputation, in order to try if they could prevail to have the Time lengthened out 'till Nine or Ten o'Clock next Day. That the Deponent does not know precisely who these second Deputies were, nor did he see them set out or return; but that, a Day or two after, a Paper was put into his Hands by Provost Coutts, who was the only one of the second Deputation whom the Deponent knows of, or remembers, which, he said, was the Answer returned upon the second Deputation to the Magistrates and Town-Council: And the Writing marked Number 3, in the List subjoined to the Libel, now shewn to the Deponent, he says, is the Paper he received from Provost Coutts, as above. And being interrogate, whether the Pannel made the Motion, or acquiesced or concurred in the Deputations? says, He does not remember that he made the Motion; but that he took it for granted that he concurred or acquiesced in it, either explicitly or tacitly; not being able to call to mind any thing he uttered or said concerning them, excepting that, when the Instructions were given to the second Deputies, he urged them to insist, That it was then late, and he could not have the Sense of the Inhabitants; and therefore it was reasonable they should be indulged 'till Ten o'Clock, that they might have an Opportunity to see what the Sentiments of the Inhabitants were concerning that Matter. And depones, That he, as under the Town-Clerks, always attends the Magistrates when they meet together in the Council as Magistrates; but the Deponent knows of no Minute of Record that was made of the Transactions of that Day. And depones, That, about Four o'Clock, or a little after, he had Directions from the Pannel to go to the Cross, and to desire that such Inhabitants or Burgesses as he there met with, should repair to the New-Church Isle; which the Deponent accordingly did. And says, That the aforesaid Directions were given him by the Pannel as he was proceeding from the Goldsmiths-Hall to the New-Church Isle. And further says, That the Paper marked Number 8, in the List of Writings subjoined to the Libel, he verily believes, is the Paper which he saw in the Pannel's Hand about Three or Four o'Clock, which of the two the Deponent cannot be positive; but that it was that same Afternoon before the Meeting in the New-Church Isle above-mentioned.

XXX. Sir George Preston, of Valleyfield, depones, That, in September 1745, the Deponent was Captain of a Company of Volunteers for Defence of the City of Edinburgh; and, on Monday the 16th of that Month, his Station was to keep Guard with his Company at the Nether bow Port, along with another Company commanded by Mr. James Nimmo: And, when it was pretty far in the Afternoon, the Companies being drawn out upon the Streets, the Deponent went to the Pannel to receive his Orders what they were to do, and he found the Pannel in the New-Church Isle; who ordered the Deponent to march the Companies to their Alarm-post in the Lawn-market, and to remain there till further Orders. That the Deponent

Deponent immediately marched up the Companies to the Lawn-Market; and there he met with several Volunteers in their Return from the Castle of Edinburgh, who told the Deponent, That they had marched up their Companies to the Castle, and delivered up their Arms there; and it was high Time for him to do so likewise. And the Reason they gave the Deponent for having taken that Step, was, That they said, that now the Town was not to be defended; and that a Resolution had been taken in the New-Church Isle not to defend the Town. That the Deponent followed their Advice, marched up with the two Companies above-mentioned to the Castle, and there delivered up their Arms. Depones, That between three and four o'Clock of the same Afternoon, there came in at the Netherbow Port sixteen or eighteen Carts loaded with Spades and Shovels, which, it was said to the Deponent, were carrying to the Castle; and a Town-Officer came to the Deponent, with Orders, as from the Pannel, then Provost, to let them pass; which he did accordingly. That thereafter, when the Deponent went to the Castle, he asked Mr. Lyon, the Store-Keeper of the Castle, Whether these Spades and Shovels had been brought thither; who answered, That there came none there; for they had no Use for them; and they had great Abundance of their own.

XXXI. James Miliar, late Servant to the deceased Alexander Bruce of Kennet, depones, That upon the 16th of September 1745, the Deponent was standing at the Entry of the Tolbooth-Church, in the Afternoon, and saw several Carts, how many he cannot now say, loaded with Shovels, Spades, and Mattocks, brought towards the Entry to the Laigh Council-House, and taken into the Door which enters in to the North-gavel of the Parliament-House; but where they were carried afterwards, the Deponent knows not. And further says, That some Town-Officers told him, that these Carts were brought thither by the Order of the Lord Provost; at least one of the Town-Officers, whose Name he knows not, but he is an old Man, and he would know him if he saw him again, told him so. And upon an Interrogatory put to him, further says, That whether that Officer was waiting upon the Carts, or attending the Provost, who, he believes, was in the Goldsmiths-Hall, he does not know.

XXII. Baillie Bryden, Lieutenant of the Royal Regiment of Artillery, depones, That he was in a Tavern with the Pannel some little Time before the Rebels entered the Town, in the Year 1745, when a Gentleman was brought in to them, who said, He had carried along with him from Dalkeith about fifty Men to assist in defending the City against the Rebels. That the Deponent did not observe the Pannel say much to him; but he rose up from his Seat, and thanked him. That the Provost seemed to be at a loss where to quarter them; but at last the Provost gave Directions to carry them to the High-School, as the propereſt Place to quarter them. And further depones, That he was employed in placing the Cannon on the Walls of the City; and did not find any Occasion of Complaint to the Provost concerning any other Matter, than what related to his own Business; and it was chiefly concerning the making of the White-Iron Cases for the Grape-Shot; in which he thought the Tinman that was employed did not make such Haste as he ought to have done: As to the other Parts of the Works carrying on, he thought that the People he happened to see working, went on pretty well. And further says, That he waited on the Pannel, along with the deceased Mr. Maclaurin, who was in a Tavern (he thinks, but cannot be positive, that it was in the Evening before the Rebels entered the City); and desired Orders in Writing to load the Cannon on the Walls. That the Pannel did not give orders in Writing, but verbally ordered him to load them; and that Provost Drummond was then present, and said he would give Orders in Writing; which accordingly he did. And upon a further Interrogatory he recollects, that upon the Saturday a Number of Men were ordered by the Provost to assist him (as the Deponent heard, though he cannot tell to a Man, they were twenty-four) to mount the Cannon; which accordinglywas done, as far as the Deponent can recollect, from Brisiow Port to the Netherbow; and that it was upon the next Day, being Sunday, he waited upon the Pannel, with Mr. Maclaurin, and received the verbal Orders above-mentioned. In consequence whereof, and of a written Warrant from Provost Drummond, the Cannon were accordingly loaded; the Deponent cannot say all of the Cannon, because he came away about eleven o'Clock at Night, and left the Town's People at Work, at least he left them there upon the Cannon when he came away; the Gunners which he brought along with him having returned to the Castle before he left the Town's People. That a Sailor from Leith, who was said to the Deponent to have Skill in loading Artillery, was come to the Place where the Deponent was at Work; and it was said to the Deponent, the rest of the Cannon were to be loaded. And being interrogate, Why the Guns were not sooner loaded? depones, That the Materials for loading them were not sooner ready. And being interrogate for the Pannel, Whether or not the Scaffolding, upon which the Cannon were placed, was sufficient? depones, That he saw Boards upon which the Cannon were placed, to make them run upon; but no Scaffolding whereupon they were placed; the Swivels which were placed upon the Netherbow and Brisiow Ports, were to be fired by Men who were to stand upon the Scaffolds placed there for that Purpose. And further depones, That upon a Message delivered by Bailie Baillie, and some other Persons that came along, sent to Gen. Guest, he sent the Deponent, and some other Artillery-Men, to the Town, to follow such Directions as should be given them by the Pannel concerning the Cannon: That, as the Deponent thinks, there were two Messages delivered to Gen. Guest concerning Gunners to be sent down; but that he was sent down but once with the Orders above set down, before the Saturday the Transactions whereof are above set forth. That when they came down the first Time to clean the Guns, they had no Orders from Gen. Guest to attend upon the Walls, and to fire the Guns, but only to assist in planting them upon the Walls; nor does the Deponent know of any Gunners the Town had, excepting the Sailor above-named: But that he was present when Mr. Maclaurin applied to one Jerment, the Master of a Vessel at Leith, to assist in managing the Guns; but he declined it.

XXXIII. Robert Brown, Taylor in Edinburgh, depones, That upon the 16th of September, in the Year 1745, the Deponent served in the Trained-Bands of Edinburgh, and was under the Command of Capt. Hepburn, and was placed at the West-Port, and continued there till three o'Clock, or thereabouts, in the Morning after. That their Captain having gone up to wait upon the Provost and Magistrates, as the Deponent believes, to receive Instructions from them how his Company was to be disposed of; when he returned, he signified to those under his Command, that his Orders were, That every Man should repair to his own Home; and that thereupon they went off. And further says, That the Deponent having asked his Captain, what should be done with the Arms of his Company? he told them, his Orders were to leave them in that Place where they then were, which was a Sort of Guard-Room; and told him, that his Half-pike was to be left there also. Accordingly, when they dispersed as above, they left their Arms there.

XXXIV. Edward Inglis, Druggist in Edinburgh, depones, That upon the 16th of September 1745, he was a Soldier in the Trained-Bands, in the Company commanded by Capt. Hepburn, which was stationed at the West-Port about Eight of the Clock in the Morning of that Day, and remained there till about Half an Hour after Three next Morning; when their Captain told them, That he had Orders from their Colonel, that is, the Pannel, to disperse, and leave their Arms in the Place where they kept their Guard-Room. In pursuance whereof, they accordingly dispersed, and left their Arms in the foresaid Place. And depones, That about Five o'Clock Monday Evening before they dispersed, the Deponent having heard from Capt. Dalzell, one of the Officers of the City-Guard, that the Town was to be delivered up, he applied to Captain Hepburn, and said, That, since that was to be the Case, he thought the best Way for them was to go to the Castle, and deliver in their Arms, and every Man to go to his own Home; but the Captain answered, That they could not desert their Station, and behoved to wait Orders from their superior Officers.

XXXV. Alexander Hepburn, Merchant in Edinburgh, depones, That upon the 16th of September, in the Year 1745, he commanded a Company of the Trained-Bands in the City of Edinburgh. That he and his Company were planted as a Guard upon the West-Port, about Eight o'Clock of that Morning, and continued upon that Station till about Three next Morning; when they dispersed, and left their Arms in the Room where they kept Guard. And being interrogate, By whose Orders they dispersed, and left their Arms there? says, That he was sent for, to come to the Provost and Magistrates, who were then in Mrs. Clarke's, he believes he received the Message by a Cadie. When he came to Mrs. Clarke's, where the Magistrates were, Mr. Tennent, the Captain Commandant of the Trained-Bands, chid him for having lingered so long upon that Station where he was; for that he had sent for him, by George Wemyss, some time before that; that he and his Men should disperse, and leave their Arms in the Room where they kept Guard. That the Deponent answered, He had received no such Message; but that he came now in Obedience to a Message from the Council; and now he attended, and desired to know their Pleasure; and that the Commandant then, in the Presence of the Provost and Councillors, gave him Orders forthwith to disperse his Men, and to leave the Arms in that Room where they were keeping Guard; and that John Hislop, the Store-Keeper of the Town, was that Morning to come and take away the Arms. That all the while the Deponent staid in the Room, and while he was receiving the Orders from the Captain-Commandant, the Pannel's Head was lying on his Hand on the Table, and, to the Deponent's Apprehension, was asleep. That the Deponent immediately left the Council, and returned to his Station at the West-Port; intimated those Orders to his Men, and dispersed them; who left their Arms in the said Room where they had kept Guard. And being interrogate, Whether, when he communicated his Orders to the Company, he had told them, That it was by the Lord Provost's Order that he had dispersed them? says, That he cannot be positive; that it is possible he might have said his Orders were from the Provost, because the Council were all present when the Commandant gave the Deponent his Orders. And depones, That, as Captain of the Company stationed at the West-Port, he ordered the Gates to be opened to the two several Deputations that were sent by the Magistrates, and to the first Deputation when they were on their Return; but that the Guard was dismissed before the Return of the second Deputation. And further says, That he understood in general, that the Deputies were sent out to make some Treaty or Capitulation; but, as to Particulars, he learned nothing from them, or any body else. That he cannot charge his Memory at present, nor can he recollect, that the Deputies told him any thing of their Errand going out, or the Answer of the first Deputation; and is positive, that none of the Men under his Command did that Morning, or the Day before, at any time, tell him of any Surmise of the Surrender of the City, or propose carrying their Arms to the Castle.

XXXVI. Robert Tennent, Merchant in Edinburgh, depones, That, upon the foresaid 16th of September, he was Captain-Commandant of the Trained-Bands of Edinburgh; and that he knows Captain Hepburn's Company was placed at the West-Port; and that they dispersed about Three o'Clock next Morning. And being interrogate, by whose Orders they dispersed, and left their Arms in the Guard-Room? says, That, upon an Alarm brought in from the Street into the Laigh Council-House, some time in the Evening of the 16th, he cannot be positive as to the Hour, that the Highlanders had entered the City at the Netherbow, and were chasing the Dragoons before them; it was thought dangerous that the Trained-Bands should be found by the Rebels with Arms in their Hands: And therefore he, the Deponent, moved to the Provost and Council, that Orders might be given to the Men under the Officers of the Trained-Bands, to lay down their Arms, and disperse; and that, upon this Motion, it was agreed by the Provost and Council, that such Message should be sent. In pursuance whereof, the Deponent sent Capt. Wemyss to the three several Companies; one whereof was posted at the Weigh-House, and two at the West-Port, to signify to them the Provost and Council their Pleasure to the foresaid Effect. That, as it appeared afterwards, Capt. Wemyss did not go to the Companies at the West-Port, but had gone only to the Company stationed at the Weigh-House; which, in consequence of the Order he transmitted to them, dispersed: But what they did with their Arms, the Deponent knows not. And the Council being informed by Bailie Mansfield, who had Occasion to be at the West-Port that Morning, that Capt. Hepburn and his Company were still there, they sent for the Captain, and upon his coming to Mrs. Clarke's, where the Council then were, the Depo-

nent asked him, in their Presence, Why he had not dispersed his Men sooner, upon the Notice sent him by Capt. Wemyss? he replied, He had never received any such Message. And, upon an Interrogatory, the Deponent further says, That the Message, as he understands it, sent to Capt. Hepburn by the Council was to dismiss his Men, and come up to them; and that he had actually dismissed his Company before the Deponent saw him, as he the Deponent supposes; and that he does not know what Orders were given to Capt. Hepburn anent the Disposal of the Arms. And further depones, That, when Capt. Hepburn came to the Magistrates, the Deponent does not remember, and cannot be positive, whether the Pannel was present among them or not; he having about that time been pressed to go to Bed, and take a little Rest: for he was fatigued, and faint. And, being further interrogate, Whether, when he the Deponent represented to the Council the Report that was heard at the Door, that the Highlanders had burst in at the Netherbow Port, and were chasing the Dragoons up the Street, any particular Orders were given as to the Disposal of the Arms? depones, That he cannot be positive, further than that they were to lay down their Arms; and he supposed they were to leave them in the Place they kept Guard. And also says, That, after it was found that the Alarm upon which the Orders were sent to the Companies to disperse was false, the Deponent did not think of sending a second Order, for he thought the first Order was executed: And as for the Arms, the Deponent does not know that any second Orders were sent concerning the Disposal of them. And depones, That there are in all sixteen Companies of Trained-Bands: And that before Sunday there were never so many as three Companies on Duty, as far as the Deponent can recollect; but that then the three Companies were ordered upon Duty; and that three Companies continued to do Duty, till they were dismissed, as above: And that the Deponent does not know, or remember, of any Orders given to John Hislop to gather up the Arms; nor that any Mention of Hislop was made in his Hearing when Capt. Hepburn attended the Council. And, upon a further Interrogatory, depones, That, after it was agreed upon in the Goldsmiths-Hall to have a Meeting in the New Church Isle, the Pannel recommended it to all who were present to attend; and to desire such Burgesses as they met with to come there also; as also, to such as were at the Head of any Corporation or Society, to take the Opinion of the Members of the same, whether it was proper to stand out and defend the Town? That thereupon the Deponent assembled the Officers under his Command in John Ross's Tavern; and the Captains were in one Room, and the Subalterns in another. That he asked the Captains first, What their Opinion was concerning the defending of the Town? And they were all of Opinion, that, since the Dragoons had fled Eastward, and that some of the Volunteers had begun to separate, it was not practicable to defend the Town: And that, upon advising among the Subalterns concerning the same Proposition, they were unanimously of the same Opinion; as it was reported to the Deponent by Mr. Auchinleck, who was his Lieutenant, from the Lieutenants; and by Mr. Hutton, his Ensign, from the Ensigns: And that he and his Officers, at least a great many of them, attended the Meeting in the New Church Isle. And further says, That the Deponent had received the Key of the Wicket of the Netherbow Port; but that, upon Monday Night, in Presence of the Pannel and Council, the said Key was by him delivered to Capt. Hamilton, to whom, at the same time, the great Key of the Gate was also delivered, in order to let out the Dragoons Baggage; some of whom were left to take care of it, and made a very great Noise for it at the Time.

XXXVII. John Dalgleish, Watchmaker in Edinburgh, depones, That he was a Captain of the Trained-Bands, on Duty upon the Evening of Monday the 16th of September 1745; and, between Seven and Eight o'Clock at Night, he received a Message by one of the Town-Officers, containing Orders to him to cause his Company to lay down their Arms, and to dismiss them: Which he did not incline, on that Message, to do; but sent his Ensign, William Sibbald, Taylor, with Orders to find out the Provost wherever he was, and to acquaint him; and, if he could not be found, the Captain-Commandant; that he, the Deponent, had received the above Message as from the Pannel, or some of the Council; and to inquire at one, or either of them, if such a Message was sent; and what he should do in relation to the Subject thereof? That his Ensign accordingly went, and returned to him between Eight and Nine o'Clock, with Orders, as from the Pannel, to dismiss his Guard, and lay down their Arms: And the Deponent being then standing at the Door of the Weigh-house, which was his Post, and where he had planted two Centries, his Men rushed out upon him, leaving their Arms behind them. And depones, That he received no Direction from any Person in what Manner these Arms should be disposed of, or secured. Depones, That he first mounted Guard upon the Evening of the Fast-day, which was held two Weeks before the Rebels came to Town; and mounted Guard again, upon the 16th Day of September, about Seven o'Clock in the Morning; and, just before that, saw the Pannel in the Goldsmiths-Hall, who acquainted the Deponent, that he would get Powder and Ball, and Cartridge-boxes, from John Hislop, the City Store-keeper. That, about Nine o'Clock he sent to Mr. Hislop, desiring to have them; but he not being in the way, the said Ammunition was not brought till about Eleven o'Clock, when as much as was thought would be useful was delivered to him for his Company. Being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That, betwixt Nine and Ten of the Sunday Morning the 15th, the Officers of the Trained-Bands were called by the Captain-Commandant, by the Pannel's Orders, to the Crown Tavern, where he, and the rest of the Captains, who were all in one Room together, received Orders from their Commandant, to be ready to draw out their Companies on a Minute's Warning, which each Captain communicated to his Subalterns; with Orders, to such of them as were there, not to leave that Tavern, without leaving Word where they might be found. That, about Three of the Clock of the Afternoon of this Day, the Captains got Orders to repair to their respective Bounds, and draw out their Companies; which they accordingly did: And then the Deponent's Company had Arms distributed among them; and, as far as he could observe, Arms were delivered to the other Companies: And that, before the Companies were dismissed, they received Orders to be ready to march at Tuck of Drum.

XXXVIII. Mark Sandilands, Merchant, and late one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That he was one of the associated Volunteers, who, on the 7th of September, proposed to publish a Paragraph in the Edinburgh Courant, on the Monday following, containing an Account of the Steps taken for Defence of the City of Edinburgh against the Rebels: That he shewed a Copy of the Paragraph, as concerted, to the Pannel, some others of the Volunteers being in Company, which contained Words to this Purpose, 'By the Advice of the Crown-Lawyers, he chearfully accepted of the Offer of their Service,' (which referred to the Volunteers;) and the Pannel said, He could not agree to that Draught, because it was not true: And it was amended by the Pannel's Direction; and after the Words, Advice of the Crown-Lawyers, it was made to run, he acquiesced in, and accepted of their Service; giving this for his Reason, That he differed in Opinion with the King's Lawyers; for, as the Law stood, he thought it was unlawful to take up Arms, without the special Warrant of his Majesty. Depones, That he was present when Bailie James Stewart proposed to send to the King's Ships in the Road, to desire to have some Sailors, accustomed to fire Cannon, for serving the Cannon mounted on the City-Walls; which the Pannel did not relish; because, he said, they would be rash, and they would fire on Friends, as well as Foes. And, being interrogate, If, when the Pannel did not approve of said Proposal, he mentioned any other? depones, He does not remember.

XXXIX. George Dunbar, Merchant, and late Bailie of Edinburgh, depones, That the Paper, No. 8, annexed to the Criminal Letters, was framed by the Deponent, and some other Citizens, betwixt One and Two Afternoon, of the 16th of September 1745; and that, while they were in the Course of signing it, Bailie Gavin Hamilton, and Bailie Robert Baillie, sent George Lindsay for the Deponent, to ask him, What sort of a Paper it was to which he was procuring Subscriptions? That the Deponent went, and explained the Substance of it; and said he would give them the Scroll of it; which he sent for, and delivered to them; and, after reading it, they were well pleased with it; saying, They believed it to have been a Paper of another Nature. That the Deponent went along with them to some more of the Council assembled in the Goldsmiths-Hall, where the said Scroll was delivered to Dean of Guild Hathorn. That, about Three o'Clock of this Day, he met the Pannel at the Stinking Style, and put the said Paper, then signed by a great many of the Inhabitants, in the Pannel's Hands; relating to him, at the same time, the Substance of it; and he promised to lay it before the Magistrates and Council. The Deponent attended him to the Goldsmiths-Hall; and, as they were entering the Door, a Crowd of the Subscribers rushed in behind them; at which the Pannel was vastly offended; and, turning about, said, What, Gentlemen, think you to compel me to grant the Desire of your Petition by Force? Upon which the Deponent endeavoured to stop, and pacify them, and went down Stairs, the Bulk of them following him to the Parliament-Close; where he remained for some little Time, and until he received a Message from Capt. Hepburn, who commanded the Company of the Trained-Bands in which the Deponent, who was a private Man, served, That his Company was mutinying, because the Volunteers were going to lay down their Arms; that this was before the Fire-bell rung. That when, in obedience to the Captain's Commands, he went to the West-Port, he found a Disorder among the Men of the said Company upon the Account foresaid; to whom the Deponent addressed himself much to this Purpose: Let the Volunteers do what they will; let us remain upon our Duty, till we shall receive the Lord Provost our Colonel's Commands; and I will stand by you as long as I can carry a Musket. That, about Four o'Clock, he saw that Part of the Town-Guard, which had gone out to support the Dragoons, standing in the Grass-market, some of them under Arms, and the Arms of others grounded; and this in his Way to Capt. Hepburn. Depones, That, betwixt Four and Five o'Clock at Night, the Pannel, with some other of the Magistrates, came to the West-Port, attended by Mr. Maclaurin and John Scot, Plumber, and gave Orders to shut the Ports; to let in any Soldiers or Dragoons that should come there, but no Stragglers or Strangers; to let in any Forage that should come for the Dragoons, or Persons having Messages to the Magistrates; and to prime and make ready the Cannon planted at the West-Port: All which things that required immediate doing, were done. That the Charge of the Cannon was given to the Captain of the Trained-Bands, and to the Captain of the Town-Guard; but he observed no Gunners there; and Scot, who, in Conjunction with Mr. Maclaurin, had primed the Cannon, staid by them for some time; he does not know how long. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That, by Capt. Hepburn's Order, as from the Pannel, he the Deponent, and three more of the Guard, mounted the Town-Wall by a Ladder, to observe if they could see any of the Dragoons coming; where they remained two Hours; but none came in but one. That the Deponent staid on Guard till about Two o'Clock in the Morning; when he went up to Mrs. Clarke's, where the Magistrates and Council were, to acquaint them, that they would do well to send some of the Soldiers of the City-Guard to take care of the Cannon, which were primed, and People with Flambeaux going near them; and he received for Answer from the Magistrates, That they would be taken care of. That the Pannel was not then in the same Room with the other Magistrates and Council, but in another Room, as he was told, sleeping. That he did not return to the Guard again, but remained a considerable Time with the Magistrates. That the Deponent, before he left the Guard, saw the Gentlemen of the first Deputation from the Magistrates and Town-Council to the Rebels go out, and return; and saw the Gentlemen of the second Deputation go out in a Hackney-Coach; but those of the first went out on Foot.

XL. Richard Lindsay, late one of the Bailies of Musselburgh, depones, That he did assist in getting together betwixt 140 and 150 Men in the Town and Neighbourhood of Musselburgh, to be employed in the Defence of the City of Edinburgh; and, upon Sunday the 15th September, marched them near to Crystal's; where Sir Robert Dickson, a former Witness, received them, and marched them that Night into Town. The Deponent returned to Musselburgh, and next Morning came into Edinburgh; and, about Nine o'Clock in the Morning, waited on the Pannel, and acquainted him, then in the Goldsmiths-Hall, that the said Men, who were quartered in the New Church Isle the preceding Night, were turned very impatient to be properly employed for the Defence of the City, for which End they had come; and that he wanted to have them delivered off his Hands. That the Pannel thanked him very much, and told him, he would send one to receive them immediately. That the Deponent returned to the New Church Isle to keep his Men together, where he remained about the Space of Half an Hour; and, at their Desire, he again waited upon the Pannel at the Goldsmiths-Hall, and acquainted him, that the Men had grown still more impatient, and desired they should be taken off his Hand: which the Pannel said should be done immediately; and sent for a Man that could not be found: Whereupon the Pannel desired him to return, and keep his Men together, and he would send one immediately to receive them. That he accordingly did return; and, after staying about a Quarter of an Hour with the Men, who begun to blame him for bringing them to Town, he waited a third Time upon the Pannel, representing, as above; and the Pannel seeming to be very much surprised that Nobody had come near him, desired the Deponent to return to his Men, and that what he insisted for should forthwith be done. That, soon thereafter, one of the Bailies, Tetts, he thinks, and a Serjeant of the City-Guard, came; that they cast some of the Men, and swore the rest to be faithful to his Majesty; which last were delivered over to the Care of the said Serjeant, and a good many of the former listed with the Edinburgh Regiment, as they themselves told him. That he knows nothing of their having received any Arms; and that the Bulk of them returned that Night home.

XLI. Robert Baillie, Merchant, and late one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That, upon the 16th of September, there was a Motion made in Council, where the Pannel was present, that the City-Arms should be secured, by sending them up to the Castle. That the Members of it were divided in their Opinion, and the Majority of them thought that no Orders should be made for that Purpose; and that the Pannel seemed to be of the Opinion of the Majority; and that it appeared to him, that there was an evident Majority for the foresaid Opinion, though no Vote was put; and it was from what the Pannel said, that the Deponent took him to be of the Opinion of the Majority: And that the Pannel, according to his usual Custom, asked the Opinion of severals before he spoke on the Subject himself: And that it is the common Practice of the Provost of Edinburgh in Council, when any Proposition is made, to ask the Opinion of five or six, or sometimes more, of the Council; who, if they give it all one Way, he usually declares it to be the Sense of the Council, unless a Vote is demanded. That, in the present Case, though there was a Difference in Opinion, yet no Vote was insisted for; and, as the Majority had given the Opinion above-mentioned, in consequence thereof he refused to give the Order.

XLII. Hugh Hathorn, late Dean of Guild of Edinburgh, depones, That he does not remember, that the Pannel told him the Message that was delivered him by Andrew Alves from the Rebel-Army; and thinks he did not hear of it 'till about the Time, or a little before Andrew Alves was committed Prisoner. And depones, That he was present in the Goldsmiths-Hall, both before the Meeting in the New-Church Isle, and afterwards in the Council-House; in both which Places, the Goldsmiths-Hall and Council-House, there was a great many of the Council present; that there was also a great many other People who did not belong to the Council; and in neither of these Meetings does the Deponent remember any Proposal to have been made for securing the City-Arms in the Castle of Edinburgh: But remembers to have heard a Message sent, as the Deponent thinks, from some of the Out-Guards about the Ports or the Walls, to know what they should do with their Arms? And the Reason why this Message was sent, the Deponent believes to have been, That it was publickly talked, that the Volunteers, before this time, had delivered up their Arms; and the Answer made to this Message was, That they should secure them the best Way they could; and the Deponent thinks this Answer fell to be made by the Pannel, as he was in the Chair. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, whether this Answer was given as being agreeable to the Mind of the Council? depones, He did not hear the Opinion of any of the Council asked, nor did hear any of the Council contradict it. And depones, That the Provost of Edinburgh cannot of himself, as he thinks, give out any of the Town's Arms to be used by the Inhabitants, without a previous Consent of Council; and he knows that the Fact is, when any of the Arms are given out, it is always done by an Order of Council.

XLIII. James Murray, Esq. Receiver-General of the Customs of Scotland, depones, That, upon Saturday the 14th of September 1745, he received a Letter from Mr. Drummond, now Lord Provost of Edinburgh, desiring him to come forthwith to the City of Edinburgh; and that at the Request of the Pannel: And the Deponent accordingly that Night came. That the Deponent met the Pannel in the Street, and asked his Commands. He desired the Deponent to go to the Lord Justice-Clerk's; where he instantly went, and was followed in two Minutes by the Pannel. That there the Deponent was told, whether by the Pannel, or the Lord Justice-Clerk, he cannot tell, being both present, that the Rebels were within two Days easy March of the Town; and, as it was proposed to defend it, they desired that the Deponent would give his Advice and Assistance. To which he answered, That it was his Duty and Inclination to do every thing in his Power for the King's Service. After this Provost Stewart and the Deponent went to the Street; and the Pannel told him, there were several Town's Gentlemen met in a Tavern, and desired he would go there. That accordingly they went together; and Mr. Drummond, now Lord Provost of Edinburgh, who was there, told the Deponent, they had sent to him for his Assistance in the Defence of the Town; and, as they were ignorant of military Matters, and convinced that the Deponent understood more of them than they did, hoped he would give them proper Directions how to dispose of the Men they had in Arms, in the best Manner for the Defence of the Town: Then they told the Deponent their Numbers, which, so far as he remembers, they said, might be about eleven or twelve Hundred; but cannot be positive. That the Deponent dictated to them the Method of disposing their Guards; and some Rules of Discipline they were in that Hurry to observe; Guards to be immediately placed, Alarm-posts assigned, and, besides, continual Patroles. There were several Rounds appointed for that Night; and the Pannel was to go the grand Round after Midnight. That Orders were instantly given for disposing every thing according to those Directions. That the next Morning the Deponent went with Mr. Colin Maclaurin to visit the Walls, and Stations of the Guards; and ordered Barricadoes at the Gates. That, about Mid-day, he, the Deponent, coming to the Streets, met the Pannel, who told him, he had gone the grand Round, and was sorry to tell the Deponent, that, notwithstanding the strict Orders given, he neither found the Guards nor Centries alert; but that they were huddled together, under the Shelter of the Wall. That the Barricadoes were immediately set about, and, by Night, pretty far advanced. That next Day, being Monday, the Dragoons, and City-Guard, marched out of Town Westward; but about Four, or a little before Four in the Afternoon, they returned in some Hurry, and the Dragoons retired towards Leith, and the City-Guard retired in good Order to the Town. That the Deponent observed this threw a Damp on the Spirits of the Inhabitants, who, 'till then, had shewn a good Countenance. That the Pannel, with many other Gentlemen, assembled in the Goldsmiths-Hall, sent for the Deponent. That the Deponent went immediately; and the Pannel made him some Compliments, and then asked him, if he thought the Town tenable? The Deponent told him, they had Hands enough; but that the Pannel, and the other Gentlemen present, were best Judges of their Hearts: But that, if they entertained any Thoughts of delivering up the Town, they were not to add to that Reproach, the Crime of delivering the King's Arms to the Rebels. And, being interrogate, whether any Mention was made by himself, or others in the Company, concerning the City-Arms? depones, That he did not at that time know, that the City had any Arms properly belonging to itself, other than what served the City-Guard. And that, after he left the Goldsmiths-Hall, having still some Confidence that the Town was to be defended, he went to his House, loaded his Pistols, put them in his Pockets, and came to the Street; where, observing a Party of armed Men marching up the Street, he asked them, where they were going? They answered, To the Castle, to deliver their Arms. Upon which the Deponent went to the Goldsmiths-Hall, and, with great Difficulty, got Access, and desired of the Pannel, that he would order the Netherbow Port to be opened to let the Deponent out of Town; that he being an Officer of the Revenue, it was unsafe for him to stay any longer; which the Pannel ordered accordingly. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, if the Deponent heard him express his Opinion anywise for defending the City? depones, That the first Time he came to the Goldsmiths-Hall, he heard the Pannel say, That, if the Town was to be defended, he would do his Duty, if he was to leave his Bones on the Walls: And he appeared to the Deponent to be very warm for the Defence of the Town; but that there was such a Confusion, he could not hear all that the Pannel said.

XLIV. David Lindsay, Writer in Edinburgh, depones, That he served as Lieutenant in Mr. Drummond, now Lord Provost of Edinburgh, his Company of Volunteers; and, being in the Lawn-market with the said Company after the Resolution was taken by the different Officers of the Volunteers, the Deponent was sent by Mr. Drummond, as he thinks, to General Guest, to acquaint him, that the Volunteers were immediately to come up to the Castle, and deliver up their Arms, for that no good could be done by keeping them; for that the Town was to be delivered up. That, upon his coming to the Castle, he met with Major Roberton at the Castle-gate, who asked the Deponent, where he was going? To which he made Answer, that he was going to General Guest. The Major then said, May I ask you what may be your Business? To which the Deponent made Answer, that he was come, at the Desire of Mr. Drummond, to deliver the above Message. To which Mr. Roberton answered, That the General knew all that already; and he expected them, without Loss of Time; and desired him to go back directly, and tell Mr. Drummond so much; which the Deponent accordingly did; and thereafter the Volunteers marched up, and delivered in their Arms.

XLV. John Hislop, Store-keeper of the City of Edinburgh, depones, That, in the Month of September 1745, the Deponent was Keeper of the Town of Edinburgh's Magazine, where their Arms and Ammunition were laid. That, at that Time, there was in the Magazine one Thousand two Hundred-Fifty Firelocks, besides two Hundred that were insufficient; by which he means altogether useless; and of the one Thousand two Hundred and Fifty, there was a great many that the Deponent would not give Half-a-Crown the Piece for; and the most of these were very old, but could fire: And besides, there was in the Magazine not quite two Hundred Bayonets, and about three Hundred Cartridge-Boxes in bad Case. That of Ammunition, there was about two Boxes, and a Bag with some loose Ball, and no Gun-powder; but that, in the Beginning of September, the Deponent got from the Powder-House four Hundred Weight of Powder. That, besides the above Arms that belonged to the Town of Edinburgh, there was the Arms of the City-Guard of Edinburgh, consisting of 75 Firelocks, Bayonets, and Cartridge-boxes. That the Powder and Ball was made up into Cartridges: And of the above Arms, there was one Hundred sent to Leith, but returned again to the Magazine, on Monday the 16th of September. That, by the Pannel's Orders, the Deponent gave, upon Sunday the 15th, betwixt forty and sixty Firelocks to each Company of the sixteen Companies of Trained-Bands, except the Canongate-Head Company, who got but about twenty-four; and that thirty-nine Firelocks were given to the thirty-nine additional Men of the City-Guard. And, upon Monday the 16th, the Deponent having got Orders from sometimes the Pannel, and sometimes the Magistrates, being all his Masters, gave accordingly Cartridges to those who came for them; and, particularly, he gave five Hundred Cartridges to each of the three Companies of the Trained-Bands who that Day kept Guard; and a good deal to the Seceders, who kept Guard at the Infirmary. That, before the 16th of September, all the Powder which was in the Powder-House was sent up to the Castle by Order of the Pannel; And, by the Pannel's Orders, on the said 16th, the Deponent got back from the Castle four Hundred and twenty-five Pound Weight, for the Use of the Cannon that were planted on the City-Walls, and for Cartridges; and the Deponent gave it out for charging the Cannon, and he gave Cartridges to such as called for them: And the whole Ammunition was given out, except about a fifty Pound Barrel. That, with respect to the Arms that were not given out, and the above Quantity of Powder, he received no Orders from the Provost, or any body else; and the Firelocks which he gave out, as above deponed upon, were never never again returned to him. That upon the 16th, the Deponent laid by the Keys of the Magazine, the Armoury, and the Wardrobe, in ſome ſecret Place, which his Servant Alexander Dryburgh knew. And, upon the 17th, after the Rebels got Poſſeſſion of the City, he ſtepped aſide, not thinking it proper to keep his own Houſe; and the Account which his ſaid Servant gave of the Keys afterwards was, That the Rebels threatened to break open the Doors of the Magazine, Armoury, Council-Houſe, and Wardrobe; and therefore Bailie Mansfield came to Alexander Dryburgh, and adviſed him to deliver up the Keys of the above Places; which he accordingly did: And the Day thereafter the Deponent ſaw the Rebels carrying down Arms on their Shoulders along the Streets, which he apprehended to be the Arms belonging to the Town of Edinburgh. And depones, He got no Orders for ſecuring, or bringing back the Arms which he had given to three Companies of the Trained-Bands that were upon Duty upon Monday Night the 16th; and that he was ſo fatigued, by ſitting up three Nights before, that he was not able to ſit up longer. And depones, That, after the Rebels had carried off the Arms, as above deponed upon, they delivered the Deponent the Keys of the Magazine, which was about fourteen or twenty Days after they entered the City. And, upon the Deponent's going into the ſaid Magazine, he found no Arms there, except a few of the broken Guns above-mentioned; and even theſe were afterwards carried off by them. And, being interrogate for the Pannel concerning the Spades and Shovels that were brought to the Magazine on Monday the 16th, depones, That on that Day there were four Carts of Shovels and Spades, belonging to William Millar, Seedſman in the Abbey, ſent up to the Magazine; and the Carter ſaid to the Deponent, that Bailie Hamilton deſired that he might take them under his Care and Cuſtody; and the Deponent accordingly did ſo; And that on Sunday, the 29th of September, the Rebels came and carried them off down to the Abbey; but, upon the Proprietor's making Application for them, the Deponent heard him ſay, that he afterwards got them back.

XLVI. Alexander Dryburgh, Servant to John Hiſlop, the preceding Witneſs, depones, That in the Month of September 1745, upon Monday the 16th Day, in the Evening, he knew, that his Maſter, John Hiſlop, had ſecreted the Keys of the Town of Edinburgh's Magazine and Storehouſes below a Form in the Council-houſe. And, upon the 17th, after the Rebels had entered the City of Edinburgh, and wanting Acceſs to the Council-Houſe, they threatened to break open the Door; and the Deponent by Accident meeting Bailie Mansfield, who knew that he had the Key of the Council-Houſe, deſired the Deponent to give the Key to the Rebels, rather than have the Door broke open; which he accordingly did: And, after the Rebels had got Acceſs to the Council-Houſe, they found out the Keys of the Magazine, Armoury, and Wardrobe, out of which they carried off all the Arms that were then to be found there; the Deponent having ſeen the very Arms carried down the Streets in Carts, and on Men's Shoulders; and that, when the Keys were again reſtored to his Maſter, and the Deponent had Occaſion to enter into the Armoury, he ſaw no Arms there.

XLVII. Thomas Dalyell, one of the Captains of the City-Guard of Edinburgh, depones, That, in September 1745, the Deponent was one of the Captains of the City-Guard, which then conſiſted, including Officers and Soldiers, of 126 Men. That, about Ten o'Clock of Monday the 16th of September, the Deponent, by Order of the Pannel, marched out with the whole Guard to the Colt Bridge, leaving only a few of the Men behind to make up Cartridges. That they remained at the Colt Bridge till about Three o'Clock Afternoon, when, by Order of the Commanding Officer of the Dragoons, they marched back to Town, and went to the Court of Guard; where they received Orders from the Pannel, which was brought them by Mr. Orrock, to march two Squads of the Guards to the Graſs-market, and to leave the other Squad at the Court of Guard. That the Deponent accordingly marched with the two Squads to the Graſs-market, and received from the Pannel the Key of the Wicket of the Weſt-Port, with Orders to allow Nobody to go out, or come in, but ſuch as he could be anſwerable for. That the Deponent, and his Party, remained in the Graſs-market till about Eight o'Clock at Night; and, about Seven o'Clock, as the Deponent thinks, he ſaw Bailie Yetts, Bailie Hamilton, and ſome others come from the Town to the Weſt-Port, who, he was told, were a Deputation ſent to the Rebel-Camp; but, ſome time before that, the Deponent had given the Key of the Wicket to one of the Captains of the Trained-Bands, Alexander Hepburn, who then kept Guard at the Weſt-Port. That, about Eight at Night, Capt. Maitland, another of the Captains of the Town-Guard, brought the Deponent Orders from the Pannel to march his Men to the Court of Guard; which the Deponent did. And it being his Turn to be upon Guard that Night, he then went to the Pannel to receive his Orders, what Guard he deſired to be kept that Night; and the Pannel ordered him to keep the ordinary Guard, which is a Squad, or a third Part of the Company, which then conſiſted of 126 Men; but the Deponent actually kept upon Guard 50 Men: And, by the Pannel's Orders, he ſent a Detachment of theſe to keep Guard at the Netherbow Port; the Volunteers who had kept Guard there formerly, having left it. That the Detachment he ſent firſt, conſiſted of 14 Men; but, as he was afterwards informed, that theſe had got themſelves drunk, he was forced to change them; and, at laſt, that Guard was reduced to the Number of ſix Men; which was all that the Deponent could find that were fit for doing Duty. That the Deponent received Orders from the Pannel, not to ſuffer any body to go out or come in at the Port; but, upon Recollection, ſays, That theſe Orders were not given to the Deponent, but were carried by one Henderſon to the Serjeant of the Guard in the Deponent's Abſence, and by him ſent with the ſaid Detachment to the Netherbow. That the Deponent went to his own Houſe about Four o'Clock, and did not ſee the Rebels come in at the Port; but was told by his Men at the Port, that before Five o'Clock, a Coach having come down the Street, and gone out at the Port, the Rebels took that Opportunity of ruſhing in, and ſeized the Centries, and took their Arms from them; and then marched up to the Court of Guard, and ſeized ſuch of the Men as they could lay Hands on there, and took their Arms from them. That the Deponent ſoon after went in queſt of the Pannel, to report what had happened. That he found the Pannel in a Tavern in the Writers Court, he thinks Mrs. Clarke's; and in Company with him, he found a Rebel-Officer, whom he afterwards knew to be Sullivan; and together with them, the Deponent thinks Bailie Yetts, and ſeveral others of the Council; and the Deponent reported to the Pannel what had happened to his Guard. Depones, That the Guard-Soldiers had been greatly fatigued for ſeveral Days before, and had been under Arms by Four o'Clock in the Morning of Monday the 16th; ſo that, when, at Night, the Deponent marched his Men from the Graſs-market to the Court of Guard, a great many of them were unfit for doing Duty. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That he had Occaſion to obſerve the Town's Arms belonging to their Magazine, having picked out what he thought the beſt of them, in very bad Condition, ſeverals of them not fit for Uſe; many of them that would indeed fire, but of theſe, many that would not keep Priming. Depones, That, upon Sunday the 15th, the Deponent, with about 90 of the Town-Guard, and a Detachment of about 50 of the Edinburgh Regiment, marched out towards Corſtorphin, to ſuſtain the Dragoons; and, after they had paſſed the Colt Bridge in their Way to Corſtorphin, there came up to them firſt, one Mr. Lindſay, and afterwards one Ormiſton, who is a Copperſmith in the Weſt-bow, and told them, that it was the Provoſt's Orders that they ſhould halt there: But thereafter Mr. Henderſon, who writes in the Council-Chamber, brought them Orders from the Provoſt to march forward to Corſtorphin, and there to take their Orders from Col. Gardiner. And, being further interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That, when the Pannel, on Sunday Morning the 15th of September, ordered the Deponent to march to Corſtorphin to ſuſtain the Dragoons, the Deponent ſaid, If he ſent them there, he ſhould provide them in better Arms; for their Arms were not fit for Service. Upon which the Pannel deſired the Deponent to go to the Magazine, and pick out for them the beſt Arms he could find. But the Deponent anſwered, That there were no Arms in the Town's Magazine that he could depend upon. Upon which the Deponent got for his Guard the Arms that had been got for the Edinburgh Regiment, which were new Arms, and, as he ſuppoſes, had been got out of the Caſtle; and theſe were the ſame Arms that the Town-Guard had when the Rebels entered the Town, and were taken from them. And, upon a further Interrogatory, depones, That he did not get the whole Number of Arms himſelf from the Armoury; but, having got the Pannel's Allowance, he gave Orders to his Men, that ſuch of them as thought their Arms not ſufficient ſhould, go to the Armoury, and leave them there, and take others in place of them. That the whole of them did not change their Arms, but the Bulk of them; and he believes about four-fifths of them went to the Armoury, and changed their Arms, as he directed.

XLVIII. James Tait, Goldſmith in Edinburgh, depones, That, in September 1745, both before and at the Time the Rebels entered the City of Edinburgh, the Deponent was Keeper, and had the Keys of the Netherbow-Port; but the Night before the Rebels entered, that is, the Monday's Night, the Deponent was obliged to go to Bed at Eleven o'Clock at Night, having been kept out of Bed the two preceding Nights with the Volunteers; and that Monday's Night he committed the Charge of the Port to his Servant James Gilleſpie, whereby it happened that the Deponent was a-bed on the Tueſday's Morning when the Rebels entered the Port; and knew nothing of them till he was raiſed out of Bed, and ſaw them in the Town. That the Deponent received no Orders, either on the Monday Night, or any preceding Night, about the Manner of keeping the Port; it being the ordinary Cuſtom, to open the Port as People called either going out or coming in; but upon the Monday's Night, the Deponent left at the Port ſix of the Town-Guard Soldiers, beſides his above Servant James Gilleſpie.

XLIX. James Gilleſpie, Servant to James Tait, the preceding Witneſs, depones, That, in September 1745, when the Rebels entered the City of Edinburgh, the Deponent was Servant to the preceding Witneſs Mr. Tait, and Keeper of the Port under him. That, upon Monday's Night, the 16th of September, Mr. Tait left the Charge of the Port to the Deponent, and gave him Orders, whatever Chairs or Coaches were entering the Town, or going out, to open the Port, and let them paſs. That the Deponent attended the Port that Night, together with ſix Centries of the Town-Guard Soldiers; and, betwixt Four and Five in the Morning, a Coach came down the Street, in order to go out at the Port; and the Deponent, agreeable to his Orders, opened the Port, and let it paſs; and after the Coach was paſt, the Deponent ſhut one of the Leaves of the Port; but as he was ſhutting the other, the Highlanders ruſhed in upon him, and beat him back, and then poſſeſſed themſelves of the Port, and entered the Town. Depones, That Nobody offered to ſtop the Coach from going out: That he knows not whether any of the Centries ſpoke with the Coachman; but he obſerved him to ſtop a little talking with one of the Waiters at the Port of his Acquaintance. And depones, That he did not ſay to any of the Soldiers that he had Orders to let out that Coach; nor could he, ſince he had no other Orders but the general Order above-mentioned; nor did any of the Soldiers ſtop him from letting out the Coach. And depones, That the Deponent had no particular Orders from the Pannel, or any of the Magiſtrates or Council concerning the Port.

L. Alexander Corſar, one of the Soldiers of the City-Guard of Edinburgh, depones, That, upon the Night of Monday the 16th of September 1745, he was upon Guard as one of the Soldiers of the City-Guard; and, at Four o'Clock on Tueſday's Morning, was ordered, with five or ſeven more of his Brother-Soldiers, by the Serjeant of the Guard, to go to the Netherbow to guard it, and to relieve the like Number of Soldiers that were there before; and the Serjeant of the Guard ordered the Deponent not to permit any Perſon whatever to go out or come in at the Port. And the Deponent accordingly marched, and relieved the Guard at the Port: And in about Half an Hour thereafter, the Deponent, obſerving a Coach coming down the Street, ſent two Men to meet, and ſtop it at the Fountain-well; but, as the Coachman would be forward, the Deponent went up and ſtopped it himſelf. That the Coachman ſaid, He behoved to get out at the Port; but the Deponent ſaid, He ſhould not get out, unleſs he had an Order from Provoſt Stewart. The Coachman ſaid, he had no Order from Provoſt Stewart; but that Provoſt Coutts had ordered him to be let out. The Deponent anſwered, Provoſt Coutts had now no more Power to give ſuch Order, than any other private Gentleman; and he ſhould not get out, without Provoſt Stewart's Orders. Upon which the Under-keeper of the Port who was James Gilleſpie, the preceding Witneſs, came came up, and said, That he had an Order to let out that Coach; but did not say from whom he had it. Upon which the Deponent answered, O, Sir, it is very well if you have an Order to let it out; you have the Keys of the Port, you must answer for it, and I have nothing to say. And being further interrogate, depones, That the Under-keeper had no Discourse with either the Coachman or the Postilion, before he told the Deponent that he had an Order to let out the Coach. Depones, That then the Port was opened, and the Coach drove out, and was not past the Deponent two Yards, when the Highlanders rushed in, and Lochiel gripped the Deponent by the Arm.

Then the Lord Advocate declared his Probation to be concluded.

Follows the Proof adduced for the Pannel's Exculpation.

I. John Coutts, Esq. late Lord Provost of Edinburgh, depones, That the Minutes and Orders of the Town-Council [admitted by the Lord Advocate, and Mr. Lockhart as Counsel for the Pannel] now shewn to him, were truly and really transacted, as therein entered, and signed by the Pannel as the Lord Provost, in Presence of the Council; and that the Minutes of the Committee [in like manner admitted by the Prosecutor and Pannel] also shewn to him, contain the true Proceedings thereof; and the Deponent was one of that Committee. Depones, That the Resolutions of the Council were reported to a Meeting of the Inhabitants, which was called about the latter End of August; which Meeting unanimously approved thereof, and appointed a Committee of their Number to join with the Magistrates to consult with the King's Lawyers, and such Judges as were in Town, touching the Legality of such Measures as had been under Consideration, for the Defence of the Town. In Prosecution of which, there was a Meeting of the Committee, at least part of them, in the Lord Justice-Clerk's House; where his Lordship and the Crown-Lawyers assisted. That several Proposals for the Defence of the City were under Deliberation, and particularly the raising of a Regiment of 1000 Men; which the said Judges and Lawyers thought would amount to High-Treason, without the Sovereign's Authority was first given. There was some Conversation how such a Regiment could be maintained, if raised; and such of the Committee of Inhabitants and Magistrates as were present, were desired to sound the Inclinations of the Citizens and Inhabitants, how far they would contribute to the Expence of it; and it was recommended to the Lord Advocate, to write to some of the King's Ministers at London, to obtain his Majesty's Royal Sign-manual for levying the said Regiment. Depones, That he knows, that the Pannel, and other Magistrates of the City, received several Proposals for putting the Town in a Posture of Defence; most of all which were complied with: And he knows, that Letters were wrote by the Pannel to the Ministers and Magistrates of neighbouring Burghs, to take particular Notice of the Motions of the Rebels, and inform the Magistrates of Edinburgh thereof. Depones, That, upon Sunday the 8th of September, in the Evening, or at Dinner, he heard that the King's Sign-manual was come; and a Council was held next Day, the 9th, where it was produced; and a Committee was appointed to carry it into Execution, by levying the Men, taking in Subscriptions, and, in general, doing every other Thing in relation to it. The first Meeting of which was appointed at the rising of that Council, and afterwards they were ordered to meet twice a-Day. Depones, That he subscribed for the Maintenance of the Regiment some time after the rest of the Council had subscribed; and he observed the Pannel's Subscription to be 20*l.* per Month, which was higher than that of any other Subscriber before the Deponent. Depones, That there was a Provision of Meal, sufficient for the said Regiment, before the Rebels entered the City of Edinburgh, made by the Direction of the Pannel, and other Magistrates; and Arms were furnished to the Regiment from the Arsenal in the Castle. Depones, That he heard Mr. Joseph Williamson complain to the Pannel, that the publick Works went slowly on. To which the Pannel answered, 'I have given Warrants to press Workmen and Carts; the 'Execution of the Work is committed to a Committee, under the In-'spection of Bailie Robert Baillie: What would you have me to do more?' And the Deponent knows, that Bailie Robert Baillie was at the Head of a Committee, who had Orders to carry on all public Works for the Defence of the City with the greatest Dispatch. Depones, That, upon the Approach of the Rebels, what Cess was owing by the City, was paid upon Saturday the 14th, by the Intervention of the Pannel; at whose Request the Deponent went down to the Royal Bank, to wait till such time as it was paid in; and the Deponent saw it paid; and he thinks, that the Pannel signed the Order for Payment of the Cess to the General-Receiver of the Land-Tax, directed to the Cashier of the Royal Bank, to be placed to the Debit of the Town's Cash-Account. That it consists with the Deponent's ponent's Knowledge, that the Pannel readily embraced a Propoſal of the Lord Juſtice-Clerk's, of having Meetings and Conſultations with ſeveral Noblemen and Gentlemen in and about the Town, to concert what was proper to be done at that Juncture; that he went to his Lordſhip, and told him, that he wanted Advice much, and would be very glad of ſuch Aſſiſtance. Depones, That he knows no further of Application made for Gunners from the Urſula Man of War, other than that, upon Monday the 16th of September, he ſaw a Letter lying upon the Table of the Goldſmiths-Hall, which the Deponent caſually took up, and read, dated from Leith, ſigned by he does not remember whom, directed either to the Pannel, or one of the City-Clerks: and bearing, that the Captain of the King's Ship in the Road could ſpare no Gunners; and that he thinks, but cannot be poſitive, it was before Dinner when he ſaw this Letter. Depones, That, about Eleven o'Clock of the ſaid 16th of September, the Deponent went up to the Goldſmiths-Hall, where the Pannel and ſome of the Members of the Council were; or, rather, the Deponent having gone up to the Goldſmiths-Hall, the Pannel came up to him. That the Pannel took Hugh Hathorn and this Deponent aſide, perhaps more of them, but he does not remember, and told them of the Meſſage Andrew Alves had delivered to him, in Preſence of Commiſſary Leſlie, touching the Strength of the Rebel Army, which Alves repreſented as great; and that the City would be ſubject to military Execution, ſhould they perſiſt in the Defence of it; and aſked their Opinion, if it would be proper to take Notice publicly of that Meſſage? ſuggeſting his Apprehenſion, that it might intimidate the Citizens and Inhabitants. That Mr. Hathorn and the Deponent gave it as their Opinion, it was better to huſh the Thing, for the Reaſon already given: And, at this Time, the Pannel being called to viſit ſome Part of the Walls, he immediately went, and the Deponent and Mr. Hathorn attended him, and they made a Round of a conſiderable Part of the Wall, and ended at or near the Weſt-Port, and, when they came to the Graſs-market, they were told of Mr. Alves's Meſſage; whereby they ſaw the ſame was made publick. Whereupon the Pannel declared his Intention to go to the Lord Advocate's Lodging, to talk with him in relation to that Matter; but, meeting with ſome Company, the Pannel walked down with the Deponent ſome way towards the Luckenbooths; and then parted with the Deponent; and went backwards, as he believes, to execute his Intention; nor did he obſerve any Meſſage delivered to the Pannel during this Period. He ſaw the Pannel ſoon after this, who told him he had been with the Lord Advocate; and that he had already ſigned, or was to ſign a Warrant for committing Mr. Alves to Priſon. Depones, That, on Monday Afternoon, about Three o'Clock, the Pannel went from the Goldſmiths-Hall, with Intention to go to the Weſt-Port; and, about this Time, he heard of the Retreat of the Dragoons with ſome Precipitancy; and, before he left the Goldſmiths-Hall, he mentioned to the Deponent, that he had received a Petition from ſeveral of the Citizens and Inhabitants, deſiring that the Town ſhould not be defended, or, at leaſt, not till a general Meeting of the Inhabitants was called to deliberate on its Defence: And the Pannel, in his Way to the Weſt-Port, ſtepped into the Lord Advocate's Cloſe-head, or went up to his Houſe; he thinks it was only to the Cloſe-head, he ſtaid ſo ſhort Time: The Deponent waited his Return; and in their Way to the Weſt-Port, he told the Deponent he had ſigned a Paper, deſiring, or conſenting, that ſome Dragoons ſhould be ſent to the Aſſiſtance of the City. That, after the Pannel had given ſuch Orders at the Weſt-Port, which he judged the Flight of the Dragoons rendered neceſſary, he left it: And, in his Return, was ſurrounded by a great Crowd of People, whoſe general Cry was, 'Would he continue his Deſign of defending the 'Town, and have them all murdered, now that the Dragoons were fled?' And the Deponent obſerved, among thoſe who made this Cry, Thomas Dundas younger of Lethem, who appeared to the Deponent to be full warmer on that Head than any of the reſt, though his Brother Laurence declared, on the contrary Side, for the Defence of the Town. To which the Pannel replied, Would they now be guilty of Cowardice in giving up the Town, after obtaining his Majeſty's Sign-manual, and doing ſo much for its Defence? and a great deal more to that Purpoſe, in Anſwer to their repeated Cries. That, when the Pannel returned from the Weſt-Port to the Goldſmiths-Hall, where a good Number of the Council, and many of the Inhabitants were aſſembled, it was propoſed to, and agreed by him, forthwith to ſend Deputies to the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, the Lord Advocate, and the Solicitor; and Meſſengers were ſent to each of them reſpectively, deſiring them to come and aſſiſt the Pannel with their Advice: But, ſoon after, the ſeveral Deputies returned, and reported, that all of them had left the Town. Depones, That, immediately after this, the Pannel ſent for the Officers of the Trained-Bands and Volunteers; and deſired to have their Opinion upon the Defence of the City; and addreſſed himſelf to them in Subſtance to the following Purpoſe: That he hoped they would not now ſuffer Cowardice to poiſon their Councils; and that, after obtaining his Majeſty's Royal Sign-manual, and doing ſo much with Spirit, they would not now think of giving up the Defence of the City: That, for his own Part, he would go to the City Walls, and to the Place of greateſt Danger; and, ſo long as he could find ten Men to ſtand by him, he would perſevere in the Defence of it. That ſeveral of the ſaid Officers came, and were thus ſpoke to; but few of them ſeemed to be inclined to give their Opinion, or ſpeak; but one Gentleman, Mr. Joſeph Williamſon, ſaid to this Purpoſe: Since he ſaw the Pannel ſo firmly reſolved upon the Defence of the City, he would attend, and ſhare Fates with him; but he feared he ſhould not be able to bring with him Five, Ten, or ſome ſuch ſmall Number of the Company wherein he ſerved. That the Deponent in particular remembers he preſſed Mr. Drummond to give his Opinion; which he declined; and, taking the Deponent aſide, ſaid, 'I am ſurpriſed, Sir, that you ſhould inſiſt on my giving my Opinion. You 'know I am not ſo independent a Man as you or the Pannel. I hold 'a Place of the Government, and it may be very inconvenient for me 'to deliver my Opinion in this Place.' That the Deponent deſired the Pannel to aſk Mr. Drummond's Opinion; who ſtill declined to give it: And, as the Deponent had begun to relate Mr. Drummond's Apology for not giving his Opinion, he interrupted the Deponent, and again took him aſide; and ſaid, 'I am ſurpriſed, Mr. Coutts, you ſhould inſiſt upon 'my giving my Opinion, when you know, that the Provoſt has the Ar'ticles of Capitulation of the City in his Pocket ſome Days ago;' adding, That he was told that Day at Dinner by the Earl of Home, that as, upon Thurſday preceding, he was ſhaving or dreſſing in the Lord Juſtice-Clerk's Lodging, the Window open, he overheard the Deponent, coming up the Bank-Cloſe, ſaying, What need is there to keep all this Pother or Buſtle about the Defence of the City, when the Provoſt has in his Pocket, Articles of Capitulation for ſurrendering it to the Rebels? The Deponent replied, That that Tale carried very little Credibility with it; for what a ridiculous Thing was it, to imagine, that he, the Deponent, in one of the moſt publick Cloſes in Town, under the Windows of an Officer of State, ſhould be roaring out a Story of that Kind. That he could himſelf give no Credit to the Story: For that, tho' of late there had been a Dryneſs between the Earl and him; yet he looked upon the Earl as a Man of Honour, that could not be capable of ſaying ſuch a Thing without any Foundation: ſo that certainly he, Mr. Drummond, muſt have miſtaken his Lordſhip. And the Deponent added, Mr. Drummond, let us not now be talking of theſe Things, 'till afterwards, that the Earl, you and I have Occaſion to talk about it. That, after what paſſed between the Pannel and the Officers of the Volunteers, Captain James Murray and Major Thomas Cothran came in to the Meeting; and the Pannel deſired them to give their Opinion, if, or not, the Defence of the City ſhould be continued? But both of them declined to give any, joining in Sentiment, that the Pannel, who beſt knew the Inclinations of the Citizens and the Inhabitants, was by much fitter to determine that Point than they; and that the Deciſion of it muſt ultimately land upon him. That the Pannel having again preſſed Mr. Murray to give his Opinion, and to figure himſelf in the Pannel's Stead, and declare what he would do if that were the Caſe; Mr. Murray replied, 'I do moſt heartily pity you, my Lord Provoſt. I cannot, nor 'can any Man adviſe you; you muſt yourſelf decide it; and I am afraid 'you will get very little Advice.' Depones, That, much about this Time, Walter Groſet, Collector of the Cuſtoms at Alloa, came in to the Meeting with a Meſſage, whether in Writing or verbal he cannot ſay, from the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, or the Lord Advocate, or both; deſiring the Pannel to give an Order for bringing ſome Dragoons in to the City. To which the Pannel anſwered, That he had already given his Conſent or Order for bringing in one Hundred Dragoons, at the Deſire of the Crown-Lawyers; and that he could not comprehend what the Meaning was, why an Order ſhould be aſked this Day for bringing them in, after what paſt laſt Night: But their Lordſhips were beſt Judges what was for the Service of the Government: If they ſhould judge it for it, to ſend them in, they ſhall be received, but I will not now make an Order; becauſe, if I ſhould, and if they ſhould come in, and the City and they fall into the Hands of the Rebels, I might be charged to have enſnared ſo many of his Majeſty's Troops; if I ſhould refuſe to admit them, I might be blamed for rejecting a Succour which might have relieved the City: Let their Lordſhips therefore give their Deciſion, which I ſhall obey. And, as Mr. Groſet was departing, the Pannel called him back, and ſaid, to prevent Miſtakes, he would ſend a written Anſwer; which accordingly he did. And the Anſwer referred to in Mr. Craigie's Depoſition being ſhewn to the Deponent, depones, it is the Anſwer then ſent by the Pannel. Depones, That while Bailie David Baird was arguing in the Goldſmiths-Hall againſt defending the Town, becauſe it was not tenable, Principal Wiſhart and Bailie John Wilſon came in, and a great many others followed; and the Principal and Bailie averred, that no Man but a Jacobite would maintain ſuch an Opinion. Upon which ſuch a Hubbub aroſe, and ſo many People crowded into the Room, that the Deponent himſelf moved, that they ſhould adjourn to ſome larger Place, where thoſe who had a mind to ſpeak might be better heard; and then the Cry was, the New Kirk Iſle; to which the Meeting adjourned. That, in the Parliament-Cloſe, they met a great many People in their Way, inſomuch that the Deponent was carried off his Feet by the Crowd to the South-ſide of the Statue; and the Cry of the People who ſurrounded him was, praying the Deponent to prevail with the Pannel not to draw Deſtruction upon the City by a fruitleſs Oppoſition. That the Deponent followed the Pannel and a Multitude of the Inhabitants to the New Kirk Iſle; where, at firſt, there was ſuch a Noiſe, that he could hear nothing that paſt; but the Pannel at length prevailed ſo far in quelling it, that the Deponent could hear him ſay, That the Purpoſe of that Meeting was, to conſult with them touching the Defence of the City; and made to them much the ſame Expoſtulation as he made formerly to the Captains of the Volunteers, ſo far as the Deponent could hear. That he heard Principal Wiſhart move, that the Meeting might be purged of Jacobites. To which the Pannel, or Somebody, anſwered, It would not be eaſy to diſtinguiſh a Jacobite from a Whig by their Countenance. That the Reverend Mr. George Logan begun to ſpeak for the Defence of the City, but was ſoon interrupted by a great Noiſe, and a Cry, that That was impoſſible. Upon which he thinks the Pannel ſaid, 'It is impoſſible to col'lect the Voice of every one. Shall I put the Queſtion, whether the City 'ſhall be defended, or not?' Upon which the Cry of the Generality was, That the City could not be defended. And at this Period a Letter was brought into the Meeting, he does not know how; but he ſaw it firſt in the Hands of Deacon Walter Orrock, who, having broke it up, ſaid, it was ſigned Charles P. R. Upon hearing of which, the Pannel forthwith ſaid, 'I cannot be Witneſs to the reading of this Letter,' left the Chair, and went out of the Meeting to the Goldſmiths-Hall; whither ſeveral of the Council and of the Inhabitants followed him, and, among the reſt, the Deponent. That the Letter appeared again there, brought, as he believes, either by the ſaid Deacon, or William Henderſon, one of the Clerk's Servants. And it being propoſed by ſome that it ſhould be read, it was urged by others, that to read it, would be Treaſon. Upon which it was moved and agreed to, that the Opinion of the Aſſeſſors ſhould be taken; who thereupon were ſent for: But it was reported they had all left the Town, except Mr. Patrick Haldane, who would be with them immediately. That, when he came, his Opinion was aſked, if it was proper to read the Letter or not? and the Pannel, or ſome other Perſon, he does not remember who, told Mr. Haldane, it was a Letter ſigned Charles P. R.; upon which Mr. Haldane ſaid, it was a Matter too high for him to give his Opinion in; and immediately roſe from his Seat, and went out of the Goldſmiths-Hall: The Deponent followed him to the Door, and preſſed him to give his Opinion; but he ſtill declined. And being interrogated upon the Part of the Purſuer, if the Letter was begun to be read before Mr. Haldane left the Hall? depones, That ſaid William Henderſon, upon Mr. Haldane's

Haldane's coming in, took up and began to read the Letter; but he was immediately ſtopped, and ordered to deſiſt, by ſome Perſons in the Meeting, he does not know by whom; but Mr. Haldane was one of thoſe who ſtopped him, as the Deponent thinks; and he believes he might have been one of them himſelf. That, upon this, the Pannel complained, that he was now alſo deſerted by his Aſſeſſors. Depones, That, after this, the Letter was begun to be read; and the Deponent, being at a little Diſtance, ſaid, What is the Meaning that this Letter is begun to be read? To which ſome one of the Meeting anſwered, that it was neceſſary it ſhould, that it might be known what Threatenings it contained againſt the City. That, a little after reading this Letter, it was propoſed by ſome one in the Meeting, who he does not remember, that a Deputation ſhould be ſent, to deſire, that until they could make a proper Anſwer to the Letter, nothing ſhould be done againſt the City; the Intention of which was, to gain Time; the Purpoſe of the Meeting being to call the Burgeſſes and Inhabitants to deliberate upon that Affair. And accordingly, Bailie Hamilton, Bailie Inglis, Bailie Yetts, and Conveener Norrie, were ſent out with the ſaid Meſſage, about Eight o'Clock. And the Paper marked Number 2, mentioned in the Liſt of Writings annexed to the Libel, being ſhewn to him, depones, That it was the Return to the firſt Deputation. Depones, That the ſaid Paper being laid before the Meeting, then in the Laigh Council-houſe, the Pannel immediately obſerved, that there was one Condition in the Paper that he would rather die as ſubmit to, namely, the receiving the Pretender's Son as Prince-Regent of Scotland, as he was tied by Oath to another Maſter; which appeared to be the common Opinion of the Meeting: And therefore, after a long Argument, a ſecond Deputation was agreed, and determined to be ſent out about Two o'Clock in the Morning; and five Deputies were ſent, whereof the Deponent was one, with Inſtructions, begging a Delay 'till Nine o'Clock in the Morning, to the end the Meeting might have Opportunity to converſe with the Citizens, who were then a-bed; which alſo was calculated to gain Time; which they chuſed to do, becauſe they had heard, before the Return of the firſt Deputation, that Sir John Cope, with the Troops under his Command, were ſeen off Dunbar: And the Paper marked Number 3, in the ſaid Liſt, now ſhewn to the Deponent, was the Fruit of the ſecond Deputation. That he remembers to have ſeen a Serjeant of the Caſtle, between Seven and Eight in the Evening, come in to the Meeting in Goldſmiths-Hall, who delivered a Meſſage, which the Deponent did not hear; but heard it reſtated by ſome of the Members of the Meeting to be this, That General Gueſt ſent him with Orders, to deſire of the Pannel an Order to ſpike up the Cannon upon the Walls of the City, and to knock off the Trunnions; and that the Deponent whiſpered to ſome of his Neighbours that, conſidering the Threatenings in the ſaid Letter, might it not do as well to make Anſwer to the Meſſage, that the Pannel could give no expreſs Order; but to acquaint the Serjeant, that the General might ſend and render the Cannon uſeleſs; which he ſhould be at full Liberty to do. And accordingly, the Deponent, and the ſaid William Henderſon, deſired the Serjeant to ſpike up the Cannon himſelf, or to do with them as he pleaſed. And the Adjutant of the Edinburgh Regiment having come in much about this Time, to aſk how he ſhould diſpoſe of their Arms, he was alſo told that he was at Liberty to diſpoſe of theſe Arms as he pleaſed, by the Deponent, who left it to William Henderſon to explain the Reaſon thereof to the Adjutant. Depones, That, being fatigued, he went to take a Refreſhment in Mrs. Clarke's; and during his ſhort Abſence of a Quarter of an Hour, the ſaid Mr. Groſet came to the Council, which was then more regularly met than formerly, with only a few Inhabitants; And, upon his Return, he found them in the Laigh Council-Houſe; and a Letter, ſent by Expreſs from Mr. Fall to the Deponent, which had ſome-how fallen into Mr. Groſet's Hands, had been juſt then laid before the Council, and read before the Deponent came in, as he is inclined to believe, becauſe the Letter gave notice of General Cope's Arrival off the May; and he was told by ſome of the Council, that Bailie Manſfield had been ſent out, if poſſible, to ſtop the Deputies of the firſt Deputation from executing it. That the Letter was again read after he came in, and delivered to him. That, upon this, they begun again to conſider, if the Defence of the City might not be reſumed: And while ſome People were talking, that the Volunteers ſhould take Arms again, and others, that the Dragoons ſhould be brought in; leaving theſe Things to be determined by the Meeting, the Deponent, Mr. Groſet, and Mr. Lindſay, Secretary at War, were ſent to General Gueſt, to know of him, whether, if the Defence of the City ſhould be reſumed, he would deliver out Arms to the Volunteers, and recall the Dragoons? To which he anſwered, That they might put the City-Arms in the Hands of ſuch as were well-diſpoſed; and, if the Provoſt ſhould write him, that there was a good Spirit appearing in the People, and deſire him to deliver out the Volunteers Arms, probably he might do it; and that he had ſent Orders for recalling the Serjeant from rendering the Cannon uſeleſs; but that he judged it abſolutely neceſſary for his Majeſty's Service, that the Dragoons ſhould be ordered to join General Cope, without whoſe Aſſiſtance his ſmall Body of Men could not act. That the Deponent, Meſſ. Groſet and Lindſay, returned to the Council. That, by the Way, Mr. Groſet and the Deponent agreed, at Mr. Groſet's Requeſt, that they ſhould mention nothing of bringing in the Dragoons to the Town, becauſe it was a clear Point they could have none of them, and it might intimidate the Inhabitants if they knew ſo much. However, the Deponent judged it his Duty to whiſper the Pannel, that for the Reaſons above aſſigned, he could not hope to have any of the Dragoons brought in. They found the Council ſtill arguing upon the ſame Subject they left them upon, ſome propoſing one Thing, ſome another, and ſome to ring the Alarm-bell. That, ſoon after this, Mr. Webſter ſaid, It was impoſſible to think of defending the City, without the Dragoons were brought in for its Aſſiſtance. Upon which Mr. Groſet roſe up, and ſaid, 'Then I will go and fetch in the Dragoons;' and going to the Door, the Deponent followed him, and ſaid, 'How can you impoſe ſo 'upon the Meeting, when you know from General Gueſt that you can 'have none of them?' To which he replied, He could perhaps perſuade Brigadier Fowkes to bring them in. Provoſt Drummond went along with Mr. Groſet, and neither of them returned. That, immediately after this, Mr. Lindſay propoſed to the Pannel, to get out the Arms for the Volunteers. To which he anſwered, That it was proper for him firſt to know what Diſpoſition there was among the Inhabitants to make uſe of them. That, as to the Propoſal of ringing the Alarm-bell, it was obſerved, and agreed to, it would be doing great Injuſtice to the Deputies, to ring it 'till they ſhould be returned: And Dean of Guild Hatborn obſerved, that if they did, they might expect to have the Deputies hanged like Rats, it being probable the Rebels were within hearing of the Bell. That the Deponent being one of the ſecond Deputation, he remembers, when they went out to the Rebel-Army, they met with the late Lord George Murray, whom they applied to, and prevailed upon to ſecond them in procuring the Delay propoſed. That the late Lord George Murray went into the Room in which the Pretender's Son was; and the Deponent could hear, though indiſtinctly, ſo much of the Converſation, as convinced him, that the ſaid Lord George was endeavouring to perſuade the Pretender's Son to comply with it; and that he refuſed to do it; which the ſaid Lord George came out, and reported to the Deputies: But, upon ſecond Converſation with them, they prevailed upon him once more, to try if he could obtain the propoſed Delay; which he accordingly attempted, but was refuſed; and the Deponent could hear the Pretender's Son ſay, 'My Lord Elcho, Lord George has not Spirit to put this Order 'in Execution; you muſt go and do it for him.' Upon which the late Lord Elcho came out of the Room from the Pretender's Son, and bid the Deponent, and the reſt of the Deputies, to get them gone: That the ſaid Lord George Murray followed the Deputies out, and whiſpered to the Deponent, I know your Pinch; you want to have the Conſent of your principal Inhabitants: Make haſte to Town; you will have an Hour or two to obtain it. That the Deputies made all the Haſte they could to return, and went directly to Mrs. Clarke's; where they underſtood the Pannel and the Council were. The Pannel, who was aſleep, was rouſed. The Deputies reported their Anſwer, and what Lord George Murray had ſaid. The principal Inhabitants were ordered to be gathered together immediately. Some few of them, and particularly Mr. James Ker, now Member of Parliament for the City, were come, when Notice was brought, that the Rebels had broke into the Town, and made themſelves Maſters of it: Which put an End to all further Deliberation.

II. William Forbes, one of the principal Clerks of the City of Edinburgh, depones, That, on Monday the 16th September 1745, he came to the Goldſmiths-Hall about Three o'Clock in the Afternoon; where he found the Pannel, as he appeared to him, in a very great Paſſion; ſome of the Councillors were about him, and ſeveral other of the Burghers and Inhabitants of the Town. The Deponent went up to him, and aſked him the Occaſion of the Diſorder he ſeemed to be in. The Pannel anſwered, That he had got a Paper into his Hands, which he by no means reliſhed, and thought it was ſomewhat ſeditious: For that the Scope of it was, that the Town ſhould be ſurrendered; which he ſwore he would not conſent to. That, at this Time, the Crowd that was in the Room called aloud upon the Pannel, to take the Advice of the Inhabitants; but he told them, that he would liſten to no Advice in a Matter of this Kind, 'till he had taken the Opinion of abler and better Counſellors. Upon which ſeveral Perſons were ſent to all his Majeſty's Officers who uſually reſided in Edinburgh, humbly to beg that they would meet with them, and give their Opinion what was proper to be done in ſo critical a Juncture. That the Meſſengers ſent, returned with a Report that they were all gone out of Town. The Pannel therefore, finding, that he could not have the Happineſs of the Counſel of the Civil Officers, was reſolved to call for the Aſſiſtance of ſuch of the Military Officers as were in Town, and the Officers of the Volunteers. That, upon Meſſages ſent, Major Thomas Cochran and Captain James Murray came to the Hall, as alſo a great many of the Officers of the Volunteers. That, upon their coming in, the Pannel opened to them the difficult Circumſtances that he and the City were under at that time, and prayed their Advice. That ſuch of the Officers of the Volunteers as were preſent, declined giving any Advice, except Mr. Joſeph Williamſon; who ſaid, That, from the Beginning, he was determined to ſtand to the Defence of the City to the laſt Drop of his Blood; but that he was ſorry to ſay, that he found ſome Alterations upon the Spirits of the People: For that, in the Company in which he was an Officer, there was not above ſix or ſeven of the Volunteers of that Company could be found. That the Pannel did, upon this Occaſion, warmly exhort the People that were about him, to ſtand to the Defence of the City, repreſenting the Expence they had already laid out in order to the Defence of the City; and that they had lately plighted their Faith to his Majeſty, that they would, to the utmoſt, ſtand for the Support of his Perſon and Government, and for the Defence of the Town. The Pannel then addreſſed himſelf to Major Cochran and Captain Murray, who were the only two of the Military that could be found; and told them, that their Advice was neceſſary in a Matter of this kind, becauſe of their Knowledge and Experience in theſe Matters. To which Captain Murray replied, that he regretted extremely the unhappy Situation of Affairs in general, and the Pannel's Caſe in particular; that he pitied him, becauſe he foreſaw, that the Deciſion of this important Queſtion would chiefly lie upon him; and added, that if the Trained-Bands and Volunteers did not ſtand to their Arms in the Defence of the Town, it was a Matter of the greateſt Conſequence, that the Arms delivered out by the Government ſhould not be ſuffered to fall into the Hands of the Rebels: And then, turning about to the Deponent, ſaid, with an Oath, If they do, ſome People may come to hang for it. That Bailie Baird offered his Opinion; which was, that he thought the Town not tenable; as did Mr. Thomas Dundas, and ſeveral others: But Principal Wiſhart, and ſome few more, were of a different Opinion. Whereupon the Principal ſaid, None but Jacobites would be for ſurrendering the Town. Then enſued a loud Cry from many, that the Opinion of the Inhabitants ſhould be taken; and, for that end, it was propoſed to adjourn to the New-Church Iſle; where they accordingly went: But, in their Way to the New Kirk Iſle, there were loud Cries from all Corners, not to expoſe the City to the Fury of the Rebels. While the Pannel was in the Midſt of the Crowd, there came a Gentleman on Horſeback, who ſaid, He wanted to ſpeak to the Pannel; and accordingly ſpoke to him to this Effect: 'That 'Lieutenant-Colonel Whitney had ſent him back to bring away the 'Dragoons Baggage that was left in Town; for that the Dragoons were 'on

'on their Way to Haddington.' That the Deponent did not go in at that Time to the New Church Isle, having gone to refresh himself with a little Coffee; and, when afterwards he attempted to go in, he found the New Church Isle so chop-full of People, that he could not put in his Head. He then went towards the Cross, where he met with Bailie James Stewart, one of the Officers of the Volunteers, and several private Volunteers along with them. That he had in his Hands a Key, or two Keys; which made the Deponent ask him, What he meant? and where he was going? Who replied, He was going to give up his Charge with the Keys of the Netherbow Port; for he found that this Thing would not do. That thereafter the Deponent went to the Goldsmiths Hall, where, the Meeting in the New Church Isle having been dissolved, he found the Pannel, and a great many of the Council and Inhabitants of the Town, who were in a Dispute, Whether a Letter, that had been given in the New Church Isle, said to have been subscribed by the Leader of the Rebels, should be read, or not? The Pannel argued, That the Reading of such a Letter was at least bordering very near upon Treason; more especially if it produced an Answer. Upon the other Hand, some of the Inhabitants urged, That it was proper the Contents of it should be known, and they might afterwards consider what was proper to be done on it. That the Pannel upon this said, It was improper for them to come to any Resolution, until, at least, they had taken the Opinion of their Assessors; who were sent for; but none of them were found, excepting Mr. Patrick Haldane. To whom the Pannel represented, They were under a Difficulty with regard to a Letter signed Charles P. R.; that they wanted to be advised, Whether it should be read? and, if read, Whether it should be answered? and what Answer should be given? To which Mr. Haldane replied, It was a Matter of too high a Nature for him; and therefore he would give no Advice upon it. And upon an Interrogatory put to the Deponent for the Pursuer, Whether the first Mention of the Letter's being signed as aforesaid, was not on Occasion of Mr. Haldane's putting a Question to William Henderson (in whose Hands the Letter was), Who signed it? the Deponent, on Recollection, says, That he believes it was so. Depones, That, before the Pannel went to the New Church Isle, Mr. Groset came to the Goldsmiths-Hall, and represented, That he had a Message from Lord Advocate, and Lord Justice-Clerk, to let the Pannel know, That, if he would give Orders for 100 Dragoons to enter the City, they should be forthwith sent. That the Pannel to this replied, That he could give no Orders, because he had no Power over them: That he was a little surprised with the Message, after what had happened in a Council of War held the other Night in Lord Justice-Clerk's House; where it was concluded not to be for his Majesty's Service that any of the Dragoons should enter the City, or Words to that Purpose; but that, if they were of Opinion, that it was for his Majesty's Service, and should order a hundred Dragoons, or more, he would receive them, and make them very welcome, and give them all the Assistance he could in Defence of the City. That Mr. Groset insisted the Answer should be taken down and given in Writing; which was accordingly done; and the Deponent thinks it was to the above Purpose. Depones, That, while he was in the Goldsmiths-Hall, after the Meeting had come from the New Church Isle to that Place, he thinks about the Hour of Six, or after it, a Serjeant from the Castle came in, and told the Pannel, he was sent by Gen. Guest, in order to nail up the Cannon, if he would permit them so to do. To which the Pannel answered, That all Authority was wrested out of his Hands; but that Gen. Guest might do what he thought was best for his Majesty's Interest or Service; and said, That the Town-Officers would shew them where the Cannon were. Depones, That, after the Meeting had left the Goldsmiths-Hall, and gone to the Laigh Council-House, the Deponent went in to them; where he saw two Ministers of the City, who were reasoning about the Surrender of the Town; and declared, that, as Things now stood, the Defence seemed impracticable: And, while this was the Subject of their Discourse, Mr. Groset came in, and produced to them one Letter signed, but directed to Nobody, and another Letter also directed to Nobody, and unsigned: The first of the Letters importing, that the Troops had that Night landed at Dunbar; and the other, that the Fleet had been seen off the May, and would land that Night at Dunbar. Upon which the Pannel expressed great Satisfaction; and said, That, as long as there was any Prospect for defending the Town, he would not be for giving it up: But then it occurred to him, that the Volunteers had delivered up their Arms, and it would be difficult to get them again into their Hands; and that there was no Prospect of getting any Dragoons. Upon which a Deputation was made by the Meeting to Provost Coutts and Mr. Lindsay, to go along with Mr. Groset to the General, to try if he would give Orders for bringing any Dragoons into the Town, and deliver Arms to the Volunteers. That, after they waited upon the General, the Report made by Mr. Groset was, That he would go and bring in the Dragoons; and laying hold of Provost Drummond, they both went out. Upon an Interrogatory, the Deponent recollects, That this Offer of Mr. Groset's was immediately after the Ministers had given their Opinion as above. However, Mr. Coutts reported to the Meeting, that no Dragoons could be spared to enter the City, since there was a Prospect of Sir John Cope with his Troops landing; because they would be of much more Service joined to the Foot that was with Sir John: And as to the Arms, reported, That there was no Reason to hope they would be delivered out, till it appeared that the Volunteers were more stable in their Resolution of defending the City. And depones, That when Provost Drummond, as he thinks, had proposed to ring the Fire-bell, to convocate the Volunteers, it was opposed by Dean of Guild Hathorn, for this Reason, That this Signal might be understood by the Enemy, and provoke them to use the Deputies ill. Depones, That pretty late in the Evening of that Day, he was present in the Laigh Council-House; when he heard some People in that Meeting talking of a Message to be sent to Gen. Preston; and that Mr. Lauder was the Man to be named for that Purpose. What the Message was he was to be sent on, the Deponent did not then know; but heard them assign for a Reason of the Choice of Mr. Lauder to be sent to the Castle, That he was a near Relation of Gen. Preston's. That the Pannel, and some People about him, were the Persons he observed busied about the sending of Mr. Lauder to the Castle: And when the Deponent was, from Curiosity, asking, What the Nature of the Message was? he was answered, That it was improper at that Time to communicate it to any Person: But, when Mr. Lauder returned from the Castle, upon the Deponent's asking him what Errand he went upon, he told him, That it was to prevail upon General Preston, to send down a Party to bring up the City-Arms; which he would not comply with. Depones, That upon Saturday the 14th of the foresaid Month, the Deponent, with Provost Coutts, and Mr. Hathorn, accompanied the Pannel while he went round the Walls to visit the Works that were carrying on. That, where he observed the Workmen diligent, he encouraged them, and told them, they should be very well rewarded if they were diligent; and where he observed any of them that he suspected to trifle with their Work, he chid and checked them; and told them, they should be paid accordingly. That, upon another Occasion, when Complaints were made, that Materials were wanting for carrying on the Work, (whether it was the same Day the Walls were visited as aforesaid, the Deponent cannot be positive, nor what Day it was, but that it was in the Period of Time when the City-walls and the Town were to be put in a proper Posture of Defence against the Rebels), he was present when the Lord Somerville and the Pannel joined as Justices of the Peace, in granting a Press-Warrant for procuring Men and Horses for carrying the Materials, and forwarding the Work. And, upon an Interrogatory by the Prosecutor, Whether the Deponent had ever related to any Person whatsomever this Circumstance of the Message sent by Mr. Lauder, at any Time since the Year 1745, down to this Day? and being at the same time desired to recollect himself, and name any one to whom he had told it; the Deponent says, That he verily believes he had made Mention of it to several Persons; but until it came to be a Subject to be spoken of in this Prosecution, he could not with Certainty say who the particular Persons were: But he condescends on two different Persons, Mr. Ninian Cunningham, Writer, and Mr. George Dunbar, Merchant, to whom he mentioned this, particularly about a Fortnight ago: Neither does he call to mind the Names of any of the Persons who were whispering with the Provost, when the Message was said to have been sent up by Mr. Lauder at this Distance of Time; but that the two Ministers he refers to in the former Part of his Deposition, were, Mr. Alexander Webster and Mr. Patrick Cuming.

III. William Macghie, Merchant in Edinburgh, depones, That he is one of those who signed the Petition or Representation which was given in to the Pannel, marked No. 8, of the List of Writings subjoined to the Criminal Letters. That he was present when the said Petition was delivered to the Pannel, which was just at the Door or Entry to the Goldsmiths-Hall: That he seemed to be in a very great Passion about it; and, turning about in an angry Manner, when he had got up to the said Hall, said to those who presented it, 'What do you mean? Do you think by Numbers to force me to grant the Desire of your Petition?' and with that forced to the Door, and turned the Deponent down the Stairs. And that this happened in the Afternoon of the 16th September 1745.

IV. Francis Kemptie, Merchant in Edinburgh, depones, That he was present on the Afternoon of the 16th September 1745, when the Representation, marked No. 8, of the List of Writings subjoined to the Criminal Letters, was presented to the Pannel in the Entry to the Goldsmiths-Hall. That the Pannel was very much offended with the said Representation, and said, 'What! do you think to cram your Petition down my Throat by Numbers?'

V. Thomas Cochran, Esq. one of the Commissioners of Excise, depones, That, upon the 15th of September 1745, he was with Brig. Fowkes, and several others, in the Lord Justice-Clerk's House, where the Brigadier proposed bringing in his Dragoons to the Town of Edinburgh: But this the Deponent argued against, as being a Thing altogether improper, considering the narrow and long Lanes that lead to all the Ports of the Town. That the Brigadier still persisted in thinking, that the Design was very right; and that he could force his Way out at any one of the Gates he pleased. However, there was no fixed Resolution of bringing the Dragoons to the Town, so long as the Deponent remained in Lord Justice-Clerk's House. Depones, That after the Deponent went from Lord Justice-Clerk's, he went to the Meeting of some Gentlemen in Mrs. Clarke's House, where Captain James Murray, the Pannel, and a great many others were; and there they made a Disposition of the several Corps of armed Men, into the different Parts of the Town: And the Deponent heard the Pannel give his Directions or Orders agreeable to the Dispositions then made. Depones, That, upon the Afternoon of Monday the 16th September, the Deponent meeting Capt. Murray, he was told, That the Pannel sent for them both to come to him to the Goldsmiths-Hall; where they both accordingly went. And, upon their going in, the Pannel desired, first, That Capt. Murray would give his Opinion, which he accordingly did; and afterwards desired the Deponent might do the same, which he also did; and which was to this Purpose, That it was the Duty of every one to defend the City as long as they could; and if there was a Necessity for their surrendering, then they ought to take care, that the King's Arms should not fall into the Hands of the Rebels. And being interrogate, If he took any Notice of the Arms which belonged in Property to the Town? depones, He did not, for this Reason; That he knew, when the Town-Guard marched out that Day, as he thinks, the Officers would not accept of them to do Duty with, as knowing them to be altogether insufficient; and, for that Reason, they had a new Sett delivered to them. And further, he gave Advice at the above Meeting, That, in case the Town was pushed, and obliged to surrender, and those who had the King's Arms had not Time nor Access to deliver them into the Castle, that then they should break them, rather than let them fall into the Hands of the Rebels. And depones, That the Pannel, upon hearing Capt. Murray's and the Deponent's Opinion, said to the Meeting, 'I want, Gentlemen, that you should also give me your Opinion; for it is by your Opinion I am to conduct myself: And if you come to a Resolution of defending the Town, I will go wherever the Danger is greatest, and defend it to the last.'

VI. David Baird, Merchant, and late one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That upon the Afternoon of Monday the 16th of September 1745, he was in the Goldsmiths-Hall with the Pannel, and a great many other Inhabitants of the Town of Edinburgh. That while he was there, Mr. Groset came in with a Message from the Lord Advocate and Lord Justice-Clerk, making Offer of 40 or 50 Dragoons to the Pannel for the Defence of the Town, in case he thought fit to accept of them. The Pannel's Anſwer to this Propoſal was, That he would neither deſire nor give Orders for them; but, if they came, they ſhould be welcome: For, if any Accident happened to the King's Troops, they, and not he, ſhould be anſwerable for it. And the Deponent, upon hearing of the ſmall Number that was propoſed to be ſent, ſaid, What did 40 or 50 ſignify? If they ſent the Whole, it would be ſomething; but the ſending ſuch a ſmall Number, could be to no other Purpoſe, than having their Throats cut, and the Houſes and Shops plundered. That Mr. Groſet inſiſted for an Anſwer in Writing, which the Pannel complied with, by giving him a Letter to the Lord Advocate and Lord Juſtice-Clerk. Depones, That, while the Deponent was in the Goldſmiths-Hall, he ſtood up, and ſpoke to the Pannel, and told, That he appeared there, not only for himſelf, but for ſeveral Hundreds of the Inhabitants, whoſe All was at Stake, and whoſe Wives and Children were in Tears; and demanded, that the Pannel would give the Inhabitants a Hearing before he came to any Reſolution for defending the Town; which, after ſome little Time, was agreed to; and that the Inhabitants were to meet in the New Church Iſle about Six o'Clock that Night; and that the Fire-bell ſhould be rung for convocating the Meeting. That the Deponent having come to that Meeting, the Pannel ſaid, That he was ſorry for the Occaſion of calling the Inhabitants together; but, as the Rebels were then come near the Town, he wanted to have their Opinion how he ſhould behave, he himſelf being willing to hazard his Life and Fortune in the Defence of the Town. To which ſeverals anſwered, That they would ſtand by his Lordſhip: But that, as the Dragoons had been ſeen running away, and the Inhabitants altogether diſpirited, they thought it more adviſeable to make the beſt Terms they could; and all agreed, with an Exception of one or two, not to defend the Town. And, being interrogate, Whether the Meeting in the New Church Iſle conſiſted of People well-affected to the Government, and of Rank and Subſtance in the Town? depones, That he thinks they were; and that Mr. Clarkſon and Mr. Keir, Baxters, Mr. Thomas Dundas, Merchant, and ſeveral others, ſuch as theſe, were there. And, while the Deponent was there, he ſaw Bailie Stewart come in, and deliver up the Keys of the Netherbow Port; and he was deſired by the Pannel to ſtay; but he would not. That Sir George Preſton came there, and told, That he and his Company had been delivering their Arms into the Caſtle; and that Mr. Glen, Miniſter, came there, and ſaid, He was obliged to go away; and that a fourth Gentleman came there, and ſaid, He was obliged to go and ſee to his own Safety.

VII. Walter Hamilton of Weſt-Port, one of the Captain-Lieutenants of the City-guard of Edinburgh, depones, That, on Sunday the 15th September 1745, he marched out with the City-guard to ſuſtain the two Regiments of Dragoons: And when the City-guard was marching betwixt Colt Bridge and Bruce Hill, he thinks, but is not poſitive, that there was ſome Stop; but does not remember by whom. However, this, upon Recollection, he remembers to have heard, That Orders were given by the Pannel to the City-guard to take their Directions and Orders from the Commanding Officer of his Majeſty's Troops. Depones, That he had no particular Acceſs to examine the Condition of the City-Arms; but he has heard, that they were of little Value, and unfit for Service: And this he has heard from the Soldiers in the Town-guard who are under the Deponent's Command. And further ſays, That when the Rebels made themſelves Maſters of the City-guard, the Soldiers had been ſo harraſſed with extraordinary Duty all the preceding Week, and by being under Arms for three Days before, alongſt and with the Dragoons, that they were hardly fit to do any Duty.

VIII. George Lindſay, Depute-Town-Clerk of Edinburgh, depones, That he commonly attends the Magiſtrates as a Clerk. That he was preſent when Application was made to the Pannel and the Magiſtrates for putting the Town in a Poſture of Defence; and was alſo preſent when particular Directions were given by the Pannel and the other Magiſtrates for carrying into Execution the general Scheme for defending the Town. And particularly knows, that Directions were given by the Pannel and the other Magiſtrates, that the Work ſhould be carried on without Intermiſſion Night and Day, Sundays not excepted; and Warrants were granted to impreſs Labourers and Carts: And when Complaints were made, that the Work was not going ſo ſpeedily on as the Nature of the Caſe required, ſome of the Tradeſmen were ſent for by the Pannel, and challenged for not doing out the Work they had undertaken; and ſome of them having complained, that they wanted Labourers, freſh Warrants were ſigned for impreſſing them. Depones, That, about the latter End of Auguſt 1745, the Pannel ſigned ſeveral Letters to the neighbouring Miniſters and Magiſtrates, and, as the Deponent thinks, about 12 or 14 in Number, deſiring that they would ſend Notice, by Expreſs on Horſeback, when they ſaw any Body or Company of armed Men marching towards the City of Edinburgh. Depones, That the Deponent came into the Goldſmiths-Hall on the Forenoon of Sunday the 15th September 1745, where he ſaw Mr. Hope-Weir talking with the Pannel. That the Deponent underſtood, that Mr. Hope had come from General Gueſt, to acquaint the Pannel, that a Propoſal had been made to him, that 250 of the Volunteers were to go to the Colt Bridge to ſupport the Dragoons; and to deſire the Pannel, that 50 of the Town-guard ſhould go along with them. Depones, That the Pannel, at firſt hearing of this, doubted how far he could ſend the Guard out of the City; and ſaid, That that Corps were more to be depended upon than the Trained-Bands. Upon which the Deponent told the Pannel, That, by the Act of Parliament conſtituting the Guard, he was allowed to ſend them a Mile from the City. And then Mr. Baillie, one of the Magiſtrates at that Time, ſaid, That if the Volunteers were willing to go out to aſſiſt the Dragoons, the City-guard could not be better employed than to go along with them, as it might have the deſired Effect of obſtructing the Rebels Paſſage to Edinburgh; or Words to that Purpoſe. Upon which the Pannel ſaid, 'You are in the right, Mr. Baillie: In place 'of 50, the whole Guard ſhall go, and ſo many of the new-raiſed Re'giment as are levied.' And Orders were given, and they marched out accordingly. Depones, That, upon the 14th, the Pannel ſigned an Order for bringing into the Town all the Ladders, Ammunition and Arms that could be found in the Suburbs; and the ſame was given to an Officer, who brought in ſeveral Arms. Depones, That when Sir Robert Dickſon's Volunteers came to Town, they were ordered to one of the Kirks; and Bread and Ale was given to them by Order of ſome of the Magiſtrates. That when the Pannel came to the Goldſmiths-Hall, the Deponent acquainted him of it; who ſaid, it was very well; and he hoped, they had got it ſoon enough. Depones, That, upon Sunday's Evening, the Deponent underſtood, that the Pannel was in Mrs. Clarke's, with ſome of the Captains of the Volunteers, who were employed in making Diſpoſitions for thoſe who were to defend the City, in caſe of any Attack. That, about Twelve o'Clock, he came to the Goldſmiths-Hall, and ſaid, he was to go the grand Round; and returned therefrom about Four o'Clock. Depones, That Mr. Fowkes came in to the Pannel, upon Monday the 16th in the Morning, and ſaid to him, That as the Dragoons at Corſlerphin had been under Arms all Night, they would greatly ſtand in need of ſome Meat; and deſired it ſhould be provided. That, in conſequence thereof, ſome of the Magiſtrates ſent to a Butcher to provide Beef; which was provided, and, by Order of the Magiſtrates, boiled in the different Taverns of the Town. Depones, That, upon Monday Evening, the Deponent was in the Goldſmiths-Hall, when Mr. Griffith and a Serjeant came from the Caſtle at different Times from General Gueſt, deſiring the Pannel to give Orders for ſpiking the Cannon on the Walls. To which the Pannel anſwered, That he could give them no Orders; but that the General might give Orders for ſo doing, for there was Nobody to obſtruct them.

IX. John Yetts, Merchant, and late one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That, upon the Afternoon of Monday the 16th September 1745, as there was a great Stir in the Town, upon Account of the Dragoons going Eaſtward in great Haſte, the Deponent and the Pannel went to ſee the Weſt Port ſhut; which was accordingly done; and a Party of the City-Guard and Trained-Bands were poſted there. That the Deponent went from the Weſt Port to Briſtow Port, and found it ſhut; and afterwards went to Goldſmiths-Hall. As he came from Briſtow Port to Goldſmiths-Hall, the People on the Streets were calling after him, Why would the Magiſtrates pretend to defend the City, when the Dragoons had gone Eaſtward? He found in the Goldſmiths-Hall the Pannel, ſeveral of the Magiſtrates and Council, and a great Crowd of the Inhabitants, who were crying out againſt any Attempt to defend the Town, ſince the Dragoons had gone away and left them. That the Crowd and Preſs was ſo great there, that it was reſolved to remove to the New Church Iſle; and, when they came there, the Deponent obſerved a very great Crowd of the Inhabitants and Burgeſſes; to whom the Pannel addreſſed himſelf, ſaying, That, as hitherto they had made a noble Stand for the Defence of the City, he hoped they would not now give it up: And, as for himſelf, he ſhould be the firſt Man that would mount the Walls, in caſe of Danger. That, nevertheleſs, the Deponent did not obſerve, that the Pannel's Words made any great Impreſſion upon the Audience; for the Generality of them continued to declare their Sentiments againſt defending the Town; and a few only ſpoke to the contrary. And being interrogate, If the Deponent was acquainted with all, or a great many of the People he ſaw there? ſays, That he was not acquainted with them all; but that he knew a great many of them, whom he always looked upon as People well-affected; and ſome of them were People of good Credit and Subſtance in the City, and others of them not. Depones, That he knew there were two Deputations ſent to the Camp of the Rebels; and he himſelf was one of the Deputies; and that the great Scope of the Deputations was, to gain Time, among other Things, with a View of conſulting with the Inhabitants, what was proper to be done. That, as he returned with the firſt Deputation, he met with ſome one or other, whoſe Name he does not remember, who told him, That Bailie Manſfield had been diſpatched after him, upon an Information laid before the Pannel and Magiſtrates, by Mr. Groſet, That Sir John Cope, in all Appearance, would very ſoon land; and that Bailie Manſfield, if he had overtaken the Deputies, was to have ſtopped them. However, coming too late, the Deputies returned with an Anſwer; wherein, among other Things, there was this Condition, That the Pretender's Son was to be acknowledged as Prince Regent; and, when this Condition was mentioned, the Pannel declared, That it was ſuch a Condition as he neither would nor could ſubmit to. And depones, That, in his Opinion, no Man in Life could do more for the Defence of the City than the Pannel did.

X. Hugh Hathorn, Merchant, and late Dean of Guild of Edinburgh, a Witneſs formerly adduced in this Cauſe for the Purſuer, and now adduced and examined for the Pannel, depones, That, after the Pannel's Return from the New Church Iſle to the Goldſmiths-Hall, in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th of September, the Letter from the Pretender's Son, being the firſt in the Liſt of Writings ſubjoined to the Criminal Letters, was read publickly in the ſaid Goldſmiths-Hall: And as it was now generally thought, there was little Hopes of defending the Town, after the Volunteers had delivered up their Arms; ſo there was little ſaid there about it. Depones, That, about the ſame time, a Meſſage was brought to the Pannel by Robert Griffith, deſiring an Order from the Pannel for nailing up the Cannon that were mounted on the Town-walls: To which the Pannel anſwered, That he might nail them up if he pleaſed; and a Town-Officer ſhould be ſent with him, to ſhew him where they were. Depones, That, on the Evening of the ſaid 16th of September, after Mr. Groſet had brought Advice of Sir John Cope's being ſeen off Dunbar, he and Provoſt Drummond went away from Goldſmiths-Hall, in order, as they ſaid, to bring back the Dragoons; but they did not return. Depones, That the two Deputations that were ſent out to the Camp of the Rebels, were, in the Deponent's Apprehenſion, intended in order to procure a Delay, and to gain Time to put the People in a better way, who were then in a great Hurry and Confuſion. And further depones, That the Pannel's Subſcription for maintaining the Edinburgh Regiment was £. 20 per Month; and the Deponent does not know that any Perſon ſubſcribed ſo much.

XI. Mr. Robert Pringle, Advocate, depones, That, upon Sunday the 15th of September 1745, he had been all Morning with the Volunteers in the College-yard, till about Ten or Eleven Forenoon, after the Churches were conveened; and then they ſeparated: And the Deponent and Bailie Stewart came up the High-Street, where they met Dean of Guild Allan; who informed them of a Meaſure that had been reſolved on, That 250 Volunteers, with the Town-guard, and ſome other Troops, ſhould march out with the Dragoons, to ſupport them. That Bailie Stewart and the Deponent were were pretty much surprised with the Measure, believing that the Volunteers were not quite fit for such Service; and supposing that the Gentlemen who had concerted that Measure were at Gen. Guest's Lodging, Bailie Stewart and the Deponent resolved to go down there, and lay their Difficulties before them. That, in the Canongate, they met the Pannel and Provost Drummond coming up in a Coach together; and they stopped the Coach upon seeing the Deponent and Bailie Stewart: And very soon the intended Measure was spoken of; and Bailie Stewart and the Deponent began to tell them their Difficulties; and Provost Drummond said, 'Gentlemen, for God's sake! do not spoil a good Measure,' and desired them to come into the Coach; which they did; and persisted in representing the Difficulties in executing that Design; and the Pannel said, 'Gentlemen, This is no Measure or Proposal of mine, but proceeded 'from a Voluntary Offer of Provost Drummond's, which, he said, would 'be readily agreed to,' or Words to that Purpose: And this he repeated two or three Times in their way coming up to Town.

XII. Walter Scot, Merchant in Leith, depones, That, about two Days before the Rebels entered the City of Edinburgh, there came a Person to the Deponent at Leith, with a Letter from the Pannel, to be sent on board the Man of War lying in the Road, and desired that the Deponent would forward it. That it was a sealed Letter: but the Bearer of it told the Deponent, That the Purport of it was to get Gunners to serve the Cannon on the Town-Wall. Depones, That the Deponent forwarded the Letter, as he was desired; and the same Person who brought it to him, came to him afterwards, and told him, he had got an Answer to it; which, the Deponent thinks, was addressed to the Pannel. Depones, That, after the Return of the foresaid Letter, a second Message came to the Deponent, from the Pannel, desiring, that a Search might be made in Leith for Gunners to serve the said Cannon. That such a Search was made, but no Gunners found, except one Macgill, Commander of a Customhouse-boat; and he was sent up to Town.

XIII. William Henderson, Writer, a Witness formerly adduced in this Cause for the Pursuer, and now adduced and examined for the Pannel, depones, That, upon Sunday the 15th of September 1745, the Pannel concurred with Lord Somerville, in granting a Press-Warrant for pressing Men and Carts, to carry Materials for repairing the City-Walls. Depones, That the second Week of the said Month of September, the Pannel granted a Warrant for searching, seizing, and carrying into the Town, all such Arms and Ladders as should be found in the Suburbs adjoining to the Town. Depones, That, on Sunday Morning the 15th September, the Deponent was ordered by the Pannel, to go to the City-Guard, and get 24 Men of the Guard-Soldiers and Edinburgh Regiment, to assist Baillie Bryden in mounting the Cannon on the City-Walls. Depones, That, upon Sunday the 15th of September, the Pannel, at the Desire of Gen. Guest, upon being advised by him, that 250 Volunteers had agreed to go out with the Dragoons to Corstorphin, to sustain them, ordered out the whole Men of the City-Guard, and 50 Men of the Edinburgh Regiment, on the same Service. That, at Two o'Clock Afternoon, the Deponent heard Mr. Forrest and Bailie Mansfield report to the Provost, That they had delivered his Message to General Guest, who said, He was surprised that the Volunteers had not marched out with the Dragoons; and, had he known that they would not, he should not have ordered Hamilton's Regiment to decamp from Leith to Corstorphin, but would have ordered Gardiner's to march from Corstorphin to the Links of Leith. Upon which the Pannel said, 'The Blame shall not lie at my 'Door;' and immediately sent the Deponent, with Orders for the City-Guard, and the 50 of the Edinburgh Regiment, instantly to join the Dragoons, and to take their Orders from the commanding Officer of the Dragoons. That the Deponent immediately went out, and found the City-Guard and Edinburgh Regiment in a Field betwixt the Colt Bridge and Bruce-hill, with their Arms grounded; and the Deponent told them the Orders he had from the Pannel. Depones, That Capt. Dalyell then told the Deponent, That a Serjeant and 16 Men had been left at the Court of Guard; and that, if any thing should happen, it would be proper that they should be sent after them: And, upon the Deponent's reporting this to the Pannel, he immediately ordered the Serjeant and 16 Men to follow their Corps; and the Guard was supplied with 28 Constables. That, at the Deponent's Return from the Colt Bridge, which was about Five at Night, he found the Pannel in the Goldsmiths-Hall. That, betwixt Seven and Eight, the Deponent called at Lord Justice-Clerk's, and was there told, the Pannel was in that House. That, betwixt Nine and Ten, he sent for the Deponent to Mrs. Clarke's, to write out the Orders for the several Guards. That from thence the Pannel went to Goldsmiths-Hall, and, after Twelve at Night, went the Grand Round. Depones, That, upon Monday about Ten o'Clock, a Message came to the Provost, signifying, that the Dragoons wanted Provisions. Upon which the Pannel immediately sent for Mr. Steedman Vintner, and ordered him forthwith to provide as much Beef and Cheese as should be necessary for them. That, about Eleven o'Clock, Col. Clayton came to the Pannel, complaining, that no Victuals had been sent them. Upon which the Pannel immediately signed Press-warrants, for impressing Carts to carry out Provisions, and to go to the Flesh-market and Cheesemongers Shops, and take as much Cheese and Beef as was necessary, and get the Beef boiled in several Taverns; and recommended it to the Deponent to see these Orders executed: Which the Deponent accordingly did; and Bailie Gavin Hamilton went along with him. Depones, That, after Mr. Groset had, on Monday Evening, brought the News of Sir John Cope's being seen off Dunbar, and, as the Deponent thinks, about Seven o'Clock of that Evening, the Pannel sent the Deponent to the Guard at the Netherbow Port, which was then a Serjeant's Guard, Part of the City-Guard, with Orders to allow Nobody to go out or come in at the Port. That the Deponent went accordingly, and delivered his Orders to the Serjeant of the Guard, whose Name was Riddel.

XIV. George Lauder, Surgeon in Edinburgh, depones, That, on Monday Evening the 16th September 1745, about Seven or Eight of the Clock at Night, (he is sure it was not then quite dark,) the Provost, and a good many of the Town-Council, being then conveened in the Council-Chamber, the Provost, now Pannel, said to them, Gentlemen, I think it would be proper to take Advice of the Officers of the Castle, or to let the Officers of the Castle know the Situation we are in by the Letter we have received from the Rebels Camp, threatening military Execution in case we should put out of the Way any of our Arms or military Stores, and to see if they shall think proper to do any thing. Upon which one in the Company said, That the Deponent would be a proper Person to be sent with such a Message to Gen. Preston, because of his Relation to him. Upon which the Pannel directed the Deponent to go to the Castle, and acquaint Generals Preston or Guest of the Situation the Provost and Magistrates were in, in respect of the said threatening Letter, on account whereof they durst do nothing themselves with the Arms or military Stores; and to see whether these Generals would think proper to do any thing in it. That, when this Message was proposed, and agreed to, there were present in the Council-Chamber, besides the Pannel and the Deponent, Mr. Treasurer Forrest, as the Deponent thinks, and Mr. Orrock, and several other Members of the Council, whose Names the Deponent cannot recollect, and Mr. William Forbes one of the Principal Clerks, and Mr. Lindsay Depute Clerk; and the Message was proposed, and agreed to openly, and above-board. That the Deponent went immediately up to the Castle; and, in the Way, passed Ensign Roberton, and a Party of the Castle-Soldiers, standing a little above the Weigh-house. That, when he came to the Castle, the Deponent called first at General Preston, but was told, that he was gone to bed; and from thence he went to General Guest, and began to deliver him his Message from the Provost and Council, of the hard Situation they were in, by reason of the foresaid threatening Letter, in case they should put out of the way any of their Arms or military Stores; and then the General cut him short, and said, What then? Do you intend to deliver up your Arms to the Rebels? No, General, answered the Deponent; had that been our Intention, I had not come here; but I am sent to acquaint you of the Terror the Inhabitants are in; and that we dare not do any thing ourselves, for fear of military Execution: and therefore, if any thing occurs to you, you may do it; or Words to that Purpose. The General answered, And what would you have me to do? Will your Provost give me a written Order to send a Party for the Arms? No, replied the Deponent; that is what neither he nor the Council can do; for that would be constructed the same thing as if they did it themselves. That the General appeared to be in a Passion, and said, That is like the rest of your Provost's Conduct; I will send no Party, unless he send me a written Order. And then Robert Griffith came in, and told the General, that the Party with Ensign Roberton were in the Streets, waiting his Orders. Then, said he, recall the Party, for the Provost will give me no written Order; and, unless he give me one, I will send no Party. Depones, That he now also recollects another Expression he had to the General, to wit, That, tho' we dare give you no written Order; yet, if you will send a Party, I don't believe that any of those who are possessed of the Arms will refuse to deliver them. That the Deponent returned from the Castle to the Council-Chamber, and reported to the Pannel, and the other Persons present, openly, and above-board, the whole that had passed betwixt General Guest and him; and remembers, that the Pannel said, I hope you took care to hint to the General, that he might send a Party if he had a mind; or Words to that Purpose. And further depones, That Mr. Griffith first went away from the General, and the Deponent immediately followed him; and, just as the Deponent was coming away, the General said, What do you intend to do with your Cannon? The Deponent answered, 'I fear, General, they must run the same Fate with 'the rest.' And the General replied, I don't believe they are of much Use. And, being interrogate by the Pursuer, depones, That the Matters above deponed upon, happened, in point of Time, before the Message that Mr. Groset and Mr. Coutts were sent with to the Castle. And, being further interrogate, depones, He does not remember, whether there was any Conversation in the Council afterwards, when Mr. Groset and Provost Drummond were there, upon the Subject of the City-Arms.

XV. Archibald Stewart, Merchant in Edinburgh, depones, That he was Præses of the Society of Constables in the Year 1745. That, on Sunday the 15th September, in the Evening, the Pannel sent the Deponent, with a signed Order, addressed to Mr. Lyon Store-keeper of the Castle, for Matches for the Use of the Cannon mounted on the City-Walls; by virtue of which he received from him two Coils of Matches, for which he granted his Receipt on the Back of the Order; which was left in Mr. Lyon's Hands; which Coils he forthwith brought down, and delivered into the Goldsmiths-Hall. That a very little while after this, by virtue of another signed Order from the Pannel, he searched a waste House in the Lawn-market, belonging to one Mr. Norvel, for Arms and treasonable Papers, which were suspected to be in it; but which, after a careful Search, was found to be a Misinformation. That, upon Monday Afternoon, the 16th September, about Three o'Clock, he attended the Pannel from the Head of Forrester's Wynd to the West Port; at which Place he the Pannel visited the Barricadoes; and desired the Deponent to get up upon the Town-Wall, to look-out for one Hundred Dragoons, which he expected in Town, for the Defence of the City: which accordingly the Deponent did; and remained there for about a Quarter of an Hour; and when he came down, desired one of the Captains of the Guard to send up two of his Men to keep the same Look-out, that the Ports might be readily opened when the Dragoons appeared; and thereafter attended the Pannel in his Return from the West Port, from whence he intended to go to Bristow Port: But, in his Way, he was accosted by Mr. Thomas Dundas younger of Lethem; who desired to know of the Pannel, if he intended to persist in the Defence of the City? and said, That he did not ask this out of a vain Curiosity, but at the Desire of several substantial Inhabitants of the City, whose Lives and Fortunes were at Stake, and who, as well as himself, would take their Measures according to his Resolution. To which the Pannel replied, 'You know, Mr. Dundas, that, at the Desire of the principal 'Inhabitants of this City, I wrote to London for Arms to be put in the 'Hands of the Citizens for the Defence of the City; with what Grace 'then can I, without striking a Stroke, desist from defending it? No, 'Sir; I am determined I will not; and will take that Place on the 'Town-Walls which I possess at the Council-Table.' Soon after which the Pannel came up to Town.

Then the Pannel declared, that as he was of Opinion he had fully proved his Defences, he would not trouble the Court with any further Proof.

Saturday 31ſt October 1747, betwixt Five and Six o'Clock in the Morning.

'The Lords Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, ordain the Aſſize immediately to incloſe in this Place, and to return their Verdict againſt 'Monday next, at Ten o'Clock Forenoon, in this Court-Houſe; and 'ordain the haill fifteen Aſſizers to be then preſent, each under the Pain 'of Law, and the Pannel alſo to be preſent ſaid Time, under the Pain 'of Law.'

XLIV. The Trial of John Matthews, Printer, for High Treaſon, for Printing a Libel, entitled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei *, at the Seſſions Houſe, in the Old Bailey, October 30, 1719, before the Lord Chief Juſtice King, Lord Chief Baron Bury, the Judges Powis, Blencow, Price, Tracy, Eyre, Montagu, Forteſcue, Page, and Dormer†.

AT the Seſſions Houſe, in the Old Bailey, the 14th October 1719, the Priſoner, John Matthews, was brought to the Bar, but on the Motion of the Priſoner's Counſel, and on producing an Affidavit of one Carroll, the Court adjourned to the 16th: When the Court met again, the Priſoner being brought to the Bar, Mr. Juſtice Tracy, and Mr. Baron Price, attending,

An Objection was made by the Priſoner's Counſel, that by the Statute of the 7th King William, the Priſoner, in the Caſes of High Treaſon, is to have a Copy of the Pannel duly returned by the Sheriff, two Days, at leaſt, before the Trial; and that in the Copy of the Pannel ſo delivered to the Priſoner, and returned by the Sheriffs of London, was inſerted the Names, without the Addition of Pariſh, Ward, or Place of Abode. And the Queſtion was, Whether this is a right Pannel, according to the Act of the 27th Eliz. Ch. 7. the Title of which Act is, that no Juror ſhall be returned without an Addition of his Dwelling-place, &c. And for that purpoſe the Act provides, that no Juror, whether living within or without a Liberty, ſhall be returned without an Addition of the Place of his Dwelling or Abode, or ſome other Addition, by which the Party named may be known ‡.

The Judges then preſent differed in their Opinion, and adjourned to another Day, to take the Opinion of the reſt of their Brethren, to whom the ſaid Judges that attended made their Report, and on the 30th of October, the Court met again, when Eleven Judges attended, (viz.) Lord Chief Juſtice King, Lord Chief Baron Bury, the Judges Powis, Blencow, Price, Tracy, Eyre, Montagu, Forteſcue, Page, and Dormer, (Lord Chief Juſtice Pratt, abſent) who all agreed, that the City of London was not within the Meaning of that Act, and that the Pannel was a good and legal Pannel; and the Trial ought to go on.—Accordingly the Jury were called over, and after a great many were challenged by the Priſoner,

The Jury ſworn, were

Robert Thorp,	Nathaniel Michlethwaite,
Elias Turner,	John Thompſon,

The Cryer makes the uſual Proclamation, O-yes, O-yes, O-yes! If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney General, or this Inqueſt, now to be taken, of the High Treaſon of which the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard, for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance; and all others that are bound by Recognizance, to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or elſe they forfeit their Recognizance: and all Jurymen of London, that have appeared, and are not ſworn, may depart the Court for this time.

Clerk of Arraigns. John Matthews, hold up your Hand. You of the Jury look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe: He ſtands indicted, by the Name of John Matthews, of London, Printer, for that he being a Subject of our Sovereign Lord George, now King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor conſidering his due Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as a falſe Traytor, againſt our ſaid Lord the now King, his ſupreme, true, lawful, and indubitable Lord, altogether withdrawing that Cordial Love and true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance which every Subject of our ſaid Lord the King ſhould bear, and, of right, ought to bear towards our ſaid Lord the King, after the 25th Day of March in the Year of our Lord 1706, viz. the 10th Day of June in the 5th Year of the Reign of our now ſaid Lord the King, at London in the Pariſh of St. Botolph without Alderſgate in the Ward of Alderſgate at London aforeſaid, in a certain falſe and treaſonable Libel, which he the ſaid John Matthews then and there malicioufly, adviſedly, and traitorouſly printed, intitled Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, of and concerning the Perſon in the Life-time of James the Second, late King of England, &c. pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and, after the Deceaſe of the ſaid late King, pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf, the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third; and of and concerning his Right to the Crown of Great Britain, he did malicioufly, adviſedly, directly and traitorouſly, by the ſaid Printing, declare, maintain and affirm, in one Part thereof, in theſe Words following, viz. From the Solemnity of the Chevalier's (meaning the Perſon in the Life-time of James the Second, late King of England, &c. pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and after the Deceaſe of the ſaid late King pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf, the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third) Birth, the moral Impoſſibility of putting an Impoſtor on the Nation (meaning the Kingdom of Great Britain) after the Manner pretended, and the Diſappointment in the Attempt of proving him (meaning the ſaid Perſon in the Life-time of James the Second, late King of England, &c. pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and after the Deceaſe of the ſaid late King, pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf, the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James (the Third) ſo, I (meaning himſelf the ſaid John Matthews) think it is Demonſtration, if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation †, he (meaning the ſaid Perſon in the Life-time of James the Second, late King of England, &c. pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and after the Deceaſe of the ſaid late King pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third) has that (meaning an hereditary Right to the Crown of this Kingdom) to plead in his Favour; and all Aſſertors of limited Monarchy muſt allow that ought to be preferred, if the Perſon having it is endowed with other Qualities fit to govern. And the great Opinion all Courts have of this Prince's (meaning the ſaid Perſon in the Life-time of James the Second, late King of England, &c. pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and after the Deceaſe of the ſaid late King pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third) Virtues, ſhews he (meaning the ſaid Perſon in the Life-time of James the Second, late King of England, &c. pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and after the Deceaſe of the ſaid late King pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third) only wants to be known by us (meaning the People of this Kingdom) to be admired ‡. And that we (meaning the People of this Kingdom) only want the Enjoyment of him (meaning the ſaid Perſon in the Life-time of James the Second, late King of England, &c. pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and after the Deceaſe of the ſaid late King pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third) to make us happy. And in another Part thereof in theſe Words following, viz. I (meaning himſelf the ſaid John Matthews) will conclude with three Remarks. Firſt, That every Aſſertor of Hereditary Right (meaning Hereditary Right to the Crown of this Kingdom) muſt be a Jacobite (meaning a Favourer of the Perſon in the Life-time of King James the Second, late King of England, &c. pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and after the Deceaſe of the ſaid late King pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third). 2dly, That every Whig who makes Vox Populi his Rule of Government, muſt be ſo (meaning a Jacobite). 3dly, Every Aſſertor of

* Rights! He could not have any, ſuppoſing him King James's Son; (which is not admitted) for his Father, under whom he muſt claim, having broke his Coronation-Oath, trampled on the Rights and Liberties of his Subjects, turned Papiſt, and abdicated the Throne, was very juſtly ſet aſide by Act of Parliament.

† This Matthews was a vain, weak, conceited young Fellow, buoy'd up by the Jacobites, and for ſmall Lucre printed their treaſonable Papers, and diſperſed them among the ignorant common People—Perſons of Senſe deſpiſing their nonſenſical Doctrine of Hereditary Right, &c. Such idle Stuff having been long ſince exploded, every one now ſeems ſtriving who ſhall appear moſt zealous in aſſerting thoſe Principles which brought about the GLORIOUS REVOLUTION and the HAPPY ESTABLISHMENT of the preſent Royal Family.—

Mich. 12 Ann. Bedford's Treatiſe of Hereditary Right was held to be a Libel, though it contained no Reflection upon any Part of the then Government. Strange, Vol. II. p. 789.

Mr. Bedford having been found guilty at Guildhall, London, Feb. 13, 1713, of writing, printing and publiſhing a ſcandalous and ſeditious Libel, intitled, The Hereditary Right, &c. the Court, May 4, in Eaſter Term, gave Judgment, "That he ſhould be fined 1000 Marks, impriſoned for three Years without Bail or Mainpriſe, and upon "his Delivery, to be bound in a Recognizance with four ſufficient Sureties in the Sum of 5000*l.* for his Good Behaviour during Life; and that upon the next Friday he "was to be brought up, and ſhewn to all the Courts ſitting in Weſtminſter-Hall, with a Paper in his Hat expreſſing the Crime and the Judgment, and was committed to "the Cuſtody of the Marſhal."

Upon Friday Mr. Kettleby, (one of the Defendant's Counſel) moved the Court upon a Paper which was delivered in and read; it was under the Privy-Seal ſigned by her Majeſty, and directed to the Lord Chief Juſtice, the Juſtices of the Court, the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex, and Marſhal of the Queen's Bench, and imported a Recital of the Conviction and Judgment; and that Mr. Bedford had humbly repreſented to her Majeſty by Petition, That he was a Clergyman of the Church of England, and prayed, that the ignominious Part of the Sentence might be remitted; "Theſe are therefore to require you, and every of you, not to put in Execution that Part of the Judg-"ment which is, that he be brought to the Courts in Weſtminſter-Hall, &c. and for ſo doing this ſhall be your, and every of your, ſufficient Warrant."

The Court immediately made a Rule to diſcharge the Marſhal of his Attendance with him that Day, and ſaid they would conſider how the Judgment ought to be entered upon. Gilbert's Caſes, 297.

This Mr. Bedford (formerly Rector of Wickering, in the Dioceſe of Peterborough, and Fellow of St. John's, Cambridge,) was a nonjuring Clergyman, and though convicted as above, was thought to have had little or no Hand in writing the Book, he not being eſteemed equal to the Performance. It was ſuppoſed to have been wrote by Mr. Harbin, a Nonjuror, (a Weſt-Country Gentleman) who had been formerly Chaplain in the old Lord Weymouth's Family. The Preface to it was ſaid to be wrote by Mr. Downes, a Nonjuror, of Baliol College at Oxford. It is imagined they had the Peruſal of Lord Hales's MSS. of the Pleas of the Crown, by the Paſſages they have taken from thence. Thoſe obnoxious Paſſages were omitted by Mr. Emlyn, when he publiſhed that Work, by the Advice of two great Men in the Law.—

Mr. Bedford, by not diſcovering the Author, &c. was a great Gainer in the End; for ſetting up a Boarding-houſe near Weſtminſter School, for young Gentlemen, by the Help of the above Perſons, and others of that Party, he got a conſiderable Fortune; which he left to his Son, Dr. Bedford, a Phyſician in London, who died a few Years ago.

‡ Only wants to be known by us to be admired. The more he was known in Scotland, in the Year 1715, the more he was deſpiſed; being a great Bigot to the Popiſh Religion, refuſing to appear at any Place of Proteſtant Worſhip.—A great Coward, flying before the King's Troops, and making no Stand; that even the Chiefs in that Rebellion looked on him, at laſt, in a contemptible Light.—And further he ſays, We only want the Enjoyment of him to make us happy. What, would a Popiſh Bigot, and a Tool of France make us happy! would Popery and Slavery make Engliſh-men happy! We are now as happy under our preſent moſt gracious Sovereign King GEORGE III. as our Hearts can deſire (and were ſo at that Time); and God forbid we ſhould ever change our Happineſs for Miſery and Ruin; which muſt be the Caſe, if ever God, for our Sins, ſhould ſcourge us with a Popiſh abjur'd Pretender.

How ſayeſt thou, John Matthews, art thou Guilty of this Indictment whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or Not Guilty?---Priſoner. Not Guilty.

Clerk of Arraigns. How wilt thou be tried?

Priſ. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Foreman of the Jury. My Lord, we humbly pray the Court may be kept quiet, or it will be impoſſible for us to hear the Evidence.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Officer, make Proclamation for Silence.

Cryer. O-yes, O-yes, O-yes! My Lords the King's Juſtices ſtrictly charge and command all manner of Perſons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the King's Counſel, you may proceed.

Mr. Bootle. [afterwards Sir Thomas Bootle.] May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counſel in this Caſe for the King. The Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted of High-Treaſon, upon the Statute made in the 6th Year of the late Queen Anne's Reign, and it is for maliciouſly, adviſedly, and directly, by Printing, declaring, and affirming, that the Pretender hath a Right and Title to the Crown of theſe Realms.

My Lord, the Indictment ſets forth, that he being a Subject of our Sovereign Lord George, now King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor conſidering his due Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, as a falſe Traytor, againſt our ſaid Lord the now King, his ſupreme, lawful, and indubitable Lord, altogether withdrawing that cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our ſaid Lord the King ſhould, and of right ought to bear towards our ſaid Lord the King, after the 25th of March, in the Year of our Lord 1706, (to wit, the 10th Day of June, in the 5th Year of his preſent Majeſty's Reign, at London, in the Pariſh of St. Botolph, without Aldersgate, in the Ward of Aldersgate, at London aforeſaid, in a certain falſe and treaſonable Libel, which he then and there maliciouſly, adviſedly, and traitorouſly printed, entitled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, of and concerning the Perſon in the Life-time of King James the Second, late King of England, &c. pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and after the Deceaſe of the ſaid late King pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third, and of and concerning his Right to the Crown of Great Britain, he did maliciouſly, adviſedly, directly, and traitorouſly, by the ſaid Printing, declare, maintain, and affirm, in one Part thereof in theſe Words, "From the Solemnity of the Chevalier's (meaning the Pretender's) Birth, the moral Impoſſibility of putting an Impoſtor upon the Nation, (meaning the Kingdom of Great Britain), after the manner pretended, and the Diſappointment in the Attempt of proving him ſo, I (meaning himſelf the ſaid John Matthews) think its Demonſtration, if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he (meaning the Pretender) hath that (meaning an Hereditary Right to the Crown of this Kingdom), to plead in his Favour; and all Aſſertors of limited Monarchy muſt allow, that ought to be preferred, if the Perſon having it is endowed with other Qualities fit to govern. And the great Opinion all Courts have of this Prince's (meaning the Pretender's) Virtues, ſhews he (meaning the Pretender) only wants to be known by us to be admired, and that we (meaning the People of England) only want the Enjoyment of him to make us happy."

My Lord, there is laid to be likewiſe in another Part of this Libel, that he did maliciouſly, adviſedly, and traitorouſly, by the ſaid Printing, declare, maintain, and affirm, in theſe Words following, viz. "I (meaning himſelf the ſaid John Matthews) will conclude with theſe Remarks. Firſt, That every Aſſertor of Hereditary Right (meaning Hereditary Right to the Crown of this Kingdom) muſt be a Jacobite (meaning a Favourer of the Pretender). 2dly, That every Whig who makes Vox Populi his Rule of Government, muſt be ſo (meaning a Jacobite). And, 3dly, Every Aſſertor of limited Monarchy muſt be ſo, (meaning a Jacobite,) the Chevalier (meaning the Pretender) being endowed with all princely Virtues; ſo that all Rights (meaning all Rights to the Crown of this Kingdom) concur in him (meaning the Pretender)." This is laid to be contrary to his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and alſo againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided.

Gentlemen, the Indictment further ſets forth, That the Defendant, as a falſe Traytor againſt our ſaid Lord the now King, his ſupreme, lawful, and indubitable Lord, altogether withdrawing that cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our ſaid Lord the now King, towards our ſaid Lord the King, ſhould and of right ought to bear, afterwards and after the 25th of March, in the Year of our Lord 1706 (to wit), the ſame 10th Day of June, in the fifth Year aforeſaid, at London, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, in another falſe and traitorous Libel, intitled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, which he the ſaid John Matthews then and there maliciouſly, adviſedly, and traitorouſly printed, and by the laſt aboveſaid Printing, maliciouſly, adviſedly, and traitorouſly did declare, maintain, and affirm, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of Great Britain; and this is laid to be contrary to his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the now King, his Crown and Dignity, and alſo againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided.

To this, Gentlemen, the Priſoner hath pleaded Not Guilty; we on the Part of the Proſecution ſhall call our Witneſſes to prove the Facts, and if we do, I don't doubt you will think it your Duty to find him Guilty.

Mr. Attorney General (Mr. Lechmere, afterwards Lord Lechmere). My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, The Indictment which hath been opened to you, is an Indictment againſt John Matthews, the Perſon at the Bar, for High-Treaſon. This Indictment is founded upon an Act of Parliament made in the 6th Year of the late Queen, the Title of it is, "An Act for the Security of her Majeſty's Perſon and Government, and of the Succeſſion to the Crown of Great Britain in the Proteſtant Line." This Act recites, there had been a former Act, made in the 4th Year of the Reign of her then preſent Majeſty, in which it is mentioned, by reaſon of the Union of England and Scotland, it became neceſſary to make divers Alterations in that Act. The firſt Proviſion made by this Law is in theſe Words, that "If any Perſon or Perſons ſhall maliciouſly, adviſedly, and directly, by Writing or Printing, maintain and affirm, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen that now is, is not the lawful and rightful Queen of theſe Realms, or that the pretended Prince of Wales, who now ſtiles himſelf King of Great Britain, or King of England, by the Name of James the Third, or King of Scotland by the Name of James the Eighth, hath any Right or Title to the Crown of theſe Realms; or that any Perſon or Perſons hath or have any Right or Title to the ſame, otherwiſe than according to an Act of Parliament made in England, in the firſt Year of the Reign of their late Majeſties King William and Queen Mary, of ever bleſſed and glorious Memory, intitled, "An Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and ſettling the Succeſſion of the Crown;" and one other Act made in England in the 12th Year of the Reign of his ſaid late Majeſty King William the Third, intitled, "An Act for the further Limitation of the Crown, and better ſecuring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject;" and the Acts lately made in England and Scotland mutually for the Union of the two Kingdoms; or that the Kings or Queens of this Realm, with and by the Authority of Parliament, are not able to make Laws and Statutes of ſufficient Force and Validity to limit and bind the Crown, and the Deſcent, Limitation, Inheritance and Government thereof; every ſuch Perſon or Perſons ſhall be guilty of High-Treaſon, and being thereof lawfully convicted ſhall be adjudged Traytors, and ſhall ſuffer Pains of Death, and Loſſes and Forfeitures as in Caſes of High-Treaſon."

Gentlemen, the Facts that are enumerated in this Clauſe of the Statute I have read to you; at the Time when this Law was made, thoſe Crimes, though Crimes of a very high Nature, yet were Crimes of a lower Degree, as Miſdemeanours, &c. But for the Security of the Perſon of the late Queen and her Government, and for the ſecuring of the Succeſſion to the Crown in the Proteſtant Line, the Wiſdom of Parliament thought it neceſſary, to deter People from ſuch Crimes, to inflict the Puniſhment due for High-Treaſon. The Charge of this Indictment read to you, is one of thoſe ſeveral Inſtances made High-Treaſon by this Act. The Subſtance of the Indictment is, that the Priſoner, the 10th of June laſt, did maliciouſly, adviſedly, and directly, in a certain Libel, intitled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, which he cauſed to be printed, he did by that Impreſſion declare, maintain, and affirm, that the Perſon deſcribed by the Act of Parliament to be the pretended Prince of Wales, had a Right to the Crown of theſe Realms.

Gentlemen, the Words taken out of the Libel have been read to you, and ſtated to you upon the Opening of the Indictment, and I believe no Doubt or Queſtion ariſes upon the proper Conſtruction of thoſe Words, but the Priſoner is Guilty of High-Treaſon.—The Chevalier, the Name made uſe of to deſcribe the Perſon, the Circumſtance by which he is deſcribed, are of ſuch notorious a kind, ſo well known, that it is impoſſible for any one not to underſtand them of the Perſon deſcribed in the Act of Parliament.—The Law directs, that to involve any Perſon in the Crime of High-Treaſon, that the Writing with which he is charged, ſhould be a direct declaring, maintaining, and affirming: this is what the Law preſcribes. In the firſt Sett of Words, it is not a bare Aſſertion only, but the very Words are, that it is a Demonſtration, that if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he hath that to plead in his favour. This is as ſtrong an Inſtance, and as full and clear affirming as Words can invent. In the latter Part, by way of Concluſion from the Arguments of his Books, he there affirms, all Rights concur in this Perſon; all Right to the Crown of theſe Realms: it muſt be ſo underſtood, it is impoſſible to put any other Conſtruction upon it. I conclude from the Premiſſes, that all Rights to the Crown of this Kingdom concur in this Perſon. The Act of Parliament makes it Treaſon to affirm, that the Perſon therein deſcribed hath any Right to the Crown of theſe Realms: in the Beginning he affirms, that he hath an Hereditary Right; in the Concluſion there is a poſitive Affirmation, that not only that, but all other Rights concur in him.

Gentlemen, It being beyond all doubt, as I apprehend, that the Words ſet forth in the Libel amount to High-Treaſon, according to this Act of Parliament; it is therefore incumbent upon us that proſecute for the Crown, to ſhew that he is the Perſon that did print the Libel ſet forth in in this Indictment; that he did it with Malice, maliciously, is one of the Circumstances the Act of Parliament requires; that he did not do it ignorantly, or inadvertently, but advisedly; as to that, our Evidence will be thus: The Prisoner lived with his Mother in the City of London, who kept a Printing-house, whether he be an Apprentice or Partner is not material; he is an Inhabitant there, and belongs to that Printing-house, and lives with his Mother who keeps the Printing-house. The Government having on former Occasions had this young Man under their Notice for Practices of this Kind, the 6th of June last they received Information of the traitorous Libel set out in the Indictment that was dispersed much about that Time. Having received Information that the Prisoner was concerned in printing of it, a Warrant was issued for apprehending him; accordingly being taken, there was found in his Pocket one entire Libel, bearing the Title, and importing the Words set forth in the Indictment. In his Lodging-room there were found two Half Sheets; the Libel contained one whole Sheet and no more. Besides that in his Pocket, in his Lodging-room were found two first Half-sheets of this Libel; there were likewise another entire Libel found in his Lodging-room, and eight or ten Half-sheets of the latter Part of the Libel, which were superfluous Parts of the Impression, as we believe.

My Lord, on the View of these Libels when they come to be looked on, on the View of the two Half-sheets, and on the Proof we shall give you concerning them, it will appear that these two Half-sheets of the first Part of the Libel, that they are the very Proof-sheets from which the Impression of this Libel was worked off. There are other Circumstances appearing in the Papers themselves, that to your Observation I do not doubt will appear so; but especially when it comes to be explained by Masters in the Art of Printing, who are better able to give an Account of them; then it will appear that these were the very Proof-sheets of the Impression after it was wrought off. My Lord, there is, in the Language of Printers, a right and wrong Imposing; one of these Proof-sheets appears to be wrong imposed, the other is right imposed; the Impression was varied, as will appear to you by the wrong Imposition of the first Half-sheet, which occasioned another Imposition rightly imposed, and from which the Impression of the Libel was wrought off.

Gentlemen, on these two Half-sheets there are the usual Mistakes and Corrections, such as the inverting Letters, and other such literal Mistakes usual in this Trade, and in working of printed Papers.——

Gentlemen, the Types and Letters of these Proof-sheets will appear to you to be the very Types and Letters of this Printing-house, to which this young Man belonged; and, Gentlemen, upon those Proof-sheets, there is an Addition and Interlineation of the Word sit, which we shall prove to be the Hand-writing of the Prisoner himself.

Gentlemen, It is observable from the superfluous Half-sheets, in Point of Evidence, that arises from the Facts themselves as discovered in his Possession: If these Papers had come into his Possession as Libels dispersed, it is reasonable to imagine they would have been found not imperfect Sheets, a Part of this Libel, but entire and compleat. It is usual and common, where they print off by Reams, there may be a Superfluity or overplus Sheets: they do not always hit the same Number of the same Impression. It frequently happens there may be a Superfluity of Sheets or Half-sheets; these, with other Circumstances, as will appear to you, do concur, and in themselves carry a very high Evidence, strong, if not violent Presumption, that he was the Printer of this Libel, or at least privy and concerned, or co-operated in the printing thereof; and that is the same; for if many are concerned in printing a treasonable Libel, they are all guilty of the Treason. But it will be incumbent on the Prisoner, if he can acquit himself from the Weight of this Evidence, which must fall upon him from these Circumstances of the Papers being found upon him, being found in his Possession in the very Printing-house; it will be incumbent on him to acquit himself, and to account for these Things, to shew how he came by them; if by any other Means than as by these Circumstances, we shall endeavour to prove. My Lord, these Circumstances appearing, on the finding the Libel on the Prisoner, on his being apprehended, being under Examination—whatever his Defence may be now, let him make the best he can by Law; I am for giving him the full Liberty the Law allows—but I mention it as a Proof, when under an Examination, and disposed to a Behaviour that might have prevented this Trial, very far from denying the printing of these Papers when they were produced, if my Instructions are true, what he said amounted to an Acknowledgment and Confession that he printed them. He endeavoured to excuse it from his Necessity; sometimes gave Overtures and Reasons to believe that he would discover the Person that put the Manuscript into his Hands, and set him to Work. But throughout his whole Examination at that Time, it will appear on that Occasion, if my Instructions are right, so far was he from denying himself to be the Printer, that he confessed he was the Printer of those Papers.

Gentlemen, I shall not rest it on this, though if made out, I apprehend is very full; but we have the very Persons to produce to you in Evidence who were employed by the Prisoner, paid by the Prisoner for the Printing of these very Libels we shall offer to you in Evidence: That about a Month or six Weeks before he was discovered, I apprehend this might be about the latter End of May, he, early in the Morning, about three or four o'Clock, (the exact Time I will not undertake to prove) called up the Persons I shall offer as Witnesses, told them he had an Impression to work off; one of them will prove they saw him compose the Press from the Manuscript; they remember the Circumstance of his making the wrong Imposition of the first Part of this Impression, and the having wrong imposed it (as the Phrase is): He went out, and, on his Return, he swore he had wrong imopsed it, and he must impose it a second time; and accordingly he made the second Imposition, which is the Paper we have to produce; he directed them to work it off while the Prisoner stood by, and did the Office which Boys do, for Dispatch and Secrecy; he took the Papers from the Press; there were about a Thousand wrought off compleat of the first and second Part of the Libel; and he paid them for it, and took the Impression into his own Possession; he paid them fourteen Shillings, Part to the Witness, and the other Part to the Apprentice. Gentlemen, if we prove this, there can no Doubt remain with you, but that it will prove him fully, and to your entire Satisfaction, that he is the Printer of these Papers; that he hath done it maliciously. The Act of Parliament hath made that a Circumstance; but no other Proof is requisite by Law to be made, than by that which arises from the Nature of the Libel itself. A traitorous Libel, calculated to raise Sedition and Rebellion, imports Malice: A Libel pretending to condemn the Title of the Crown in his Majesty, and asserting it to be in the Pretender, carries Malice of the highest Nature: and if we shew he had the Direction of the Press, he composed it, afterwards corrected it, it cannot remain a Doubt with you as to the other Circumstance, but that it was done advisedly.

Gentlemen, I have stated to you the Circumstance of the Evidence, and I have done it without any Aggravation; I do not think it wants it; if the Evidence comes out as I have laid it before you, it will carry its own Force, and you will give it its due Weight. I am sorry for any one that falls under such an Accusation, but more especially for one so young; but, Gentlemen, Compassion is neither your Business or mine; that belongs to another Place, as the Case shall appear. I will call our Witnesses, and prove what I have opened to you; and if I do, you will do your Country Justice, as well as Justice to the King, to find him guilty.

Serjeant Cheshire. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn, I am Counsel of the same Side with the King.——Mr. Attorney General hath opened the Charge so very fully, that it will be unnecessary for me to spend Time in adding to it. But, Gentlemen, since this is a Prosecution on an Act of Parliament, and for aught I know this the first Instance of a Trial of one discovered and brought before you in Judgment upon this Act, it may be necessary for me to add a few Words in relation to it. And, Gentlemen, a Man cannot but be sensibly concerned in his Mind, that, after fourteen Years that this Act hath been in Force, the first Instance should be a young Boy of this Person's Age; I hope, notwithstanding, when you hear the Evidence laid before you, you will be sensible that the real Author is a Person of greater Maturity and Proficiency; and this poor Youth worked up to be an obstinate Instrument in the Hands of some greater Person; and God forbid that such People, by their Artfulness and Cunning, should get off, by making use of such as are more apt to move Compassion.

Gentlemen, you will consider, as you have this young Man in Judgement, so you have the Rights of the King of England, under whom we live; and that you will do fair and right between the King and his Subjects, is what we expect.

Gentlemen, this must be an Offence against an Act of Parliament, made in the fourth Year of the late Queen, and in the sixth Year, whereby it was declared, that if any Person or Persons shall, maliciously, advisedly, and directly, by Writing or Printing, maintain and affirm, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen that now is, is not the lawful and rightful Queen of these Realms, or that the pretended Prince of Wales, who stiled himself King of Great Britain, or King of England, by the Name of James the Third, or King of Scotland, by the Name of James the Eighth, hath any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms, or that any other Person or Persons have or hath any Right or Title to the same, otherwise than according to an Act of Parliament, made in the first Year of the Reign of their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary, of ever blessed and glorious Memory, intituled, An Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and settling the Succession of the Crown; and one other Act, made in the twelfth Year of the Reign of his said late Majesty King William the Third, intituled, An Act for the further Limitation of the Crown, and better securing the Rights and Liberties of the Subject; and the Acts lately made in England and Scotland mutually for the Union of the two Kingdoms; or that the Kings or Queens of this Realm, with and by the Authority of Parliament, are not able to make Laws and Statutes of sufficient Force and Validity to limit and bind the Crown, and the Descent, Limitation, Inheritance, and Government thereof: Every such Person or Persons shall be guilty of High-Treason, and being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be adjudged Traitors, and shall suffer Pains of Death, and all Losses and Forfeitures as in Cases of High-Treason. And the Offence here is the declaring, maintaining, and affirming, that the Pretender hath any Right or Title to the Crown of England; That, Gentlemen, give me Leave to say, is the Treason in this Act of Parliament; but, Gentlemen, as it stood on the Old Acts of Parliament, that That made the Treason must be proved by open Deeds, as we usually express it by Overt Acts.—This Treason is to be determined two Ways, that is, by Printing or Writing; it is Treason for any Person or Persons to declare, maintain, and affirm, that the Pretender hath any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms; that Declaration must be made good by Printing or Writing; the Case before you is Printing; that Printing must have these Qualifications: It must be maliciously, it must be advisedly, and the Declaration must be directly.

Gentlemen, It is an Offence made up of these Gradations: He must do it maliciously; he must do it advisedly; he must do it directly; and that which is to be done so, is the maintaining and affirming that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of this Kingdom: If this be thus proved by Printing, then, Gentlemen, this is the Offence which is made High-Treason by this Act of Parliament. Gentlemen, it is necessary a little to open to you who is meant by the Chevalier, because you find by the Libel, he is called the Chevalier. Gentlemen, as it is known to you all, as here in England, he is called the Pretender to the Crown, very properly in many Acts of Parliament; so, on the Death of the late King James, he assumed the Title of James the Third King of England, and James the Eighth of Scotland. That being resented, justly resented by the Crown of England, to those Princes and States that seemed to favour it, they withdrew that Title, and he assumed the Name of the Chevalier de St. George. I believe it is as well known that the Pretender was meant by the Name of Chevalier, as any Prince whatsoever is known by his Title. As to the Person, we think it is very plain, the Person named the Chevalier in the Libel, to be the very same Person that pretended to be the Prince of Wales in the Life-time of King James the Second; and, after his Decease, that assumed to himself the Title of James the Third King of England, and the Eighth of Scotland. As this is the Person, so you will find a direct maintaining and affirming that he hath a Right to the Crown of these Realms; That will appear by the Libel. I would observe by the way, that this way of libelling, it well became the Legislature to guard against: because it is a sly, artful way of poisoning the Minds of People, and in such a Manner as is not easily discoverable. Here it is necessary first, to set out the Virtues of the the Perſon; you are next, from the Conſideration of theſe Virtues, neceſſarily moved with Pity and Compaſſion, that a Perſon of thoſe Virtues ſhould be kept out of his Right. He ſays, all Rights concur in him, who, he ſays, is a Perſon endowed with all princely Virtues: If he hath all Rights concur in him, and is a Perſon of thoſe princely Virtues, is it not a pity, and doth it not move Compaſſion, that this Perſon is kept out of his Right? It is a natural Inference. Then who is the Perſon he is ſpeaking of, the Perſon whoſe Birth was ſo very ſolemn, that it was impoſſible to prove him an Impoſtor: Theſe are the Words of the Libel before you. And then, Gentlemen, which comes more to the Purpoſe, he particularly and poſitively affirms, that if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he hath that to plead in his Favour; this is in the firſt Part of the Libel. In the latter Part he makes three Remarks; in theſe three Remarks he ſums up all the Right any Prince can have. He ſays, Hereditary Right, that is one; the Voice or Choice of the People, that is another; and a limited Monarchy the third; he ſays he hath all theſe Rights concur in him; he being endowed with all princely Virtues, therefore all theſe Rights concur in him. Gentlemen, it hath been rightly opened by Mr. Attorney-General, that the Offence is to declare, that he hath any Right; but he hath maintained all Rights whatſoever concur in him; he hath an Hereditary Right, he hath a Right by the Choice of the People, he hath a Right, as it is a limited Monarchy. This, Gentlemen, is the Declaration; and we think upon the reading it, you will be ſatisfied, and I dare ſay my Lords the Judges will direct you, that this is a direct declaring that he hath a Right to the Crown of theſe Realms.

Gentlemen, it muſt be proved it was done maliciouſly and adviſedly; if we make out what Mr. Attorney-General hath opened, that it was done with this Deliberation, that he paid for it, that he directed it, that he was the Perſon who compoſed it, firſt took off the Sheets from the Preſs, which is uſually done by a Boy, and they call that Boy the Devil; it is the Devil's Work, as you will hear by the Witneſſes, but that was done by him for Haſte, Expedition and Secrecy too. Gentlemen, there was, as it will appear by the Witneſſes, a Thouſand of each Part printed off; it is to be feared they were diſperſed, and God knows what Miſchief they may have done; a few were found upon him, it lies upon him to account how he came by them; we will call our Witneſſes, &c.

Mr. Lutwych. Call John Hutchins and Thomas Roberts, the Meſſengers that ſeized theſe Things upon him.

JOHN HUTCHINS and THOMAS ROBERTS ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, we pray in behalf of the Priſoner, that the Witneſſes may be kept out of the Hearing of one another.

[Which was ordered accordingly.]

Priſoner. My Lord, I deſire that the Witneſſes may be kept out of the Hearing of one another.

Lord Chief Juſtice King. If there are any more of the Witneſſes in Court, they muſt ſtay out 'till they are called.

JOHN HUTCHINS.

Mr. Attorney General. Shew him the Libel. Look upon the reſt of the Half-ſheets, Mr. Hutchins: you have the Libel in your Hands?

Hutchins. Yes.

Att. Gen. Have you looked upon them all?

Hutchins. Yes, Sir, upon moſt of them.

Att. Gen. Are not any of them marked that you know of?

Hutchins. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. How many are they that are marked by you?

Hutchins. They are all marked by me.

Att. Gen. Hold them in your Hand, look upon thoſe Libels, you ſay they are marked by you; do you know any thing of thoſe Libels, and where you had them?

Hutchins. Some I found in Mr. Matthews's Pocket; the reſt I found in his Room.

Att. Gen. Let us know the Time when.

Hutchins. The 7th of July laſt.

Att. Gen. Where, Sir?

Hutchins. In his Pocket, and in his Room.

Att. Gen. Where?

Att. Gen. At his Mother's Printing-houſe? Which was found in his Pocket?

Hutchins. This, Sir.

Att. Gen. Is that an entire Libel that was found in his Pocket?

Hutchins. Theſe two make an entire Libel.

Att. Gen. Thoſe were found in his Pocket?—Hutchins. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. Where were the reſt found?—Hutchins. In his Room.

Att. Gen. Why call you it his Room?

Hutchins. In his Room where he lay, in his Bed-chamber.

Att. Gen. They were found in his Bed-chamber?

[Now point to us thoſe that were found in his Bed-chamber.]

Hutchins. The two Half-ſheets; two Proof-half-ſheets.

Att. Gen. There is another.

Hutchins. Yes, Sir, that is one that was found in his Pocket.

Att. Gen. Sir, can you be poſitive thoſe are the very Papers you found in his Pocket, and in his Room?

Hutchins. I am very poſitive.

Att. Gen. I think you ſay you marked them.——Hutchins. Yes.

Att. Gen. Did you look on thoſe Marks?——Hutchins. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. Now look upon the reſt of the Papers you have in your Hands, and let us know what they are.

Hutchins. Theſe were taken out of his Room.

Att. Gen. Look upon thoſe, that Bundle you have in your Hand.

Hutchins. Theſe are more that were taken out of his Room.

Att. Gen. Theſe are the imperfect ſuperfluous Sheets; don't put them together, keep them diſtinct.

Hutchins. Sir, I ſhall.

Att. Gen. You were ſaying, they were found in his Room?

Hutchins. Yes, Sir, in his Room.

Att. Gen. Was there any Converſation between you and the Priſoner the Day he was in your Cuſtody, or at any other Time, touching theſe Libels?

Hutchins. He owned they were all his.

Lord Chief Juſtice. How?

Hutchins. I aſked him if they were his, he told me they were.

Att. Gen. That was at the time he was taken; afterwards had you any other Diſcourſe with him at the time of ſhewing him his Papers?

Hutchins. He never denied them.

Mr. Lutwych. Do you know of any thing that paſſed between you, at the time of his Commitment?

Hutchins. I brought him to Newgate. When I came for him, I ſuppoſe, ſays he, I am going to Newgate, and that a Bill of High-Treaſon will be found againſt me? Yes, ſays I, that there is already.—I adviſed him to tell the Author, and it would be better for him. He ſaid, I know I ſhall be hanged; but I have nothing to do, but let the Money fly, to get a good Jury, that's all: He ſaid thoſe that ſet him to work, were a Pack of Dogs, good for nothing, but over a Bottle of Wine, or a Pot of Beer.

Mr. Lutwych. Repeat the firſt Words again.

Hutchins. He ſaid that he knew he ſhould be hanged, he had nothing to do, but to let the Money fly, to get a good Jury; they were a Pack of Dogs that ſet him to work, good for nothing, but over a Bottle of Wine, or a Pot of Beer.

Serjeant Cheſhire. Who was with you at the time of the ſeizing of theſe Papers?——Hutchins. Mr. Roberts.

Mr. Hungerford. You ſay you took theſe Things at the Printing-houſe?

Hutchins. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Hungerford. In whoſe Name was the Printing-houſe kept?

Hutchins. It was kept by his Mother, or by his Brother.

Mr. Ketelbey. You are ſure that theſe very Papers you deliver'd in, are the ſame numerical Papers you ſeized either in his Lodging-room, or in his Pocket?

Hutchins. Theſe are the very ſame.

Mr. Ketelbey. From the Day that you ſeized them, have they been in your Cuſtody, or do you only depend on the remembering of the Mark?

Hutchins. I depend on the remembering of the Mark.

Mr. Ketelbey. They have not been in your Cuſtody ever ſince?

Hutchins. No, Sir.

Mr. Ketelbey. When did you mark thoſe you found in the Room? at the ſame time you ſeized them?

Hutchins. I mark'd them after I went out of the Room, before I delivered them.

Mr. Ketelbey. Were they in your Cuſtody conſtantly from the time of your firſt ſeizing them, till you mark'd them? Had Nobody an Opportunity of altering them?

Hutchins. Yes, they were.——Nobody, except the other Meſſenger, meddled with them.

Mr. Ketelbey. And can you take upon you to ſay, the other Meſſenger never altered them?

Hutchins. I am ſure he never altered them; for he was never out of my Sight.

Priſoner. I deſire to aſk Mr. Hutchins, whether he took them out of my Pocket or in my Room, or no. I am ſure Mr. Roberts took them, I ſee him. (Here the Priſoner behaved in a Paſſion.)

Lord Chief Juſtice. You ſhall have a fair Trial according to the Laws of England, and as you expect a fair Trial, therefore it is expected that you behave yourſelf as you ought.—Who took them out of his Pocket?

Hutchins. Mr. Roberts.

L. C. J. Where was you?——Hutchins. Standing at the Door.

Att. Gen. Did you ſee them taken out of his Pocket?—Hutchins. Yes.

Att. Gen. Had you them in your Hand?——Hutchins. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. Did you keep them in your Hand?——Hutchins. Yes.

Mr. Hungerford. How far was you from Mr. Roberts when he took them out of his Pocket?

Hutchins. I was at the Door.

Mr. Hungerford. Could you read them at that Diſtance?

Hutchins. No.

Priſoner. You took them on the Ground?

Hutchins. He took them out of your Pocket.—He laid your Coat down, and laid the Papers upon them.

Mr. Hungerford. What Poſture was the Priſoner in, when you and Mr. Roberts came into the Room?

Hutchins. He was in Bed when Roberts came in, and juſt getting out of his Bed when I came in.

Mr. Hungerford. Had you any Candle?

Hutchins. It was Day-light, between Eight and Nine o'Clock in the Morning.

Priſoner. My Lord, I deſire to know how many Papers were found in my Pocket?

Hutchins. Two or three.

Priſoner. I deſire to know if all theſe Papers were taken in this Room?

Hutchins. Some, two or three were found in a Box in another Room? but he ſaid it was his Room and his Box.

Priſoner. Which of thoſe Papers were taken in another Room?

Hutchins. I can't tell.

Mr. Ketelbey. Were all thoſe Papers taken in the Room where he lodged?

Hutchins. Moſt of them where he lay.

Mr. Ketelbey. Where were the reſt taken?

Hutchins. In the Box in another Room.

Att. Gen. Whoſe Room was that?

Hutchins. He ſaid it belonged to him.

(The Papers ſhewn him.)

Mr. Ketelbey. Where were theſe Papers produced?

Hutchins. Moſt of them in his Room.

Att. Gen. Look upon them again, can't you tell which were found in his Pocket, which in the Room where he lodged, and which in the Room adjoining? Have you not marked them?

Hutchins. I can't tell which were taken in the other Room.

Att. Gen. Shew him the two Proof-ſheets. Look upon them, and recollect and tell us, if you can with Certainty, whether theſe were found in his Pocket, in his Lodging-room, or where elſe?

Hutchins. Yes, Sir——Theſe were both taken in his Room.

Attorney General. In his Lodging-room?

Lord Chief Juſtice. Or in the Box in the other Room? I aſk you, do you know certainly where theſe were taken?

Hutchins. I am not ſure whether they were taken in the one Room, or the other.

Mr. Lutwych. What was that Room you call the other Room?

Hutchins. He called that other Room his, and ſaid all that was there was his.

Priſoner. What Room was I taken in?

Hutchins. In your Bed-chamber.

Mr. Hungerford. Is there a diſtinct Door to that other Room where the Box was?

Hutchins. There is a Room, and a diſtinct Door to it.

Mr. Hungerford. Did that Door open into the Room that was his Bed-chamber?

Hutchins. No.—It opened in his Bed-chamber; you go through his Bed-chamber to it.

Priſoner. Was you there when Mr. Roberts came to my Chamber, when I was in Bed?——Hutchins. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Was there no other Opening to the Room where the Box was?——Hutchins. No, Sir.

Lord Chief Juſtice. You ſay it was found in his Pocket; in his Coat-Pocket, or his Breeches-Pocket?

Hutchins. In his Coat-Pocket, My Lord.

Mr. Hungerford Were there one and the ſame Mark to the Papers you found in his Pocket, and the other Papers?

Hutchins. There were the two firſt Letters of my Name to thoſe that were not perfect, and my whole Name to the perfect ones.

Mr. Hungerford. Is there not ſome of the Papers of the ſame Mark?

Hutchins. My Name is at length, not to all.

Mr. Hungerford. To any?——Hutchins. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Hungerford. Then if I take him right, there was the ſame Mark to ſome of the Papers taken out of his Pocket, and that were took out of his Room.

Lord Chief Juſtice. By which Mark do you diſtinguiſh between the Papers?

Hutchins. Some I mark'd with the ſame Mark.

Lord Chief Juſtice. How do you diſtinguiſh?

Hutchins. Becauſe I mark'd thoſe found in his Pocket, 'taken in his Pocket;' thoſe taken in the Room, 'taken in the Room.'

Attorney General. Read the Words you have written.

Hutchins. Taken in Mr. Matthews's Room the 7th July.

Att. Gen. Whoſe Writing is that?——Hutchins. My own.

Att. Gen. Were thoſe taken out of his Pocket, or in his Room?

Hutchins. In his Room.

Att. Gen. Do you diſtinguiſh between the Room he lay in, and the other Room?——Hutchins. No, I can't.

Att. Gen. Look upon thoſe mark'd, 'taken out of his Pocket.'

Hutchins. Taken out of his Pocket?

Att. Gen. Read.

Hutchins. 'This taken out of his Pocket by me and Roberts.'

Att. Gen. Whoſe Hand-writing is that?

Hutchins. My own Name is my own Hand-writing, but the reſt not.

Att. Gen. Are you poſitive that Paper was taken out of his Pocket?

Hutchins. Yes, I am poſitive.

Att. Gen. Keep that diſtinct.

Mr. Ketelbey. You ſay the Name at length is your Hand-writing, but the Words not?——Hutchins. No, Sir.

Mr. Ket. Who wrote them?

Hutchins. The other Meſſenger.

Mr. Ket. How long after?

Hutchins. Two or three Hours.

Priſoner. My Lord, I deſire to know how far he carried them, before they were mark'd.

Hutchins. I carried them to the Cock-Pit.

Mr. Ket. Did the other Meſſenger carry none?

Hutchins. Yes, he carried ſome.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Were they taken out of the Room, before they were mark'd?—Hutchins. Yes, my Lord.

THOMAS ROBERTS.

Attorney General. Mr. Roberts, Was you preſent with Hutchins when any Papers were ſeized?

Roberts. I went into the Room before Hutchins was there. I ſecured his Sword.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Was his Sword in his Room?

Rob. Yes, my Lord. Then I ſecured his Coat, and ſecured his Papers.—Then came in Mr. Hutchins; ſo with that Mr. Hutchins turns round and goes into another Room, and brings two or three Papers, ſeveral Papers he found, ſome in one Place and ſome in another.—Now as he found them, he aſked Mr. Matthews, Are theſe your Papers, do you own them? Yes, ſays he, I do.

Attorney General. Did you put a Mark on the Papers?

Rob. Yes.

Att. Gen. What is the Mark?

Rob. 'The 7th July 1719, taken out of Mr. Matthews's Pocket.'

Att. Gen. Have you put your Name to it?

Rob. Yes, this is my Name.

Att. Gen. When did you put your Mark?

Rob. The 7th July.

Att. Gen. What Time of the Day?

Rob. About Twelve o'Clock.

Att. Gen. How long after they were ſeized?

Rob. About two Hours.

Att. Gen. Where had the Papers been?

Rob. This Paper in Hutchins's Hand, and the reſt in mine.

Att. Gen. Was Hutchins ever out of your Company from the time of taking them till you mark'd?

Rob. He was ſo far out of my Company, he was in one Coach, and I was in another; we had three or four Priſoners; one Coach could not carry us all.

Att. Gen. Can you be poſitive that the Paper you have in your Hand, was taken out of the individual Pocket of the Priſoner?

Rob. Yes, that I can.

Att. Gen. Shew him the reſt of the Papers.—Whoſe Mark is that?

Rob. '7th July, taken out of Mr. Matthews's Pocket.'

Att. Gen. Is that your Hand-writing?

Rob. This is my Hand-writing.

Att. Gen. Where did you put your Hand-writing to it?

Rob. In Downing-Street.

Att. Gen. When?—Rob. About two Hours after we had ſeized them.

Att. Gen. In whoſe Cuſtody had they been?

Rob. In Mr. Hutchins's.

Att. Gen. Are you poſitive that was taken out of his Pocket?

Rob. Yes, Sir, I am.

Att. Gen. Where was he when you took them out of his Pocket?

Rob. He was in Bed.

(The firſt Proof-ſheet ſhewn to him.)

Att. Gen. Look upon that, ſee what is written upon that.

Rob. 'Taken in Mr. Matthews's Room the 7th July, T. R. and J. Hutchins.'

Att. Gen. Do you remember the taking of that?

Rob. Yes, I do.

Att. Gen. Do you remember in what Room?

Rob. I can't remember in what Room, becauſe there were ſeveral Papers.

Att. Gen. In how many Rooms did you find theſe Papers?

Rob. Moſt of them in one Room, ſome under the Bed, in the Bed-chamber where he lodged.

Att. Gen. Was there Papers in any other Room?

Rob. I can't well tell that, becauſe I kept the Door, but ſeveral Papers were taken in the Bed-chamber.

Att. Gen. Are you certain that Paper mark'd was taken in his Bed-chamber Room?

Rob. That I am poſitive of.

(The other Papers ſhewn him.)

Rob. 'Taken the 7th July in Mr. Matthews's Room, T. R. and J. Hutchins.'

Att. Gen. Where did you put the Mark, and when?

Rob. In Downing-Street, at the ſame time.

Att. Gen. Can you be poſitive they were found in his Room?

Rob. Yes, I can.

Mr. Ketelbey. When you ſay his Room, do you mean his Bed-chamber?

Rob. His Bed-chamber.

Mr. Bootle. Look upon the reſt. Read the Marks writ upon them.

Rob. Only John Hutchins, and Thomas Roberts.

Mr. Bootle. Were they taken in the Room?

Rob. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Bootle. Look upon that laſt, look upon the Mark, (Roberts look'd on it) where was that taken?

Rob. All were taken in his Room.

Mr. Bootle. Was that in his Bed-chamber, or the other Room?

Rob. In his Bed-chamber.

Mr. Bootle. What did he ſay when you had ſeized his Papers?

Rob. When Mr. Hutchins had ſeized them, ſays he, Mr. Matthews, are theſe your Papers? Yes, ſays he, I own them to be my Papers.

Mr. Bootle. I aſk you whether the Proof-ſheet was not found in his Bed-chamber?—Rob. Yes, it was.

Att. Gen. You have told us what he ſaid the time the Papers were found, was there any other Converſation between you and him? Did you hear him ſay any thing while he was in your Cuſtody, going to Newgate?

Rob. When we brought him to Newgate?

Lord Chief Juſtice. How long was it after?

Rob. The 9th of September, my Lord.——When we came into his Room, he aſked, Where are you going with me? Are you going to carry me to Newgate? Yes, ſays I.---Is there a Bill found againſt me? I told him Yes, of High-Treaſon. I know, ſays he, I deſerve to be hanged, and that he had nothing in the World to do but to let his Money fly, to get a good Jury.

Att. Gen. Did he ſay any thing more?

Rob. Nothing more as I know of.

Mr. Bootle. Did he not ſpeak of any Perſon that ſet him to Work?

Rob. Nothing, as I remember.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Roberts,---As to thoſe Papers you have produced, where were they writ upon?

Lord Chief Juſtice. That Queſtion hath been aſked, and anſwered ſeveral times.

Mr. Ketelbey. Were they all in your Cuſtody from the time you ſeized them till they were mark'd?——Rob. I gave them to Mr. Hutchins again.

Mr. Ketelbey. The other Man in the other Coach?—Rob. Yes, Sir.

WILLIAM HARPER ſworn.

Attorney General. William Harper, Do you know Mrs. Matthews's Printing-Houſe?—Harper. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. Have you ever work'd there, how, and in what Capacity?

Harper. As an Apprentice,

Att. Gen. Are you now an Apprentice?

Harper. Yes, I was a Turn-over, I have been there two Years and a Half.

Att. Gen. Do you remember about the latter end of May, or the Beginning of June, when you was called up by the Priſoner to work off an Impreſſion?—Harper. Yes, I remember it very well.

Att. Gen. Pray give an Account what he ſaid, and when it was.

Harper. It was in the Morning about four o'Clock.

Att. Gen. In what Month was this?

Harper. The laſt was done on Saturday Morning the 6th Day of June.

Att. Gen. Tell us what he ſaid when he called you up?

Harper. He aſked me to get up, and told me if I did not get up, it would be too late to get it done.

Att. Gen. Do you know what he meant?

Harper. I heard him ſay, he had a Jobb to do.

Att. Gen. How long before?

Harper. I believe about a Day before, I can't remember how long, he ſaid he had a Jobb to do.

Att. Gen.

Att. Gen. When he called you up, what did he ſay?

Harper. He deſired I would get up and help him to work off that Jobb he had to do.

Att. Gen. What did you do?

Harp. I aroſe---he came twice to me, I believe he called twice.

Att. Gen. As ſoon as you got up, whither went you, and what did you do?

Harp. I went directly to the Preſs-room, and helped him and Mr. Vezey to work it off.

Att. Gen. Was the Priſoner there?---Harp. Yes.

Att. Gen. Do you remember the Compoſing the Preſs?

Harp. Yes, I do remember it.

Att. Gen. Was that Libel, (ſhew him one of the Proof-ſheets)----do you remember, was that compoſed----hold it in your Hand----was that compoſed by the Priſoner from the Manuſcript?

Harp. I remember his compoſing Part of it, but not all, becauſe I was not in the Room.

Att. Gen. Are you ſure you ſaw him compoſe Part from the Manuſcript?---Harp. Yes.

Att. Gen. Who had the Manuſcript?

Harp. I laid it before him on the Caſe, and he compoſed the Preſs. I can't ſay as to all of it.

Att. Gen. I aſk you, look upon the Paper, can you be poſitive whether that is the very Paper he compoſed from the Manuſcript?

Harp. I believe it is.

Att. Gen. Why?

Harp. Becauſe it was done after the ſame Manner as this is, and nothing was done in the Houſe at that Time of ſuch a Volume.

Att. Gen. Look upon the Paper. Is that right or wrong impoſed?

Harp. This is wrong impoſed.

Att. Gen. Do you remember any thing of this being wrong impoſed?

Harp. I remember he came up and ſaid, I have wrong tranſpoſed the Page, and muſt alter it.

Att. Gen. And was this after the Proof-ſheets of one of them was wrought off?

Harp. It was after one was wrought off.

Att. Gen. Then afterwards did he impoſe a ſecond right?

Harp. Yes, Sir, he did.

Att. Gen. Look upon that which is right impoſed, which is in your Hand. Was that the Paper impoſed afterwards right?

Harp. I can't ſay, this is the very next Paper that was pulled off. I do verily believe this Paper was pulled off at the ſame time.

Att. Gen. Is that right impoſed, or wrong impoſed, the ſecond Paper?

Harp. This is right impoſed.

Att. Gen. Do you remember after he ſaid he had wrong impoſed one, that there was another right impoſed afterwards?

Harp. I can't remember the Words.

Att. Gen. I don't aſk the Words.——Do you remember another that was right impoſed?

Harp. I know there was.

Att. Gen. By whom?---Harp. By him.

Att. Gen. Look upon thoſe two Papers in your Hand (other Papers given to him), whether are they Proof-ſheets?

Harp. Yes, they are in the way of Printing what we call Proof-ſheets.

Att. Gen. Why, what are the Marks?

Harp. You ſee wrong Letters, and here that mark'd out, and that mark'd in, in the Margin.

Att. Gen. Are thoſe the uſual Corrections?

Harp. As far as I have ſeen.

Att. Gen. Look upon one of thoſe Papers, and ſee if you can find the Interlineation of any Word?

Mr. Bootle. In written Hand----look upon it. Do you ſee it----what Word is it?---Harp. The Word fit.

Mr. Bootle. Do you know whoſe Hand that is?

Harp. Truly I can't ſwear to the Hand.

Mr. Bootle. Have you ſeen the Priſoner write?

Harp. Some ſmall Matter, but not much.

Mr. Bootle. Can you tell, or do you believe it to be his Hand-writing?

Harp. I can't ſwear it.

Mr. Bootle. Is it like his Hand-writing?---Harp. It is ſomething like it.

Mr. Bootle. I aſk you now as to the Types and Letters, do you know the Types and Letters belong to your Miſtreſs's Printing-houſe?

Harp. Nobody can tell that.

Mr. Luwych. You ſay, you ſaw him compoſe, what Letters did he compoſe with?---Harp. Mrs. Matthews's.

Mr. Bootle. Thoſe Letters he compoſed with at that Time, what Reſemblance do they bear, compared with thoſe Letters in your Hand?

Harp. I can't tell.

Mr. Bootle. Don't you remember the Letters he compoſed with at that Time?

Harp. Yes, Sir, the ſame Letter as this.

Att. Gen. I aſk you as to that, whether the Letters that were compoſed with, when the Preſs was ſet, was the ſame Letter with that Impreſſion in your Hand?---Harp. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. When he called you up, and ſet you to Work, whether did he aſſiſt you himſelf, or did any Body elſe?

Harp. He took them off of the Preſs.

Att. Gen. How many were preſent?---Harp. I don't remember any but us.

Att. Gen. Name who.---Harp. We Perſons that were up.

Att. Gen. Who were thoſe?

Harp. Mr. John Matthews, Mr. Vezey and I---

Att. Gen. How many were printed off?---Harp. Nigh a Thouſand.

Att. Gen. Of the whole?

Harp. A Thouſand of each of the two Half-ſheets.

Att. Gen. After you had wrought off ſo many, about what Time had you finiſhed?——Harp. I can't tell exactly.

Att. Gen. You need not be exact.

Harp. Between eight and nine a'Clock, as I take it.

Att. Gen. What became of them?---Harper. He ſent them away, but whither I can't tell.

Att. Gen. How do you know that?

Harp. Becauſe he came and bundled them up, and ſaid one ſtaid for them below.

Att. Gen. Was there any Money paid?

Harp. I can't ſay any thing to that.

Att. Gen. Look upon thoſe two Proof-ſheets you have in your Hand, and I aſk you whether you can be poſitive, or to the beſt of your Belief, thoſe were the very Papers that were printed off at that Time?

Harp. To the beſt of my Belief they were.

Mr. Lutwych. Was there any other Paper printed in Quarto?

Harp. No.

Mr. Reeves. (Afterwards Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas) Did you ever know printed at that Printing-preſs, any Paper that bears this Title afterwards?---Harp. No.

Mr. Reeves. At the Time of the compoſing, or at any time while the Impreſſion was working off, did you read any Part of it?

Harper. I read the Title.

Mr. Reeves. Is that the Title?---Harp. Yes, this is the Title.

Mr. Bootle. After the firſt Proof-ſheet that was impoſed wrong, did any body elſe appear there to rectify the Miſtake beſides himſelf?

Harp. Not as I ſee.

Mr. Bootle. You was aſked the Queſtion of the Word fit, do you know of any body there to make that Correction beſides himſelf?---Harp. No.

Mr. Hungerford. In whoſe Name is this Houſe carried on?

Harp. In the Name of Mrs. Mary Matthews.

Mr. Hungerf. What is the Priſoner at the Bar, Maſter or Apprentice?

Harp. I don't know, he always carried himſelf as Maſter.

Mr. Hungerford. You ſay you ſaw the Writing before they compoſed it; pray, Sir, do you know whoſe Hand-writing it was?

Harp. No, Sir.

Mr. Hungerf. Do you take it to be the Priſoner's?--Harp. No, I do not.

Mr. Ketelbey. Have you not in your Trade one particular Perſon called the Preſs-man?---Harp. Yes, ſeveral.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who were they?

Harp. One Mr. Vezey, another Mr. Wiggens.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who were the Compoſers?

Harp. There were ſeveral in the Houſe.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who were they?

Harp. There was Mr. Wiggens, Mr. Staples, and ſeveral others.

Mr. Ketelbey. What is their Work?

Harp. They compoſed and made ready for the Preſs.

Mr. Ketelbey. That Room that is adjoining to the Priſoner's Room, who lay in that Room?---Harper. I lay in it.

Mr. Ketelbey. How many Doors are there to the Room?--Harp. But one.

Ketelbey. Doth it go through out of his Room?---Harp. Yes.

Att. Gen. The Room that adjoins to the Room wherein the Priſoner lay, had you any Papers there?

Harp. I had one that was found in my Pocket.

Att. Gen. Was that all?---Harp. Yes.

Att. Gen. Was there any the Priſoner had there?

Harp. I can't be poſitive.

Att. Gen. Had you any more than that one in your Pocket that belonged to you?---Harp. No, Sir.

LAWRENCE VEZEY, ſworn.

Att. Gen. Have you at any Time belonged to Mrs. Matthews's Printing-houſe?---Vezey. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. Where is it?

Vezey. In Little Britain, in Pelican Court.

Att. Gen. Do you remember whether, about June laſt, you was ſent for, or called upon, by the Priſoner to come to work?

Vezey. No, I was not called for to come to work; but on Wedneſday the third Day of June laſt, I went to work, as uſual, in the Morning, between four and five o'Clock. When I came into the Court, the Apprentice lies backward, I called out, William! The Apprentice opened his Window up Two-pair-of-Stairs; ſays he, Old Gentleman, the Door is open. I went up into the Preſs-room. Mr. John Matthews came up; ſays he, Old Gentleman, I have a Jobb for you to do. Says I, Is the Work in haſte? Yes, it muſt be done ſoon. Then came up William Harper; I aſked him what it was. Says he, I don't know, he hath got a Jobb to do. About Nine o'Clock I went to Market, when my Companion went to Breakfaſt; in the mean time, there was a Form compoſed in Quarto, called Vox Populi Vox Dei, I can't ſay who compoſed it; then John Matthews was gone out of the Room. When I came back from Market, and my Companion had breakfaſted, I went to work again, as uſual; and Mr. John Matthews came up, and ſaid, Damn it, I have tranſpoſed the Pages; I ſaw no Proof-ſheet; but he takes out the Form, and lays it on the Preſs, and puts it into Order.

Att. Gen. What do you call that, Impoſing it right?

Vezey. Yes, Impoſing it right.

Att. Gen. Did you ſee what it was?

Vezey. Yes, it was the Quarto, Vox Populi, I remember it very well, I laid it on, and he pulled it away himſelf.

Att. Gen. This was before the Impreſſion was wrought off?

Vezey. Yes, Sir, after it was right impoſed, he pulled off a Proof, and took it all away together.

Att. Gen. What did he pull away, a Proof that was right impoſed?

Vezey. Yes.

L. C. J. Was that of the Libel?

Vezey. Yes, my Lord, he had got it off the Preſs, and corrected it.

Att. Gen. What, the Form of the Quarto, of Vox Populi?

Vezey. Yes. So having made it ready a Morning or two afterwards, Harper and I went to work, and worked off the Impreſſion, and the Priſoner took it off.

Att. Gen. Do you remember how many were wrought off?

Vezey. A Thouſand, a Ream.

Att. Gen. A Thouſand of what?

Vezey. A Thouſand of the firſt Half-ſheet, and of the ſecond.

Att. Gen. Did he give you any Money for this?

Vezey. After the Jobb was done, I had fourteen Shillings for William Harper's Share and mine.

Att. Gen. The Apprentice, had he any Money?

Vezey. Yes, he had as much as I; I had let Harper have the Money before, ſo I ſtopt it.

Attorney General. Now ſhew him the Libel;—what came of the Libel after the Impreſſion was wrought off?

Vezey. He came up, and brought a great Hair-bag, and carried them away.

Att. Gen. Shew him the Proof-ſheets: pray look upon them two, and tell us whether they are Proof-ſheets?

Vezey. Yes, they are marked as Proof-ſheets.

Att. Gen. Upon the Marks and View of the Paper, do you believe them Proof-ſheets?—Vezey. Yes, I do.

Att. Gen. Do you remember the Letter?

Vezey. I remember ſuch a Sort of a Letter, to the beſt of my Knowledge; I believe we had no other thing done in the Houſe of the ſame kind before, or ſince.

Att. Gen. Look on thoſe two Papers; is any thing wrong impoſed?

Vezey. Yes, my Lord, this is wrong impoſed.

Att. Gen. Do you know the Hand-writing of the Priſoner?—Vezey. No.

Att. Gen. But you ſee him correct it?—Vezey. Yes.

Att. Gen. Do you remember, or can you by inſpecting theſe Papers, recollect any of the Corrections he made?—Vezey. No, I can't.

Att. Gen. Did you look on the Paper that time it was worked off?

Vezey. Yes, I did, becauſe the Title ſtood next to me; I took notice of Vox Populi, that is all; I never read the Paper.

Att. Gen. Do you believe thoſe to be Proof-ſheets of that Libel?

Vezey. Yes, my Lord, I believe them to be two Proof-ſheets.

Att. Gen. Do you believe That a Paper wrought from the Impreſſion?

Vezey. Yes, my Lord, I believe That to be one of them.

Att. Gen. Shew him another.—Vezey. Yes, I believe them to be ſome of the ſame Papers, to the beſt of my Knowledge.

Mr. Ketelbey. You ſay you believe theſe Papers ſhewn you, to be the Papers wrought off from that Impreſſion?—Vezey. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Ketelbey. Have you any Reaſon for your Belief, only as you ſee the Title?—Vezey. Yes, I have Reaſon to believe it, becauſe no Quarto or any thing was done of the ſame Form.

Mr. Ketelbey. Upon your Oath, was that the Title Vox Populi Vox Dei?

Vezey. That was the only Time I ſee it, it was Latin, I did not underſtand it.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you look upon the whole Title-page?

Vezey. I remember nothing but Vox Populi Vox Dei.

Mr. Ketelbey. Was there any more beſide?

Vezey. Yes, there was the Head in Latin, and the Flower over it.

Att. Gen. Do you believe that very Paper to be one wrought off at that time?

Vezey. Yes, I do; and here is the Latin, I only read Vox Populi Vox Dei.

Mr. Reeves. I think you ſay there is a Flower, look upon that Flower, and ſee whether it be a Flower of the ſame kind?

Vezey. I believe it was like this Flower.

Mr. Ketelbey. Now you have the Paper in your Hand, pray read the other Line next to you if you can.—Vezey. From the Solemnity of the——

Mr. Ketelbey. The Line above it.

Vezey. Ex ore tuo te judico.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you remember any Part of the Title of the Book but Vox Populi Vox Dei?—Vezey. No, my Lord.

Mr. Ketelbey. Had you any Diſcourſe with Mr. George Matthews about this Matter, your giving Evidence on this Occaſion?

Vezey. No, my Lord, I never ſee Mr. George Matthews ſince the Priſoner hath been in Cuſtody; I was brought up lately from St. Albans.

Mr. Hungerford. Are you in Cuſtody now?

Vezey. Yes, my Lord.

JOHN DARBY and JAMES ROBERTS, ſworn.

Att. Gen. My Lord, theſe are Maſter-Printers; and we call theſe Gentlemen in Confirmation of the Evidence which hath been given; they will account for the Proof-ſheets, that unleſs it be upon Proof-ſheets no ſuch Marks appear.

JOHN DARBY.

[The Sheets ſhewn him.]

Att. Gen. Sir, you are a Printer, and much verſed in Printing, do you know what theſe are?—Mr. Darby. What they are, as how?

Att. Gen. In the way of Printing, are they Proof-ſheets?

Darby. This may be taken either as a Proof-ſheet, or a reviſed Sheet; a Proof-ſheet is that which is firſt pulled after the Form is compoſed, and which is read by a Corrector; and what Faults are made by the Compoſer are marked on the Side, and this appears to be of that Nature.

Att. Gen. What is a reviſed Sheet?

Darby. A reviſed Sheet is after a Proof is corrected, another Sheet is pulled and compared with that we call the Proof, to ſee whether the Faults are corrected; if not, they are marked a ſecond Time.

Att. Gen. But it is either a Proof-ſheet or reviſed Sheet?

Darby. Yes, it certainly is one or t'other.

Att. Gen. Your Reaſon?

Darby. Becauſe there are ſeveral Marks on the Side.

Att. Gen. Is that according to the Cuſtom?—Darby. Yes.

Att. Gen. Look upon them, are they both right impoſed; how are they in that reſpect? Look upon the firſt, are they both the ſame?

Darby. No, Sir, I think not; this former doth not ſeem to be rightly impoſed; for here the firſt Page is out of its proper Place, that is for certain.

Lord Chief Juſtice. That is what you called wrong impoſed?

Darby. Wrong impoſed, my Lord.

Att. Gen. Look on the other.

Darby. This ſeems to be right impoſed.

Att. Gen. Are they impoſed alike?—Darby. Certainly not.

Att. Gen. I aſk you as to both theſe, I don't confine the Queſtion to one only, whether they are Proof or reviſed Sheets?

Darby. I take them to be one or t'other, by their not appearing to me to be both Proof-ſheets; by the one being wholly impoſed wrong, and the other afterwards tranſpoſed and made right.

Att. Gen. In the Courſe of Printing, whether is it not uſual, where the Impreſſion is more than half a Sheet, that there may be a Superfluity of Sheets of one more than the other?

Darby. It is very common, if a Book conſiſts of ſeveral Sheets; it is almoſt impoſſible the Number ſhould be exactly even, ſometimes it may happen.

Mr. Reeves. Look on the Corrections made on thoſe Proof-ſheets; give an Account if they are made in the uſual Manner.

Darby. So far as I have obſerved, the Corrections are the ſame, they are made in the common way of correcting.

Att. Gen. Sir, you are aſked whether the Corrections are in the uſual Manner of correcting Proof-ſheets?

Darby. They are, they are not all, a Colon is marked in one, and not in another, but a Comma; that is not material, and where it is as inſtead of in, that is a plain Miſtake, but they are generally marked in both as they ought to be.

JAMES ROBERTS, ſworn.

Att. Gen. Mr. Roberts, are you a Maſter-Printer?

Mr. Roberts. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. Look upon theſe and tell us, in your Judgment, in the way of Printing, what theſe are; Proof-ſheets or reviſed Sheets?

Roberts. They may be either Proof-ſheets or reviſed Sheets; they are Sheets corrected after the Form is compoſed, but whether firſt or ſecond, one or t'other, I can't ſay, becauſe the Faults are marked in the Side; and that is always done, it is the uſual way.

Att. Gen. Look upon the Impoſing of thoſe two Papers.

Roberts. This is wrong impoſed, this Side-page ought to be here.

Att. Gen. Look upon the other.—Roberts. This is right impoſed.

Att. Gen. You ſpeak as to both of them; by the Manner of their Correction, both of them to be Proof-ſheets or reviſed Sheets?

Roberts. Moſt certainly they are one or t'other.

Att. Gen. I think now, my Lord, we are intitled to read the Libel; put in That that was found in his Pocket, if you pleaſe.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, the Act of Parliament is, If any ſhall declare, affirm and maintain, by Writing or Printing, &c. that is the Offence pretended to be made out by this Indictment. Now I moſt humbly ſubmit to your Lordſhip, whether any Part of this Evidence comes up to make out this Fact?

L. C. J. The Queſtion now is, whether the Libel is to be read? Have you any Objection to it?

Mr. Hungerford. Surely, my Lord; unleſs it be a Proof by way of Evidence, that makes out this Offence charged in the Indictment, it is not proper.

Mr. Ketelbey. They may perhaps give Evidence, what they call a co-operating Evidence.

L. C. J. Read that found in his Pocket.

Clerk. Ex ore tuo te judico. Vox Populi Vox Dei. To all true Lovers of Liberty, Vox Populi Vox Dei. From the Solemnity of the Chevalier's Birth, the moral Impoſſibility of putting an Impoſtor on the Nation after the Manner pretended, and the Diſappointment in the Attempt of proving him ſo, I think it is Demonſtration, if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he hath that to plead in his Favour; and all Aſſertors of limited Monarchy muſt allow, that ought to be preferred, if the Perſon having it is endowed with other Qualities fit to govern; and the great Opinion all Courts have of this unfortunate Prince's Virtues, ſhews he only wants to be known by us, to be admired; and we only want the Enjoyment of him, to make us happy. I will conclude with theſe Remarks: firſt, That every Aſſertor of Hereditary Right muſt be a Jacobite; ſecondly, That every Whig who makes Vox Populi his Rule of Government, muſt be ſo; and, thirdly, Every Aſſertor of limited Monarchy muſt be ſo: the Chevalier being endowed with all princely Virtues, ſo that all Rights concur in him.

Mr. Hungerford. Read on.

Clerk. I hope ſome Patriot will rouſe up the People to ſhake off this arbitrary Government, and animate them with the Saying of the noble Roman, who defended the Capitol,

Livy: quouſque tandem, &c.

How long will you be ignorant of your Strength? Count your Numbers: ſure you ought to fight with more Reſolution for Liberty than your Oppreſſors do for Dominion.

Count your Numbers *.

Att. Gen. My Lord, I did not oppoſe the Gentlemen reading this Part of the Libel, but ſince they have made it a Part of the Evidence, it is my Duty to obſerve what the Spirit of this Patriot was; it is a direct Alarm to the People to rouſe up, and throw off this arbitrary Government; the Malice plainly appears in this latter Part of the Libel; I hope ſome Patriot will rouſe up the People to ſhake off this arbitrary Government, and animate them with the Saying of the noble Roman, who defended the Capitol, How long will you be ignorant of your Strength? Count your Numbers: ſure you ought to fight with more Reſolution for Liberty than your Oppreſſors do for Dominion——Count your Numbers.——A more dangerous Attempt to alarm and rouſe up the People againſt the Government, can't well be.

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Attorney is going on with a Clauſe that is not in the Indictment; he is well acquainted with the Nature of Proceedings, and that it is not regular.

Att. Gen. I don't mention them as Words ſet forth in the Indictment; but ſure I may make uſe of another Part of the Libel to explain this.

Mr. Reeves. We humbly apprehend, it is neceſſary for us to produce not only theſe Papers taken in his Pocket, but theſe Proof-ſheets taken at the ſame time.

Att. Gen. The other is the eight or ten ſuperfluous Sheets, Part of the Libel as proved by the firſt Witneſs; there are eight or ten Half-

* Count your Numbers!—Thank God, the Number of Jacobites were at that time but ſmall; but now, we have SO GLORIOUS A KING on the Throne, (one of the moſt juſtly admired, and beſt beloved Princes, that ever adorned one) whoſe chiefeſt Happineſs is to reign in the Hearts of his People, there is ſcarce ſuch a thing as a Jacobite to be found.

ſheets which were found in his Poſſeſſion, I inſiſt upon that as a Circumſtance, to ſhew that he is the Printer of this Libel.

Serjeant Cheſhire. Mr. Darby told your Lordſhip how it could be accounted for.

Attorney General. I deſire the Jury may have a View of them.

(They were all accordingly given to the Jury, and being taken back again,)

Att. Gen. The Jury ſhall have them again by and bye.

Mr. DELAFAY ſworn.

Att. Gen. Sir, pray look upon thoſe Papers.——Have you looked upon theſe printed Papers?

Mr. Delafay. I have, Sir.

Att. Gen. Was you ever preſent, and where, when the Priſoner was examined touching theſe Papers? If you was, what paſſed?

Dela. He was examined before Mr. Buckley and me, at the Secretary's Office.

Att. Gen. Touching what?

Dela. Touching theſe Papers.——The firſt Queſtion I aſked him, whether he owned them?——He did own them; the Examination was taken in Writing, and ſigned by us both. I deſire it may be read.

Att. Gen. Were the Papers there, had he them before him at the Time of that or any other Examination?

Dela. They were before him on the Table at that Time.

Att. Gen. Had he the Sight and Peruſal of them at that Time?

Dela. He owned them to be taken from him.

Att. Gen. Did he ſay any thing relating to theſe Papers, how he came by them; whether did he deny before you that they were printed by him?

Dela. I can't juſtly remember, I deſire the Examination may be read.—I remember in general he was very ſhy of owning any Thing; this Paper contains what he ſaid.

Att. Gen. That Paper can't be made uſe of.

Serj. Cheſhire. Did you enquire concerning the Author of theſe Papers?

Dela. I can't remember I did.

Att. Gen. Was you preſent at any Examination at any other Place?

Dela. He appeared afterwards before my Lords Juſtices, and was examined.——He was told, that he was charged, with two other Perſons then named, (I don't remember their Names) with printing ſuch a Paper; he anſwered, So it ſeems.——He was aſked, how came you to buſy yourſelf concerning it? My Lords, ſays he, it was Neceſſity; his Brother did not give him his Allowance.——He was aſked about the Author.——That he refuſed to tell. Some Time after that he writ a Letter to me, deſiring to be brought before the Lords Juſtices again, intimating ſome Diſcoveries; then he told them a Story that a Gentleman from the Secretary's Office had told him, if he could procure himſelf to be brought before the Lords Juſtices, the Secretaries would be kind to him.——By the whole of his Diſcourſe, it was taken for granted he printed it, but he would not diſcover the Author.

Serj. Cheſhire. Repeat then his Words before my Lords Juſtices.

Dela. He ſaid that his Brother had promiſed to make him an Allowance, and did not; Neceſſity, Want of Money, made him do this.

Serj. Cheſhire. I think you ſay he was charged with printing the Libel? The Anſwer he gave was, So it ſeems. Upon this there was a farther Queſtion, How came you to do a Thing of this Nature? He did not directly ſay, I did not do it, but he excuſed himſelf upon not having received Money from his Friends, intimating that it was Neceſſity put him upon it.

Att. Gen. Is that the Letter you received from him?

Dela. Yes.——I will tell you how I came to know I received it from him. He did not diſown it.

Att. Gen. Was it read to him as his Letter?——Dela. Yes.

Att. Gen. Did he deny it?——Dela. No.

Att. Gen. Did you enter into any Expoſtulation about it?

Dela. I told him, when you writ this Letter you was of another Mind. Truly, he ſaid, he did not know the Author, and he could not diſcover him.

Mr. Beotle. Did he deſcribe any Perſon that came to him?

Dela. He ſaid, a Perſon in a Tye-wig came to him, he apprehended him to come from the Secretary's Office.

Att. Gen. A Letter directed to an Under-Secretary of State relating to Mr. Matthews, deſiring to be brought up before the Lords Juſtices; when there, he is aſked about the Letter; he ſays he did write it, hoping he ſhould find Favour from the Secretaries.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Pray give an Account when the Letter was read to him, what Anſwer he made. Did he acknowledge That to be his Letter?

Dela. I can't directly ſay he did; but I told him, When you writ that Letter, you ſeemed to be of another Mind. He was aſked what was the Occaſion of his telling us of making Diſcoveries; this is trifling with us; when you writ that Letter, you ſeemed of another Mind.

Lord Chief Juſtice. What did he ſay to that?

Dela. He ſaid, I can't diſcover the Author.

Mr. Hungerford. Now, in your Lordſhips Judgment, whether any thing mentioned proves that Letter to be his?——Pray, Sir, repeat what you ſaid.

Dela. When he was brought before the Lords Juſtices, on my receiving that Letter, when he was brought in, he was told, he had written a Letter to me.

Mr. Hungerford. What did he ſay to that?

Dela. He told them a Perſon whom he apprehended came from the Secretary's Office, a Gentleman in a Tye-wig, had been with him, and told him, if he could procure himſelf to be brought to the Lords Juſtices, on his Submiſſion the Secretaries would be kind to him.

Att. Gen. My Lord, here is a Letter ſent in the Name of this Man, deſiring to be brought up, and he is brought up; the Letter is read to him, he is aſked the Occaſion of his ſending it, and he gives an Anſwer; tells you, that which he ſays was the Occaſion, a Gentleman, that he apprehended came from the Secretary's Office, and told him, if he could procure himſelf to be brought up to the Lords Juſtices, the Secretaries would be kind to him. Theſe are his Words; is it neceſſary a Man in direct Terms ſhould confeſs, It is my Hand-writing? But theſe are probable ſtrong Circumſtances of his acknowledging it, I think.

Mr. BUCKLEY ſworn.

Attorney General. Sir, Was you preſent when this young Man was examined? or had you any Diſcourſe about this Libel?

Mr. Buckley. I deſire to ſee the Examination. I find on the 7th of July, the Meſſenger that brought in the Papers laid them down; ſays he, Theſe were found in his Pocket, and theſe in his Room; he laid them down on Mr. Delafay's Table; I aſked him if the Papers were taken in his Poſſeſſion? he ſaid they were: he was alſo aſked how he came by them.

Att. Gen. Did he ſay any thing in direct Anſwer or Excuſe?

Buckley. No.—I told him, you are charged with being concerned in printing theſe Papers, which is a great Crime.—He made no Anſwer, but took Snuff.

Att. Gen. Do you know any thing more fell from the Mouth of the Priſoner touching theſe Libels?

Buckley. No, my Lord.

Mr. Hungerford. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel in this Caſe with the Priſoner at the Bar, who (as the Counſel for the King obſerve) is a Boy, a Youth, and an Apprentice; I thank them for that Obſervation; that is an Age which is uſually exempt from Malice and Deſign, and without proving both being in the Priſoner at the Bar, he muſt be acquitted of the Offence in the Indictment. Malice and Deſign are commonly the Temper of advanced Years, and not of Apprentice Boys. The Accuſation againſt the Priſoner is founded on an Act of Parliament, made in the 4th Year of the late Queen, and re-enacted on the Union in the 6th Year of her Reign; the Crime made High-Treaſon by that Act of Parliament, ſo far as I remember, (for it being dark I cannot read) is, that if any Perſon or Perſons ſhall maliciouſly, adviſedly, and directly, by Writing or Printing, maintain and affirm, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen that now is, is not the lawful and rightful Queen of theſe Realms, or that the pretended Prince of Wales, who now ſtiles himſelf King of Great Britain, hath any Right or Title to the Crown of theſe Realms; or that any other Perſon or Perſons hath or have any Right or Title to the ſame, otherwiſe than according to an Act of Parliament of the firſt of King William and Queen Mary, and an Act of the twelfth of King William, every ſuch Perſon or Perſons ſhall be guilty of High-Treaſon.

This is the Crime the Act of Parliament makes to be High-Treaſon; the Evidence to ſupport this Indictment, and that lays this Offence to the Priſoner's Charge, are ſix Witneſſes, two Meſſengers, the Apprentice, the Journeyman, and two Gentlemen of the Secretary's Office, Mr. Delafay, and Mr. Buckley.

I ſhall, my Lord, on the behalf of the Priſoner at the Bar, humbly offer to your Lordſhip, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, ſome general, and likewiſe ſome particular Conſiderations, which I hope will plainly ſhew him, the Priſoner, to be an innocent Man, and that there is no juſt Ground for the heavy Charge he now lies under. In the general, my Lord, as to the Act of Parliament upon which this Indictment is founded, I humbly offer it to your Lordſhip's Conſideration, whether it was calculated for ſuch a Caſe as the Priſoner's is ſuppoſed to be.

The Words of the Act which deſcribe the Offence are—I juſt now repeated them; and the next Paragraph in the Act gives Direction for proclaiming the next in Succeſſion of the Houſe of Hanover, immediately upon the Queen's Death; and it makes it High-Treaſon in the Privy Councillors and others who ſhould neglect their Duty in that Matter; and we all know that the Matter under the Conſideration of the Parliament at that Time was, that ſince upon the Queen's Death, the next Succeſſor was like to be beyond Sea, to ſecure that the Proteſtant Succeſſion ſhould take place (as now, God be praiſed, to all our Comforts, it hath), for this Reaſon it is, that upon the Queen's Deeath a Regency is appointed, the proclaiming the Proteſtant Succeſſion ſecured by a Law which makes it Treaſon in all Perſons of all Degrees who neglect doing it; for this Reaſon likewiſe, I humbly preſume it is, that denying the Title of any of the Succeſſors in the Proteſtant Line, is not made Treaſon as denying the Queen's is; for can any Man think why otherwiſe denying his preſent Majeſty's Title to the Crown when he is in Poſſeſſion, ſhould be a leſs Offence than denying the Queen's, when ſhe was alive? The only Reaſon which occurs to me for this Difference is (I ſpeak it with all Submiſſion), that the Parliament did look upon it, that when the Proteſtant Succeſſion had taken place, that Act had attained its End, and was in effect to determine; for ſurely as to the Nature of the Thing, he who oppugns his preſent moſt gracious Majeſty's Title, is as great a Criminal as he who ſhould oppugn the Queen's, or the Title of former Kings or Queens of this Realm, and yet ſuch oppugning or denying the King's Title to the Crown is not (as I think it at leaſt) made Treaſon by this Act. But ſuppoſing (though not admitting) that the Act of Parliament was intended to operate upon ſuch a Caſe as the Priſoner's is ſuppoſed to be, yet the Witneſſes do not prove that the Priſoner did maliciouſly, adviſedly, and directly, by Writing or Printing, affirm or maintain, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen is not the lawful and rightful Queen of theſe Realms, or that the pretended Prince of Wales hath any Right or Title to the Crown of theſe Realms. And yet further, if it ſhould be ſuppoſed that the Priſoner did affirm and maintain the Words in the Indictment, yet with humble Submiſſion the Words don't amount to an Affirmation that the Pretender hath any Right or Title to the Crown of this Realm, which is the Offence he is charged with.——The Criminal deſcribed by this Act muſt maliciouſly, adviſedly, and directly, maintain and affirm; what he doth muſt be malicious: ſurely his Youth, and the Inoffenſiveneſs of his Carriage, and Courſe of his Life hitherto, will make the Imputation of Malice groundleſs; beſides, there is no Malice proved. The Word adviſedly, which muſt likewiſe be an Ingredient in this Offence, is mentioned in Oppoſition to a raſh and inconſiderate Act; and in this Caſe the Proof is ſo far from charging the Priſoner with having done it adviſedly, that he doth not appear ſo much as to have read it. And it is not pretended that he was the Author, Contriver, or Publiſher of it. The Word directly, is likewiſe inſerted in the Act, in Oppoſition to

Innuendos

Innuendoes or forced Conſtructions.—As to the Evidence, the two firſt Witneſſes, they manifeſtly contradict one another. Each of them contend for the Honour of picking the Boy's Pocket.——Hutchins ſwears he took the Papers out of the Priſoner's Pocket; and Roberts, that he took them out of his Pocket, and Hutchins only peeped in at the Door. And as to the Papers found in the Room next to the Bed-chamber, it doth not appear who put them there; and ſince every probable thing is to be preſumed in favour of a Man's Life, the Meſſenger may be as well preſumed to put them there as the Priſoner. And it muſt be remarked too, that the Papers ſworn to be taken out of his Pocket, are not taken upon the Priſoner's Perſon, but ſaid to be found in his Coat Pocket lying in the Room; and it is no neceſſary Inference that the Priſoner did put them there, ſome other Perſon may have done that. As to what one of theſe two Witneſſes (the Meſſengers) ſwears, about a Diſcourſe betwixt the Priſoner and him in the Coach, as he brought him to Newgate, relating to the Priſoner's getting to be acquitted, by Bribing the Jury; it is ſo improbable, that I can hardly think any one can believe it; that Evidence ſeems rather to be calculated to inflame the preſent Jury than to relate a Truth; but the preſent Jury are too wiſe to be impoſed upon, eſpecially in the Caſe of a Man's Life; upon the whole, theſe two Witneſſes have contradicted each other upon their Oaths, and little or no Credit is to be given to them.

The next Witneſſes are Harper the Apprentice, and Vezey the Journeyman, and by the Notes I have taken of their Evidence, it doth not amount to make out a criminal Charge upon the Priſoner. The Priſoner is not thereby made the Author, Contriver, Printer, or Publiſher, of this Libel. One of the Witneſſes indeed ſays, that he was called up to aſſiſt the Priſoner to do a Jobb, and that the Priſoner did overlook ſome of the Proof-ſheets; but it doth not appear that he over-looked all the Proof-ſheets, or that the Sheets he did look over, were thoſe ſuppoſed to be criminal.

We are, my Lord, in the Caſe of a new Law, upon which none hath been yet tried, I think none accuſed, till the unfortunate young Man at the Bar; and we hope we are intituled to a favourable Conſtruction of any inadvertent Thing the Priſoner may have done; ſurely to co-operate in ſome little Part of Printing a Side or Part of this Libel, cannot be Treaſon. Printing itſelf is but a Mechanical Art, and one may print a whole Volume, and not know one Jot of the Contents, Drift, or Tendency of the Book; and in the preſent Caſe, the Priſoner is not the Maſter Printer; he is but an Apprentice, and the Trade is carried on by his Mother, and elder Brother. And I hope it will always, in an Engliſh Judicature, be deemed a ſevere Conſtruction of a Law, that a Man ſhould be judged guilty of a capital Offence, for a Fact in committing of which he did not know that he ſinned or offended againſt his own Life.——As to what the Gentlemen, Mr. Delafay and Mr. Buckley, ſay, they ſay nothing which can affect the Priſoner; they could not prove the Letter for which they were called, tho' Mr. Attorney ſeemed to preſs them hard upon that Head; what Mr. Delafay ſays makes for the Priſoner. He ſays, the Priſoner told him, that what he had done was done out of Want and Neceſſity; how then can it be ſaid to be done maliciouſly, adviſedly, and directly? without which it cannot be the Offence contended for. And now, my Lord, having remarked upon the Evidence, all that my Memory or Notes could enable me, I humbly crave leave to inſiſt, that the Words laid in the Indictment do not amount to any affirming, or maintaining, that the Pretender hath any Right or Title to the Crown of this Realm. I neither have, nor ever had, this ſilly as well as wicked Libel; and I have therefore taken the Words as they are laid in the Indictment, omitting the Innuendoes only, and I have compared them with the Book, when read by the King's Counſel, in the Courſe of their Evidence; and they are theſe: From the Solemnity of the Chevalier's Birth, the moral Impoſſibility of putting an Impoſtor on the Nation, after the manner pretended, and the Diſappointment in the Attempt of proving him ſo; I think it is Demonſtration, if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he hath that to plead in his favour. Is there in that Paragraph any affirming, and maintaining, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of theſe Realms? The Words are, if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he hath that to plead in his favour; the Sentence begins with an if, and is no Affirmation at all, and but a looſe way of talking, as we call it, with ifs and ands; it can never amount to an Affirmation that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of theſe Realms.—The Libel goes on and ſays, that all Aſſertors of limited Monarchy muſt allow that ought to be preferred, if the Perſon having it is endowed with other Qualities fit to govern; and the great Opinion all Courts have of this unfortunate Prince's Virtues, ſhews he only wants to be known by us to be admired, and that we only want the Enjoyment of him to make us happy. Surely, my Lord, this Part of the Libel, tho' aſſiſted with ſeveral unnatural Innuendoes, neither affirms, nor maintains any thing at all.

The other Words are theſe: I will conclude with theſe Remarks. Firſt, That every Aſſertor of Hereditary Right muſt be a Jacobite. Secondly, Every Whig, who makes Vox Populi his Rule of Government, muſt be ſo. Thirdly, Every Aſſertor of limited Monarchy muſt be ſo.——The Chevalier being endowed with all Princely Virtues, ſo that all Rights concur in him. This, my Lord, I think is the only Paragraph in which the Word Right is mentioned; and yet, with humble Submiſſion, it doth not amount to an affirming, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of this Realm. The Author ſeems to pleaſe himſelf with mixing of Companies, he puts Whig and Jacobite together, and ſo let them continue; for my Part, I believe there will be no High-Treaſon in that; ſurely the Words that all Princely Virtues concur in him, gives no Colour for the Inference: he may paint or deſcribe him with the Perfections of an Angel, if he pleaſes; but if he doth not affirm, and maintain, that he hath a Right to the Crown of this Realm, it is not Treaſon. I ſay, affirm and maintain, for the Words are in the Conjunctive, ſo that a bare Aſſertion, or Affirmation, that the Pretender hath a Right, is not ſufficient, unleſs he ſupport ſuch Aſſertion by Reaſon or Argument; and for my Part, I think there is not one Word of Argument in the whole Book.

Your Lordſhip obſerves how many Innuendoes this Indictment is ſupported with, and how foreign and unnatural ſome of them are, even the chief of them; Chevalier, Innuendo the Perſon lately called the Prince of Wales, &c. is, with humble Submiſſion, in a Caſe of Life and Death, not to be tolerated becauſe of the Uncertainty, there being more Knights than one, and more Orders of Knighthood than one in all Kingdoms and Countries. It is ſaid by all the Judges in Griffith's Caſe, third Modern, fol. 202, that an Indictment is the Declaration of the King againſt the Life of a Subject, and ought therefore to ſet forth a ſufficient Certainty of the Facts, which ſhall not be ſupplied by Arguments or any Intendment whatſoever. This, my Lord, was the Opinion of the Judges; and I will be bold to ſay, let any one read over this Indictment without the Innuendoes, and they can make nothing of it as to the preſent Accuſation. Upon the Revolution, the higheſt Court of Juſtice in the Kingdom, the Houſe of Peers did brand this Practice of Innuendoes, which were but too familiar in the preceding Reigns. It is in the Caſe of Sir Samuel Barnardiſton, which being quoted in Dr. Sacheverell's Trial, Mr. Attorney can be no Stranger to it. Sir Samuel was accuſed for a Paragraph of a Letter that was intercepted at the Poſt-houſe; the Offence was deſcribed or aſcertained by five or ſix Innuendoes in the Information, upon which Sir Samuel was convicted and fined; and the Record being removed by Writ of Error before the Houſe of Lords, the Lords reverſed the Judgment; and the Reaſon aſſigned for the Reverſal is, that Innuendoes, or ſuppoſed and forced Conſtructions, ought not to be allowed, but that all Accuſations ought to be plain.

I muſt therefore humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether this Liberty of ſupporting Accuſations by Innuendoes, ought to receive any Countenance from a Court of Juſtice, or from a Jury of ſubſtantial Freeholders of the City of London; ſure it is hard that any Subject ſhould be made guilty of a capital Offence by a laboured or forced Conſtruction of doubtful Words; we therefore, upon the whole, humbly hope that the Priſoner will be acquitted.

Mr. Ketelbey. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am likewiſe aſſigned Counſel for the Priſoner at the Bar; and indeed, my Lord, I muſt own, that from the time I firſt ſaw this Indictment, I have been ſomewhat at a loſs to know upon what Statute it was grounded; what Act of Parliament had made the Facts therein charged to be High Treaſon. But ſince Mr. Attorney hath been pleaſed to inſiſt upon the Sixth of the Queen, Chapter the 7th, as the Foundation of this Indictment, I ſhall beg leave to conſider that Statute, and ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Determination, ſuppoſing this Fact as laid in the Indictment to be true, whether it amounts to High-Treaſon within that Statute or not.

My Lord, I would obſerve, that this Statute is introductive of a new Law, penal in the higheſt degree, making that High-Treaſon which was never High-Treaſon before, but was an Offence of a lower Species; and the Priſoner is the firſt Inſtance, the firſt Precedent againſt whom this Act has been endeavoured to be put in execution.

That Clauſe of the Act which makes it High-Treaſon to deny the Power and Authority of the Parliament to limit the Succeſſion of the Crown, does not, as I take it, at all relate to the preſent Queſtion; and therefore, I ſhall only trouble your Lordſhip with ſome Obſervations upon the other three Caſes which the Statute has made High-Treaſon. To each of theſe the Act hath annexed, that it muſt be by Writing or Printing directly; I beg leave to lay what Weight I can upon this Word directly: the Words of the Act are, That if any Perſon or Perſons ſhall maliciouſly, adviſedly, and directly, by writing or printing, maintain and affirm, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen, that now is, is not the lawful and rightful Queen of theſe Realms; or that the pretended Prince of Wales, who now ſtiles himſelf King of Great Britain, or King of England, by the Name of James the Third, or King of Scotland, by the Name of James the Eighth, hath any Right or Title to the Crown of theſe Realms; or that any other Perſon or Perſons hath or have any Right or Title to the ſame, except the Perſons to whom it is limited by the ſeveral Acts of Parliament, every ſuch Perſon or Perſons ſhall be guilty of High-Treaſon. The Word directly goes to all theſe three Caſes; there muſt be a direct Affirmation of the Truth of one of theſe three Propoſitions, or elſe it cannot be High-Treaſon within this Statute. I deſire to know if, in the Libel that hath been read to you, there is any ſuch Expreſſion as the Crown of theſe Realms, the Pretender, King James the Third, the Prince of Wales, or any other of the Periphraſes or Deſcriptions mentioned in the Statute; I admit there is ſomething ſaid in the Libel about the Chevalier, but who this Chevalier is, or who is meant by that Name, I will not take upon me to determine. But ſure I am there is no ſuch Word in the Statute; it is a general, a common Appellation, a meer individuum vagum, and without ſome particular Addition, ſome explanatory Reſtriction, cannot properly be applicable to one Man more than another; how then the Priſoner came to be charged with affirming directly, that the Pretender had a Right to the Crown of theſe Realms, when there is no ſuch Word in the whole Book, when the Statute expreſsly confines the Offence to ſuch particular Propoſitions in the Words there ſet down, without ſaying to that or the like Effect, I cannot conceive.

The Reaſon why we deſired to have the whole Book read, was to ſee whether there were any ſuch Words there; and we had no other Way of being ſatisfied in that Point, ſince Mr. Attorney, upon the Application of our Solicitor, was pleaſed to deny us an Opportunity of ſeeing the Libel; and by the Tenor of the Indictment, the Gentlemen who drew it, were conſcious, or at leaſt ſeemed to be, that there is no direct Affirmation of this Nature in the Libel. If they were not of this Opinion, why have they put in their Innuendoes? If the ſenſe had been plain, full and direct, what Occaſion was there for propping and ſupporting it with auxiliary Clauſes and Explanations? They have inſerted one Innuendo: If hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he hath that, Jus hereditarium ad coronam hujus regni, Innuendo; and in another Place, All Rights concur in him, Innuendo all Rights to the Crown of theſe Realms; is there any thing of the Crown of theſe Realms preceding? All Rights concur in him; Rights to what? Is it directly affirmed, or doth it neceſſarily follow, it muſt be Right to the Crown of theſe Realms? Are not theſe moſt ſtrange and ſtrained Innuendoes? It may as well be underſtood to be a Right to any Part of Africa, or any thing elſe, as to the Crown of theſe Realms.

In my Lord Coke's fourth Report, Folio 17, adverſus Rutleth, it is reſolved, That an Innuendo cannot alter the Matter or Senſe of the Words themſelves, themſelves, nor extend the general Words by an Imagination of an Intent, which is not apparent by the preceding Words to which the Innuendo refers, and in effect it ſtands in the Place of a Prædict. I ſhall mention but one other Caſe, which ſeveral of your Lordſhips well remember when it was in Agitation, and ſome of the Gentlemen of the other Side were concerned as Counſel in it. It was Michaelmas the 9th of King William, the King againſt Gripe (Lord Raymond's Reports, Vol. I. p. 256.) an Information for Perjury; and laid, that the Defendant ſwore that Mr. Stroud was not at Newnham, Innuendo Newnham in Devonſhire. The Court, in giving Judgment, laid it down as a Rule, that no Innuendo could ſupply the Defect of a ſufficient Certainty; and that the only Uſe of it was to denote ſome Perſon or Thing before-mentioned.

My Lord, I could offer ſeveral other Caſes which explain the Doctrine of Innuendoes; and would ſhew the Abſurdity of the Innuendoes in this Indictment; but I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhip with them at preſent, relying upon the Caſes already cited; and therefore we humbly inſiſt upon it, that the Priſoner is not guilty of directly affirming that the Pretender hath any Right or Title to the Crown of theſe Realms; neither is he, as we apprehend, within the reach of either of the other two Clauſes; the firſt relates only to the Queen, her late glorious Majeſty, now dead; whether the whole Act was temporary, and determined upon the Demiſe of the late Queen, and the eſtabliſhing the Succeſſion in the Houſe of Hanover, I ſhall not at preſent debate, ſubmitting that Point to your Lordſhip's Determination, upon the Weight of what Mr. Hungerford hath offered on that Head; but this I think I may humbly inſiſt upon, that this firſt Clauſe at leaſt was temporary; and ſince the Statute expreſſes it in Words of the preſent Tenſe, Whoever ſhall affirm, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen, that now is, is not the lawful and rightful Queen of theſe Realms, no Perſon at this Time, by the Efficacy of this Clauſe, can be guilty of High-Treaſon.

As to the third Clauſe, Whoever ſhall affirm, that any other Perſon or Perſons hath or have any Right or Title to the Crown of theſe Realms, otherwiſe than according to an Act of Parliament made Firſt Gulielmi & Mariæ, intituled, An Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and ſettling the Succeſſion of the Crown; and one other Act, made the Twelfth Gulielmi Tertii, intituled, An Act for the Limitation of the Crown, and better ſecuring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and the ſeveral Acts made for the Union of the Two Kingdoms, &c. ſurely it will not be contended, that the Priſoner is guilty of the Offence charged in this Clauſe; for then this Indictment can never maintain the Charge; proper Clauſes of thoſe ſeveral Statutes ſhould, in ſuch Caſe, have been ſet forth in the Indictment, and proper Averments to bring the Priſoner's Caſe within this Clauſe.

I muſt admit, that if it was done adviſedly and directly, the Law will imply it to be maliciouſly; I ſhall therefore only beg Leave to add one further Obſervation upon one other ſingle Word of this Statute, and that is upon the Word adviſedly: Whoever ſhall adviſedly maintain, affirm, &c. Adviſedly here muſt neceſſarily import, not only a competent Capacity, but the actual Exerciſe of that Power of thinking, and, in ſome Degree, Maturity of Judgment and due Premeditation; it ſtands in Contradiſtinction to a raſh, heedleſs, and inconſiderate Act. Some of the Gentlemen of the other Side have been pleaſed, with a laudable and generous Compaſſion, to take Notice of the Priſoner's Youth; can a Boy of Seventeen be ſaid adviſedly to maintain an Aſſertion contrary to one of the three recited Clauſes, when the Matter is ſo far from being plain and clear to much older Heads; and at the moſt is ſo dubious, that your Lordſhip, in your great Juſtice, hath permitted it to be debated for ſeveral Hours, and perhaps the Debate may hold ſome Hours longer, Whether the Paragraphs of the Libel, ſet forth in the Indictment, are a direct Affirmation of what is made criminal by either of thoſe Clauſes in the Statute? I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will likewiſe have a compaſſionate Regard to the tender Years and Unadviſedneſs of the Priſoner.

My Lord, the next thing we are to ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Conſideration is, whether the Evidence that hath been given be ſufficient to convict the Priſoner of the Fact, ſuppoſing it to be High-Treaſon. Upon a Trial for High-Treaſon, the greateſt Crime, the Strength ought to be adequate, in ſome meaſure, to the Nature of the Offence; for a Perſon that is indicted for High-Treaſon to be found guilty upon dubious Evidence, ſtrained Conſtructions, Implications, or far-fetched Innuendoes, never was yet thought juſt, nor will be by your Lordſhip.

My Lord Coke, in his third Inſtitutes, fol. 12, hath laid down the Rule of Evidence, in Caſes of High-Treaſon, where he comments upon the Words of the Statute of the Twenty-fifth of Edward the Third, proveably, that is, upon direct and manifeſt Proof, not upon conjectural Preſumptions or Inferences, or Strains of Wit, but upon good and ſufficient Proof; and ſeveral Statutes have provided, that there ſhall be, at leaſt, two credible Witneſſes to every Species of Treaſon, and each Overt Act laid in the Indictment.

Whether the Evidence, that hath been offered in this Caſe, comes up to my Lord Coke's Rule, or be ſufficient to convict the Priſoner of the Crimes laid to his Charge, I muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Judgment, when I have made ſome few general Remarks, without repeating or going into the Particulars thereof. They have examined the two Meſſengers, the two Servants in the Houſe, two Gentlemen belonging to the Secretary's Office, and ſome Maſter-Printers.

What the Printers have ſaid, in relation to the Method of printing, compoſing, correcting and impoſing right or wrong, we have no Reaſon to controvert, not apprehending that the Priſoner is the leaſt affected thereby.

As to thoſe worthy Gentlemen, Mr. Delafay and Mr. Buckley, they delivered their Evidence with ſuch a tender Regard to Truth, without ſtretching one Tittle beyond what they certainly remembered to be exact matter of Fact, that I ſhould do an Injury to myſelf as well as to them, if I ſuſpected in the leaſt of the Reality of what they ſaid; but the utmoſt that can be collected from their Evidence, as I apprehend, amounts only to ſome youthful Imprudences in the Perſon's Behaviour upon his Examination and not to any Confeſſion of the Fact charged upon him in the Indictment.

I appeal to your Lordſhip's Obſervation, whether John Hutchins and Thomas Roberts, the two Meſſengers, did not directly contradict one another; and Hutchins, that was firſt examined, directly contradict himſelf? Hutchins ſwore he found two of the Libels, now produced, in the Priſoner's Pocket, and ſome more in his Bed-chamber; but upon his being croſs-examined, he acknowledged that Roberts went firſt into his Room, and took them out of the Priſoner's Pocket; and when he aſk'd him ſtrictly to the Room where the other Libels were taken, he could not be ſure whether it was in the Priſoner's Room, or in the inner Room, where the Apprentice lay. Hutchins ſwore, they were never out of each other's Company, till they came to the Secretary's Office; and Roberts owned that he and Hutchins went in two different Coaches from the Priſoner's Houſe.

William Harper the Apprentice, and Lawrence Vezey the Journeyman, were next examined, and ſaid indeed the Priſoner corrected one of the Sheets that was wrong impoſed; and Vezey ſaid, he took off the Proof-ſheet; but is this Printing? Is correcting, or right impoſing a Proof-ſheet, the Overt Act that is made High-Treaſon by this Statute? Mr. Attorney is pleaſed to call it, Co-operating; but, my Lord, there are ſeveral preparatory Acts in this Art, the diſtinct Offices and Employments of different Perſons, before it can be properly called Printing, and in the Courſe of our Evidence, we ſhall endeavour to explain its previous Parts and Gradations; and if it had been unqueſtionably proved that the Priſoner had a hand in preparing Sheets for the Preſs, yet we hope your Lordſhip will not conſtrue that to be Co-operating, much leſs Printing; the moſt that can be made of it is, that he cauſed it to be printed; but cauſing or procuring ſuch a Libel to be printed is not, as we apprehend, the Offence laid in the Indictment; it muſt be nothing leſs than actual Printing. In other Indictments for publiſhing Libels, you ſay, publicavit et publicari cauſavit, and thereby you are let in to give Evidence of either. But in a penal Law, and eſpecially in Caſes of High-Treaſon, your Lordſhip will in the ſtricteſt Manner conſtrue that only to be the Offence, which the expreſs Words of the Act of Parliament have made ſo, and not extend or give any equitable Latitude to it. However, if your Lordſhip ſhould be of Opinion, that this Part of the King's Evidence any ways affects the Priſoner upon this Indictment, we ſhall, according to our Inſtructions, be able to produce a great Number of Witneſſes to contradict what theſe Witneſſes have ſworn, and to give ſuch an Account of Vezey, that if we had no other Anſwer to his Evidence, his own Character would cut him down, and utterly deprive him of any Credit with your Lordſhip and the Jury.

We will call our Witneſſes, and hope the Priſoner's Caſe will appear to be ſuch, that we ſhall have your Lordſhip's Directions for his Acquittance.

WALTER HUTCHINSON, and GEORGE MATTHEWS, ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Matthews, Pray give my Lord and the Jury an account what you heard Mr. Harper and Mr. Vezey declare concerning this Accuſation.

Mr. Matthews. All I can give an account of is this. About the 5th or 6th of June, the 6th particularly, it being my own Birth-day, I came to my Mother's Houſe about Eleven o'Clock in the Morning, the Time I generally do, becauſe I do not live in the Houſe; a Perſon met me coming along in the Blue-coat Hoſpital, and told me there was ſomething Printing in our Houſe, in my Mother's Houſe, and deſired I would ſearch the Houſe; upon this I was very uneaſy, and directly went home and made all the Search I could; the Perſons they gave me Information of were Vezey and Harper, the Apprentice and Journeyman.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Who gave you this Information?

Matthews. A young Woman that met me.

L. C. J. What was her Name?

Matthews. It was my own Siſter; ſhe told me ſhe was afraid there was ſomething doing in our Houſe, becauſe they were up earlier than uſual. I made a ſtrict Enquiry, and could find nothing at all that was doing. Upon this, having a great Suſpicion, I took Vezey into my Cloſet, and aſked him, Have you printed any thing? Nothing, he told me, of any particular Title had been printed, but ſomething had been printed; and being done at an unſeaſonable Time, gave me a Suſpicion it was contrary to my Orders and Directions. Mr. Vezey, ſays I, hath there been any thing printed in this Houſe concerning or againſt the Government? No, there hath not. You know, ſays I, Mr. Vezey, that as my Brother happened to be under Misfortunes before, and through the Favour of the Government ſhewn to him he was diſcharged; therefore when he came into the Houſe again, I publickly gave Orders, that if ever they found he did, or talk'd any thing againſt the Government, they would come and give me Information, that I might take a proper Method to prevent it. Upon this Vezey owned I had given that publick Notice; but alſo, when my Brother came home——

Mr. Ketelbey. I believe, Mr. Matthews, you are going foreign to the Matter; I would have you go on with the thing in Queſtion, and come to the Matter in hand.

Matthews. Upon that, my Lord, I ordered a Lock to be put upon the Preſs-room Door.

Mr. Ketelbey. When was this done? now?

Matthews. No---a Twelvemonth ago.---I ordered a Lock, the Key of which Lock was always in the Cuſtody of the Preſs-man, never any thing was done then. But now to ſpeak to the Matter I am to ſpeak of---After this Information, I took Vezey into the Cloſet, and tax'd him with it; he there told me, and made a great many Imprecations, that he knew nothing of any thing done directly or indirectly, in my Mother's Printing-houſe, againſt the Government; and then Harper I interrogated, and he did publickly in the Printing-houſe, firſt in the Cloſet, then publickly in the whole Houſe, declare the ſame. I aſked them publickly, ſeverally and both together, whether they knew any thing printed in the Houſe directly or indirectly, againſt the Government, or no? They declared, they knew nothing directly or indirectly printed againſt the Government.

Mr. Ketelbey. How old is your Brother?

Matthews. I cannot exactly tell —— I was twenty-four Years of Age laſt June, and my Brother I take it is ſix Years younger than I.

Mr. Ketelbey. Is he an Apprentice ſtill?

Matthews. My Brother is an Apprentice ſtill, he was bound in September 1715.—He hath three Years yet to ſerve.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who is the Owner of the Printing-preſs?

Matthews. My Mother; but I have the Direction of it, and ſome ſmall Concern in it.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Servants are employed under you? Put them in Order and Degree, as I take it they are in the ſame Nature as in other Buſineſſes.

Matthews.

Matthews. There is the Maſter or Miſtreſs, and a Journeyman, the eldeſt ——— is generally looked upon to be the Head in that Way of Buſineſs.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Office hath he?

Matthews. That is as it happens.—The Compoſers; the Preſſmen, they are ignorant, ſilly Fellows, only made uſe of to take off the Sheets. Theſe are the Horſes, as they call them.

Mr. Ketelbey. The Compoſers, who are thoſe?

Matthews. They are Men generally better learnt.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who was the Head Compoſer in your Houſe?

Matthews. Mr. Thomas Wiggens.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who were the other?

Matthews. Mr. Thomas Wiggens, Mr. Robert Staples, and John Smith.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Share had your Brother in the Houſe?

Matthews. My Brother had no manner of Share or Right in the Printing-houſe.

Mr. Ketelbey. I think there is another buſy Officer, what is he?

Matthews. They generally have Boys, and ſometimes Men to be Runners, and Meſſengers to the Preſs. The Devil is generally the Boy, and ſometimes they dirty his Face, and by a metaphorical way of ſpeaking, they call him the Devil.

Mr. Ketelbey. I pray, what Character generally ſpeaking is Harper of?

Matthews. I deſire to be excuſed.

Att. Gen. Shew Mr. George Matthews that Paper. Look upon the Name ſubſcribed. Do you ſee it?——Matthews. I do.

Att. Gen. Whoſe Hand-writing is that?—Matthews. To give a direct and poſitive Anſwer to that is very difficult, you yourſelf muſt judge.

Att. Gen. Give me an Anſwer. I aſk you, Whether you know who writ that Name, John Matthews?—Matthews. No, I cannot take upon me to ſwear that, becauſe I did not ſee John Matthews write it.

Att. Gen. You are acquainted with your Brother's Hand-writing?

Matthews. I cannot ſay I am.

Att. Gen. Conſider, can you ſay you are acquainted with your Brother's Hand-writing, or you are not? Do you believe it to be his Hand-writing?—Matthews. I cannot directly ſay as to believing it, but I am not able to ſwear it.

Att. Gen. Have you never ſeen him write?

Matthews. I cannot ſay but I have.

Att. Gen. You have frequently ſeen him write.—I aſk you (mine is a direct Queſtion), Do you, or do you not, believe the Name John Matthews to be your Brother's Hand-writing, upon the Oath you have taken?

Matthews. Really I declare upon the Oath I have taken—according to the beſt of my Knowledge, I poſitively declare, I cannot take upon me directly to ſwear it is his Hand.

Att. Gen. I aſk you, upon your Oath, do you, or do you not, believe it to be his Hand-writing?

Matthews. I anſwered you the Queſtion before, very plain.

Att. Gen. That is no Anſwer to my Queſtion, Whether you believe it, or not believe it?—Matthews. Really, I cannot be poſitive.

Att. Gen. Why do you trifle with the Court? Cannot you ſay, whether you believe it, or not believe it?

Matthews. I ſay, if you pleaſe to give me leave to introduce what I have to ſay, I believe it is ſomething like it.

Att. Gen. You are to give an Anſwer, as well for the King as your Brother: Do you believe That to be his Hand-writing? or do you not believe it to be your Brother's Hand-writing?

L. C. J. Come, you muſt give an Anſwer, whether you do, or do not believe it.——Matthews. At the Time of this Paper being writ I did believe it; I cannot ſay but I do believe it now.

Att. Gen. I think you ſay, when this Paper was firſt writ, you believed it was; and you now believe it to be your Brother's Hand-writing.—When I aſked you whether you believed it or not, your Anſwer was, you believe it is ſomething like it. I aſk you, do you now believe it to be your Brother's Hand-writing or not, upon your Oath?

Matthews. I do not know what Anſwer to make.

Att. Gen. Cannot you ſay Ay, or No?

L. C. J. Let the Conſequence be what it will, you muſt give a direct Anſwer to the Queſtion; the Queſtion is not, whether it is your Brother's Hand-writing; but whether you believe it to be his Hand-writing?

Matthews. I have ſome reaſon to believe it.

Att. Gen. Don't let me miſtake you, I think you ſay you do believe it? Do you believe it is not your Brother's Hand-writing?

Matthews. Give me leave, let me ſtate the Queſtion; what you aſk me is, Whether I believe it is my Brother's Hand-writing? I do believe it.

Att. Gen. Then I aſk you now as to the Subſtance and Body of the Paper. Do you believe That to be your Brother's Hand-writing, or not?

Matthews. No, it is not, it is my Hand-writing.

Att. Gen. You believe the Name to be your Brother's, and the Subſtance is yours?——Matthews. Yes.

Att. Gen. Was you preſent when the Name John Matthews was ſubſcribed?——Matthews. No, I was not.

Att. Gen. I aſk you, whether you did not carry this Letter to Mr. Secretary Craggs?——Matthews. Yes, I did.

Att Gen. Did you not declare you brought it from your Brother?

Matthews. Yes, I did.

Att. Gen. Did you not then ſay, it was ſubſcribed by your Brother?

Matthews. No, I did not.

Att. Gen. Then who ſent you with this Paper, to Mr. Secretary Craggs?

Matthews. I might ſay I came from my Brother. I went firſt of all to the Secretary's Office, it was, I think, on a Thurſday, or a Tueſday, and the Regency was broke up; and upon this I aſked, Where Mr. Secretary Craggs was? Somebody ſaid he was gone to dine at my Lord St. John's, at Batterſea. I went there, and deſired to ſpeak with Mr. Craggs. He ſent out Word, he would wait on me when he had dined; and he came out to me in the Garden. I told him, Sir, I have gotten a Paper from my Brother.

Att. Gen. Did you not bring this Paper from your Brother?

Matthews. How bring it from him?

Att. Gen. Did your Brother ever ſee it or read it?

Matthews. I cannot ſay my Brother read it, becauſe I never ſaw him read it.—Give me leave, my Brother was in Newgate, and lock'd up there; to ſay I ſee him read or ſign the Paper, I cannot.

Att. Gen. Did you not receive it from your Brother?

Matthews. I received it from him as I took it; there was a Paper brought to me, ſomething of this kind contained in it.

Att. Gen. What Paper are you ſpeaking of? I aſk you as to that Paper; Did you receive that Paper from your Brother, or did you not?

Matthews. I tell you, Sir, it was put thro' the Grate at Newgate.

Att. Gen. By whom?---Matthews. By my Brother.

Att. Gen. Into whoſe Hands?

Matthews. It was put into my Hands.

Att. Gen. That very Paper in your Hand was put into your Hands thro' the Grate, by your Brother?

Matthews. I believe it was ſo. I will tell you, if neceſſary I ſhould, any thing of that kind.——When we had read the Paper——

Mr. Hungerford. Prove it---you have not proved it.

Serj. Cheſhire. Mr. Matthews, I aſk you if you have ever had any Talk with your Brother about the Matters he was charged withal?

Matthews. What, about this Libel? I remember I have had ſome Diſcourſe with him about it.

Serj. Cheſhire. By the Oath you have taken, did he never own to you he aſſiſted in printing of it?

Matthews. I never troubled myſelf one way, nor the other.

Att. Gen. Let me not miſtake one Paſſage. At the Time your Brother delivered this Paper to you out of the Grate at Newgate, did he not deſire you to carry it to the Secretary of State?

Matthews. If you would give me leave——

Att. Gen. What did he ſay to you at that Time?

Matthews. I cannot remember any particular Words.

Mr. Hungerford. I did not obſerve that he ſaid the Letter was put thro' the Grate by his Brother into his Hand.———Do you ſay your Brother gave it you thro' the Grate?

Matthews. If I might have the Liberty of telling the Connexion of Circumſtances——

Att. Gen. I have not done with him, you break in upon us; I think you own the Body, the Subſtance of this Paper, is your Hand writing?

Matthews. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. How long was it after you writ the Subſtance of this Paper, before the Time your Brother put it into your Hands out of Newgate?

Matthews. I writ it in my Mother's Houſe; from thence I went to Newgate; I aſked for my Brother, he was locked up, and there was the Man called Mr. Matthews, and he came down; it was very dark, I could not ſee my Hand. I put the Paper thro', and he gave it me again, I believe in ſeven or eight Minutes Time.

L. C. J. Did you give it him?

Matthews. I put it thro' the Grate.

Att. Gen. Did you put it down in Writing of your own Head? or by whoſe Inſtructions?

Matthews. The Paper was brought to me by a Meſſenger; the Words to this Effect, that I will recollect, if I can. The Copy of the Paper intitled ſo and ſo, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, &c. The Papers entituled by that Title were given to me by one John Broderick; one of them he gave me in Cock-pit-alley, Drury-lane; and the other he gave me at the Black-boy, ſomewhere by Drury-lane. Now in my Account as it ſeemed a very confuſed Paper, I drew it in a Hurry, with a little ſort of Addreſs, that I thought civil and handſome. Pleaſe to let me ſee the Paper.

Att. Gen. Ay, ſee the Paper. You ſay a Paper was brought to you, wherein John Broderick is mentioned to you as the Author of this Libel; that the Papers were given your Brother by one John Broderick.

Matthews. This Meſſage was brought to me in Writing.

Att. Gen. By whom?---Matthews. By one Mr. Plunkett.

Att. Gen. Whether did you form this Paper upon that?

Matthews. I tell you, I did form it ſo far as this; ſomething,---I made an Addition to it.------It was the current Opinion my Brother was the Printer of it.

Mr. Bootle. I would aſk you this, you ſay you had Intimation that the Copy from which this Libel was printed, was delivered by one Broderick; to whom was it delivered?

Matthews. I took it to be delivered to my Brother.

Att. Gen. My Lord, I am in your Lordſhip's Direction, whether it is not a proper Time to deſire this Paper to be read; with great Submiſſion, this ariſes upon the Evidence of Mr. George Matthews; he pretends to have added ſomething by way of Explanation.---I deſire this Paper, which he hath ſufficiently proved to be his Brother's Paper, and ſubſcribed by him, may be read.

L. C. J. You don't oppoſe the Reading of it?

Mr. Hungerford. Yes, my Lord, we do: if this Paper is read at all, it muſt be read to make out the Indictment: it is a Paper, as by what appears, is neither writ nor ſubſcribed by him.---The Gentleman ſays he gueſſes at it, and he ſays he doth not know that his Brother ever ſubſcribed or underwrit ſuch a Paper: ſo that it ſtands as a meer Cypher, and is no Manner of Evidence, therefore we hope it ſhall not be read.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, we humbly conceive, there is not ſufficient Evidence for the Reading of this Paper. As to the Body, he writ it; as to the Subſcribing of it, he is not well acquainted with his Brother's Hand-writing, and cannot ſay he writ it. Then, my Lord, as to the Buſineſs, of having the Paper from his Hands; he brought it to Newgate, he cannot be poſitive he delivered it into his Brother's Hands, or that he had it from his Brother. Therefore we muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether they have produced any Evidence ſufficient to entitle them to read this Paper.

Attorney General. Notwithſtanding this Objection, I humbly inſiſt, that we are certainly entitled to the Reading of this Paper, on the Evidence given by this Mr. George Matthews. I beg leave to open the Paper. The Paper amounts to a Confeſſion of the Priſoner.

Mr. Hungerford, and Mr. Ketelbey. We pray, we may have your Lordſhip's Judgment.

Lord Chief Juſtice. The Queſtion now is, whether this Paper muſt be read?

Att. Gen. My Lord, let the Contents of this Paper be what it will, and a Paper proved in the manner as this is, we are to be ſure entitled to read it; what hath been ſworn, I dare ſay they cannot, as I humbly apprehend, controvert: Here is one Brother ſwears to the Hand-writing of another: That ſpeaks itſelf. Nobody can doubt who he ſwears it to, who believes it to be his Hand-writing; this alone entitles us to the Reading of this Paper, the Evidence of ſo near a Relation, who is, and muſt be acquainted with his Hand-writing, who ſwears poſitively to it. In all the Courſe of Experience I have ſeen, there cannot be a fuller Evidence to entitle us to read this Paper, than hath been given; there are other Circumſtances carry it ſo far, no Doubt can remain with your Lordſhip. This Paper is not only ſubſcribed by John Matthews, but dictated by John Matthews; how much leſs doth what he ſwears amount to? He ſays, he received a Paper from one Mr. Plunkett, who came from his Brother; he formed this Paper by that, ſomething he added; afterwards he delivered the Paper ſo formed into the Hands of his Brother; the Brother had it in his Cuſtody, after it was ſo delivered, ſix or eight Minutes, and it can't be ſuppoſed but he ſhould read it in that Time, and afterwards delivered it to him again with his own Hand, with Directions to carry it to the Secretary of State; this makes it as much his Paper as if he had written the whole Paper himſelf; the whole Paper had his Approbation, and it was made with a Deſign to carry it to the Secretary of State; with theſe Circumſtances, which are the Truth of the Fact, I inſiſt upon it, with great Submiſſion to the Judgment of the Court, that we are entitled to read it.

Lord Chief Juſtice. I take it, it is a common Caſe. Suppoſe a Trial between Party and Party, the common Method of proving a Man's Hand is, a Perſon is called who hath ſeen the Party write. He is aſked, whether do you believe it to be his Hand-writing, or no? Nothing more is expected, than that he hath ſeen him write, and believes it to be his Hand-writing. Mr. Matthews ſwears he hath ſeen him write, and he believes it to be his Hand-writing. He goes on further and ſwears, he received a Meſſage brought to him by Plunkett; upon which he went to Newgate, his Brother was called down to him, he delivered him the Paper, and in ſix or eight Minutes he came to him again, and delivered it him with his own Name to it, which he believes to be his Hand-writing.

Judge Tracey. We muſt have never an end of things, at this rate.

Lord Chief Juſtice. I think the Paper ought to be read; if my Brothers are of another Opinion, they will tell you ſo.

(Then the Paper was read.)

Clerk of Arraigns. Signed John Matthews—"I John Matthews, now "in the Maſters-ſide of Newgate, being heartily ſorry for the Crimes I "have been guilty of againſt his moſt ſacred Majeſty King George, and "his Adminiſtration; and from a thorough Conviction of my Errors, "an unfeigned Contrition for them, and out of a Deſire to ſerve his "Majeſty, do hereby make the following Declaration and Confeſſion, "(viz.) That the Papers, (entitled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi "Vox Dei; to all true Lovers of Liberty, Vox Populi Vox Dei) were "both given to me, by one John Broderick, as alſo the Money for print-"ing them.

"And further I do declare, that the ſaid John Broderick took the foul "Proofs of the Papers aforeſaid from me, in order to correct them; and "when they were printed, fetched them away.

"And further I do declare, that the Place where the aforeſaid John "Broderick gave the Copy of the Paper, entituled, To all true Lovers of "Liberty, &c. was in Cock-pit-alley; and he the aforeſaid John Broderick "gave me the Copy of the other, entituled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox "Populi Vox Dei, &c. at the Black-boy, in Stanhope-ſtreet, both near "Drury-lane; the Place of his Abode, to the beſt of my Knowledge, is "in Shire-lane.

"Of all and every the Premiſſes herein contained, I am ready to make "Oath, when called thereto by the Government. I had three Guineas "June the 6th, and ſeven more the 19th, of the aforeſaid Broderick."

Priſoner. I aſk my Brother whether he can diſtinguiſh my Hand from another?

Lord Chief Juſtice. He hath ſworn already that he believes it to be your Hand.

Mr. Hungerford. I am not diſpleaſed that this Paper comes to light. Here is a Witneſs bound to do Service to a Brother in Priſon. Moved with Compaſſion, he forms a Paper of this Nature, not by any Inſtructions from the Priſoner at the Bar.

Att. Gen. My Lord, I hope they are not at Liberty to go on in this manner.

Mr. Hungerford. The Inſtruction is handed from Plunkett, not immediately from his Brother. There is nothing in this matter brings an Offence home againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, within the Statute.—— Pleaſe to call Walter Hutchinſon, and Thomas Tovie.

THOMAS TOVIE ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Tovie, what Account do you give of Mr. Vezey? How long have you known him?

Tovie. About a Year and Half.

Mr. Hungerford. What Character can you give of him?

Tovie. I can give him no Character at all, good or bad.

Mr. Hungerford. Hath he the Character of an honeſt Man?

Tovie. No.—Not about his Printing.

Lord Chief Juſtice. What Reputation and Character hath he among his Neighbours?

Tovie. I know none of his Neighbours, I am little acquainted with any but he himſelf, and I have not known him above a Year and a Half.

Mr. MOTT, and WILLIAM BODEN, ſworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Mott, how long have you known Vezey?

Mott. I was never in his Company but once.

Mr. Ketelbey. What do you know about his Character? this general Character.—Mott. I know nothing of his general Character.

Mr. Ketelbey. Boden, Do you know Vezey?——Boden. Yes.

Mr. Ketelbey. What have you heard him declare?

Boden. I came here laſt Monday was Se'nnight to hear this Trial; he was got here, and he told me he was an Evidence in this Cauſe, and that after the Publiſhing of the Book, he bethought himſelf that he ſhould get into ſome Danger; ſo he went to the Mother of this Matthews, and told her, if ſhe would give him Money, he would keep out of the way; accordingly he went to St. Albans, and ſtaid there nine Days; but no Money coming, he could not ſtay out of the way, but muſt come to his Buſineſs.

Mr. Ketelbey. I don't know why we ſhould trouble your Lordſhip with any more Witneſſes; I ſhall therefore only beg leave to obſerve from the Purport of that Paper, which hath now been read, whether there is any thing contained therein, that could prove the Confeſſion of this Fact, that is now criminally objected to him?—There are ſome Particulars; he confeſſes in this Paper, he received a Copy, and delivered Copies back; but what we inſiſt on in behalf of the Priſoner is, that nothing in this Paper amounts to charge him with High-Treaſon, nor can properly be made uſe of againſt him on this Indictment.

Mr. Hungerford. The Offence he is charged with is, that he maliciouſly, adviſedly, and directly, did maintain and affirm, that the Pretender had a Right to the Crown of theſe Realms. Now, my Lord, with humble Submiſſion, this Paper, be it what it will, take it in the utmoſt Latitude, cannot be conſtrued to come up to this Indictment. As it ſtood before we called our Witneſs, it could not be read; but we are ſo unfortunate, by plowing with our Heifer, they've got it to be read; but then there is no Confeſſion of a Treaſon, or that he printed this Libel; there is a Story told that he received it of ſomebody, but there is nothing at all of the Confeſſion of the Offence, and therefore we ſtand, with reſpect to the Priſoner at the Bar, in the ſame Circumſtances we were in antecedent to the Reading of that Paper; and as to the Libel, it doth not contain ſuch a Treaſon as the Act of Parliament requires, and they have laid in the Indictment.

Att. Gen. My Lord, before I reply, I deſire to call a Witneſs or two to ſupport the Credit of the Evidence we have given.

ROBERT BENTLEY ſworn.

Att. Gen. Mr. Bentley, Do you know Lawrence Vezey?

Bentley. Yes, Sir, I have known him ſome time.

Att. Gen. How long?

Bentley. About ſix or ſeven Years, I don't ſee him perhaps once in a Twelve-month.

Att. Gen. Are you acquainted with his Character?

Bentley. I don't know but he works honeſtly for his living.

ROBERT PROCTER ſworn.

Att. Gen. Do you know Mr. Vezey?——Procter. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. How long have you known him?—Procter. Four or five Years.

Att. Gen. What is his Character?

Procter. I never heard any thing ill of him.

Att. Gen. Hath he the Character of an honeſt Man?

Procter. I never heard nothing but that he is an honeſt Man.

Att. Gen. My Lord, I won't trouble your Lordſhip to call any more Witneſſes to ſupport the Credit of Vezey; it would have been neceſſary if they had affected him, but I think the little Imputation thrown upon him is ſufficiently anſwered.

My Lord, I am ſure I ought to have a principal Regard to your Lordſhip, conſidering how much Time hath been already ſpent, and ſome Conſideration to myſelf, therefore ſhall trouble your Lordſhip as little as may be by way of Reply.

My Lord, as to the Evidence that hath been offered on the behalf of the Crown: My Lord, I muſt ſay, that even no Occaſion hath been given, in my Opinion, by any Obſervation I have heard made by the Counſel for the Priſoner, to make any Anſwer by way of Reply, had nothing been miſrecited. But I ſhall leave that to your Lordſhip's ſtating to the Jury, which I am ſure your Lordſhip will do with the utmoſt Juſtice, and more I neither aſk nor deſire.

As to this ſupplemental Evidence I have offered, I muſt beg leave to anſwer, that they would have it that nothing collected from this Paper in particular amounts to the Offence, much leſs confirms what I have offered to prove, that he was the Printer of this Libel.

I think it impoſſible for any that hath heard and conſiders this Evidence, to underſtand this Paper any otherwiſe than a Confeſſion by the Defendant, that he printed this Libel; that is the Fact to be tried; what elſe is the amount of thoſe Words? I John Matthews, out of a Deſire to ſerve his Majeſty, do hereby make the following Declaration and Confeſſion, That the Papers, intituled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, were both given to me by one John Broderick, as alſo the Money for printing them; certainly this is a Confeſſion that they were delivered to him; the Papers from whence the Impreſſion was taken, that is the Manuſcript, that is delivered to him by John Broderick, in order to have it printed, and at the time he gave him Money for the printing them; doth not this neceſſarily imply, that he received the Papers and the Money, either to print it himſelf, or procure them to be printed? Is not this a neceſſary Implication without any forced Conſtruction? And in the Concluſion he ſays, I had three Guineas given me the Day the Impreſſion was wrought off, ſeven more the 19th, of the aforeſaid Broderick. The very Day it was wrought off, the very Day that he paid fourteen Shillings to the Men that aſſiſted him, he confeſſes that he had three Guineas from John Broderick.

My

My Lord, if this doth not amount to a Confeſſion that he received a Paper in order to have it printed, that he did actually print this Paper, it muſt amount to that or to nothing. But take it in Conjunction with the reſt of the Evidence given, when he ſhall confeſs that he received the Papers ſo entituled from Broderick, with the Money for printing them; when it is proved that this very Libel is ſo entitled, as deſcribed in this Paper; that he directed the printing that Libel with the ſame Title; that he paid for printing it the very ſame Day, he ſays in his Confeſſion, he received Three Guineas from John Broderick. Whatever Import this may have, taken ſeparately, in Concurrence with what hath been offered in Evidence, it muſt amount to an abſolute and direct Confeſſion, that he was the Printer of this Libel in Judgment before your Lordſhip.—— I ſhall ſay no more in Anſwer to this Paper.

The Evidence of George Matthews is ſo far from being doubtful, that it is confirmed by the Evidence given by the Witneſſes for the Crown. Mr. Matthews had heard, by his Siſter, that ſomething was done that very Day againſt the Government; he went directly to the Printing-Houſe, called for Vezey and Harper, examines them firſt in his Cloſet, then afterwards makes a Declaration in publick, intimating (as it comes out) this very Man had received Information, that ſomething of that Nature was doing.

What is to be inferred from the reſt of his Evidence, becauſe Vezey and Harper did not think fit to own they were concerned in printing it, therefore it is to be inferred the Fact is not ſo? So far from any ſuch Concluſion, Vezey doth not pretend to know any more of the Paper than Part of the Title, therefore he might juſtly anſwer the Queſtion; when the Man tells you, upon his Oath, he read nothing but Part of the Title, therefore ſo much of the Evidence given by him, goes in Confirmation of what Vezey ſwears; nothing he hath ſworn throws any Imputation, nor carries any Inconſiſtency with what Vezey ſays.

I ſhall trouble your Lordſhip no further as to the Evidence.

There are ſome Things of which I am obliged to take Notice: My Lord, I think both the Gentlemen of the other Side inſinuate as if this was a temporary Act. Mr. Hungerford would not ſay, that the Law, on which this Proſecution is founded, is a temporary Law; but the Inſinuation came from him, and is followed by Mr. Ketelbey, as if that Branch of the Statute, on which this Proſecution is founded, had not, at this Time, an Exiſtence. Mr. Hungerford ſays, it was calculated not to be determined with the Demiſe of the Queen, but if it operated ſo far as to bring the King to the Throne, it had its Effect. My Lord, there is not the leaſt Colour or Foundation ariſing from the Words or Nature of the Act of Parliament for ſuch an Objection.——

There are four diſtinct Proviſions: The firſt is the Perſon of the Queen; that if any Perſon or Perſons ſhall, maliciouſly, adviſedly, and directly maintain and affirm, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen, that now is, is not the lawful or rightful Queen of theſe Realms, &c The whole Tenour following relates to the Title on which the Settlement of the Crown is founded; and it is penned, not in Words perſonally, but in Words that carry a Perpetuity. That Branch on which the Proſecution is founded, is in theſe Words: Or that the pretended Prince of Wales, who now ſtiles himſelf King of Great Britain, or King of England, by the Name of James the Third, or King of Scotland, by the Name of James the Eighth, hath any Right or Title to the Crown of theſe Realms. This the Law hath provided againſt, and made it High-Treaſon, and it is fit it ſhould be ſo. The next Proviſion was for ſecuring the Succeſſion: Or that any other Perſon or Perſons hath or have any Right or Title to the ſame, otherwiſe than according to an Act of Parliament, made in England, in the firſt Year of the Reign of their late Majeſties King William and Queen Mary, of ever bleſſed and glorious Memory, intituled, An Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and ſettling the Succeſſion of the Crown; and one other Act made in the twelfth Year of his ſaid late Majeſty, King William the Third, intituled, An Act for the further Limitation of the Crown, and better ſecuring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject; and the Acts lately made in England and Scotland mutually for the Union of the two Kingdoms. It is plain by the Connection, Or that any other Perſon or Perſons, &c. which ſhews that the Proviſion here was intended to go along with the Settlement, much leſs to determine with the happy Acceſſion of his Majeſty to the Crown, that Minute of Time which placed his Majeſty on the Throne. So the fourth Part: Or whoſoever ſhall deny the Right or Power of Parliament, to make Laws and Statutes of ſufficient Force and Validity to limit and bind the Crown, and the Deſcent, Limitation, Inheritance, and Government thereof. This is one Foundation of his Majeſty's Title to the Crown; this is a Principle will remain as long as the Government itſelf.

My Lord, I would not have ſaid ſo much, if it had not been from the Nature of the Objection. This is a Law, ſay they, that hath not been put in Execution ſince it was made; in the Courſe of fourteen Years Time, there hath been Nobody found guilty on it, not one Proſecution. There is no Inſtance of any Law neceſſary to be enforced but as far as Juſtice will admit, no ſuch Inſinuation as this ſhould paſs in the World, for the Encouragement of People to offend; but it muſt do it in an effectual Manner, if they are perſuaded that the Law is not in Being. My Lord, a great deal hath been ſaid on the Learning and Doctrine of Innuendoes; there hath not been a ſolemn Caſe of the Learning of Innuendoes as was thought material, but hath been quoted, as though ſome Occaſion was given for it by this Proſecution. The Gentlemen have thought themſelves intitled to draw in all that hath been ſaid on this Head, tho' there is not the leaſt Foundation, on this Proſecution, to take any Notice of any Thing that hath, in former Times, been condemned on the Account of Innuendoes; the Office of an Innuendo is no more than to explain, no more than a Predict; but if in an expreſs Averment in the Body of the Indictment, the Innuendo is put there to explain that Averment; in ſuch a Caſe, there never was a Time or Inſtance that any Hardſhip was imputed to make an Innuendo, nor any ill Conſequence; now, my Lord, there are two Averments, that he the Priſoner by printing the Libel in the Indictment de & concernen' the Perſon deſcribed by the Statute to be the Prince of Wales, and of and concerning the Crown of theſe Realms; the Innuendoes following relate to theſe two Facts expreſly averred: Will theſe Gentlemen ſay, this is making a wrong Uſe of an Innuendo? No, it is not; this Uſe of Innuendoes hath been juſtified by the ſame Authority that condemns them.

It lies upon this; and what the Jury are to try, is, whether upon the Evidence, they are not neceſſary and fully proved by the Libel itſelf. As to the firſt, who is this Chevalier, how then comes it by an Innuendo? I believe, my Lord, it won't be pretended in any Caſe (the Caſe of any Civil Action), that the Perſon to be found guilty of High-Treaſon on this Act of Parliament, cannot be convicted unleſs he made uſe of the ſame Terms, the ſame Words, as are in the Act of Parliament. My Lords, there is no Colour, no Pretence to ſay it; if there be ſuch a Deſcription of the Perſon in the Libel; that the Jury on their Oaths, who are to conſider on it, cannot but neceſſarily believe, cannot otherwiſe believe but to be the Perſon, that is ſufficient.

That this is ſo is moſt apparent, from the Solemnity of the Chevalier's Birth, the moral Impoſſibility of putting an Impoſter on the Nation, and the Diſappointment in the Attempt of proving him ſo, I think is Demonſtration, &c. If this doth not mean the Pretender, I would be glad if they had told us, who it is. Is it not notorious, that theſe are Circumſtances that relate to the Perſon pretending to a Right to the Crown of theſe Realms? That thus to deſcribe him doth not amount to a ſufficient Deſcription, Nobody that reads it can doubt, though the Name uſed in the Act of Parliament is not followed; it goes on, And the great Opinion all Courts have of this unfortunate Prince's Virtues, ſhews he only wants to be known by us to be admired, that we only want the Enjoyment of him to make us happy. What other Prince is it? Who is it? Can it be ſuggeſted to be any body elſe here meant but the Pretender? What is the Concluſion of the Libel? The maintaining that ſuch and ſuch Perſons are Jacobites, and an Innuendo to that, that was not objected to; but if the Subject of this Libel be true, that he hath an hereditary Right, a Right by the Voice of the People, and as it is a limited Monarchy, then they muſt own his Title: The Title of whom? Of the Perſon that ſtiles himſelf King James the Third. That plainly ſhews who it is that is meant in the former Part of the Libel; and that this hath relation to the Crown of theſe Realms. I muſt ſay, it can relate to nothing elſe; the Buſineſs is to prove the Right: Whether it be hereditary, by the Voice of the People, or a limited Monarchy. The Concluſion of the Libel is to admoniſh the People to throw off this arbitrary Government, and not be ignorant of their Strength; theſe are Averments the Jury are to enquire into, and the Innuendoes are not ſtrained, but plain, and ſuch as ariſe on the reading of the Libel; and ſuch as the Gentlemen themſelves have not been able to invent any other Conſtruction for. They ſay, here is no direct Averment. Mr. Hungerford hath endeavoured to make ſome Difference between maintaining and affirming; he is proving Arguments and drawing Concluſions; is this maintaining and affirming? Here is maintaining by Arguments, by Proof, by ſuch as the Libel ſays amounts to a Demonſtration: Say they, here is no poſitive affirming? What is the firſt Part of the Libel? If hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he has that to plead in his Favour. Mr. Hungerford ſays the Sentence begins with an If, and is no Affirmation at all; and he ſays it cannot amount to an Affirmation, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of theſe Realms; but I apprehend the neceſſary Senſe muſt be, he hath that, he hath ſuch a Right to plead in his Favour. The Aſſertion is, If hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he hath that to plead in his Favour; ſo here is more than a plain Aſſertion, he hath that to plead to convince others, that he hath this Right.

My Lord, if that won't do, what is the Concluſion? The Chevalier being endowed with all princely Virtues, ſo that all Rights concur in him; Is not that an affirming, the ſtrongeſt Way of affirming by Concluſions from Premiſſes? So that all Rights concur in him, as well all other Rights as a Right to the Crown; they would have it relate to princely Virtues; that all Rights, that is, all princely Virtues concur in him.

My Lord, it is impoſſible there can be more full, direct, poſitive affirming of ſuch a Right in this Libel, than both theſe Aſſertions import.

My Lord, I don't remember any Thing elſe I think neceſſary to trouble your Lordſhip with. My Lord, I ſay, theſe are all, at leaſt the moſt material Objections that have been made by the Gentlemen of the other Side, to the Proof we have given in order to bring this Crime within the Act of Parliament. Whether this Act was temporary, and determined upon the Death of the late Queen, and the Eſtabliſhment of the Succeſſion in the Houſe of Hanover, I am willing to go into that Queſtion now, if your Lordſhip and the Court think fit to give your Opinion: if not, I am ſure the Gentlemen that ſpeak after me, will ſupply any Thing that I have omitted.——

My Lord, I apprehend this is a concluſive Evidence againſt the Priſoner, as to the Fact charged, that he by printing, maliciouſly, adviſedly, and directly maintained and affirmed, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of theſe Realms; not in the very expreſs Words of the Act of Parliament, no more was it neceſſary to make uſe of the Word Pretender, but in Terms that amounted to that, and can bear no other Conſtruction than that he hath maintained and affirmed, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of theſe Realms.

Mr. Serjeant Cheſhire. My Lord, I beg Leave to make ſome few Obſervations on what the Gentlemen on the other Side have ſaid; and the firſt Objection that they make is, that this is a Proſecution on a Law, which is determined on the Demiſe of the late Queen, and by his Majeſty's happy Acceſſion to the Throne, and the Government taking place in the Houſe of Hanover; the Reaſon of the Act hath taken Effect, and therefore the Act ceaſes. For my Part, I think it was very becoming Mr. Attorney General to take notice of it; but to dwell on that Matter, as if it deſerved an Anſwer, I think will be unbecoming me. What would be the Conſequence, but to let any villainous Libeller be at Liberty to treat his Majeſty as an Uſurper? To call out on the People, how long will they be ignorant of their Strength? To ſuppoſe this, is to ſuppoſe the Act of Parliament ſo very weak, that it doth not become me any farther to debate it.——Therefore I forbear to purſue it any farther.

There ſeems to be three other Things I beg Leave to take Notice of: They ſay we have not proved the Charge, there is an Inconſiſtency in the Evidence, and the Facts are not proved. I ſubmit to your Lordſhip, if poſſible, if the Evidence that hath been given in this Caſe won't ſerve, what Evidence can? Can it be expected when a Man is guilty of High-Treaſon, if he prints ſuch a Libel, will call Witneſſes to it, tell them the Contents of it? It is not to be expected, but in a clandeſtine Way to be ſtolen into People's Pockets, and read in Corners; and to expect ſtronger Evidence, is to expect an Evidence of which the Nature of the thing is not capable; if there is the leaſt Weakneſs in the Evidence, they have taken care to ſupply it. As to the calling George Matthews for a Witneſs, if I had been a Friend to the Priſoner, I ſhould have reckoned myſelf very unhappy in ſo doing; can it be otherwiſe, than that natural Inclination ſhould prevail upon him to be very tender in this Point? But this Man hath given the ſtrongeſt Evidence, that if we had not half the Evidence, that would have ſupplied it; doth he not come to the very Day? "The 6th of June, my Birth-day, I met my "Siſter." Firſt he was met by a Woman, ſhe had a great Suſpicion of it; and it was he, that is the Brother, was to deliver the Brother. "My Siſter bid me take care, there was ſomething doing in our Houſe, againſt the Government; I myſelf, upon Examination, had great Reaſon to ſuſpect it." If this was known in the Family, if the Siſter told of it, the Brother examines into it; doth this weaken the King's Evidence, or doth it not ſtrengthen it? Then what he hath written and his Brother hath ſigned, that hath determined it, in the Priſoner's owning and confeſſing it; and what he would verify with his Oath, if required.

But ſuppoſing (ſay they) this Charge is believed to be true, yet the Evidence doth not come up to a Charge of printing. If I took Mr. Hungerford right, he ſaid, a Charge of printing muſt not be on the Man that actually ſerves as an Inſtrument in the Art of Printing; will you ſay this Man is guilty? Yes, every one of them. But ſurely that Man will be ſo that riſes out of his Bed to call theſe Perſons up early, and tells them he hath a Jobb to do, and takes upon him the Office of the black Boy for Expedition, and corrects it with his Pen, bags it up and ſends it away. Is not this Man guilty? I would not have every Compoſer in this caſe be guilty of printing, if it could be ſuppoſed that a Compoſer did not know what it was, which it would be hard to ſuppoſe, becauſe they are Men of Letters; but ſure the Man that from the Original Manuſcript ſet it in the Form, corrects it; it is once wrong, and he makes it right; doth of the one Part one Thouſand, of the other Part one Thouſand; bears ſuch a Share in the Printing as is within this Act of Parliament, or elſe you will have no Offender upon it.

My Lord, in relation to this Indictment, they ſay there muſt be a direct Charge, that he maintained and affirmed that the Pretender hath a Right and Title to the Crown of England; they ſay true; and if there be that Term uſed, by which it is commonly allowed is meant and underſtood the Pretender, we aſked no forced Conſtructions or ſtrained Explanation and unnatural Innuendoes, God forbid we ſhould; we hope and expect, in Juſtice, there will be the ſame Conſtruction of thoſe Words as is uſually given to them, when uſed in Speech in all other Caſes.

I think that what they went upon here, is hereditary Right; and Right to the Crown of this Kingdom is not mentioned in this Libel; there is an Innuendo (Innuendo, jus hereditarium ad coronam hujus regni); be pleaſed to conſider what the Nature of this Thing is; I don't know what the Uſe of Speech is, but to be underſtood.

I don't doubt but every body takes the Chevalier and the Pretender to be the ſame Perſon; then this Perſon, this Chevalier, whoſe Birth was ſo ſolemn that it was a moral Impoſſibility of putting an Impoſtor on the Nation, and hath perſonal Virtues and Endowments, that we only want an Opportunity to know him to admire him, and only want the Enjoyment of him to make us happy; Now what one Perſon in the World can make the People of England happy but the King?

But pleaſe to conſider, when they ſpeak of Right, the Subject-matter muſt needs be a Right and Title to the Government and Crown of England. Say they, in three Remarks, whether it be hereditary Right, the Voice of the People, what Right the Voice of the People gives; and the third Remark is, limited Monarchy; what can that be applied to, but a Kingdom, when it is affirmed that the Pretender hath all theſe Rights? That, Gentlemen, I do rely upon, is an expreſs affirming and atteſting, that he hath all theſe Rights, and conſequently a Right to the Crown of theſe Realms.

Mr. Lutwych. My Lord, I ſhall trouble your Lordſhip with ſaying but very little: The Priſoner hath been ſo unfortunate, by his Defence, to ſtrengthen and confirm our Evidence. I ſhall only mention two or three Things inſiſted upon by the Gentlemen of the other Side, by way of Objection; the one was, and particularly by Mr. Hungerford, that it is not every mechanical Writing or Printing which is an Offence againſt this Act of Parliament: The Perſon, ſays he, is a Servant, an Apprentice, employed in this Trade of Printing, and is not as a Printer within this Act of Parliament: Surely a Printer may be within this Act of Parliament: But I muſt ſubmit it, on the Nature of the Caſe, it doth not appear he acted as a Servant, but as a Maſter; acted ſo throughout the whole Affair; paid the other People their Wages; received the Copy himſelf, and undertook the whole Buſineſs, tranſacting it all. This is what the Evidence prove, that he aſſiſted in every Act of printing; therefore, as to the Art of Printing, if that is an Excuſe becauſe it is a Trade, and ſo not within this Act of Parliament, if the Printer won't diſcover the Author, Nobody can be convicted on this Act. As to the Caſe of the Innuendoes, we muſt ſubmit that to your Lordſhip, whether there is not a poſitive Aſſertion, which the Jury are to try, whether the printing de & concernen' the Perſon mentioned in the Indictment, is not printing de & concernen' the Pretender; this being left to the Jury, you have a fair and equal Trial, whether this Perſon in the Indictment, is intended by him or no. I don't know how any Indictment can be framed, unleſs a Man takes this Method; it is impoſſible that any Libel ſhould be formed ſo, to have every Word of the Act of Parliament in it: Then it is proper to bring it in, in this uſual Method, by Innuendoes; I take it, without theſe Innuendoes; and if he hath printed de & concernen' a Right to the Crown of theſe Realms; and that is brought in by an Innuendo a Right to the Crown of theſe Realms; and that Matter being found by the Jury, that this Paper is printed de & concernen' ſuch a Right, that Matter of Fact being ſo found, and we apprehend there is ſufficient Evidence for it, nothing ſo poſitively aſſerted; where is there any forced Conſtructions occaſioned by the Innuendoes? as to ſay, when all Rights concur in him, is to ſay he hath a Right to thoſe Virtues; that is very unintelligible to me, and ſeems to be a ſtrained Conſtruction indeed: We ſubmit it to your Lordſhip on the whole Matter, whether we have not plainly proved the Priſoner at the Bar to be guilty of this Indictment; the reſt of the Matters we muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Direction.

Lord Chief Juſtice. One thing I muſt mention to you, whether or no this Clauſe of the Act of Parliament is in force? You ſay, the Act is temporary, and determined upon the Demiſe of the late Queen, and the Eſtabliſhment of the Succeſſion in the Houſe of Hanover.

Mr. Hungerford. I did not ſay it was temporary, I did ſubmit it whether it was calculated for ſuch a Caſe as the Priſoner's is ſuppoſed to be.

Lord Chief Juſtice. If one Part is calculated for the Queen during her Life, ſo the other Part is calculated for the Pretender as long as he lives; there is as much reaſon to calculate the one for the Life of the Pretender, as the other for the Life of the Queen: If you think there is any Doubt in it, I muſt deſire the Opinion of my Brethren.

Mr. Hungerford, and Mr. Ketelbey. No, my Lord, we had never any ſuch Thought of it, nor don't inſiſt upon it.

Lord Chief Juſtice King. Gentlemen of the Jury, this hath been a long Evidence; I will endeavour to ſtate the Matter as well as I can. I hope I ſhall not miſtake; if I do, my Brothers will ſet me right.

Gentlemen, This is an Indictment upon a Statute made in the Time of the late Queen. It is an Act intituled, An Act for the Security of her Majeſty's Perſon and Government, and of the Succeſſion to the Crown of Great Britain in the Proteſtant Line. By that Act it is enacted, "That if any "Perſon or Perſons from and after the 25th Day of March 1706, ſhould "maliciouſly, adviſedly, and directly, by Writing or Printing, maintain "and affirm, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen, that now is, is not "the lawful and rightful Queen of theſe Realms; or that the pretended "Prince of Wales, who now ſtiles himſelf King of Great Britain, or "King of England, by the Name of James the IIId, or King of Scotland by "the Name of James the VIIIth, hath any Right or Title to the Crown "of theſe Realms; or that any other Perſon or Perſons hath or have any "Right or Title to the ſame, otherwiſe than according to an Act of Par-"liament made in England, in the firſt Year of the Reign of their late "Majeſties King William and Queen Mary, of ever bleſſed and glorious "Memory, intituled, An Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, "and ſettling the Succeſſion of the Crown; and one other Act made in England "in the 12th Year of the Reign of his ſaid late Majeſty King William "the IIId, intituled, An Act for the further Limitation of the Crown and better "ſecuring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject; and the Acts lately made "in England and Scotland mutually for the Union of the two Kingdoms; "or that the Kings or Queens of the Realm with and by the Authority "of Parliament are not able to make Laws and Statutes of ſufficient Force "and Validity to limit and bind the Crown, and the Deſcent, Limita-"tion, Inheritance, and Government thereof; every ſuch Perſon or "Perſons ſhall be guilty of High-Treaſon, and being thereof lawfully "convicted, ſhall be adjudged Traytors, and ſhall ſuffer Pains of Death, "and all Loſſes and Forfeitures as in Caſes of High-Treaſon."

I mention only that Branch of the Statute, becauſe the Indictment is only on that Branch.

Gentlemen, this Indictment ſets forth, That the Priſoner at the Bar, that he, as a falſe Traytor to our Sovereign Lord the King, after this 25th March 1706, to wit, the 10th Day of June in the 5th Year of the Reign of our now Lord the King, at London, in the Pariſh of St. Botolph without Aldersgate, in a certain falſe and treaſonable Libel, which he the ſaid John Matthews then and there maliciouſly, adviſedly and traitorouſly printed, intituled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, of and concerning the Perſon in the Life-time of King James the Second, late King of England, &c. pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and after the Deceaſe of the ſaid late King pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf, the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third, and of and concerning his Right to the Crown of Great Britain, he did maliciouſly, adviſedly, directly and traitorouſly declare, maintain and affirm, in one Part thereof, in theſe Words, That from the Solemnity of the Chevalier's (meaning the Pretender's) Birth, the moral Impoſſibility of putting an Impoſtor upon the Nation after the manner pretended, and the Diſappointment in the Attempt of proving him ſo, I think it's Demonſtration, if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he has that to plead in his Favour; and all Aſſertors of limited Monarchy muſt allow, that ought to be preferred, if the Perſon having it is endowed with other Qualities fit to govern; and the great Opinion all Courts have of this Prince's Virtues ſhews, he only wants to be known by us to be admired; and we only want the Enjoyment of him to make us happy; and in another Part thereof, in theſe Words, I (meaning himſelf the ſaid John Matthews) will conclude with three Remark. Firſt, That every Aſſertor of Hereditary Right muſt be a Jacobite. Secondly, That every Whig that makes Vox Populi his Rule of Government muſt be ſo. Thirdly, Every Aſſertor of limited Monarchy muſt be ſo; the Chevalier (meaning the Pretender) being endowed with all princely Virtues, ſo that all Rights concur in him. There is another part of the Indictment generally, that he, the ſaid John Matthews, the ſame Day and Year, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, in the ſame Libel, maliciouſly, adviſedly and traitorouſly did declare, maintain and affirm, that the Perſon in the Life-time of James the Second, late King of England, pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and after the Deceaſe of the ſaid late King pretending to be, and taking upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England by the Name of James the Third, hath a Right to the Crown of Great Britain.

This is the Indictment wherewith the Priſoner is charged: Now whether he be guilty or no, that you are to inquire on the Evidence that hath been given. In order to make out this Charge, the firſt Witneſs that is called was John Hutchins; the Subſtance of his Evidence was, That in the Morning he came to the Printing-houſe of his Mother Mrs. Matthews; he ſays, one Thomas Roberts went with him; that the Priſoner at the Bar was in Bed; that Thomas Roberts ſeized his Pockets, and he ſee him take out two Papers, which he delivered to him; he ſays, there were other Papers in the ſame Room, and likewiſe in another Room, and he went into that Room, and in a Box there he found other Papers; ſome were found in the Room where he lay, others in another Room, but which were in the one and which in the other, that he can't positively say; they were found in the one or in the other; and he asked the Prisoner at the Bar, whether they were his?——He says, he owned them all to be his. He says, within two Hours after he put his Mark upon them, and he is sure these are the self-same Papers. Afterwards, when he was sent to Newgate, a pretty while afterwards he says to him, You must go to Newgate. What, says he, must I go to Newgate? Upon that he advised him to tell who was the Author of the Libel. The Answer he made was, I know I shall be hanged; I have nothing to do but let my Money fly to get a good Jury.—— This is the Substance of that Evidence, both upon the Examination and the Gross-examination. The next Witness is Thomas Roberts; he swears he was with Hutchins; and he says, he went into the Room before Hutchins, and he secured the Sword which laid upon the Coat, and then he secured the Pockets, and Hutchins went into another Room and brought out some Papers: He says, afterwards they took up the other People, the Prisoners: They could not go all in one Coach; he went in one, and Hutchins in another. Then you have it from him that they marked them; and he is positive they are those Papers that were found upon him. As for these Papers, what they are, I will give you an Account when the Papers come to be read. He was asked about the Papers taken out of his Pocket; he says he gave them to Hutchins: As for those two Libels taken out of his Pocket, he swears positively when he came into the Room he was in Bed, and he took them out of his Pocket. He was asked as to the Proof-sheets, and the several Papers produced, and he swears to them all. He says, the 9th September afterwards, when they had Orders to carry him to Newgate, when he came into his Room, the Prisoner asked him if he was going to Newgate? Says he, Is there a Bill found against me? He told him there was a Bill found against him of High-Treason. He said he deserved to be hanged, and he had nothing to do but to let the Money fly to get a good Jury; but as for those who set him to Work, they were ungrateful Dogs, and good for nothing except over a Bottle of Wine or a Pot of Beer.——These are the Witnesses that prove the finding of these Libels and the other Papers in the Custody of the Prisoner, and the Prisoner's owning them.

The next Witnesses were to prove the Printing of them. There are two Witnesses called, William Harper and Lawrence Vezey. William Harper is an Apprentice to Mrs. Matthews. He says, on a Saturday Morning, which was the 6th of June, about four o'Clock in the Morning, the Prisoner called him up; he knew he called him up for printing this Paper, because, he said, the Day before he heard him say he had a Jobb to do: When he came up, he found Lawrence Vezey there, and he saw the Prisoner, and he helped the Prisoner and Vezey to work off this Libel. He remembers the Composing Part of the Paper, and he saw the Prisoner at the Bar compose Part of the Paper now produced, and the Manuscript did lie before him; and that he composed Part of it, but whether all he cannot tell; but says, he composed Part, the Manuscript lying before him; and he believes the Papers now produced are the same.

There is likewise another Paper produced, which is wrong imposed: Now the wrong imposed Paper was found upon him. He says, there was a Sheet wrong imposed, and the Prisoner at the Bar came up and told him he had transposed the Pages, and he must alter it; afterwards it was right imposed; he saw it when it was wrong, and afterwards when it was right imposed, and the Prisoner at the Bar did it; he says, that as they printed them, the Prisoner at the Bar took them off the Press, and there was nigh a Thousand printed, and they had done about eight or nine o'Clock in the Morning; and then the Prisoner bundled them up, and carried them out of the Printing-Room, and said one staid for them. He says, to the best of his Belief, the Paper now produced was printed off at that Time; he knows no other Paper printed then; he says, he at that Time read the Title, and that is all.

Gentlemen, He was asked upon his Cross-examination, whose this Printing-House was? He says, it is Mrs. Matthews's; but the Prisoner, who is her Son, always carries himself as Master; and he doth not know whose Hand-writing this Manuscript is.

Then there is another, the next Witness, Lawrence Vezey; he swears, That he belonged to Mrs. Matthews's Printing-House; he came there in June last, in order to go to Work: When he was in the Court-Yard, he called out, William, who was the Apprentice; who opened his Window and told him the Door was open: Upon that he went into the Press-Room, and while he was there his Master the Prisoner came up and told him, he had a Jobb to do; that he afterwards went to Market; that in the mean time, when he came back, there was a Form composed of Vox Populi Vox Dei; who composed it he can't tell; but the Prisoner told him, he had transposed the Pages, and he took it out of the Form, and lays it on the Stone, and transposed it right. He laid it on the Press, and the Prisoner pulled it off himself, the Proof that was right.——That a Morning or two afterwards he came again, and then they worked off the Impression, and they printed about a Thousand of each; and after the Jobb was done, he received fourteen Shillings for Harper's Share and his own; Harper owed him Money, and so he kept all upon his own Account. The Proof-sheets are produced, and he upon the View of them says, they are the same. He says, one of the Papers is wrong imposed; he never read the Book; but, on his Cross-examination, he says, there is a Line at the Top, and a Flower over that. He was asked, whether he knew George Matthews? He says he doth, but he never saw him since he was taken and carried up by the Messengers.

There are two other Witnesses called to give their Opinion of Printing: You hear from both of them, that these are the Proof-sheets, or revised Sheets, which are in effect the same; and that appears from the Amendments upon them; and one of them is right imposed, and the other of them is wrong imposed. Having made this Way for the Reading this Libel, and the Papers found in his Pocket, they are produced; and the Libel that was found in his Pocket hath been read, and I believe they will consent on both Sides, that you shall have the Libel with you, when you go out to consider of your Verdict. There are two of them produced, and in those Libels all these Words as laid in the Indictment are there; the Beginning of the Libel is laid in the Indictment, and the latter Part: There is a Clause in the latter End not laid in the Indictment. There are likewise produced two Proof-sheets, of which, all the Witnesses say, there is a Sheet right imposed, and a Sheet wrong imposed, which they think to be the same the Prisoner worked off: Then there are eight or ten superfluous Half-sheets. Mr. Darby says, it is impossible to make the Half-sheets agree, so as that there must be superfluous Half-sheets. In these Libels there are contained all these Words that are in the Indictment.

Now to fix this Fact on the Prisoner, they have produced Mr. Delafay and Mr. Buckley. Mr. Delafay, he says, that these Papers now produced are the Papers which the Messengers swore they took upon him; and when he was examined touching these Papers, he owned them to be his, and the Papers then lay before him on a Table, and he owned that these Papers were taken from him; and as to answering any other Questions, he was shy. Afterwards he was brought before the Lords Justices; the Brother gives you an Account how that happened. When he was brought before the Lords Justices he was told, that he was charged, with two other Persons then named, with printing such a Paper; the Answer he gave was, So it seems. He was asked, how he came to be concerned in such a Business? He said, it was Necessity. He was asked, who was the Author? but he would not tell. This was the first Time. He says some time afterwards, upon a Letter received from the Prisoner, he was brought before the Lords Justices again; he told them a foolish Story, but would not tell who was the Author: On the Evidence of Mr. Delafay, I did not think it Ground sufficient to read the Letter, though it was afterwards sufficiently proved by an Evidence he called himself.—— Mr. Buckley, all he says is, that he was present at the first Examination; he says, when the Messengers brought these Papers, and laid them down on Mr. Delafay's Table, he asked him whether these Papers were his? He said they were. I asked him how he came by them? He refused to tell me. He says he told him, You are charged with printing these Papers, which is a great Crime; he made no Answer, but took Snuff. This is the Substance of the Evidence given for the King against the Prisoner at the Bar. Now, on the other Side, what is insisted on by him and the Counsel for him are several Things; some Points in Law, and several Points of Fact. The first is, that this Law was temporary; that is over, and is so plain they did not think fit to insist upon it. The other is, that supposing the Matter contained in the Indictment to be proved upon him, it is not High-Treason within this Act of Parliament; that it is not to be supported against him, but by these Innuendoes.

Now, Gentlemen, as to that, I do agree with what the Counsel for the Prisoner say, that by an Innuendo you shall not put a Meaning upon a Man which is not his. This is not the Case: The Case here is a positive Charge, that the Book he wrote relates to the pretended Prince of Wales; and the Matter of Fact you are to try is, whether it is so or no.

Now as to that the Objection is, you can't understand what is meant by the Chevalier to relate to him, from the Solemnity of the Chevalier's Birth, and the other Things which follow.

I take it as to that, we are to understand it as all Mankind do. You are to consider, whether that Book is written concerning the pretended Prince of Wales, and his Right to the Crown; therefore the first Consideration is, whether this Libel is written concerning the Pretender, and his Right and Title to the Crown of England, then all these Innuendoes signify nothing; for the Innuendo relates to a Thing that is proved. Now, Gentlemen, it is not said, nor the Counsel for the Prisoner don't any way shew who else it is applicable to, or whose Right it is concerning.

That is the Matter of Fact you are to consider: Is it possible for Men of common Understanding and Sense to imagine, that this Right is concerning any body else but the Pretender? If so, then the Defendant will be acquitted.

Therefore the first Part of your Consideration will be, whether this Libel relates to the Pretender, and his Title to the Crown of England; as to the Words themselves, they do not appear in the Indictment; the Treason is, to affirm that the Pretender hath any Right whatsoever to the Crown of these Realms; and therefore, as to the affirming that, say they, it doth not appear in the Indictment.

Then the next Consideration will be, whether or no the Prisoner at the Bar hath printed it. It is Printing, and declaring by Printing, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of these Realms.——They say, Printing is a mechanical Art; but if nobody else appears to you to be the Printer, and if People will use dangerous Arts, they must use them lawfully, how mechanical soever; or if he caused it to be printed, that makes no Odds.

The first Witness they call is George Matthews. Brother to the Prisoner at the Bar. He says, he remembers very well, the more exact because it was his Birth-day, as he was going to his Mother's House, his Sister met him, and told him something was printing in his Mother's House; that he examined Vezey and Harper both in his Closet privately, and publickly before the rest of the People, and asked them, whether they or his Brother had printed any Libel against the Government? They told him, No, they had not; this is what they told him. He says, his Brother is a young Man, that you see he is; he was an Apprentice to his Mother. Then he gives you an Account of the Manner of their Printing.

He was cross-examined concerning this Letter, which Mr. Delafay did speak to, but could not prove: He says, he went Home and drew a Letter, and after he had drawn it, he made some Amendments of his own. It was the common Vogue that his Brother was the Printer. Upon this he went to Newgate to carry this to his Brother; his Brother came to the Grate, and he gave it to him thro' the Grate, and in six or eight Minutes Time he brought it, and delivered it to him again, with his Name signed to it; and he believes this is his Brother's Hand-writing: That proves the Letter to be his, and makes it Evidence. The Letter being read, the Purport of the Letter is this: "I John Matthews, being heartily sorry "for the Crime I have been guilty of against his most Sacred Majesty "King George, and his Administration, and from a thorough Conviction "of my Errors, and unfeigned Contrition for them:" There he professes his hearty Sorrow for his Errors and Offence; then it follows, "I do "hereby make the following Declaration and Confession, that the Libel "now in Question was given me by one John Broderick, as also "the Money for printing of it; and further I declare, that the said "John Broderick took the foul Proofs of the Paper aforesaid from me "in

"in order to correct them; and when they were printed fetched them "away."——

This Mr. George Matthews, though produced as an Evidence for the Prisoner at the Bar, they now make use of him as a further Evidence, that the Prisoner at the Bar was the Printer of this Libel, as he acknowledges that he received it from Broderick, and received of him Money for printing of it; he acknowledges likewise, that he had three Guineas the Day he printed it, and seven Guineas afterwards of the said Broderick.——

Then as to Vezey's Character---they call Thomas Tovie: he hath known him a Year and a Half, and can give him no Character good or bad. Then they call Mr. Mott; he says, he never was but once in his Company; he knows nothing of his Character. Then they call William Boden; he says, last Monday was Se'nnight he saw Vezey, and he told him he was an Evidence in this Cause, and he had been with the Mother of the Prisoner at the Bar, and told her, if she would give him Money he would keep out of the way; that he went to St. Albans, and staid there nine Days, and no Money coming, he came in; and was a Witness on the other Side.

By way of Reply, they call two Witnesses to support Vezey's Character, Robert Bentley and Robert Procter: They believe him to be an honest Man, and never heard any Ill of him.

This is the Substance of the Evidence that hath been given on both Sides.

Gentlemen, you are upon this to consider, whether the Prisoner at the Bar hath maliciously, advisedly, and directly declared, maintained, and affirmed, by Printing, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of Great Britain.

The Words in the Indictment seem very sufficient, supposing it relates to that Matter, that he hath a Right, and all Rights do concur in him.

Now, in the first Place, you are to consider, whether, by the Words contained in the Libel, is meant the Pretender, and that he hath a Right to the Crown of England: you are to consider, it is not necessary to have the same Name in the Indictment as in the Act of Parliament; but you are to consider, whether the Person in the Libel, that is called the Chevalier, and is the Person spoken of in the Libel, and the Person called the Pretender in the Act of Parliament, be not the same, and the Person commonly called the Pretender; and whether that Libel doth declare, that he hath a Right and Title to the Crown of England. This is the first thing for your Consideration.

In the next place, supposing that to be so, the next Thing is, whether he hath done it maliciously and advisedly. The Fact implies Malice; and the doing of a Thing advisedly, is doing it with thinking. The Witnesses say, for several Days they were desired to assist him.——

Upon the whole, if it shall appear to you, that the Prisoner at the Bar hath printed this Libel, or caused it to be printed; and that by this Libel, he hath maliciously, advisedly and directly maintained and affirmed, that the Pretender hath any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms; then he is guilty of the Indictment, otherwise you must acquit him.

[The Jury withdrew, and after a short Stay, returned and brought in the Prisoner GUILTY.]

Attorney General. My Lord, I humbly pray the Judgment of the Court against the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I humbly hope that your Lordship will not proceed to give Judgment upon this Indictment, but that Judgment shall be arrested.

If it shall appear to your Lordship, that the Offence made High-Treason by this Act is not described in the Indictment with such a Certainty as the Law doth require, then in consequence there is no Offence; and if so, there can be no Offender. I take it to be a Rule in Law, that where a Latin Word hath several Meanings, or doth denote several Things, and in the Indictment or Declaration it is intended that it shall import one single Sense or Meaning only; in order to restrain it to that single Meaning, it must be assisted with an Anglicè; this was the Rule the Judges went by in the case of Hexam and Coniers, four Jacobi secundi, 3 Modern, Folio 238. where an Ejectment was brought de uno Tenemento. This was adjudged naught, though after a Verdict; because the Word Tenementum signified several Things, in truth every thing that can be held, as Titles, Advowson, an Office, an House, and under that Head, any Sort of Houses, a Brewhouse, &c.

And now, to apply this to the present Case: The Thing made Treason by the Act is Writing or Printing; the Charge upon the unfortunate Youth at the Bar is, that he impressit such a Libel; which Word, with humble Submission, doth not necessarily import Printing, unless explained by an Anglicè, for the Word impressit may signify several Things besides Printing; as Sealing, Stamping, and is usually made use of to signify these things. If I were to say that such a one stamped a Book, I should say he impressit Libellum; and the common Language of Attorneys in their Bills, where they charge the Stamp-duty is, pro Impressione regali, &c. And as to the original Meaning of the Word, it could never be taken to express Printing: The Romans had no Printing; and where they had not the Thing, they could not have the Appellation proper for it; for Things were before Words, which are but the Signs of them: wherefore I humbly hope, that Judgment will be arrested in this Case, and the rather, for the Reason that was given by the Judges in Griffith's Case, that an Indictment being a Declaration at the Suit of the King, against the Life of a Subject, ought to set forth a sufficient Certainty of the Fact.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, the last Service we can do for our unfortunate Client is, to move in Arrest of Judgment; and if the Words inserted in the Indictment to set forth the Substance, the very Gist of the Treason, are uncertain, and do not sufficiently denote the Offence intended to be charged; this is the proper Time, as we apprehend, to take advantage of that Defect.

My Lord, this Word impressit is an equivocal Word, of different Significations, imports several Senses in English; and though we should admit that it likewise signifies to print, yet if it equally signifies other Things, if no Latin Word be added to it to restrain, nor any Anglicè to explain the Sense of it, we hope your Lordship will not proceed to Judgment upon this Indictment; and in this Case more especially, since Printing is essential to the Offence of which the Prisoner is found Guilty; and some of the Significations of this Word impressit are criminal, and others not criminal within this Act of Parliament: And for this I shall only cite the common known Case of an Action of Trover de uno Pullo without any Latin Adjective or Anglicè; there the Declaration has been held to be naught, for the Uncertainty, even after a Verdict; and we apprehend the Objection will hold much stronger in an Indictment for High-Treason, and that an Anglicè, or some other proper Latin Word, ought to have been annexed, to pin down the Word impressit to that Sense only, which the Act of Parliament hath made criminal.

But, my Lord, I shall beg leave to go a little further, and to observe upon the Word imprimo, that it doth not, nor can signify Printing at all: Imprimo is a classical Word, and as such cannot properly signify Printing, which is a modern Invention, never known in the World 'till many hundred Years after the Word Imprimo had obtained its just and determinate Sense; but if they will have a Latin Word for Printing, without the Assistance of an Anglicè, it must be by such Phrases as will import that, and that only; such as the best modern Latinists have made use of to express their Sentiments, when they treat of that Subject.

This is what we have to offer to your Lordship against the Word Impressit, and hope it will be thought sufficient to arrest the Judgment.

Attorney General. My Lord, I do not know how this Motion comes to be made now, after the Opinion given by your Lordship. If this be any thing, it is improper Latin; that is, it is not a Word proper to denote what is intended to be expressed in this Indictment; that is the Meaning of this Objection, which should have been made before Plea pleaded and Evidence given, and not moved in arrest of Judgment, according to the Statute for regulating of Trials in Cases of High-Treason: That if the Word impressit or impressione is not a proper Word to denote Printing, which is the Amount of this Objection, they are not entitled to take Advantage of this as improper Latin now after Plea pleaded and Issue joined. What I shall say (still denying they are right in Time, but to satisfy the Gentlemen and Mankind) in answer to this Objection, is, if it had been made before Plea pleaded, there is not the least Colour in it, whatsoever Signification the Word may have, taken abstractedly; if it be a classical Word, and was before the Invention of Printing, which was but four or five hundred Years ago, I believe Nobody that is acquainted with the Latin Language, but will allow that the Usage of two or three hundred Years will give a Sanction and Signification to any Word, though it hath been applied to a Fact not at that Time used; therefore imprimatur liber is as much known of all Men of Literature, all Bodies of Literature, to mean that that Book shall be printed, as any Latin Word whatsoever is known what it means. Let them look into any Books licensed by any of the Universities, what is it but imprimatur by the Archbishop? what is it but imprimatur by the Secretaries of State, or any other Person? Is there any other Word made use of but imprimatur, when any Trial hath been printed by the Authority of your Lordships the Judges, the Word is used there; look into a Law-book, have they not seen it signed with the Word imprimatur under the Authority of all your Lordships the Judges? What can give more Sanction than the Opinion of all the Judges to the proper Use of this Word? What other Word is there for the denoting of Printing? Why, my Lord, imprimatur libellum, it is the joining of it to libellum, diversifies it from any other Meaning, however indefinite, or, as they say, equivocal, the Word is; it is according to the Subject-matter to which it is applied: If to a Book, it is to be applied to the printing of that Book. Is this the first Time this Word impressit was ever used in an Indictment? I appeal to every Record, whether ever any other Word was used, or Anglicè put to it, but the Subject-matter it was applied to? I say still, they are in the right to do every good Office to serve their Client; but they have mistaken their Season; they are excluded by the Words of the Act of Parliament, and the Opinion of your Lordship. But still I insist, this is the constant Opinion of the Use and Application of this Word, by Men of the Law, without making Use of any Anglicè, by all Men of Literature and Bodies of Literature; if all these Experiences can give a Sanction to the Use of that Word, we have that to justify us in making use of the Word here.

Serjeant Cheshire. I perceive the Gentlemen don't say this is an improper Latin Word, because they know then this is not a proper Time to offer it in arrest of Judgment: But, be that as it will, I beg leave to insist upon it that it is a proper Latin Word, and properly applied; and I would beg leave to consider, whether Words that may be capable of several Significations, when applied to Particulars, may not be understood what they mean, without any Anglicè? If I mistake not, Liber, that very Word may be capable of four Significations: It signifies Bacchus, it signifies free, it signifies a Book, and it signifies the Bark of a Tree. Now, imprimere hunc librum, would any body think this improper without saying imprimere hunc librum, anglicè this Book? Therefore, admitting impressit could be capable of other Significations to many Purposes, yet when it is impressit libellum, it must be understood to be Printing; as when it is imprimere hunc librum, they should say they don't mean a Book, but impressit the Bark of a Tree ——I think this Objection is so contemptible, that it ought not to have a further Answer.

Mr. Lutwych. My Lord, as to the Time, I only beg leave to mention the Clause in the Act of Parliament; that gives him the Liberty of having Counsel, and Copy of the Indictment, and several other Privileges; therefore, as this Law hath given him these Privileges, which they had not before, it comes in by way of Proviso, and takes away this Part of the Advantage they had before, that they shall not take Advantage of any Miswriting, Mis-spelling, false or improper Latin, after Plea pleaded and Evidence given: So that they are out of Time, as they have had the Advantage of this Act of Parliament, if it depended singly on that Matter. As to the Notion of the Word impressit being improper, I believe somebody would have lit on this Objection before, if any thing in it; for it hath been the constant Method to use this Word impressit, to signify printed, without an Anglicè, or any thing like it. I believe the Precedents are all so. We apprehend it is a very vain Objection, and no Weight in it; and therefore we hope no Regard will be had to it.

Mr. Reeves. I must agree, that when imprimo was a Latin Word, it was long before Printing was; but when Printing came to be in use, that Latin Words we see have been improved; and tho' they have signified other things, yet when they come to be applied to particular Circumstances, are improved thereby. Every body knows what that is, when it determines the the Signification of the Word according to the Subject-matter. Nothing is more plain than to determine it not to signify any thing but Printing, to say per prædict' impressionem, he declared and affirmed by Printing; no other Sense can be put on the Word but by Printing; and since it hath gained that use, no other Word is made use of either in legal Proceedings or otherwise; and what other Word can be applicable to this Impressit libellum, but Printing? We humbly hope this is as clear a Case as can be. They admit, if we had added an Anglicè, it would have been proper; I don't know any Anglicè that would have help'd it, taking it to be an improper Word: though, as we apprehend, they are not in proper time to make this Objection; it should have been before Plea pleaded.

Mr. Bootle. Admitting they are in proper Season to make this Objection (which we apprehend they are not), there is nothing in the Objection. This is the new Light that hath sprung up in this Cause. The first Objection was equally of consequence with this; they don't pretend that any other proper Word was used by the Romans; altho' they have used this ever since the use of Printing was found out, as the proper Word to signify Printing.

I believe there is not one Instance to be shewn, wherever any other Word was used to signify the printing of a Libel. They say, it is of an equivocal Sense, and may mean Stamping as well as Printing. In this Case, as the Word impressit is coupled with other Words, it can't mean Stamping—impressit libellum—Is it possible for any Press or Stamp to signify in his Anglicanis verbis? Therefore, to shew how groundless this Objection is, that it is impossible it should have any such Meaning, can a Stamp set forth all these English Words in the Indictment? That he impressit, therefore, must signify that he printed. My Lord, with great Submission, we think it is an Objection taken merely for the sake of Objecting, because driven to the last Extremity. As for the Instance of uno tenemento, and uno pullo, it is not to the purpose; pullo signifies any young, and tenementum is well known in the Law for a very universal Term; therefore it becomes necessary to be explained. This Word can't want any Explanation. Therefore we hope no Regard will be given to this Objection; and pray your Lordship's Judgment against the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, they object to us, in the first Place, that we are improper in point of time as to this Objection; that it ought to have been made before the Prisoner pleaded or Evidence given.—And it is further said, that tho' we were proper in point of time, yet there is nothing in the Objection itself. As to the time of making this Objection, surely, considering the Nature of it, it may be made at any time. The Offence made Treason by the Act of Parliament, is Printing: we say, there is no Word in the Indictment which imports (at least necessarily imports) Printing; and, if so, then consequently there is no Charge of Treason before the Court: and surely, it may be at any time urged, that the Proceeding is null and void, if there be any fatal Error in it whereby to make it so. But the King's Counsel seem to have waived this Objection as to the Impropriety of the Time, by going into the Nature of the Objection itself; and I shall therefore apply myself to what they have said upon that Head.

Mr. Attorney observed, that the Word used in Licensing of Books is Imprimatur, and that Impressit (which is the same Verb in the Active Mood) is the Word used in the Indictment. I will admit it, that Imprimatur is used for licensing the Printing of Books, particularly when Books are licensed by the Universities (and for my Part I wish all Books were licensed by them, I am sure there would then be no Heresy or Treason in them); but generally Licences for Printing are in English: But that which I offer to your Lordship's Consideration in this Matter is, that tho' in an University Imprimatur, a loose or allegorical Word, which may have several Meanings, may be made use of, yet we are now in a Court of Justice, in a criminal Case, in a Case of Life and Death, where if the chief Word which describes the Offence hath various Significations, it shall not be taken in the worst Sense or Meaning, unless restrained to that Sense by an Anglicè.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire, by way of Illustration of what he hath said in this Matter, was pleased to be very critical upon the Word Liber: It signifies, says he, a Book, it signifies Bacchus, it signifies free, and it signifies the Bark of a Tree.

Give me leave, my Lord, to follow him a little in this Criticism. I believe the Word Liber doth not denote so many different things as the very learned Serjeant would seem to intimate. In the very early Ages of the World, before Writing was a common Accomplishment, before Vellum, Parchment, or Paper were found out, People writ upon the inward Rinds or Barks of Trees, which Bark was called Liber; and, from thence, when Parchment or Paper was, in After-ages, writ upon, that was called Liber too: The same Practice hath likewise given Occasion that Codex signifies both the Bark of a Tree, and a Book: As for liber, free, it is always used in an adjective Sense, and a Noun Substantive is always expressed or understood. And as for Liber signifying Bacchus, the Serjeant hath been at Dinner, he hath eat and drank plentifully, I dined with him, and I find he hath forgot part of the Name of Bacchus, for he is called Liber Pater, and not Liber only, that I remember.

But what I insist upon in this Matter, my Lord, is, if a Man were to be charged with Stamping of a Book or Paper; it would be said that he Impressit the Book or Paper; and the Charge against Mr. Dyett for forging the Law-duty-Stamp was in those Words; and since, by the Charge of Impressit Libellum, Stamping (which is not High-Treason) may be as well meant as Printing, unless explained by an Anglicè; I humbly hope Judgment shall be reversed in this Case.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I shall be very short in what I am going to say. It hath been insisted on, that the common Form of licensing Books to be printed, by the Judges, Archbishops and Universities, is by using the Words Imprimatur Liber cui titulus, &c. If any one Instance could have been produced where my Lords the Judges had used that Word in allowing the Printing of any Books, such a Precedent would have stopp'd our Mouths as to this Objection; but I have here in my Hand a large Volume of Trials and other Tracts, that have been licensed, some of them by the Judges, and others by the Secretaries of State, and Lord Mayors; yet the said Imprimatur is not used in any one of them.——All these Licences are in English, and I don't remember any one Law-book that was ever licensed by the Judges in Latin.

I pay all the Respect imaginable to the Archbishops and Bishops, and to what they do; but, as I take it, their Licences are generally signed by their Secretaries or Chaplains: Whether they have any legal Authority for the licensing of Books, or if it amounts to any thing more than a bare Recommendation of the Goodness of a Book, under the Protection of a great Name, I cannot tell; and therefore with the utmost Deference submit it to your Lordship's Judgment, whether any Weight can be laid on those Instances.

The Universities have certainly, at this time, a Right to license Books printed within their respective Jurisdictions, and I believe they generally use the Word Imprimatur, and it is signed by the Chancellor; but this Privilege is of a very late date, it being not many Years since Books were first printed there. I pray God bless the Universities, continue to them their present Authority, and increase it: But we must not admit that the modern Use of a Word, tho' by those learned Bodies, can give such a Sanction to the Sense of it, as to make it a conclusive Answer to our Objection.

Mr. Bootle says, it hath been a Word used ever since Printing was found out, to signify Printing; and that no Information hath been brought for printing a Libel, where that Word hath not been made use of; but he is not pleased to mention any ancient Precedent, nor any Case where this Point hath been judicially determined; Indictments for printing Libels were very rare in former times, and are scarcely to be met with in the old Law-books; lately indeed they have been more frequent, but I believe have not always been drawn by the most skilful Hands; and if some Mistakes in them have been past over in Silence and without an Exception taken to them, we hope a faulty modern Precedent, upon the Rolls in the Crown-Office, shall not have more Weight with it than the Universities.

They are pleased to insist, that we have not the liberty now of making this Objection, as being out of time; because, in the point of false and improper Latin, it ought to have been offered before Plea pleaded: But, my Lord, we must beg leave to put this on a right foot; we don't object it as false and improper Latin; we say there is no Offence charged in the Indictment; the Act of Parliament says it must be by Printing; if they have used a Word that doth not signify Printing, the Indictment cannot be good, this cannot be High Treason; my Lord, we submit it to your Lordship.

The Judges were all of Opinion, that the Objection did not come out of time, because they did not take it for false and improper Latin. But all agreed, the Word Impressit was very proper to signify Printing, as used in the Indictment, and that there was nothing in the Objection.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, there is another Objection, which I humbly take the liberty to make: It is this; the Offence made Treason by this Act of Parliament is, that if any Person shall maliciously, advisedly and directly, by Writing or Printing, maintain and affirm that our Sovereign Lady the Queen, that now is, is not the lawful and rightful Queen of these Realms, or that the pretended Prince of Wales, who now stiles himself King of Great Britain, &c. hath any Right or Title thereto; the Language of the Act of Parliament is, "and now" (that is, at the time of the making of the Act) "stiles himself" so and so: But the Indictment doth not pursue the Words of the Act of Parliament, in describing the Person of the Pretender; for the Words in the Indictment are these; Persona in vita Jacobi secundi nuper Regis Angliæ, &c. pretend. esse princip. Wallie, et post dicti nuper Regis decessum pretenden. esse, & suscipien. sup. se stilum & titulum Regis Angliæ per nomen Jacobi tertii; so that who now stiles himself, &c. is not mentioned in any Part of the Indictment, and consequently the Person described or intended by the Act of Parliament, and the Person described in the Indictment, may be two different Persons; for if a Person doth now, or five or six Months ago, stile himself King of Great Britain, it answers the Description in the Indictment of Stiling himself King of Great Britain post dicti nuper Regis decessum, for it is not said——immediately after his Death, and yet that Person may not be the Person who at the Time of the Act took upon himself the Title of King, &c. and since; by the wording of the Indictment, it doth not appear that the Person there described is the same Person with him in the Act of Parliament, the Indictment ought to be assisted with an Averment, that the Person described in the Indictment is una & eadem Persona with him described by the Act of Parliament, whereby the Identity of the Person would appear; and, for want of this Averment or following of the exact Words of the Act of Parliament, we hope this Offence is not sufficiently laid, whereby to affect the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Ketelbey. If they had said immediatè post decessum, they had taken in a greater Length of Time, than now they have done; and having only laid it post decessum, generally, it may, or it may not, be immediately after the Death of the late King James; and then that intermediate Space of Time is not accounted for or ascertained in the Indictment, without such Averment as we contend for. The Indictment ought to have been certain, in all respects, and to all Intents and Purposes whatever; but here, since the late King James died before the passing this Act, it doth not necessarily appear, 'tis no natural Consequence, that the Person who in the Life-time of King James the Second pretended to be the Prince of Wales, is the same Person that after his Decease pretended to be and took upon himself the Stile and Title of King of Great Britain.

Attorney General. My Lord, we are not bound, with Submission, to pursue the very Terms of the Act of Parliament. If, upon the Face of the Indictment, it appears the same Person is described in the Indictment as in the Act of Parliament, it is sufficient. There are two Descriptions of this Person in the Act of Parliament; the one is, that the pretended Prince of Wales, who now stiles himself King of Great Britain; the one is the pretended Prince of Wales, and the other King of Great Britain. If Mr. Hungerford may be allowed to mean there may be many Pretenders, tho' I believe he won't suppose that there were any before the Pretender himself, that called himself the Prince of Wales; so that that is plain who is meant by the Pretender. The second part of the Description, "who now "stiles himself King of Great Britain," post decessum Jacobi secundi nuper Regis Angliæ, is not that semper post decessum; was not the decessum of King James the Second before the making of the Act of Parliament; and is it not the pretended Prince of Wales who, immediately post and semper post decessum, stiles himself King of Great Britain, that brings it down to the Time of the Act of Parliament, and continues it to the Time of the Indictment.

Indictment laid? The poſt deceſſum, as it ſtands here, over-reaches the Act of Parliament in point of Time, goes along with it, and continues with it till the Indictment preferred.

Serjeant Cheſhire. My Lord, the Expreſſion in this Indictment ſays, who in the Life-time of King James the Second pretended to be the Prince of Wales, and after his Death pretended to be, and took upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England. The Expreſſion in this Indictment ſays it more plain than as they would have it; the late King James was dead before any of the Acts of Parliament, and that which they would have us have ſaid, is a much leſs Aſſertion, and not ſo proper and pertinent; for when he died before the Act of Parliament, he aſſumed now, (he that in the Life-time of King James the Second pretended to be Prince of Wales, he aſſumed now) and ever hath, the Stile and Title of King of England; ſo that we have taken in both the Times of theſe Acts of Parliament, in the Life-time of King James the Second, and after his Deceaſe.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I will crave Leave to offer a few Words by way of Reply. The Deſcription in the Act of Parliament, as Mr. Attorney truly obſerves, conſiſts of two Parts, (viz.) ſuch a Perſon as in the Life of the late King James pretended to be Prince of Wales, and who, (viz.) at the Time of the Act, took upon himſelf the Title of King, &c. The Words are in the Conjunctive, and therefore, if the Deſcription in the Indictment takes but one Part of the Deſcription in the Act, it is an imperfect Deſcription, and conſequently the High-Treaſon not perfectly laid. If it had been, as Mr. Attorney ſeems to hint, that the Perſon deſcribed did ſemper poſt deceſſum of King James, or immediately poſt his deceſſum, take upon himſelf the Title of King, &c. it would have been well enough, becauſe it would have amounted to an Averment, that the Perſon in the Act, and the Perſon in the Indictment, was the ſame individual Perſon; and for want of ſuch a Certainty, we humbly inſiſt, they have failed in a material Part of this Accuſation.

Lord Chief Juſtice. This Act of Parliament makes it High-Treaſon only with reſpect to this individual Perſon, who is here called the pretended Prince of Wales: Now, if the Perſon hath no where any Chriſtian Name, or Sirname, muſt we not take Notice of the Deſcription of him, and how he is called in almoſt all the Acts of Parliament? In one Act of Parliament he is called the pretended Prince of Wales: In the Act on which this Indictment is founded, he is called the pretended Prince of Wales, and that now takes upon himſelf the Stile and Title of King of England: In the Abjuration Act, he is called by the Name in the Indictment; if it be the ſame Perſon, muſt not we take notice, this is one and the ſame Perſon? and if ſo, no matter which of the Names he is deſcribed by.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I beg Leave to mention one Word more. The Act of Parliament ſays (any Right to the Crown of theſe Realms), and ſo it goes through in the Plural Number (hath any Right or Title to the Crown of theſe Realms); it relates to the Union of the two Realms of England and Scotland, and from one End to the other mentions them plurally; they have expreſſed it in the Indictment only in the ſingular Number (hujus Regni), and afterwards, Innuendo, Coronam hujus Regni.

Attorney General. The Words are Magnæ Britanniæ.

Mr. Ketelbey. With Submiſſion, the Words are, Innuendo, jus hereditarium ad Coronam hujus Regni, without Magnæ Britanniæ.

Attorney General. The Words in the Beginning of the Indictment are, de & concernen. Coron. Magnæ Britanniæ; you have got upon Innuendoes again.

Mr. Ketelbey. Why if you do not like the Innuendoes, you may leave them out of the Caſe, and ſee how it will ſtand then; if the laſt Innuendo—(jus hereditarium ad Coronam hujus Regni) be laid aſide, the Words of the Indictment will be barely, "he hath that to plead in his favour," without any thing more, and then it doth not appear, if you go thro' without the Innuendoes, that it is any Offence againſt the Statute.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, the Objection is this, the Act of Parliament makes it High-Treaſon to affirm, &c. that any Perſon hath a Right to the Crown of theſe Realms; which Expreſſion comprehends Great Britain and Ireland; in the Indictment they have not mentioned Ireland, it is only ad Coronam hujus Regni; it is indeed Magnæ Britanniæ in the Beginning; though England and Scotland make one united Kingdom, Ireland is not included.

Attorney General. My Lord, we have done, and pray your Lordſhip's Judgment.

Then the Recorder paſſed Sentence, as uſual in Caſes of High-Treaſon; and he was executed at Tyburn, November 6th, 1720, aged Nineteen. I don't find he made any Speech, or left any Paper behind him.

Being ſworn of the Grand Jury,

Mr. Juſtice Foſter, ſpoke to them as follows:

Gentlemen of the Grand Inqueſt,

It muſt certainly give great Satisfaction to every Man, who has a due Concern for the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Honour of his Majeſty's Government, to ſee ſo numerous an Appearance of Perſons of great Rank and Fortune attending the preſent Service. For without a vigorous, ſteady, and impartial Adminiſtration of Juſtice, the Ends of Government will be totally defeated.

And what are the Ends of Government? They undoubtedly are, the Welfare of the whole Community, and the Happineſs of every ſingle Man in it; as far as the Happineſs of Individuals is conſiſtent with the Welfare of the whole.

Theſe are the great Ends of Government. And it is very certain they cannot be obtained without a due Execution of the Law upon Offenders of all Kinds.

And it is no inconſiderable Inſtance of the Wiſdom of our Law, that the Opportunities of bringing Offenders to Juſtice are as frequent, as the Nature of the Caſe, in the ordinary Courſe of Things, ſeems to require. Juſtice is, as it were, brought home to every Man's Door twice in the Year, at the ſtated Returns of the Circuits.

By this Meaſure, two very wiſe and ſalutary Purpoſes are at once ſerved. The Proſecution is ordinarily commenced and finiſhed while Things are recent, while Facts and Circumſtances are freſh in Memory, and while Witneſſes may be preſumed to remain under a proper Impreſſion. And, on the other hand, the Perſon who is the Object of the Proſecution, hath an early Opportunity given to him of clearing up his Innocence, if it ſhall happen to be his Caſe.

It were to be wiſhed, that theſe ſtated Seaſons had been at all Times found ſufficient to ſatisfy the Demands of publick Juſtice. But the Hiſtory of former Times informs us, that they have not; and our own Experience convinces us, that they are not at preſent ſufficient for that Purpoſe.

For what has been the Caſe of this, and of ſome of the neighbouring Counties

Counties for many, too many, Years paſt? Dangerous Confederacies have been form'd, for very unwarrantable, very wicked Purpoſes; for robbing the Publick of that Revenue which is abſolutely neceſſary to its Support; and for defeating the fair Trader in his juſt Expectations of Profit. Theſe, to mention no more, are the neceſſary unavoidable Conſequences of the Practice, which now goes under the general Name of Smuggling.

And however Perſons may palliate the Matter to themſelves or others, I wiſh every Man who hath been directly or indirectly concern'd in this Practice, would lay his Hand on his Heart, and put this Queſtion to himſelf, Wherein lies the real Difference, (I ſpeak now of a Difference in Foro Conſcientiæ) wherein lies the real Difference, between this ſort of Robbery, and the Crime which uſually goes under that Denomination?

But this is not all; this wicked Practice hath been ſupported by an armed Force: By Numbers of diſſolute People aſſembled together, and acting in open Day-light; in Defiance of all the Law, and all the Juſtice of their Country; and to the Terror of his Majeſty's peaceable Subjects.

And the Miſchief has not ended here. In ſome late Inſtances, deliberate Murders, attended with Circumſtances of great Aggravation, have been committed in conſequence, as 'tis to be fear'd, of theſe Combinations.

Theſe Things louldly call for the Animadverſion of the Publick. They have been humbly repreſented to his Majeſty. And his Majeſty, out of his Royal Concern for the Welfare of his People, the ruling Principle which guides and animates his whole Conduct, hath been pleas'd to intruſt us, with his ſpecial Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol Delivery for this County.

Our Commiſſions do not extend to all the Crimes which are cognizable under the general Commiſſions which are executed in the Circuit. They are confined to the Offences of Murder, Manſlaughter, and other Felonies, and to the Acceſſaries to thoſe Offences: But as far as they do extend, they are juſt of the ſame Nature as the Circuit-Commiſſions. The ſame Law, the ſame Method of Trial, and the ſame Rules of Evidence, are to take place in theſe as do in thoſe.

Gentlemen, I ſhall have no occaſion to enter into the ſeveral Diſtinctions between the Offences of Murder, and what we commonly call Manſlaughter; becauſe thoſe Diſtinctions are grounded on Circumſtances, which poſſibly may have no Place in your preſent Inquiry.

It is ſufficient to ſay, that wherever it appears that the Fact was committed with any Degree of Deliberation, and eſpecially where it is attended with Circumſtances of Cruelty, the uſual Diſtinctions between Murder and Manſlaughter can never take place. The Fact is, in the Eye of the Law, wilful Murder of Malice prepenſe. And it involves every Perſon concern'd, as well thoſe who are barely preſent, aiding and abetting, as thoſe who actually commit the Fact, in the ſame Degree of Guilt.

For where Numbers of People engage in any felonious Deſign, either for Murder, Robbery, or any other Felony, every Perſon ſo engaged, and preſent, aiding and abetting the Fact, is conſider'd as a Principal in the Felony. And the Reaſon the Law goes upon is this, that the Preſence of every one of the Accomplices gives Countenance, Encouragement, and Security to all the reſt. And conſequently the Fact is conſidered in the Eye of the Law, and of ſound Reaſon too, as the Act of the whole Party, tho' it be perpetrated perhaps by the Hands of one. He is conſider'd as the Inſtrument by which the others act.

And when we ſay, that the Preſence of a Perſon at the Commiſſion of a Felony, will involve him in the Guilt of the reſt, we muſt not confine ourſelves to a ſtrict, actual Preſence, ſuch a Preſence as would make him an Eye or an Ear Witneſs of what paſſes.

For an Accomplice may be involv'd in the Guilt of the reſt, tho' he may happen to be ſo far diſtant from the Scene of Action, as to be utterly out of ſight or hearing of what paſſes.

For Inſtance, If ſeveral Perſons agree to commit a Murder or other Felony, and each Man takes his Part: Some are appointed to commit the Fact, others to watch at a Diſtance, to prevent a Surprize, or to favour the Eſcape of thoſe who are more immediately engaged; the Law ſays, that if the Felony be committed, it is the Act of all of them. For each Man operated in his Station towards the Commiſſion of it, at one and the ſame Inſtant.

And ſo much doth the Law abhor Combinations of this Kind, eſpecially where innocent Blood is ſhed, that a Man may, in Judgment of Law, be involv'd in the Guilt of Murder, when poſſibly his Heart abhorred the Thoughts of it.

For if Numbers of People aſſemble in Proſecution of any unlawful Deſign, with a Reſolution to ſtand by each other againſt all Oppoſers, and a Murder is committed by one of the Party in Proſecution of that Deſign, every Man ſo engaged at the Time of the Murder, is, in the Eye of the Law, equally guilty with him that gave the Stroke.

Many Caſes might be put which come under this Rule. I will confine myſelf to a few which the preſent Solemnity naturally ſuggeſts.

For Inſtance, Numbers of People aſſemble for the Purpoſe of running uncuſtomed Goods, or for any of the Purpoſes which now go under the general Term of Smuggling, with a Reſolution to reſiſt all Oppoſers (and the riding with Fire-Arms and other offenſive Weapons is certainly an Evidence of that Reſolution), Numbers of People, I ſay, aſſemble in this Manner, and for this Purpoſe. They are met by the Officers of the Revenue: One of the Party, in Proſecution of this unlawful Deſign, fires on the King's Officer, and kills him or any of his Aſſiſtants: The whole Party is, in the Eye of the Law, guilty of Murder, though their original Intention went no farther than Smuggling. For that Intention being unlawful, the killing, in Proſecution of that Intent, is Murder. And every Man engaged in it, partakes of the Guilt. The Act of one, in Proſecution of their common Engagement, is conſidered as the Act of all.

I will go one Step further, the Party aſſembled in the Manner and for the Purpoſes I have mentioned, is met by the King's Officers, and an Affray happens between them. During the Affray one of the Party fires at the King's Officers, but miſſes his Aim and kills one of his own Party, perhaps his neareſt Relation or Boſom-friend (if People of that Character are capable of true Friendſhip), this is Murder in him, and in the whole Party too. For if a Man upon Malice againſt another ſtrikes at him, and by Accident kills a third Perſon, the Law, as it were, transfers the Circumſtance of Malice from him that was aimed at, to him that received the Blow and died by it. And conſequently, in the Caſe I have juſt put, the Perſon who diſcharged the Gun being guilty of Murder, all his Accomplices are involved in his Guilt; becauſe the Gun was diſcharged in Proſecution of their common Engagement, and it is therefore conſidered as the Act of the whole Party.

What I have hitherto ſaid regards thoſe who are preſent in the Senſe I have mentioned, and abetting the Fact at the Time of the Commiſſion of it. But there are others who may be involved in the ſame Guilt, I mean the Acceſſaries before the Fact.

Theſe are all People who, by Advice, Perſuaſion, or any other Means, procure the Fact to be done, but cannot be ſaid, in any Senſe, to be preſent at the actual Perpetration of it. See Vol. X. Mac Daniel's Caſe.

Theſe Perſons are involved in the Guilt, and liable in the Caſe of wilful Murder, to the ſame Puniſhment as the principal Offenders are.

I am very ſenſible, Gentlemen, that I have been ſomething longer than I needed to have been, if I had ſpoken barely for your Information: But in this Place, and upon this Occaſion, I thought it not improper to enlarge on ſome Points, that People may ſee, and conſider in time, the infinite Hazard they run, by engaging in the wicked Combinations I have mentioned; and how ſuddenly and fatally they may, being ſo engaged, be involved in the Guilt of Murder itſelf, while perhaps their principal View might fall very far ſhort of that Crime.

[After which the Bills being delivered to the Grand Jury, the Court adjourned.]

Tueſday, 17 January, 1748-9.

The Grand Jury returned the Bills found into Court, upon which Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, John Hammond, William Jackſon, Richard Mills the elder, Richard Mills the younger, and William Carter, were ſet to the Bar, and arraigned upon an Indictment for the Murder of Daniel Chater; the three firſt named as Principals in the Murder, and the four laſt as Acceſſaries before the Fact.

The Indictment ſets forth in Subſtance, That Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, and John Hammond, together with Thomas Stringer and Daniel Perryer, not yet taken, not having the Fear of God before their Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, upon the 19th Day of February, in the twenty-firſt Year of his preſent Majeſty's Reign, with Force and Arms at the Pariſh of Harting, in the County of Suſſex, in and upon one Daniel Chater, being then and there in the Peace of God and his ſaid Majeſty, felonioufly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did make an Aſſault; and that he the ſaid Benjamin Tapner, a certain Cord or Rope made of Hemp, of the Value of Sixpence, which he the ſaid Benjamin Tapner had then and there in his Hands, about the Neck of him the ſaid Daniel Chater, then and there with Force and Arms, felonioufly, wilfully, and out of his Malice aforethought, did put, bind, and faſten; and that he the ſaid Benjamin Tapner, with the Rope aforeſaid by him, about the Neck of the ſaid Chater, ſo put, bound, and faſtened as aforeſaid, him the ſaid Chater, then and there with Force and Arms, felonioufly, wilfully, and out of his Malice aforethought, did choak and ſtrangle, of which ſaid choaking and ſtrangling of him the ſaid Chater, in Manner aforeſaid, he the ſaid Chater did then and there inſtantly die. And that they the ſaid John Cobby, John Hammond, &c. at the Time of the Felony and Murder aforeſaid, by him the ſaid Benjamin Tapner, ſo felonioufly, wilfully, and out of his Malice aforethought, done, perpetrated, and committed, as aforeſaid, then and there felonioufly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, were preſent, aiding, abetting, comforting, aſſiſting, and maintaining the ſaid Benjamin Tapner, the ſaid Daniel Chater in Manner and Form aforeſaid, felonioufly, wilfully, and out of his Malice aforethought, to kill and murder. And ſo that the ſaid Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, John Hammond, Stringer and Perryer, the ſaid Daniel Chater in Manner and Form aforeſaid, then and there with Force and Arms, felonioufly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did kill and murder, againſt his Majeſty's Peace, his Crown and Dignity. Further ſets forth, That Richard Mills the elder, Richard Mills the younger, William Jackſon, and William Carter, together with John Mills, Thomas Willis, and Edmund Richards, not yet taken, before the Felony and Murder aforeſaid, by them the ſaid Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, John Hammond, Stringer and Perryer, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, felonioufly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, done, perpetrated, and committed, (to wit) upon the ſaid 19th Day of February, in the twenty-firſt Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh of Harting aforeſaid, in the County of Suſſex aforeſaid, them the ſaid Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, John Hammond, Stringer and Perryer, the Felony and Murder aforeſaid, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, felonioufly, wilfully, maliciouſly, and out of their Malice aforethought to do, perpetrate, and commit, felonioufly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did incite, move, inſtigate, ſtir up, counſel, perſuade, and procure, againſt his Majeſty's Peace, his Crown and Dignity.

[To which Indictment they ſeverally pleaded Not Guilty.]

William Jackſon and William Carter were alſo arraigned upon another Indictment, as Principals in the Murder of William Gally, otherwiſe called William Galley.

The Indictment ſets forth in Subſtance, That William Jackſon and William Carter, (together with Samuel Downer, alias Heward, alias Little Sam, Edmund Richards and Henry Sheerman, alias Little Harry, not yet taken), not having the Fear of God before their Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, upon the 15th of February, in the twenty-firſt Year of his preſent Majeſty's Reign, with Force and Arms, at Rowland's Caſtle in the County of Southampton, in and upon one William Gally, otherwiſe called William Galley, being then and there in the Peace of God and his ſaid Majeſty, felonioufly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did make an Aſſault, and him the ſaid William Gally, upon the Back of a certain Horſe, then and there with Force and Arms, felonioufly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did put and ſet, and the Legs of him the ſaid William Gally, being ſo put and ſet upon the Back of the ſaid Horſe as aforeſaid, with a certain Rope or Cord made of Hemp, under the Belly of the ſaid Horſe, then and there with Force and Arms, felonioufly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did bind, tie, and faſten; and him the ſaid William Gally, being ſo put and ſet upon Horſeback as aforeſaid, with his Legs ſo bound, tied, and faſtened under the Horſe's Belly as aforeſaid, with certain large Whips, which they had then and there in their right Hands, in and upon the Head, Face, Neck, Shoulders, Arms, Back, Belly, Sides, Sides, and ſeveral other Parts of the Body of him the ſaid William Gally, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniouſly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, for the Space of one Mile, did whip, laſh, beat, and ſtrike; by reaſon whereof, the ſaid William Gally was then and there very much wounded, bruiſed, and hurt; and not being able to endure or bear the Miſery, Pain, and Anguiſh, occaſioned by his having been ſo whipped, laſhed, beat, and ſtruck as aforeſaid; and by his being ſo wounded, bruiſed, and hurt as aforeſaid, then and there dropped down the left Side of the ſaid Horſe, on which he then and there rode, with his Head under the Horſe's Belly, and his Legs and Feet acroſs the Saddle upon the Back of the ſaid Horſe, upon which they the ſaid Jackſon, Carter, Downer, Richards, and Sheerman, then and there untied the Legs of the ſaid William Gally; and him the ſaid Gally, in and upon the ſame Horſe, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniouſly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did again put and ſet, and the Legs of him the ſaid Gally being again ſo put and ſet upon the ſaid Horſe as laſt aforeſaid, with the ſame Rope or Cord under the Belly of the ſaid Horſe, they then and there with Force and Arms, feloniouſly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, under the Horſe's Belly, did again bind, tie, and faſten; and him the ſaid Gally, being again ſo put and ſet upon the ſaid Horſe as laſt aforeſaid, with his Legs ſo bound, tied, and faſtened under the Horſe's Belly, as laſt aforeſaid, with the ſaid Whips which they had then and there in their Right Hands as aforeſaid, in and upon the Head, Face, Neck, Arms, Shoulders, Back, Belly, Sides, and ſeveral other Parts of the Body of him the ſaid William Gally, they then and there with Force and Arms, feloniouſly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, for the Space of half a Mile further, did again whip, laſh, beat, and ſtrike; by reaſon whereof he the ſaid William Gally was then and there much more wounded, bruiſed, and hurt; and not being able to endure or bear the Miſery, Pain, and Anguiſh, occaſioned by his having been ſo whipped, laſhed, beat, and ſtruck, in Manner as aforeſaid; and by his being ſo wounded, bruiſed, and hurt, in Manner aforeſaid, did then and there drop a ſecond Time from off the ſaid Horſe, with his Head under the Horſe's Belly, and his Legs and Feet acroſs the Saddle. Upon which they, the ſaid Jackſon, Carter, Downer, Richards, and Sheerman, then and there again untied the Legs of him the ſaid William Gally, and him, in and upon another Horſe, behind a certain other Perſon, did then and there with Force and Arms, feloniouſly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, put and ſet; and the ſaid William Gally, being ſo put and ſet upon Horſeback, as laſt aforeſaid, with the ſame Whips which they had then and there in their Right Hands as aforeſaid, in and upon the Head, Face, Neck, Arms, Shoulders, Back, Belly, Sides, and ſeveral other Parts of the Body of the ſaid William Gally, did then and there with Force and Arms, feloniouſly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, for the Space of two Miles further, until they came into the Pariſh of Harting, in the County of Suſſex aforeſaid, again whip, laſh, beat, and ſtrike, by reaſon whereof the ſaid William Gally was then and there much more wounded, bruiſed, and hurt; and not being able to endure or bear the Miſery, Pain, and Anguiſh, occaſioned by his having been ſo wounded, bruiſed, and hurt, in manner as aforeſaid, then and there in the Pariſh of Harting aforeſaid, got off the ſaid Horſe; upon which they the ſaid Jackſon, Carter, Downer, Richards, and Sheerman, him the ſaid William Gally, in and upon another Horſe, whereon the ſaid Edmund Richards then and there rode with the Belly of him the ſaid William Gally acroſs the Pummel of the Saddle, on which the ſaid Richards then and there rode, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniouſly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did put and lay; but before they had gone the Space of eighty Yards further, the ſaid William Gally not being able to bear the Motion of the ſaid Horſe, on which he was ſo put and laid as laſt aforeſaid, by reaſon of his having been ſo whipped, laſhed, beat, and ſtruck as aforeſaid; and by reaſon of his being ſo wounded, bruiſed, and hurt, in manner as aforeſaid, then and there tumbled off the ſaid Horſe, and fell upon the Ground in the common Highway there, by which Fall he the ſaid William Gally was then and there much more wounded, bruiſed, and hurt; whereupon they the ſaid Jackſon, Carter, Downer, Richards and Sheerman, him the ſaid William Gally, in and upon another Horſe by himſelf, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniouſly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did put and ſet; but the ſaid Gally not being able to ſit upright upon the ſaid laſt-mentioned Horſe, he the ſaid Sheerman, otherwiſe Little Harry, did then and there get up upon the ſame Horſe, behind him the ſaid Gally, in order to hold him on; but after they the ſaid Jackſon, Carter, Downer, Richards and Sheerman, and the ſaid Gally had rode on a Quarter of a Mile further together, in manner aforeſaid, he the ſaid William Gally, not being able to ſit upon the ſaid Horſe, or ride any further upon the ſame, through the great Miſery, Pain, and Anguiſh, occaſioned by his having been ſo whipped, laſhed, beat, and ſtruck, as aforeſaid, and by his being ſo wounded, bruiſed and hurt, in manner as aforeſaid, then and there tumbled off the ſaid Horſe, on which he was ſo put and ſet as laſt aforeſaid, and again fell to the Ground; and as he ſo tumbled and fell, the ſaid Henry Sheerman, otherwiſe Little Harry, who rode behind the ſaid Gally, and upon the ſame Horſe with him, in manner aforeſaid, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniouſly, wilfully, and out of his Malice aforethought, gave to him the ſaid Gally a moſt violent Thruſt and Puſh; by Reaſon whereof, the ſaid Gally then and there fell, with much more Weight and Force to the Ground, than otherwiſe he would have done; and was thereby then and there much more wounded, bruiſed, and hurt. And that by reaſon of the ſaid binding, tying, and faſtening, of him the ſaid William Gally, by them the ſaid Jackſon, Carter, Downer, Richards and Sheerman, in Manner and Form aforeſaid; and of the whipping, laſhing, beating, and ſtriking, of him the ſaid Gally, by them, in Manner and Form aforeſaid; and of the ſeveral Wounds, Bruiſes, and Hurts, which he the ſaid William Gally received, from ſuch whipping, laſhing, beating, and ſtriking, in Manner aforeſaid, and other Wounds, Bruiſes, and Hurts, which he the ſaid William Gally ſo received from the ſeveral Falls, which he ſo had from off the ſaid ſeveral Horſes, on which he was ſo by them put, ſet, and laid, in Manner and Form aforeſaid; and of the ſaid Thruſt and Puſh, which he the ſaid Henry Sheerman, otherwiſe Little Harry, ſo as aforeſaid, gave him the ſaid Gally, as he the ſaid Gally ſo tumbled and fell from off the ſaid Horſe, as laſt aforeſaid, he the ſaid William Gally, at the Pariſh of Harting aforeſaid, in the County of Suſſex aforeſaid, did inſtantly die. And further, That they the ſaid William Jackſon, William Carter, Samuel Downer, alias Howard, alias Little Sam, Edmund Richards, and Henry Sheerman, alias Little Harry, him the ſaid William Gally, with Force and Arms, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, feloniouſly, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did Kill and Murder, againſt his Majeſty's Peace, his Crown and Dignity.

Petty Jury.

John Burnand, Foreman,	Henry Halſted,	John Shotter,
William Faulkner,	John Woods,	Thomas Sturt,
Richard North,	John Hipkin,	William Poe,
William Halſted,	William Hobbs,	Chriſtopher Wilſon.

The Counſel for the Crown, were Mr. Banks, Mr. Smith, Mr. Pureas, Mr. Burrell, and Mr. Steele.

Mr. Juſtice Foſter, before the Jury were ſworn, acquainted the Priſoners they might each of them challenge twenty of the Pannel, without ſhewing Cauſe; but if they challenged more, they muſt ſhew a reaſonable Cauſe for ſo doing; and that if they agreed to join in their Challenges they might be tried together, but if they did not, they would be tried ſeparately; and left them to act in that behalf, as they ſhould ſee proper.

The Priſoners conſulted among themſelves, and agreed to join and be tried together. And then the Jury being ſworn, and charg'd by the Clerk of the Arraignments,

Mr. Steele opened the Indictment againſt the ſeven Priſoners, for the Murder of Daniel Chater. After which,

Mr. Banks, the King's Counſel, ſpoke as follows, viz. This is an Indictment againſt the ſeven Priſoners at the Bar, for the Murder of Daniel Chater. It is againſt the three firſt, viz. Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, and John Hammond, as Principals in that Murder, by being preſent, aiding, abetting and aſſiſting therein; and againſt Thomas Stringer, and Daniel Perryer, as Principals alſo, and who are not yet apprehended. And it is againſt the four laſt Priſoners, viz. William Jackſon, William Carter, Richard Mills the elder, and Richard Mills the younger, as Acceſſaries before the Murder; and alſo againſt three others as Acceſſaries before the Fact, viz. John Mills, another Son of Richard Mills the elder, Thomas Willis, and Edmund Richards, not yet taken and brought to Juſtice.

Although this Indictment hath made a Diſtinction between the ſeveral Priſoners, and divided them into two Claſſes, of Principals and Acceſſaries; yet the Law makes no Diſtinction in the Crime. And in caſe all the Priſoners are guilty of the Charge in this Indictment, they will be all equally liable to the ſame Judgment and Puniſhment.

In the outſet of this Trial I ſhall not enlarge upon the Heinouſneſs of Murder in general; nor ſhall I dwell upon thoſe many Circumſtances of Aggravation, attending this Murder in particular. When I come to mention thoſe aggravating Circumſtances of Cruelty and Barbarity, in the courſe of this Trial, I doubt not but they will have all that Effect upon the Gentlemen of the Jury, which they ought to have; to awaken and fix your Attention to every Part of this bloody Tranſaction; and to balance that Compaſſion which you feel for the Priſoners, though they felt none for others. The Effect I mean theſe Circumſtances ſhould and ought to have, is, to clear the way for that Juſtice, which the Nation expects and calls for from your Determination and Verdict.

To comply with this general Demand of Juſtice upon the Priſoners, his Majeſty (ever attentive to the Good and Welfare of the Kingdom, the Preſervation of his Subjects, the Protection of the Innocent, and the Puniſhment of the Guilty,) in order to give the Priſoners the earlieſt Opportunity of proving their Innocence, and of wiping off this foul Suſpicion of Murder they now lie under; or if guilty of a Breach of the Laws of God and Man, that they may ſuffer the Puniſhment due to their Guilt; his Majeſty has been pleaſed by a Special Commiſſion, to appoint this Trial to be before their Lordſhips, not leſs knowing in the Laws, than tender and compaſſionate in the Execution thereof.

I cannot here omit taking notice of the unhappy Cauſe of this fatal Effect, now under your Conſideration. Every one here preſent, will in his own Thoughts anticipate my Words; and knows, I mean Smuggling. Smuggling is not only highly injurious to Trade, a Violation of the Laws, and the Diſturber of the Peace and Quiet of all the Maritime Counties in the Kingdom; But it is a Nurſery of all Sorts of Vice and Wickedneſs; a Temptation to commit Offences at firſt unthought-of; an Encouragement to perpetrate the blackeſt of Crimes without Provocation or Remorſe; and is in general productive of Cruelty, Robbery, and Murder.

It is greatly to be wiſhed, both for the Sake of the Smugglers themſelves, and for the Peace of this County, that the dangerous and armed manner now uſed of running uncuſtomed Goods, was leſs known, and leſs practiſed here.

It is a melancholy Conſideration to obſerve, that the beſt and wiſeſt Meaſures of Government, calculated to put a Stop to this growing Miſchief, have been perverted and abuſed to the worſt of Purpoſes. And what was intended to be a Cure to this Diſorder, has been made the Means to increaſe and heighten the Diſeaſe.

Every Expedient of Lenity and Mercy was at firſt made uſe of, to reclaim this abandoned Sett of Men. His Majeſty, by repeated Proclamations of Pardon, invited them to their Duty and to their own Safety. But inſtead of laying hold of ſo gracious an Offer, they have ſet the Laws at Defiance, have made the Execution of Juſtice dangerous in the Hands of Magiſtracy, and have become almoſt a Terror to Government itſelf.

The Number of the Priſoners at the Bar, and of others involved in the Suſpicion of the ſame Guilt, the Variety of Circumſtances attending this whole Tranſaction, the Length of Time in the Completion thereof, and the general Expectation of Mankind to be informed of every minute Circumſtance leading and tending to finiſh this Scene of Horror, will neceſſarily lay me under an Obligation of taking up more Time, than will be either agreeable to the Court, or to myſelf.

To avoid Confuſion in ſtating ſuch a Variety of Facts, with the Evidence and Proofs thereof; and to fix and guide the Attention of the Gentlemen of the Jury to the ſeveral particular Parts of this bloody Tragedy, at laſt compleated in the Murder of Chater; I ſhall divide the Facts into four diſtinct Periods of Time.

1*ſt*. What happened precedent to Chater's coming to a publick Houſe, the Sign of the White Hart, at Rowland's Caſtle, in Hampſhire, kept by Elizabeth Paine, Widow, upon Sunday the 14th of February, 1747-8.

And this Period of Time will take in the Occaſion and Grounds of the Priſoners wicked Malice to the Deceaſed, and the Cauſe and Motive to his Murder.

2*d*. What happened after Chater's Arrival at the Widow Paine's, to the Time of his being carried away from thence by ſome of the Priſoners, to the Houſe of Richard Mills the elder, at Trotten in Suſſex.

This will diſcloſe a Scene of Cruelty and Barbarity, previous to Chater's Murder; and ſhew how active and inſtrumental the Priſoners Jackſon and Carter were therein.

3*d*. What happened after Chater was brought to the Houſe of Richard Mills the elder, to the Time of his Murder, upon Wedneſday Night the 17th of that February.

This will take in that barbarous Uſage of Chater at Mills's Houſe; a Conſultation of ſixteen Smugglers in what Manner to diſpoſe of Chater, and their unanimous Reſolution to murder him; and will ſhew Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond, to be Principals therein; and the other four Priſoners to be Acceſſaries.

4*th*, And laſt Period takes in the Diſcovery of Chater's Body in a Well, where he was hung, with the Proofs that it was the Body of Chater.

In the opening of this Caſe, it will be impoſſible for me to avoid the frequent Mention of one William Gally, alſo ſuſpected to have been murdered; and for whoſe Murder, two of the Priſoners, viz. Jackſon and Carter, are indicted, and are to be tried upon another Indictment.

But the Murder of Gally is not the Object of your preſent Conſideration, nor do I mention his Name, either to aggravate this Crime, by taking Notice of his Murder alſo; nor to inflame the Jury againſt the Priſoners at the Bar. But I do it for the Sake of Method, and for the Purpoſe only of laying the whole Caſe before the Jury; for the Story of Chater's Murder cannot be told, without diſcloſing alſo what happened to Gally, his Companion and Fellow-ſufferer.

To begin with the firſt Period of Time. Some-time in September 1747, a large Quantity of uncuſtomed Tea had been duly ſeized by one Captain Johnſon, out of a Smuggling Cutter, and by him lodged in the Cuſtom-houſe of Poole, in the County of Dorſet.

In the Night of the ſixth of October following, the Cuſtom-houſe of Poole was broke open by a numerous and armed Gang of Smugglers; and the Tea which had been ſeized and there lodged, was by them taken and carried away.

This Body of Smugglers, in their Return from Poole, paſſed through Fordingbridge, in Hants; where Dimer, one of that Company, was ſeen and known by Chater. Dimer was afterwards taken up, upon Suſpicion of being one of thoſe who had broke open the Cuſtom-houſe of Poole, and was in Cuſtody at Chicheſter for further Examination, and for further Proof that he was one of that Gang.

And in order to prove the Identity of Dimer, and that he was one of that Gang, Daniel Chater, a Shoemaker at Fordingbridge, (the Perſon murdered) was ſent in Company with, and under the Care of William Gally, a Tidewaiter of Southampton, by Mr. Sheerer, Collector of the Cuſtoms there, with a Letter to Major Battine, a Juſtice of Peace for Suſſex, and Surveyor-General of the Cuſtoms for that County. Sunday Morning, the 14th of February, 1747-8, Gally and Chater ſet out from Southampton, with Mr. Sheerer's Letter, on their Journey to Major Battine's Houſe, at Eaſt-Marden, in the Neighbourhood of Chicheſter.

At the New Inn at Leigh, in Havant Pariſh in Hants, Chater and Gally met with Robert Jenkes, George Auſten, and Thomas Auſten, and having ſhewed them the Direction of the Letter to Major Battine, they told them they were going towards Stanſtead, where Chater and Gally were informed Major Battine then was; and ſaid they would go with them, and ſhew them the Road. Their direct Way to Stanſtead lay near to Rowland's Caſtle; but Jenkes and the two Auſtens carried them to Rowland's Caſtle, that Sunday about Noon; where this cruel Plot was firſt contrived, and in part carried into Execution.

The Malice conceived by the Priſoners againſt Chater, from what I have already mentioned, appears not to have ariſen from any Injury or Suſpicion of Injury done by the deceaſed to the Priſoners; but becauſe Chater dared to give Information againſt a Smuggler, and to do his Duty in aſſiſting to bring a notorious and deſperate Offender to Juſtice, he was to be treated with the utmoſt Cruelty, his Perſon was to be tortured, and his Life at laſt deſtroyed. What avail the Laws of Society, where no Man dares to carry them into Execution? Where is the Protection of Liberty and Life, if Criminals aſſume to themſelves a Power of reſtraining the one, and deſtroying the other?

Having mentioned the Motive of the Priſoners to this Murder, I ſhall now open to you (what I propoſed in the ſecond Period of Time) a Scene of Cruelty and Barbarity, tending to the Murder of Chater, begun at Rowland's Caſtle, by the two Priſoners Jackſon and Carter, in Company with others; and from thence continued, until Chater was brought to the Houſe of Richard Mills the elder, at Trotten, upon Monday Morning the 15th of February, before it was light.

And here you will obſerve, how cruelly and wickedly in general the Gang aſſembled at Rowland's Caſtle behaved; and in particular how active Jackſon and Carter appeared in every Step of this fatal Conſpiracy.

Soon after Chater and Gally, and the three others, had arrived at Rowland's Caſtle, the Widow Paine ſuſpected Chater and Gally intended ſome Miſchief againſt the Smugglers; and for that Purpoſe enquired of George Auſten who the two Strangers were, and what their Buſineſs was? He privately informed her, they were going to Major Battine with a Letter. She deſired he would either direct the two Strangers to go a different Way from Major Battine's, or would detain them a ſhort Time at her Houſe, until ſhe could ſend for Jackſon, Carter, and others. And ſhe immediately ſent her Son William for the Priſoner Jackſon; and ſoon afterwards ordered her other Son Edmund to ſummon the other Priſoners, Carter, Edmund Richards, Samuel Heward, Henry Sheerman, William Steel, and John Raiſs, who all lived near Rowland's Caſtle; and accordingly they all came; as alſo did Jackſon's and Carter's Wives. They were immediately informed by the Widow Paine of what ſhe ſuſpected, and had been informed concerning the two Strangers. Jackſon and Carter being very deſirous of ſeeing the Letter to Major Battine, got Chater out of the Houſe, and endeavoured to perſuade him to let them ſee the Letter, and to inform them of the Errand to Major Battine. But upon Gally's coming out to them, and interpoſing to prevent Chater's making any Diſcovery, they quarrelled with Gally, and beat him to the Ground; Gaily complained of this ill Uſage, and ſaid he was the King's Officer, and to convince them, ſhewed his Deputation.

Chater and Gally were very uneaſy at this Treatment, and wanted to be gone; but the Gang inſiſted upon their ſtaying; and in order to ſecure and get them entirely into their own Power, they plied them with ſtrong Liquors, and made them drunk, and then carried them into another Room to ſleep.

During the two Hours Chater and Gally ſlept, the Letter was taken out of Chater's Pocket; whereby it appeared that Chater was going to give Information againſt Dimer. The Secret being thus diſcloſed to the Gang, the next thing to be conſidered of by the Smugglers, was how to ſave their Accomplice Dimer, and to puniſh Chater and Gally, for daring to give Information againſt him. For that Purpoſe, whilſt Chater and Gally were aſleep, ſeveral Conſultations were held.

It was firſt propoſed ſecretly to convey Chater and Gally into France; at that Time at War with England.

The ſecond Scheme was, for all preſent to contribute Three-Pence a Week for the Maintenance of Chater and Gally, who were to be confined in ſome private Place, and there ſubſiſted until Dimer ſhould be tried. And as Dimer was done unto, ſo Chater and Gally were to be dealt with.

The third and laſt Propoſal was, to murder both.

With a View and Intention to execute this laſt, and the moſt cruel Propoſal, Jackſon went into the Room about Seven of that Evening, where Chater and Gally lay aſleep, and awaked them. They both came out very bloody, and cut in their Faces; but by what Means, or what Jackſon had there done to them, does not appear. They were immediately afterwards forced out of the Houſe by Jackſon and Carter; the others preſent and conſenting and aſſiſting: Richards, one of the Company, with a cocked Piſtol in his Hand, ſwore he would ſhoot any Perſon through the Head, who ſhould make the leaſt Diſcovery of what had paſſed there.

Chater and Gally were put upon one Horſe; and, to prevent their Eſcape, their Legs were tied under the Horſe's Belly; and both their Legs tied together; and the Horſe was led by William Steel. After they had been thus carried about an hundred Yards from Rowland's Caſtle, Jackſon cried out to Carter and the Company, Lick them, damn them, cut them, ſlaſh them, whip them. Upon which they whipped and beat them over their Heads, Faces, Shoulders, and other Parts of their Bodies, for the Space of a Mile. With this cruel Treatment, they both fell down under the Horſe' Belly, with their Heads dragging upon the Ground. They were again put upon the Horſe, and tied as before, and whipped and beat with the like Severity along the Road for about another Mile. And when they cried out through the Agony of their Pain, Piſtols were held to their Heads, and they were threatened to be ſhot, if they made the leaſt Noiſe or Cry. Being unable to endure this continued and exquiſite Pain, and to ſit on Horſe-back any longer, they fell a ſecond Time to the Ground. By this inhuman Uſage, they were rendered incapable of ſupporting themſelves any longer on Horſeback. Gally was afterwards carried behind Steel, and Chater behind Heward. The Priſoners, Jackſon and Carter, with the reſt of the Company, ſtill continued their mercileſs Treatment of Chater and Gally; but inſtead of whipping, they now began to beat them on their Heads and Faces, with the Butt End of their Whips, loaded with Lead. When they came to Lady Holt Park in Suſſex, Gally almoſt expiring with the Torture he had underwent, got down from behind Steel; and it was propoſed to throw him alive into a Well adjoining to that Park; in which Well Chater was three Days after hanged by the ſame Gang. Gally was then thrown acroſs the Pummel of the Saddle, and carried before Richards. He was afterwards laid along alone upon a Horſe, and ſupported by Jackſon, who walked by him; and was at laſt carried before Sheerman, who ſupported him by a Cord tied round his Breaſt. When they came to a Lane called Conduit Lane, in Rogate Pariſh in this County, Gally, in the Extremity of Anguiſh, cried out, I ſhall fall, I ſhall fall. Upon which Sheerman ſwore, Damn you, if you will fall, do then; and as Gally was falling he gave him a Thruſt to the Ground; after which Gally was never ſeen to move, or heard to ſpeak more.

Jackſon, Carter, and the others, in order to prevent a Diſcovery of the Murder of Gally, went about one of the Clock on the Monday Morning to the Red Lion at Rake, in Suſſex, a Publick-houſe kept by William Stardefield, whither they carried Chater all over Blood, and with his Eyes almoſt beat out; and alſo brought the Body of Gally. They obliged Stardefield to ſhew them a proper Place for the Burial of Gally; and accordingly he went with Carter, Heward, and Steel, to an old Fox Earth, on the Side of a Hill near Raike, at a Place called Harting Combe, where they dug a Hole, and buried Gally.

The ſame Morning, and long before it was light, whilſt ſome were employed in the Burial of Gally, Jackſon and Sheerman carried Chater to the Houſe of Richard Mills the elder, at Trotten.

I am now come to the third Period of Time; from Chater's Arrival at the Houſe of Richard Mills the elder, to his Murder upon Wedneſday Night the 17th of February.

And here it is, that Richard Mills the elder, firſt appears to be privy, and conſenting to the intended Murder of Chater. A private Houſe was thought much more proper and ſafe for the Confinement of Chater, than a Publick-houſe, at all Times open to every Man; and therefore Chater was to be removed from Scardefield's. The Priſoners and their Companions being no Strangers to old Mills, but his intimate Acquaintance, and Confederates in Smuggling, where could Chater be ſo ſecretly impriſoned, as at the Private-houſe of the elder Mills? And where could he be more ſecurely guarded, than under the Roof of one of their own Gang? With theſe Hopes and Reliance, and in full Confidence of the Secrecy and Aſſiſtance of old Mills, Chater was brought to his Houſe by Jackſon and Sheerman;

Sheerman; when they came there, they told old Mills they had got a Priſoner; he muſt get up, and let them in. Old Mills got up, and received Chater his Priſoner; whoſe Face was then a Gore of Blood, many of his Teeth beat out, his Eyes ſwelled, and one almoſt deſtroyed. I ſhall here omit one or two particular Circumſtances, which the Witneſſes will give an Account of; which ſhew that old Mills alſo was void of all Tenderneſs and Compaſſion.

Chater was received by him as a Priſoner, and a Criminal; and therefore was to be treated as ſuch. Old Mills's Houſe itſelf, was thought too good a Priſon for him; and therefore he was ſoon dragged into a Skeeling or Out-houſe, adjoining to the Houſe; wherein Lumber and Fuel were kept. And though Chater was in ſo weak and deplorable a Condition, as to be ſcarce able to ſtand: yet to prevent all Chance and Poſſibility of his Eſcape, he was chained by the Leg with an Iron Chain, faſtened to a Beam of the Out-houſe. He was guarded Night and Day; ſometimes by Sheerman, and ſometimes by Heward, who came there that Monday Evening. Thus he continued in Chains, until he was looſened for his Execution. But leſt he ſhould die for want of Suſtenance, and diſappoint their wicked Deſigns; he was to be fed, and juſt kept alive, until the Time and Manner of his Death was determined. During the whole Time of this Impriſonment, old Mills was at home, and in his Buſineſs as uſual. He betrayed not the Truſt repoſed in him; he acquainted nobody with what had happened, nor with whom he was intruſted; but like a Gaoler, took care to produce his Priſoner for Execution.

On Wedneſday the 17th of February, there was a general Summons of all the Smugglers then in the Neighbourhood of Scardefield's Houſe, who had been concerned in breaking open the Cuſtom-Houſe at Poole, to meet that Day at Scardefield's. Upon which Notice, all the Priſoners (except old Mills) came that Day to Scardefield's. And there were alſo preſent, John Mills, another Son of old Mills, Edmund Richards, Thomas Willis, Thomas Stranger, Daniel Perryer, William Steel and John Raiſs; Heward and Sheerman ſtill continuing at old Mills's, and there guarding Chater. It was at this Conſultation at Scardefield's, unanimouſly agreed by all preſent, that Chater ſhould be murdered.

This was a deliberate, ſerious, and determinate Act, of Minds wickedly and cruelly diſpoſed, and executed with all the imaginable Circumſtances of Barbarity.

At this Meeting Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond were firſt concerned in, and became privy and conſenting to this Murder. And there alſo Richard Mills the younger, firſt became an Acceſſary to this Murder: But he was ſo eager in the Purſuit of it, that he particularly adviſed and recommended it; and ſaid, he would go with them to the Execution, but he had no Horſe. And when he was told, that the old Man (meaning Chater) was carried by a ſteep Place in the Road to Rake, he ſaid—"If I had been "there, I ſhould have called a Council of War, and he ſhould have come "no farther."

About Eight of the Clock of that Wedneſday Evening, all who were preſent at the Conſultation at Scardefield's (except Richard Mills the younger, John Mills, and Thomas Willis) went from Scardefield's to the Houſe of old Mills, where they found Chater chained, and guarded by Heward and Sheerman.

They told him he muſt die, and ordered him to ſay his Prayers. And whilſt he was upon his Knees, at Prayers, Cobby kicked him; and Tapner, impatient of Chater's Blood, pulled out a large Claſp-knife, and ſwore he would be his Butcher, and cut him twice or thrice down the Face, and acroſs his Eyes and Noſe. But old Mills, in hopes of avoiding the Puniſhment due to his Guilt, by ſhifting Chater's Execution to another Place, ſaid,—"Don't murder him here, but carry him ſomewhere elſe firſt."

He was then looſened from his Chains, and was by all the Priſoners (except Mills the Father and the Son), and by all the Gang that came from Scardefield's, carried back to that Well, wherein Gally had before been threatened to be thrown alive. Jackſon and Carter left the Company ſome ſmall Diſtance before the others came to the Well; but deſcribed the Well to be fenced round with Pales, and directed them where to find it; and ſaid, We have done our Parts, meaning, we have murdered Gally: And you ſhall do your Parts, meaning, you ſhall murder Chater.

Tapner, in order to make good what he had before ſaid (and happy had it been for him, had he ſhewn more Regard to his Actions and leſs to his Words), after Chater had been forced over the Pales which fenced the Well, pulled a Rope out of his Pocket, put it about Chater's Neck, faſtened the other End to the Pales, and there he hung Chater in the Well until he was dead.

But ſoon after the Body was let looſe, and had fallen to the Bottom of this Well, which was dry, one of the Accomplices imagined he heard Chater breathe, and that there were ſtill ſome Remains of Life in him.

To put an End to a Life ſo miſerable and wretched, they threw Pales and Stones upon him. This was the only Act, that had any Appearance of Mercy and Compaſſion; and it brings to my Remembrance the Saying of the wiſeſt of Men, fully verified in this fatal Inſtance of Chater's Murder——The Mercies of the Wicked are Cruelty.

I am now come to the fourth and laſt Period of Time.

And here it is obſervable, that although Providence had for many Months permitted this Murder to remain undiſcovered, yet it was then diſcloſed and brought to light, when the appointed Time was come, and an Opportunity given, to apprehend and bring to Juſtice many of the principal Offenders.

Upon the 17th of September laſt, Search was made in purſuance of Information given, for the Body of Chater. And the Body was found with a Rope about its Neck, covered with Pales, Stones, and Earth, in that Well I before mentioned, cloſe by Lady Holt Park, in a Wood called Harraſs-Wood, belonging to Mr. Carryll.

By the Length of Time, from February to September, the Body was too much emaciated to be known with any Certainty. But by his Boots, Cloaths, and Belt, there alſo found, it evidently appeared to be the Body of the unfortunate Chater.

I have now opened to you the Subſtance of all the moſt material Facts; and ſhould the Proofs ſupport the Truth of thoſe Facts, no Man can doubt the Conſequence thereof, that Chater was murdered, and that the Priſoners were his Murderers.

Mr. Smyth, another of the King's Counſel, alſo ſpoke as follows, viz. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am likewiſe of Counſel againſt the Priſoners at the Bar, three of whom are indicted as Principals for the Murder of Daniel Chater, the other four as Acceſſaries before the Fact to that Murder.

The Crime they are charged with is one of the greateſt that can be committed againſt the Laws of God and Man, and in this particular Caſe attended with the moſt aggravating Circumſtances.

It was not done in the Heat of Paſſion, and on Provocation, but in cold Blood, deliberately, on the fulleſt Conſideration, in the moſt cruel Manner, and without any Provocation: The Occaſion being as you have heard, only becauſe he dared to ſpeak the Truth, he had ſeen Dimer paſſing through Fordingbridge, and had made Oath of it before a Magiſtrate, being required ſo to do.

This Proſecution therefore is of the utmoſt Importance to the publick Juſtice of the Nation, and to the Safety and Security of every Perſon; not only in this County, but in the Kingdom; for if ſuch Offenders ſhould eſcape with Impunity, the Conſequence would be, that no Crime could be puniſhed. It would teach Highwaymen, Houſebreakers, and all other Criminals, to unite in the Manner thoſe Men have done, and whoever received Injuries from them, would not dare complain, or take any Steps towards bringing them to Juſtice, for fear of expoſing themſelves to the Reſentment and Revenge of their Companions.

Our Conſtitution, therefore, which muſt be ſupported by a regular Adminiſtration of Juſtice, and a due Execution of our Laws, depends in ſome Meaſure, on bringing ſuch Offenders to condign Puniſhment; and 'tis to be hoped a few Examples of this Kind will reſtore the Peace and Tranquillity of this Country.

In ſhortly ſtating the Facts, I ſhall endeavour to point out to you the Share, which every one of the Perſons at the Bar had in this Murder.

In October 1747, the Cuſtom-Houſe at Poole was broke open; the Smugglers who did it, in their Return paſſed through Fordingbridge, a Town in Hampſhire, where Chater ſaw Dimer among them; and having declared ſo, was obliged to make Oath of it before a Magiſtrate; on which Information Dimer was taken up and committed to Chicheſter Goal for further Examination; and on the 14th of February, Chater was ſent by the Collector of Southampton, in Company with Gally, with a Letter to Mr. Battine, Surveyor-General of the Cuſtoms, in order that Chater might ſee if the Man in Chicheſter Gaol was the ſame Perſon he ſaw at Fordingbrige.

Theſe two Men having enquired their Way at the New Inn at Leigh, one Jenkes undertook to direct them, and carried them to the Widow Paine's at Rowland's Caſtle, who ſaying ſhe feared they were going to do the Smugglers ſome Miſchief, ſent for Carter and Jackſon, Steel, Raiſs, Richards, Sheerman, and Heward, who having made Chater and Gally drunk, and ſeen the Letter to Mr. Battine, conſulted what to do with them. Some propoſed to murder them, others to ſend them Priſoners to France, and others to confine them, till they ſaw what became of Dimer, and to treat them as he was dealt with.

Carter and Jackſon having ſent Jenkes away, this poor Man and Gally were left abſolutely in the Power of them and the other Smugglers; and indeed into worſe Hands he could not have fallen: had he been taken Priſoner in Battle by our Enemies, he would have had Quarter, and been treated with Humanity: had he fallen into the Hands of Enemies of thoſe Nations who give no Quarter, his Lot would have been immediate Death: but as it was his hard Fate to fall into the Hands of Smugglers, he was to have neither Quarter or immediate Death, but was reſerved to ſuffer the moſt cruel Uſage for ſeveral Days, and afterwards murdered.

Theſe poor Wretches, after having been beat and abuſed at Paine's by Carter and Jackſon, and the reſt of the Gang, were carried away by Force, both ſet on one Horſe, with their Legs tied under the Horſe's Belly, and whipp'd and beat by Direction of Carter and Jackſon, till they fell; then were ſet up again in the ſame Manner, and whipp'd and beat again 'till they fell a ſecond time; and were then ſet on ſeparate Horſes, and uſed in the ſame Manner, 'till Gally had the good Fortune to be delivered by Death from their Cruelty; after which they carried Chater, who was bloody and mangled with the Blows and Falls he had received, to Scardefield's, at the Red Lion at Raike, who obſerved Jackſon's Coat and Hands to be bloody; and while Carter and the reſt buried Gally, Jackſon and Sheerman carried Chater to old Mills's in the Night, between the 14th and 15th of February, where he was chained by the Leg in the Skeeling, or Out-houſe, 'till the Wedneſday Night following, and Sheerman and Heward guarded him.

Imagine to yourſelves the Condition of this unhappy Man, certain to die by their Hands, uncertain only as to the Time, and the cruel Manner of it; ſuffering for three Days and three Nights, Pain, Cold, and Hunger; and what was infinitely worſe, that Terror and Anxiety of Mind, which one in his Situation muſt continually labour under; he muſt doubtleſs envy the Condition of his Companion Gally, who by an early Death was delivered from the Miſery he then endured.

On Wedneſday following, being the 17th of February, all the Priſoners at the Bar (except old Mills) met at Scardefield's, and there were preſent alſo ſeven more; at which Meeting they conſulted what to do with Chater; and it was unanimouſly agreed by all the Thirteen then preſent, to murder Chater; and young Mills, the Priſoner at the Bar, particularly adviſed it; and ſaid, if he had a Horſe, he would go with them to do it; and either then, or at another Meeting at Scardefield's, when Carter and Jackſon ſaid, that as they came along, they brought Chater by a ſteep Place thirty Feet deep, young Mills ſaid, If I had been there, I would have called a Council of War, and he ſhould have come no further.

This being determined, the Priſoners Tapner, Cobby, Hammond, Carter, and Jackſon, together with five more of that Company, went to old Mills's, where they found Chater chained, and guarded by Sheerman and Heward, and told him he muſt die; he ſaid he expected no other; Tapner then ſaid he would be his Butcher, and taking out a Knife, cut him twice acroſs the Face; on which old Mills ſaid, Don't murder him here, but take him ſomewhere elſe firſt.

Tapner, Cobby, Hammond, Carter, Jackſon, and the reſt, who came there together with Sheerman and Heward, then carried him away to murder him; Sheerman, Heward, and Richards, having been concerned in Gally's Murder, ſaid, the reſt ſhould kill Chater, and therefore went away at Hurting; Carter and Jackſon having been likewiſe concerned in Gally's Murder, when they came to Lady Holt Park-gate, turned in there, and left the the others; having firſt told them, the Well is a little Way off, you can't miſs it, 'tis fenced round with Pales, to keep the Cattle from falling in.

Tapner, Cobly, and Hammond, and the reſt, went then to the Well, where Tapner put a Rope about Chater's Neck to hang him; and ſome of the Pales being broken down, Chater would have crept through. Tapner would not let him, but made him climb over the Pales, weak as he was, and then hanged him in the Well about a Quarter of an Hour, till they thought him dead; then having drawn him up till they could take hold of his Legs, they threw him headlong into the Well; and fancying they heard him breathe or groan, threw Poſts and Stones in upon him, and went their Way.

The Terror this Act of Cruelty had ſpread through the Country, ſtopt every Perſon's Mouth, who had it in their Power to give any Information; ſo that the Body was not found till September laſt, when it was ſo putrified and conſumed, as not to be known, but by the Belt which was about it, and which Chater's Wife will prove to be her Huſband's. If there was any Doubt as to the Identity of the Man, we could ſhew likewiſe, that being examined by the Smugglers juſt before he was murdered, he ſaid his Name was Daniel Chater.

It appears therefore from this State of the Caſe, that all the Priſoners are guilty of the Indictment. Tapner was preſent at the Conſultation at Scardefield's, and was the Perſon who hanged him. Cobby and Hammond were preſent at the Conſultation, helped to carry him to the Well, and were preſent at the Murder, and therefore equally guilty with Tapner, as Principals. Carter and Jackſon took him away by Force from Paine's, and by the Treatment of him there and on the Road, ſhewed an Intention from the firſt to murder him, though perhaps the particular Death he was to ſuffer, was not then agreed on; they were afterwards preſent at the Conſultation at Scardefield's, where it was reſolved to murder him, and went almoſt to the Well with him; and when they parted, gave thoſe who murdered him particular Directions to the Well. Young Mills was alſo at the Conſultation, and particularly adviſed and directed the Murder, in which he declared he would have joined, if he had a Horſe. Old Mills, though he kept no Publick-houſe, and therefore was not obliged to receive Gueſts, receives this Man brought in the Night, in a bloody and deplorable Condition; Chater is chained in his Outhouſe from Sunday Night till Wedneſday; yet Mills never diſcovers it to any Perſon, or uſes any Means to deliver him, which is a ſtrong Evidence of his Knowledge and Approbation of their Deſign; and when Tapner declared he would be his Butcher and cut him, old Mills expreſſes no Diſapprobation of the Murder, does not diſſuade him from it, but deſires him not to do it there, but carry him ſomewhere elſe firſt, which ſhews his Approbation of the Fact; though to ſecure himſelf, as he thought, from Puniſhment, he would have had it committed at ſome other Place.

This, Gentlemen, is the Fact, which ſhews, that ſecuring themſelves and their Companions, was not their principal Aim; were it ſo, they would have murdered this Man as ſoon as they had him in their Power; but their Motive ſeems to have been Revenge, and a Diſpoſition to torture one, who ſhould dare to give any Information, which might bring them or their Friends into Danger.

After hearing the whole Evidence, if theſe Men appear innocent, God forbid they ſhould be found guilty; and I would not have the cruel Circumſtances of the Fact incline you to believe any thing we ſuggeſt, that is not ſupported by the ſtrongeſt Proof: But if the Fact is proved beyond a Poſſibility of Doubt, to be in the Manner we have ſtated, I am ſure you will do your Duty, and by a juſt and honeſt Verdict, deliver your Country from Men ſo void of Humanity.

The following Witneſſes were then called for the Crown.

Mr. Milner, Collector of the Cuſtoms at the Port of Poole, depoſed, That about the 7th of October 1747, he had Advice that the Cuſtom-houſe at Poole was broke open; upon which he haſten'd thither, and found the outer Door burſt open, and the other Door broke in Pieces; that the Room wherein ſome Run Tea was lodged, was broke open, and all the Tea carried away, excepting a little Bag, containing about four or five Pounds *.

Mr. Sheerer, Collector of the Cuſtoms at Southampton, depoſed, That in February laſt he received a Letter from the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms, acquainting him, that one John Dimer was committed to Chicheſter Jail, for breaking open the Cuſtom-houſe at Poole, with Directions to ſend the deceas'd Daniel Chater, who could give ſome Information againſt Dimer, to Mr. Battine the Surveyor-General, and to acquaint Mr. Battine with the Occaſion of his ſending Chater; that he accordingly ſent Chater with a Letter addreſſed to Mr. Battine, under the Care of one William Galley, a Tideſman in the Port of Southampton; that they ſet out on Sunday Morning the 14th of February laſt; he could not take upon him to ſay how Chater was dreſs'd, but he remembered he rode upon a dark brown Horſe, and had a Great-coat on, with another Coat under it, and upon the under Coat a Belt; he could not recollect how Galley was dreſs'd, but remembered that he was mounted on a grey Horſe.

William Galley, the Son of William Galley, depoſed, That he remembered his Father's ſetting out upon this Journey to Mr. Battine, in February laſt; that he ſaw the Letter to Mr. Battine the Night before his Father ſet out, and ſaw the Directions; he remembered the Dreſs his Father had on; it was a blue Great-coat, with Braſs Buttons covered with blue, a cloſe-bodied Coat, of a light brown Colour, lined with blue, with a Waiſtcoat and Breeches of the ſame, and that he rode on a grey Horſe; he remembered that Daniel Chater ſet out at the ſame Time with his Father, and had on a light Surtout Coat, with red Breeches and a Belt round him, and rode upon a brown Horſe: that this was the laſt Time he ever ſaw his Father alive, and that he never ſaw Chater ſince.

Edward Helton depoſed, That on the 14th of February laſt he ſaw Daniel Chater and another Perſon, whom he took to be Mr. Galley, at his own Houſe, at Havant, in the County of Hants; he knew Chater very well, and had ſome Converſation with him; that Chater told him he was going to Chicheſter upon a little Buſineſs, and then went out to Galley, and brought in a Letter, which was directed to William Battine, Eſq. at Eaſt-Marden; upon which he (the Witneſs) told him, he was going out of his Way; that Galley wiſhed he would direct them the Way; that he directed them to go through Stanſtead, near Rowland's Caſtle; and that they ſaid they ſhould be back again the next Day.

George Auſten depoſed, That on Sunday the 14th of February laſt he ſaw two Men, one mounted upon a brown Horſe, and the other upon a grey, at the New Inn at Leigh, in the Pariſh of Havant; that they came to the New Inn when he was there, and inquired the Way to Eaſt-Meon; to which Place he was going to direct them, when one of the Men, who had a blue Coat on, pulled a Letter out of his Pocket, which he (the Witneſs) looked at, and ſeeing it was directed to Eaſt-Marden, he told them they were going Ten Miles out of the Way; and that he and his Brother Thomas Auſten, and his Brother in-law Robert Jenkes, were going Part of their Road, and would conduct them the beſt they could; that they went no farther together than to a Place called Rowland's Caſtle, to a Public-houſe which was kept by the Widow Paine; the two Strangers call'd for Rum at Widow Paine's. This was about the Middle of the Day, or ſomething after. That the Widow Paine aſked him if he knew theſe Men, or whether they belonged to his Company; he told her they were going to Mr. Battine's, and that he was going to ſhew them the Way; ſhe then ſaid ſhe thought they were going to do Harm to the Smugglers, and deſired him to ſet them out of the Way, which he refuſed to do; ſhe then ſeemed uneaſy, and ſhe and her Son conſulted together; that her Son went out, and the Priſoner Jackſon came in in a little Time; that the Priſoner Carter, and ſeveral more, came thither ſoon afterwards. He knew none but Jackſon and Carter. That Jackſon inquired where the two Men were bound for; and the Man in the light Coat anſwered, they were going to Mr. Battine's, and from thence to Chicheſter; but Carter was not by at that Time; that the two Strangers had ſome Rum, and Jackſon called for a Mug of Hot, which was Gin and Beer mixed, or ſomething of that Kind, and to the beſt of his Knowledge they all drank together; he did not ſee any ill Treatment, nor either of the Men bloody, whilſt he was there; that he went away between one and two, and left the two Men there; the Widow Paine called him out of Doors, and told him his Brother Jenkes wanted to ſpeak to him; when he came out, his Horſe was at the Hedge by the back Door, and his Brother ſaid he wondered why the two Men did not go away; upon which he went back again into the Houſe, and his Brother was uneaſy becauſe he did ſo; that the Widow Paine adviſed him to go home, and ſaid the two Men would be directed the Way; he was uneaſy at going without them, becauſe he ſaw ſo many Men come in, and imagined they had a Deſign to do ſome Harm to them; that when he went away, Jackſon and Carter were left with the two Men, to the beſt of his Knowledge; and Jackſon, as well as the Widow Paine, perſuaded him to go home. He was poſitive that Jackſon and Carter were there, for he knew them very well.

The Court aſked Jackſon and Carter, if they would aſk this Witneſs any Queſtions?

To which they both anſwered in the Negative.

Thomas Auſten was then called: depoſed, That he was at the New Inn at Leigh on Valentine's Day laſt, with his Brother George; he ſaw two Men there who inquired the Way to Mr. Battine's; he went from thence with them to Rowland's Caſtle; they went to the Widow Paine's at that Place, and called for a Dram of Rum; the Priſoners were not there at firſt, but in a little Time Jackſon came; and ſoon afterwards the Priſoner Carter. That the Widow Paine ſpoke to him at the outer Door before either of the Priſoners came, and aſked him if he knew the two Men, and ſaid ſhe was afraid they were come to do the Smugglers ſome Miſchief, and that ſhe would ſend for William Jackſon; her Son went for him, and he ſoon came, and another little Man and his Servant; he ſaw one Joſeph Southern there and the Priſoner Carter, but Carter did not come ſo ſoon as Jackſon; he (the Witneſs) ſtayed there till ſeven o'Clock in the Evening, and about that Time William Jackſon ſtruck one of the Men in the Face, who to the beſt of his Remembrance had a blue Coat on; they all drank pretty freely from one o'Clock, and he was drunk and went to Sleep, and the two Men were fuddled and went to Sleep in the little Room; that about ſeven o'Clock Jackſon went into the Room and waked the two Men, and when they came out of the Room, it was that Jackſon ſtruck one of them; after they came out, the two Men went away with Jackſon and Carter, and one William Steele, and Edmund Richards; he did not remember that they were forced away, and did not ſee them upon the Horſes, nor did he ever ſee them any more; this was between ſeven and eight o'Clock.

Being aſked, whether he ſaw either of the Men produce his Deputation, or heard any high Words?

Said he did not; that he was aſleep the beſt Part of the Afternoon; and did not ſee any ill Treatment, but that one Blow which he had mentioned, and did not obſerve any Blood about them when they went away.

Being croſs-examined at the Requeſt of the Priſoners,

Said, he did not know who the two Strangers were, but they were the ſame Perſons that his Brother George ſpoke of, and had a Letter for Mr. Battine; that one of them had a blue Coat on, and rode upon a grey Horſe, and the other Man rode upon a browniſh Horſe; he did not ſee the Direction of the Letter, but he heard it read by Robert Jenkes.

Robert Jenkes depoſed, That he ſaw two Men upon the 14th of February laſt, at the New Inn at Leigh, one of them upon a blackiſh Horſe, the other upon a grey, and dreſſed in riding Coats; they were the ſame Men that the Witneſſes George and Thomas Auſten had ſpoke of; they went together to Rowland's Caſtle, and got there about twelve o'Clock or ſomething after, and went into a Houſe there which was kept by the Widow Paine; he did not hear her give any Directions to ſend for any body; but the Priſoners Jackſon and Carter ſoon came thither; he ſtaid

* The Short-Hand Writer having omitted to take the ſeveral Queſtions put to the Witneſſes, with their Anſwers in the Words they were delivered, that Defect cannot now be ſupplied.

But we having peruſed the following Trials do certify, that the Subſtance of the Evidence given by the ſeveral Witneſſes is faithfully taken. And that upon the whole, this Account of the Proceedings under the Commiſſions is in Subſtance true.

there about an Hour and a half, and whilſt he was there he did not ſee any Abuſe, or obſerve that either of the Men was bloody; he had no Converſation with Jackſon, further than that Jackſon ſaid he would ſee the Letter which was going to Major Battine, and Carter he believes might ſay ſo too; when he wanted to go away, Jackſon would not ſuffer him to go thro' the Room where the two Men were; that Jackſon told him if he had a mind to go, he might go through the Garden to the back Part of the Houſe; he did ſo, and found his Horſe there, and went away; he could not ſay why Jackſon refuſed to let him go through the Room, but believed it was for fear the two Men ſhould go away with him; that he did not order his Horſe to be led round to the Garden himſelf; that George Auſten and he went away together upon his Horſe, and that Jackſon would ſee the Letter one of the Men had in his Pocket, and the Witneſs ſaw the Direction of it, which was to William Battine, Eſq. at Eaſt Marden.

Being croſs-examined by the Priſoner Carter, whether Carter ſaid he would ſee the Letter? anſwered, both Carter and Jackſon ſaid ſo, and that Carter did ſay he would ſee the Letter that was going to Mr. Battine; that he (the Witneſs) did not order his Horſe to be carried to the back Part of the Houſe; and that Carter was by when he was told by Jackſon, that if he had a mind to go, his Horſe ſhould be led to the back Part of the Houſe.

Joſeph Southern ſwore, That on Sunday the 14th of February laſt, he ſaw Jenkes, the two Auſtens, and two other Men on the Road coming from Havant towards Rowland's Caſtle, one of them had a blue Coat on and rode a grey Horſe; that he went to Rowland's Caſtle himſelf that Day, and ſaw Jenkes, Auſten, and the ſame two Men ſitting on Horſeback drinking at the Widow Paine's Door; he ſtaid there beſt Part of an Hour, and ſaw them and ſeveral other Perſons in the Houſe; that he ſaw the Priſoners Carter and Jackſon in the Houſe whilſt he ſtaid there; he ſat down and drank a Pint of Beer by the Kitchen Fire, but the other Perſons were in another Room; that he ſaw the two Men come out to the Door and go in again, and one of them had an Handkerchief over his Eye, and there was Blood upon it; that he met this Man as he was going in, and heard him ſay to Jackſon, "I am the King's Officer, and I will take Notice of you "that ſtruck me." That Carter was not preſent when this was ſaid, but was in the Houſe; the Man who ſpoke thus to Jackſon had a Parchment in his Hand when he met him at the Door, he likewiſe ſaw a Letter in his Hand, and heard him ſay he was going to Mr. Battine with it; that he (the Witneſs) went away between two and three o'Clock, and did not know what became of the Letter, nor had he heard either Jackſon or Carter ſay what became of it.

The Priſoners Jackſon and Carter ſaid they would not aſk him any Queſtions.

William Garret ſwore, he was at the Widow Paine's on the 14th of February laſt, about four o'Clock in the Afternoon, and ſaw the Priſoners Jackſon and Carter and two Strangers there; that one of them who had a blue Coat on had received a Stroke upon his Cheek, and the Blood ran down it; that juſt as he came in, this Man was ſtanding up by the Back of a Chair, and Jackſon ſtood by him, and he heard Jackſon ſay, "That "for a Quartern of Gin he would ſerve him ſo again," by which the Witneſs underſtood that Jackſon had ſtruck him before; he did not hear the Man ſay he was the King's Officer, but he heard Jackſon ſay, "You a "King's Officer! I'll make you a King's Officer, and that you ſhall "know." That when he went away, he left them all there.

The Priſoners would not aſk him any Queſtions.

William Lamb depoſed, That he went to the Widow Paine's, at Rowland's Caſtle, on the 14th of February laſt, about four in the Afternoon, and found Jackſon and Carter there; that before he went, he ſaw one of the Widow Paine's Sons call Carter aſide, at his Houſe at Weſt-Bourne; that there were ſeveral other People there in another Room, amongſt whom were Thomas Auſten, and two Men that were Strangers to him, one of whom had on a blue Gaberdine; the two Men, he underſtood, were going with a Letter to Mr. Battine; he ſaw no ill Treatment during the little Time he ſtaid there; that Edmund Richards, one of the Company, pull'd out a Piſtol, and ſaid, "That whoever ſhould diſcover any thing that paſſed at "that Houſe, he would blow his Brains out." Jackſon and Carter were not in the Room when theſe Words were ſpoken, as he believes. He ſaw the Man in the blue Gaberdine pull a Parchment out of his Pocket, and heard him tell the People he was the King's Officer; his Wig was then off, and there was Blood upon his Cheek; that he ſaw a Letter, which he underſtood to be going to Mr. Battine; one Kelly, and the Priſoner Carter, had it in their Hands, but he did not know how they came by it; he did not ſee the Directions of the Letter; he obſerv'd it was broke open, when he ſaw it in the Hands of Carter and Kelly; and he underſtood, by the Diſcourſe of the Company, that it was a Letter which the two Strangers were to carry to Mr. Battine, but he never heard it read.

The Priſoners, Carter and Jackſon, would not aſk him any Queſtions.

Richard Kent depoſed, That he was at the Widow Paine's on the 14th of February laſt; and that Edmund Richards told him, that if he ſpoke a Word of what he had heard or ſeen there, he would ſhoot him thro' the Body; but Jackſon and Carter were not in the Room when Richards ſaid this.

George Peate depoſed, That he was at Rowland's Caſtle, on Sunday the 14th of February laſt, about ſeven o'Clock in the Evening, or after, and ſaw nine Men there, and that the Priſoners, Jackſon and Carter, were two of them; he ſtaid there about half an Hour, and as ſoon as he came in, he ſaw four or five Men with great Coats and Boots on, moſt of them upon their Legs, as if they were juſt going; he went and warmed himſelf by the Kitchen Fire, and ſat down by Thomas Auſten, who was then aſleep; he called for a Pint of Beer, and ſoon after he heard the Stroke of a Whip repeated three or four Times, in a little Room that was at the Corner of the Kitchen, but did not ſee who gave the Blows, nor who received them; that he afterwards heard a ſtrange Ruſtling of People, more than before, and ſaw ſeven or eight Men come into the Kitchen; that he knew the Priſoners Jackſon and Carter, and William Steele, Edmund Richards, and two that went by the Names of Sam and Harry; there were two other Perſons there, whom, to his Knowledge, he had never ſeen before nor ſince; and could give no Account of them, nor did he obſerve how they were dreſs'd; that ſoon after he thought he heard a Blow, and he ſaw Jackſon in a moving Poſture, as if he had juſt given a Blow, and was drawing up his Arm in a proper Form, as if he was going to give another; but William Paine ſtepp'd up, and called him Fool and Blockhead for ſo doing; upon which he ſunk his Arm, and did not behave in the like Manner any more, in his Sight; that juſt as they were going out of Doors, Jackſon turned round, with a Piſtol in his Hand, and aſked for a Belt, Strap, or String, but Nobody give him either, and he put his Piſtol into his Great-coat Pocket, and went away with the reſt; that by the trampling of Horſes, he ſuppoſed they all went on Horſeback, but which Way he knew not; it was between ſeven and eight o'Clock, as nigh as he could gueſs, when they went off; he did not hear any Converſation about one of the Strangers being the King's Officer, nor did ſee the Blow given, nor the Perſon to whom the other Blow was going to be given.

The Priſoners would not aſk him any Queſtions.

John Raiſs depoſed, That on Sunday, the 14th of February, he was at Rowland's Caſtle, between twelve and one o'Clock at Noon; that when he came there he found Edmund Richards, William Steele, the Priſoners Carter and Jackſon, and Little Sam, Richard Kelly, Jackſon's Wife, and Galley and Chater; he ſaw Jackſon take Chater to the Door, and heard him aſk him if he knew any Thing of Dimer; and Chater anſwer'd he did, and was obliged to go and ſpeak againſt him; that Galley then went out to keep Chater from talking to Jackſon; whereupon Jackſon knocked Galley down with his Fiſt; that Galley came in again, and ſoon after Jackſon and Carter. When they were all come in, he (the Witneſs) with the Priſoners Jackſon and Carter, and Edmund Richards, went into the back Room; that there they enquir'd of Jackſon what he had got out of the Shoemaker (meaning Daniel Chater); that Jackſon informed them, that Chater ſaid he knew Dimer, and was obliged to come in as a Witneſs againſt him; that then they conſulted what to do with them (Chater and Galley); this was about three o'Clock in the Afternoon: They firſt propoſed to carry them to ſome ſecure Place, where they might be taken care of till they had an Opportunity of carrying them over to France; that when this Propoſition was made, the Priſoners, Jackſon and Carter, and Richards, and himſelf were preſent; and this Reſolution was taken to ſend them out of the way, that Chater ſhould not appear againſt Dimer; and afterwards it was agreed to fetch a Horſe, and carry them away: That Galley and Chater appeared very uneaſy, and wanted to be gone; and thereupon Jackſon's Wife, to pacify them, told them that ſhe lived at Major Battine's, and her Horſe was gone for, and as ſoon as it came ſhe would ſhew them the Way to Mr. Battine's; that he (the Witneſs) then went to Chicheſter, and ſaw no more of them that Night.

Being croſs-examined, at the Requeſt of the Defendants Counſel, ſaid, At this Conſultation there was nothing mentioned but the ſecuring them, in order to carry them to France.

This Witneſs having gone thus far in his Evidence, was ſet by for the preſent; the Counſel for the Crown declaring that they would call him again, to give an Account of what paſs'd on the 17th, after they had examined the next Witneſs.

William Steele depoſed, That he was at the Widow Paine's on Sunday the 14th of February; that the Priſoner Jackſon, Little Sam, one Kelly, and two Men more, and Jackſon's Wife, were there when he came, which was about two o'Clock in the Afternoon, and ſoon afterwards Little Harry, the Priſoner Carter, Edmund Richards, John Raiſs, and Carter's Wife, came thither; he did not know how Carter or Jackſon came to be there, but the Widow Paine's Son came and called him (the Witneſs) out, and ſaid he muſt go to the Caſtle, for there were two Men come to ſwear againſt the Shepherd, meaning John Dimer; that when he came in they were in general ſober, as far as he ſaw, but they ſat drinking together about two Hours; that Jackſon took Chater out of the Houſe, to examine him about Dimer, and after they had been out ſome Time, Galley went out to them, but ſoon return'd, and ſaid Jackſon had knocked him down; the Witneſs ſaw he was bloody all down the left Cheek; that Jackſon was not in the Room when Galley came in, but came in with Carter a little Time afterwards; that then Galley, addreſſing himſelf to Jackſon, ſaid he did not know any Occaſion Jackſon had to uſe him in that Manner, and that he ſhould remember it, and took down his Name in Jackſon's Preſence. Galley likewiſe ſaid he was an Officer, and ſhewed his Deputation to the People that were in the Room; the Company continued drinking till Galley and Chater were quite fuddled, and went into a little inner Room to ſleep; this was about four or five o'Clock, and they continued in the little Room two or three Hours; the reſt of the Company ſat drinking all the while, conſulting what to do with Galley and Chater. The Priſoners, Jackſon and Carter, and Little Sam, Little Harry, Richards, and the Witneſs, were at this Conſultation. It was propoſed to put them (Galley and Chater) out of the way, becauſe they ſhould not appear againſt the Shepherd, meaning Dimer, and it was propoſed to throw them into the Well, in the Horſe-paſture, about half a Mile from Rowland's Caſtle, but it was thought not convenient to put them into a Well ſo near, for fear of a Diſcovery; it was then propoſed to join, and each Man to allow them Three-Pence a Week, and to keep them in ſome ſecret Place 'till they ſaw what became of Dimer, and as Dimer was ſerved, ſo theſe two People (Chater and Galley) were to be ſerved; this was talked of while Chater and Galley were aſleep, and there was no other Propoſal made, as he heard. But while they were talking theſe Things, the Wives of Carter and Jackſon ſaid it was no Matter what became of them (Galley and Chater), or what was done to them; they ought to be hang'd, for they were come to ruin them, meaning the Smugglers: That about Seven o'Clock Carter and Jackſon went into the inner Room, and waked Galley and Chater, and brought them out of the Room, very bloody and very drunk; he did not ſee what paſſed in the Room, but was ſure they did not go in ſo bloody; and he believed Jackſon and Carter had kicked and ſpurr'd them; they ſet Galley the Officer upon a brown or black Horſe, and Chater up behind him; Jackſon, Carter, and Richards, put them on Horſe-back and tied their Legs under the Horſe's Belly, and alſo tied their Legs together; they then tied a Line to the Bridle, and he (the Witneſs) got upon a grey Horſe and led them along; that juſt after they turned round the Corner about twenty or thirty Yards from the Houſe, Jackſon cried out, Whip them, them, lick them Dogs, cut them; it was then dark, and the Company whipped and laſhed them with their Horſe-whips, ſome on one Side and ſome on the other, with great Violence on the Face and Head and other Parts of the Body, and continued doing ſo while they rode about half a Mile to a Place called Wood's Aſhes; that there they alighted, and Little Sam gave all the Company a Dram or two, but none to Galley and Chater; that as ſoon as they were mounted again Jackſon and Carter cried out, Damn them, lick them, whip them; and they were whipped as before for about a Mile further, and then they fell down under the Horſe's Belly with their Heads upon the Ground, and their Legs over the Saddle; they were immediately ſet up again, and their Legs tied together in the ſame Poſture; and the Company went on whipping them as before, 'till they came to a Place called Goodthrough Dean, which was about half a Mile further; they were beat very much, and in the Judgment of the Witneſs, it was almoſt impoſſible they ſhould ſit their Horſes; when they came to Dean, ſomebody of the Company pulled out a Piſtol, and ſaid, He would ſhoot them (Galley and Chater) through the Head if they made any Noiſe whilſt they went through the Village; he could not tell who it was that threatened to ſhoot them, but apprehends it was done for fear the People in the Village ſhould hear them; they went on but a Foot Pace, and after they got through Dean, they were whipped again as before; and when they came near a Place called Idſworth, they fell down again under the Horſe's Belly, and then ſome of the Company looſed them, and ſet up the Officer (Galley) behind him (the Witneſs), and Chater behind Little Sam, and in this Manner they proceeded towards Lady Holt Park, which is near three Miles from Idſworth, whipping Galley and Chater as before; but the Laſhes of their Whips falling upon the Witneſs, as he ſat before Galley, he (the Witneſs) could not bear the Strokes, and therefore they left off whipping Galley in that Manner; Galley ſat upon the Horſe 'till they got to Lady Holt Park, and then being faint and tired with riding, he got down, and Carter and Jackſon took him one by the Arms and the other by the Legs, and carried him towards a Well by the Side of Lady Holt Park; that Jackſon ſaid to Carter, "We'll throw him into the Well;" to which Carter replied, with all his Heart, and Galley ſeemed indifferent what they did with him; but ſome of the Company ſaying it was Pity to throw him into the Well, Jackſon and Carter ſet him up behind the Witneſs again, and Chater was ſtill behind Little Sam; they went on in this Manner 'till they came to go down a Hill, when Galley was faint and tired, and could not ride any further, and got down there; upon which Carter and Jackſon laid him on a Horſe before Edmund Richards, with his Belly upon the Pummel of the Saddle, they laid him acroſs the Horſe, becauſe he was ſo bad that they could not contrive to carry him in any other Manner, and they carried him ſo for about a Mile and a Half from the Well; that then Richards being tired of holding him, let him down by the Side of the Horſe; and Carter and Jackſon put him upon the grey Horſe that he (the Witneſs) was upon, and the Witneſs got off; they ſet him up, his Legs acroſs the Saddle, and his Body lay over the Horſe's Mane; that in this Poſture, Jackſon held him on; he did not remember that any body elſe held him at that Time; that they went on for about half a Mile in this Manner, Galley crying out vehemently all the Time, "Barbarous Uſage, for God's ſake ſhoot me through the Head or through "the Body;" he (the Witneſs) thought Jackſon was at this Time pinching him by the privy Parts, for there were no Blows given when he cried ſo; that Chater was ſtill with the Company behind Little Sam, and they went on for about two Miles and a half further, the Company holding Galley by Turns on the Horſe, 'till they came to a dirty Lane; at this Place, Carter and Jackſon rode forwards, and bid the reſt of the Company ſtop at the Swing-gate beyond the Water, 'till they ſhould return; Jackſon and Carter came to them again at the Swing-gate, and told them, that the Man of the Houſe, whither they went, was ill, and that they could not go thither; by which he underſtood that they had been in the Neighbourhood to get Entertainment. It was then propoſed to go forward to the Houſe of one Scardefield; and Little Harry tied Galley with a Cord, and got up on Horſeback behind him, in order to hold him up on the Horſe, and they went on 'till they came to a gravelly Knap in the Road; at this Place Galley cried out, "I ſhall fall, I ſhall fall;" whereupon Little Harry ſaid, "D———n you, then fall," and gave him a Puſh, and Galley fell down and gave a Spirt, and never ſpoke a Word more; he (the Witneſs) believed his Neck was broke by the Fall; that then they put him upon the Horſe again, and went away for Raike, to the Sign of the Red-Lion, which was kept by William Scardefield; that Chater was behind Little Sam, and was carried to Scardefield's Houſe, and was very bloody when they came to Scardefield's; that Jackſon and Little Harry went from Scardefield's with Chater about three o'Clock in the Morning; and Jackſon afterwards returned to Scardefield's, and ſaid he had left Chater at old Mills's Houſe, and that Little Harry was left to look after him that he might not eſcape; this was Monday the 15th of February, and they remained all that Day at Scardefield's Houſe; that the Priſoner, Richard Mills the younger, was there on that Day; and upon hearing from Carter and Jackſon that they had paſſed by a Precipice of about thirty Feet deep, when they had Chater with them, he ſaid, "If I had been there, I would have "called a Council of War on the Spot, and he (Chater) ſhould have gone "no further;" or to that Effect. That two or three Days afterwards the Company met at Scardefield's again, to conſult what to do with Chater; that the Priſoners John Raiſs, Carter, and Jackſon, the Priſoner Richard Mills the younger, a Son of the Priſoner Richard Mills the elder, Thomas Willis, John Mills, another Son of old Mills, the Priſoners Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond, and Thomas Stringer, Edmund Richards, and Daniel Perrier, and he, (the Witneſs) were there conſulting what to do with Chater; and John Mills propoſed to take him out, and load a Gun, and tie a String to the Trigger, and place him (Chater) againſt the Gun, and that they ſhould all of them pull the String, to involve every one of them in the ſame Degree of Guilt; but this Propoſal was not agreed to. Then Jackſon and Carter propoſed to carry him back to the Well, and to murder him there, which was agreed to by all the Company; but Richard Mills the younger and John Mills ſaid, they could not go with them to the Well becauſe they had no Horſes; and as it was in their (the other Perſons) way home, they might do it as well without them; and ſo it was concluded to murder Chater, and then to throw him into the Well; that in the Evening they went away from Raike to the Houſe of the Priſoner Richard Mills the elder, and found Chater in a back Skeeling, or Out-houſe, run up at the Back of Mills's Houſe, a Place they uſually put Turf in; he was chained with an Iron Chain, about three Yards long, to a Beam that went acroſs the Skeeling, about as high as his Head; that Chater was bloody about the Head, and had a Cut upon one of his Eyes, but he could ſee with it; that the Priſoner, Richard Mills the elder, was at home himſelf, and fetched out Bread and Cheeſe for them to eat, and gave them Drink, and received them, and made them welcome; that the Houſe is a private Houſe, no Inn or Ale-houſe; that they all of them went to and again between the Houſe and the Skeeling, and that the Priſoner, Richard Mills the elder, was at home all the while; that the Priſoner Tapner pulled out a claſp Knife and opened it, and ſwore to Chater "that Knife ſhould be his Butcher," and cut him over both his Eyes, and down his Forehead, ſo that he bled to a great Degree. He was ordered by ſome of the Company to ſay his Prayers, for they were come to kill him, and kill him they would; that Tapner ſaid this, and ſome of the Company were then in the Skeeling, and the reſt of them were in the Houſe, but no one interpoſed to ſave his Life; that he (the Witneſs) was in the Skeeling, when Chater was adviſed to ſay his Prayers, and was cut, and that Chater was chained by the Leg at that Time. When they had kept him there as long as they thought fit, ſomebody of the Company unlocked the Chain, and ſet him on Horſeback, and John Raiſs, Edmund Richards, Little Harry, Little Sam, the Priſoner Tapner, Thomas Stringer, the Priſoners Cobby and Hammond, Little Daniel, the Priſoners Jackſon, Carter, and the Witneſs, ſet out with him for Lady Holt Park, to carry him down to the Well; that when they came to a Place called Harting, Richards, Little Harry, and Little Sam, went back; and when the reſt came to the white Gate by Lady Holt Park, Carter and Jackſon left them, but firſt told them they muſt keep along a little further, and they could not miſs the Well; that it was about two Hundred Yards further, and that there were ſome Pales on the right Hand of it; that there were Pales round the Well. They went on, found the Well by the Direction Carter and Jackſon had given them, and carried Chater with them; that then Tapner, Stringer, and Cobby got off their Horſes, and Tapner pulled a Cord out of his Pocket, and put it about Chater's Neck, and led him towards the Well. Chater ſeeing two or three Pales down, ſaid he could get through, but Tapner ſaid, "No, you ſhall get over," and he did ſo, with the Rope about his Neck; they then put him into the Well, and hanged him, winding the Rope round the Rails, and his Body hung down in the Mouth of the Well for about a Quarter of an Hour; and then Stringer took hold of his Legs to pull him aſide, and let his Head fall firſt into the Well, and Tapner let the Rope go, and down fell the Body into the Well headforemoſt; that they ſtaid there ſome Time, and one of the Company ſaid he thought he heard him breathe in the Well; upon which they got a Poſt or two, and threw them into the Well upon him, and there they left him.

The Priſoner, Richard Mills the elder, ſaid, he never heard any Talk about the Man's being to be killed, and that he deſired the People would take him away, and ſaid he would not have him murdered.

Steele, the Witneſs, being croſs-examined as to this, ſaid, He never heard the Priſoner ſay he would not have them murder the Man; and added, to be ſure he muſt hear them talk of murdering him, while they were at his Houſe.

John Raiſs, being called again, ſaid, That after he had left the Company at the Widow Paine's, on the 14th of February, as mentioned in the former Part of his Evidence, he met ſome of the ſame Company, and others, on the Wedneſday Evening following, being the 17th of February, at Scardefield's, at Raike; that the Priſoners, Richard Mills the younger, Carter, Jackſon, Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond, with Steele, Richards, Little Sam, Daniel Perrier, John Mills, and Thomas Willis, were there; and it was propoſed at that Meeting to murder Chater. He could not ſay who firſt made the Propoſal, but, to the beſt of his Knowledge, it was either Carter or Jackſon, and it was agreed to by all the Company; it was not then reſolved how it was to be done, but only in general, that he was to be murdered, and thrown into a Well; that they went to the Houſe of the Priſoner, Richard Mills the elder, to join Little Harry, who was left there to take Care of Chater, and found Chater chained by the Leg upon ſome Turf in a Skeeling, at the Backſide of the Houſe; that the Priſoner, Richard Mills the elder, was at Home, and ordered his Houſekeeper to fetch Bread and Cheeſe, and ſome Houſehold Beer, for any of them to eat and drink that would, and believes Mills knew that they came for Chater; that Tapner and Cobby were very earneſt to go and ſee Chater; and Tapner having his Knife in his Hand ſaid, "This Knife ſhall be his Butcher;" that thereupon the Priſoner, Richard Mills the elder, ſaid, "Pray do not murder him here, but carry "him ſomewhere elſe before you do it;" that old Mills ſaid this, upon ſeeing that Tapner had his Knife in his Hand, and hearing him declare it ſhould be his (Chater's) Butcher; that they then went out into the Skeeling, and found Chater ſitting upon ſome Heath or Turf, and Tapner ordered him to ſay his Prayers: While he was repeating the Lord's Prayer, Tapner cut him over the Face with his Knife, and Cobby ſtood by, kicking him and damning him. This too was whilſt the poor Man was ſaying the Lord's Prayer. That Chater aſked them what was become of Galley? and they told him he was murdered, and that they were come to murder him. Upon which Chater earneſtly begg'd to live another Day. That Cobby aſked him his Name, and whether he had not formerly done Harveſt-work at Selſea? To which he anſwered, That his Name was Daniel Chater, and that he had harveſted at Selſea, and there he became acquainted with Dimer. Cobby and Tapner aſked him what they had fed him with at old Mills's, and he ſaid Peaſe Pottage; that Little Harry unlocked the Horſe-lock, that was on his (Chater's) Legs, and Tapner, Cobby, and Stringer, brought him out of the Skeeling, and ſet him upon Tapner's Mare, in order to carry him to the Well, to be there murdered, and thrown in; and that all the Company knew, at that Time, what was to be done with him; that they rid about three Miles towards the Well, and ſometimes whipp'd Chater with their Horſewhips; and Tapner obſerving that he bled, ſwore, if he blooded his (Tapner's) Saddle, he would whip him again. When they came to Harting, Carter, Jackſon, Richards, Little Sam, Little Harry, and Steele, ſaid, "We have done our "Parts,

" Parts, and you (meaning the reſt of the Company) ſhall do yours." By which they meant, as he took it, that they had murdered Galley, and that the reſt ſhould murder Chater; and Richards, Little Sam, and Little Harry, ſtopp'd there, and did not accompany them any further; the reſt went on towards the Well; but Carter and Jackſon ſtopp'd before they came to it, and told them the Well was a little further off, deſcribing it to them, and told them they could not miſs finding it, and there left them; that he (the Witneſs) and Tapner, Cobby, Stringer, Hammond, Perryer, and Steele, came to the Well, got off their Horſes, and took Chater off his Horſe, the Witneſs was not certain which, and either Tapner or Cobby put a Cord round his Neck; that there was a Shord in the Pales about the Well; and he heard Chater ſay he could get through there; but Cobby ſaid, " Damn you, no, you ſhall not, you ſhall get over;" that Tapner wound the Cord round the Pales, and Chater being put into the Mouth of the Well, hung by the Neck for about a Quarter of an Hour, and then they looſened the Rope, and turned the Body, that it fell into the Well head-foremoſt. They ſtaid there till ſome of the Company thought they heard him breathe, and then went to get a Rope at Lady Holt Park, to go down into the Well to murder him quite, but met Jackſon and Carter at Lady Holt Park, who told them there was a long Ladder; but they could not rear the Ladder, and ſo got ſome Poſts, and threw them down into the Well.

The Priſoner Hammond deſired the Witneſs might be aſked, Whether, when they were at old Mills's, he did not offer to ride away, and make a Diſcovery; but was prevented by the Company?

Raiſs ſaid he never heard him ſay any Thing about it; but ſome of the Company did threaten any of the reſt who ſhould refuſe to go to the Murder of Chater.

Ann Peſcod depoſed, That two Men came to her Father's on the 15th of February, about one or two o'Clock in the Morning, and called for Thomas Peſcod her Father; that ſhe aſked one of them his Name, and he ſaid it was William Jackſon: Her Father, who was then very ill, ſaid they might come in if they would; that Jackſon did come in, and aſked if they could not abide in the Houſe ſome Time; to which ſhe anſwered No, becauſe her Father was ill; and thereupon Jackſon turned to the other Man, and ſaid, We cannot think of abiding here, as the Man is ſo ill, and ſo they went away. She ſaw that Jackſon's Hand was bloody.

William Scardefield depoſed, That he kept the Red Lyon at Raike, in the Pariſh of Rogate, and that in the Night, between the 14th and 15th of February laſt, the Priſoners Jackſon and Carter, with Steele and Richards, came to his Houſe, and called out to him, " For God's Sake get up, and " let us in!" That he let them in, and lighted a Candle, and ſaw they were bloody; he aſked them how they came to be ſo, and they ſaid they had had an Engagement with ſome Officers, and had loſt their Goods, and ſome of their Men they feared were dead, and ſome were wounded; that they ſaid they would go and call them that were at the other Publick Houſe; and while he was gone down into the Cellar, he heard Horſes come to the Door, and ſome of the Men went into the Kitchen, ſome into the Brewhouſe, and ſome into the Parlour; that he ſaw two or three Men in the Brewhouſe, and there lay ſomething like a Man before them by the Brewhouſe Door, and he heard them ſay he was dead; that ſome of them calling for Liquor, he carried a Glaſs of Gin into the Parlour, and ſaw a Man ſtanding upright in the Parlour, with his Face bloody, and one Eye ſwelled very much; that Richards was in the Parlour with the Man, and objected to his coming in; and the Priſoners Carter and Jackſon, and three others were then in the Brewhouſe, and Steele was with them; after they had drank three Mugs of Hot, they got their Horſes out, and ſent him down for ſome Brandy and Rum; but when he came up with it, all the Company were gone twenty Yards below the Houſe, tho' ſeveral of them came back to drink, one or two at a time; that he did not know what became of the Man that he ſaw ſtanding in the Parlour, but he obſerved they ſeparated into two Companies; that one of the Company, a little Man, aſked him if he did not know the Place where they laid up ſome Goods a Year and an half ago; and the Priſoner Carter came back, and ſaid they muſt have a Lanthorn; that Richards fell in a Paſſion becauſe he refuſed to go along with them; and upon ſeeing him coming towards them with a Light, the Company parted; that he ſaw a Horſe ſtand at a little Diſtance, and there ſeemed to him to be a Man lying acroſs the Horſe, and two Men holding him on, and he believed that the Perſon he ſaw lying acroſs the Horſe was dead, but he was not nigh enough to ſee whether he was or not.

That on the Wedneſday or Thurſday following, about twelve or one at Noon, the Priſoners Jackſon and Carter, and all the reſt of the Company came again to his Houſe: that the Priſoner Richard Mills the younger, and his Brother John were ſent for, and came to them.

Edward Sones proved, that on the 16th or 17th of September laſt, he found the Body of a dead Man in a Well in Harras Wood, within 200 Yards of Lady Holt Houſe, and that there were two Pieces of Timber over the Body: that he went immediately to get the Coroner's Inqueſt; and when he came back, he ſaw the Man had Boots on, and there was a Rope about his Neck; and that the Well is by Lady Holt Park, in the County of Suſſex.

Mr. Brackſtone produced the Boots and a Belt that were taken off the Body, and given to him by the Coroner.

Mrs. Chater, the Widow of Daniel Chater, depoſed, That ſhe remembered her late Huſband ſet out from Southampton on the 14th of February laſt, and that ſhe had never ſeen him ſince that time; ſhe looked upon the Belt produced by Mr. Brackſtone, and ſaid ſhe knew it was the ſame Belt her Huſband had on when he ſet out from home, by a particular Mark in it; and ſhe believed that the Boots produced were likewiſe her Huſband's.

Mr. Sones proved alſo, that the Horſe, which Chater ſet out upon, was found about a Month afterwards, and delivered to the Owner.

The King's Counſel ſubmitted it here.

Mr. Juſtice Foſter acquainted the Priſoners, that the King's Counſel having gone through their Evidence, it was now their Time to offer what they could in their own Defence.

He repeated to each of the Priſoners the particular Facts the Evidence had charged him with, and aſked them ſeverally what they had to ſay to clear themſelves of that Charge.

To which the Priſoner Tapner ſaid, he did not know that they were going to murder the Man; but Jackſon and Richards threatened to kill him if he would not go with them, and he received three or four Cuts from Hammond or Daniel Perryer, but he did not know which; that Richards and another Man tied the Rope; and he denied that he drew a Knife, or cut Chater acroſs the Face.

Mr. Juſtice Foſter told him, that ſuppoſing he was threatened in the Manner he inſiſted on, yet that would be no legal Defence in the preſent Caſe; and that in every poſſible View of the Caſe, it was infinitely more eligible for a Man to die by the Hands of wicked Men, than to go to his Grave with the Guilt of innocent Blood on his own Head.

Cobby ſaid, he did not know what they were going to do with the Man, that he never touched him, and knew nothing of the Murder.

Hammond ſaid, when he underſtood what they were going to do, he wanted to go off and make a Diſcovery: But the Company prevented him; and that by the Company he meant all the Priſoners.

Richard Mills the elder ſaid, he did not know what they were at, and did not think they would have hurt the Man, and did not know he was chained till after they were gone away.

Richard Mills the younger ſaid, he knew nothing of the Matter, and never ſaw either of the Men (Galley and Chater) in his Life; he acknowledged he was at Scardefield's Houſe, but ſaid he knew nothing of the Murder, and denied the Charge; that Scardefield was the only Witneſs he had, for he (Scardefield) knew when he came, and how long he ſtaid there.

Jackſon ſaid, the Man who ſaid he would be Chater's Butcher, was his Butcher, and nobody elſe; that he (Jackſon) was not by when he was murdered, and was not guilty of it.

Mr. Juſtice Foſter cautioned him not to deceive himſelf, and told him, that with regard to the preſent Charge, it was not neceſſary that he ſhould have been preſent at the Murder; he was not charged with being preſent, but as an Acceſſary before the Fact, in adviſing and procuring the Murder to be done; and that was the Fact he was called upon to anſwer.

Carter ſaid, when he went to the Widow Paine's, he only thought they were going to carry the Men out of the way till they ſaw what ſhould become of Dimer, and that he never laid Hands upon them; and went along with the Company to prevent Miſchief.

Scardefield the Witneſs was then called again, and Richard Mills the younger being aſked whether he would aſk him any Queſtions, only deſired he might be aſked what time he came to his Houſe, and how long he ſtaid there; to which Scardefield anſwered, That Mills came to his Houſe about half an Hour after One, ſtaid there about an Hour and an half, and went away on Foot.

The reſt of the Priſoners ſaid they had not any Witneſſes.

Upon which, Mr. Juſtice Foſter opened to the Jury the Subſtance of the Indictment, as before ſet forth; and told them, that whether the Priſoners, or any of them, were guilty in Manner as therein they are ſeverally charged, muſt be left to their Conſideration, upon the Evidence that had been laid before them.

That in order to enable them to apply the Evidence to the ſeveral Parts of the Charge, it would be proper for him firſt to acquaint them how the Law determines in Caſes of this Nature; that with regard to the Perſons charged as Principals, wherever ſeveral Perſons agree together to commit a Murder or any other Felony, and the Murder or Felony is actually committed, every Perſon preſent, aiding and abetting, is, in the Eye of the Law, guilty in the ſame Degree, and liable to the ſame Puniſhment as he who actually committed the Fact. And the Reaſon the Law goes upon is this, that the Preſence of the Accomplices gives Encouragement, Support, and Protection to the Perſon who actually commits the Fact; and at the ſame time contributes to his Security.

That it is not neceſſary that the Proof of the Fact, in Caſes of this Nature, ſhould come up to the preciſe Form of the Indictment. For if the Indictment charges that A did the Fact, and that B and C were preſent, aiding and abetting, if it be proved that B did the Fact, and that A and C were preſent, aiding and abetting, they will be all guilty within the Indictment.

That Acceſſaries before the Fact, are thoſe who not being preſent in any Senſe of the Law at the time the Fact is committed, have adviſed or otherwiſe procured the Fact to be done. Theſe Perſons, in the Caſe of wilful Murder, will be liable to the ſame Puniſhment as thoſe who committed the Murder, by their Inſtigation, Advice or Procurement.

* He then ſummed up the Evidence very largely, and applied it to the Caſe of the ſeveral Priſoners; and concluded, that if upon the whole, the Jury ſhould be of Opinion that either of the Principals (Tapner, Cobby, Hammond, or the others charged as Principals in the Indictment) did ſtrangle the Deceaſed, and that the Priſoners, Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond, were preſent, aiding and abetting, they will be within this Indictment.

And if they ſhould be of Opinion, that the Priſoners, charged as Acceſſaries before the Fact, did adviſe, conſent to, or procure the Murder, they likewiſe will be guilty within this Indictment, tho' they were not preſent when the Fact was committed.

The Jury, after ſome little Conſideration, gave their Verdict, that Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond, were guilty of the Murder, as laid in the Indictment:

And Richard Mills the elder, Richard Mills the younger, William Jackſon, and William Carter, were guilty, as Acceſſaries before the Fact.

Wedneſday, 18 Jan. 1748-9.

William Jackſon and William Carter were tried upon the other Indictment, on the which they had been arraigned the Day before, as Principals in the Murder of William Galley, and to which they had pleaded, Not Guilty.

Mr. Steele opened the Indictment to the Jury, and Mr. Banks, the King's Counſel, ſpoke to much the ſame Purport as the Day before.

Mr. Smyth, another of the King's Counſel, ſpoke as follows, viz. I ſhall only add a Word or two, to explain to you why theſe two Men, who were convicted Yeſterday as Acceſſaries before the Fact to the Murder

* Note. The Particulars of the Judge's Charge to the Jury in ſumming up the Evidence, are omitted, thro' the Miſtake of the Short-hand Writer, which is mentioned in the Advertiſement in the Note; and the State of the Evidence is now reduced to ſo narrow a Compaſs, that the inſerting the Judge's Charge, would have been little more than a Repetition of the Evidence, in the ſame Order as it ſtands in the Trial.

of Chater, and thereby liable to ſuffer Death, ſhould be tried a ſecond time, as Principals, for the Murder of Galley.

The Reaſons for it are; in the firſt place, it will be neceſſary to convict them as Principals for the Murder of Galley, otherwiſe the Acceſſaries to that Murder, either before or after the Fact, cannot be convicted.

Another Reaſon is, as the Intention of all Proſecutions, as well as Puniſhments, is not ſo much to revenge and puniſh what is paſt, as to deter others from committing the like Crimes; it may be of Service to the Publick to have every Circumſtance of this cruel Tranſaction diſcloſed, to ſhew how dangerous to their Neighbours, and to the Country in general, thoſe Perſons are who are concerned in Smuggling, and how much it concerns every Man to uſe his utmoſt Endeavours to ſuppreſs, and bring them to Juſtice; and it may have another good Effect, in preventing Perſons from engaging in that lawleſs Practice, when they ſee it conſequentially engages them in Crimes, which at firſt they might never intend; for I believe, if theſe unhappy Men had been told, when they firſt began Smuggling, that the Time would come when they would coolly bathe their Hands in the Blood of two innocent Men, (bad as they now are) they would then have been ſhocked, and ſtartled at the very Imagination of it; yet Men are ſo naturally led from one Vice to another, that having once tranſgreſſed the Laws of their Country, they have inſenſibly arrived at ſuch an Height of Wickedneſs, as to commit this heinous Crime without the leaſt Heſitation or Remorſe. [After which the following Witneſſes were called for the Crown, viz.

Mr. Milner, Mr. Sheerer, William Galley, and Edward Holton, whoſe Evidence upon this Trial was to the ſame Effect as it was upon the former.

Robert Jenkes alſo proved the ſame upon this Trial, as he did upon the former, with this Addition:

That when they were at the Widow Paine's, Jackſon and Carter both ſaid they would ſee the Letter for Mr. Battine, becauſe they thought the Men were going to ſwear againſt the Smugglers; that both Jackſon and Carter hindered him from going thro' the Room where the two Men were; and that one of the Men had on a blue Great-coat.

Being croſs-examined, at the Requeſt of Carter, whether he hindered him from going through the Room?

Anſwered, That both did.

Joſeph Southern, William Lamb, William Garnet, and George Poat, proved the ſame, as upon the former Trial.

John Raiſs, to the firſt Part of his Evidence relating to the Tranſactions at the Widow Paine's, added, that the Blood ran down from Galley's Head and Face, on Jackſon's knocking him down; and that Galley and Chater were not fuddled when he went away.

William Steele, to his former Evidence, added, That whilſt they were at the Widow Paine's, Jackſon ſaid, "That if any of the Gang went "away from them, he would ſhoot them through the Head, or through "the Body, or ſerve them as bad as the two Men ſhould be ſerved." That he ſuppoſed Jackſon meant by this, that he would murder any of their own Company, or uſe any of them as ill as they did the Officer and Chater, if they left them; that when the Company left off whipping Galley with their Thongs, and Laſhes of their Whips, as mention'd in the former Trial, becauſe the Laſhes of the Whip reached this Witneſs, they beat him with the Butt-end of their Whips, which were very heavy, 'till one of their Whips was beat all to Pieces; that the Gravelly Knap, where Galley was puſhed off the Horſe, when he died, was in Conduit-Lane, in Rogate Pariſh; and that Little Harry puſhed him in the Back, and ſhoved him down; and that the Priſoners, Jackſon and Carter, Little Sam, and Richards, were in Company when he died; that they laid his Body upon a Horſe, and one Man held him on one Side, and another on the other Side, and ſo they led the Horſe along; that Carter and another went before to call Scardefield up; and when they came there, they laid Galley's Body down in the Kitchen at Scardefield's, and carried Chater into another Room; they drank every one a Dram, and Jackſon and Carter aſked Scardefield if he knew any Place to bury that Man in, and he ſaid No; but they ſaid he muſt go with them; and they got a Spade, and a Candle and Lanthorn, and they laid Galley on Horſeback again, and he (the Witneſs) Carter, Little Sam, and Scardefield, went back for about a Mile, and he held the Horſe whilſt Scardefield, Carter, and Little Sam, went to find the Place to bury him in; and when they had found it, Carter and Sam came back to him, and left Scardefield to dig the Grave; they went and buried him there, and returned back to Scardefield's again; that Jackſon told them, that whilſt they were burying Galley, he and Little Harry went to carry Chater to old Mills's; that they buried Galley two or three Feet deep, in the Heart of a Sand-Pit, about three or four, or five o'Clock in the Morning.

Being croſs-examined, and aſked by Carter, whether he (Carter) ſtruck Galley? anſwered, That they all ſtruck him.

Being aſked, at the Requeſt of the Priſoners Counſel, what was the Conſequence of that Thruſt that Little Harry gave Galley, when he fell the laſt Time? anſwered, That he thought by the Fall Galley's Neck was broke, becauſe as ſoon as he was down, he gave himſelf a Turn, and ſtretched out his Hands and Legs, and never ſtirred or ſpoke afterwards; that Galley was not falling, 'till Little Harry gave him the Puſh: Said he did not know the Pariſh of Rogate, or that the Place where Galley died was within that Pariſh, any otherwiſe than that he had been there ſince, and ſeveral People ſaid it was the Pariſh of Rogate.

He was then aſked, whether the Gravelly Knap was in the County of Southampton or County of Suſſex? anſwered, That he could not tell; that he had never heard, as he remembered, what County that Place was in, but he was carried thither laſt Friday, to ſee the Place, and he ſhewed to ſome People, then preſent, the Spot of Ground where Galley fell off the Horſe, and he believed he ſhould know one of the Men that were with him.

John Aſſlett being called up, Steele ſaid, he was one of the Men that was there.

Aſſlett was then ſworn, and proved that he was with Steele and ſome Dragoons on Friday laſt; that Steele pointed down to the Ground with a Stick, and ſaid, "There the Man died!" That he (the Witneſs) took particular notice of that Place, and is ſure it was in Suſſex; that he now lives at Harting, and was born and bred juſt by, and had lived there ever ſince he was a Lad, and borne the Offices of Surveyor and Conſtable, Steele, on Croſs-examination, ſaid, he knew the Place very well again, by the little gravelly riſing of the Ground.

William Scardefield proved the ſame as in the former Trial, with the following Facts relating to the Burial of Galley; that one of the Gang aſked him if he knew the Place where they laid up ſome Goods about a Year and a half ago, and he told him he did; upon which the Man ſaid, "You "muſt go along with us;" but the Witneſs told him his Wife was ill, and he could not leave the Houſe; and then Carter came in and aſked for a Lanthorn, and Edmund Richards told him he muſt go with them; to which he replied, If he muſt go, he muſt; that when he came down the Hill a little way from his own Houſe, he ſaw two Companies, one on the right and the other on the left; that Carter, Steele, and a ſhort Man he did not know, went on to the Place, which was about three Quarters of a Mile back again; he found the Place, and one of them came up after him, and he told him where it was; upon which they brought the Horſe up to a rough kind of a Dell, and the ſhort Man fell a-digging, and it being a very cold Night, he (the Witneſs) took the Spitter and dug to keep himſelf warm; there ſeemed to him to be a Man upon the Horſe, and it fell like a Man into the Pit, and they covered it up; he believed it to be the Body of a Man, but he did not help to put it in, and was about three or four Yards from it; he never went nigh the Ground afterwards, and did not ſee the Body of a Man upon the Horſe afterwards, or any where elſe; that the Earth was thrown over the Pit, and the ſhort Man did moſt of the Work; and he did not enquire, or chooſe to aſk any Queſtions about it.

Edward Sones proved the finding the Body of a dead Man, about the 15th of September, in a Fox Earth, within three Quarters of a Mile of Raike; that there were Boots upon the Legs, and a Glove upon one Hand; that the Body was very much periſhed, and had a Waiſtcoat and Breeches on.

John Greentree produced a Coat, which he took up beyond Harting Pond in the publick Road, on the 15th of February laſt; and ſwore that there were ſome Writings and a Letter-Caſe in the Pocket, which he ſaid he ſhould know if he was to ſee them again.

Upon this, a Parchment was delivered into Court by Mr. Battine, a Juſtice of the Peace, in whoſe Cuſtody it had been left, and ſhewn to the Witneſs, who ſaid it was the ſame that he found in the Coat Pocket.

It was then read in Court, and appeared to be a Deputation under the Hands of the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms, dated the 1ſt of April 1731, appointing William Galley to be a Tideſman in the Port of Southampton.

William Galley, the Son of the Deceaſed, looked at the Coat which the other Witneſs produced, and proved it to be his Father's Coat.

John Greentree ſaid, the Coat was bloody when he found it.

The King's Counſel ſubmitted it here, upon which the Priſoners being called upon to make their Defence,

The Priſoner Carter ſaid, he never intended to hurt the Man, and never ſtruck him, and only intended to carry him away to take Care of him, 'till they knew what became of Dimer; and that he had not any Witneſſes.

The Priſoner Jackſon had nothing to ſay.

Mr. Juſtice Foſter opened to the Jury the Subſtance of the Indictment, as before ſet forth, and told them, that where ſeveral People join to do an Act, in itſelf unlawful, and Death enſues from any thing done in Proſecution of that unlawful Deſign, they will be all conſidered as Principals in Murder, if they were all preſent, aiding or abetting therein; that it was not neceſſary that each of the Priſoners at the Bar ſhould be guilty of every ſingle Abuſe that was offered to the Deceaſed, in the long Series of Barbarities the Witneſſes for the Crown had laid before them; if all or any of thoſe Abuſes contributed to his Death, and the Priſoners at the Bar were engaged in the ſeveral Deſigns againſt him, and preſent, aiding and abetting the others, they will be guilty within this Indictment.

He then ſummed up the Evidence, and applied it to the Caſe of the Priſoners.

The Jury, after ſome little Conſultation together, gave their Verdict, That William Jackſon and William Carter were both Guilty.

The Counſel for the Crown then moved for Judgment; and the Priſoners being ſet to the Bar, and ſeverally aſked what they had to ſay why Judgment of Death ſhould not paſs on them, and none of them offering any thing in Arreſt of Judgment, Mr. Juſtice Foſter, ſpoke to them as follows:

Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, John Hammond, William Jackſon, William Carter, Richard Mills the elder, and Richard Mills the younger; you have been convicted upon very full and ſatisfactory Evidence of the Murder of Daniel Chater; three of you as Principals, and the reſt as Acceſſaries before the Fact.

And you William Jackſon and William Carter ſtand farther convicted, as Principals in the Murder of William Galley.

Deliberate Murder is moſt juſtly ranked among the higheſt Crimes human Nature is capable of; but thoſe you have reſpectively been convicted of, have been attended with Circumſtances of very high and uncommon Aggravation.

The Perſons who have been the Objects of your Fury, were travelling on a very laudable Deſign, the Advancement of publick Juſtice. For this they were beſet in their Inn, tempted to drink to Exceſs, and then laid aſleep in an inner Room, while a Conſultation was held in what Manner to diſpoſe of them; and in the end a Reſolution was taken to carry them to ſome diſtant Place, and to diſpatch them by ſome Means or other.

In conſequence of this Reſolution they were ſet on Horſeback, and exerciſed with various Kinds of Cruelty for five Hours together, 'till one of them ſunk under the Hardſhips he ſuffered, and died upon the Road.

The other was carried to a Place of ſafe Cuſtody, there kept chained on a Heap of Turf, expecting his Doom, for three Days. During this dreadful Interval, a ſecond Conſultation was held, and a Reſolution taken to diſpatch him too: Not a ſingle Man, of thirteen who were preſent, offering one Word in his Behalf.

He was accordingly hurried to his Death; and though he begged earneſtly to live but one Day longer, that ſmall Reſpite was denied him. I will not repeat every Circumſtance; but I cannot forbear putting you in mind of one. When the poor Man was told he muſt die that very Night, ſome of you adviſed him to ſay his Prayers, and accordingly he did addreſs himſelf to Prayer.

One would have hoped that this Circumſtance ſhould have ſoftened your Hearts, and turned you from the evil Purpoſe you were bent upon. Happy had it been for you, if you had then reflected, that God Almighty was Witneſs to every thing that paſſed among you, and to all the Intention of your Hearts!

But while the Man, under great Diſtraction of Thought, was recommending his Soul to Mercy, he was interrupted in his Devotion by two of you, in a Manner I ſcarce know how to repeat.

I hope your Hearts have been long ſince ſoftened to a proper Degree of Contrition for theſe Things; and that you have already made a due Preparation for the Sentence I am now to paſs upon you.

If you have not, pray loſe not one Moment more. Let not Company, or the Habit of Drinking, or the Hopes of Life, divert you from it; for Chriſtian Charity obliges me to tell you, that your Time in this World will be very ſhort.

Nothing now remains but that I paſs the Sentence upon you which the Law of your Country, in Conformity to the Law of God, and to the Practice of all Ages and Nations, has already pronounced upon the Crime you have been guilty of. This Court doth therefore award that you Benjamin Tapner, William Carter, John Hammond, John Cobby, Richard Mills the elder, Richard Mills the younger, and William Jackſon, and each of you, ſhall be conveyed from hence to the Priſon from whence you came, and from thence you ſhall be led to the Place of Execution, where you ſhall be ſeverally hanged by the Neck, until you ſhall be dead, and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls!

After Sentence the Priſoners were carried back to Chicheſter Jail. The Court were pleaſed to order them all for Execution the very next Day, and that the Bodies of Jackſon, Carter, Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond, the five Principals, ſhould be hung in Chains. Accordingly they were carried from the Jail, to a Place called the Broyle, near Chicheſter; where, in the Preſence of great Numbers of Spectators on Thurſday the 19th Day of January 1748-9, about Two o'Clock in the Afternoon, all of them were executed except Jackſon, who died in Jail ſome few Hours after Sentence of Death was pronounced upon him.

The Heinouſneſs of the Crimes of ſo notorious Offenders may poſſibly excite in the Reader a Deſire to be informed of their reſpective Behaviour, whilſt under Sentence of Death, and at the Place of Execution; to ſatisfy which is ſubjoined the following authentick Account, under the Hands of the ſeveral Clergymen who attended them alternately in Jail, and together at the Place of Execution.

" The firſt Time I went to the Malefactors under Condemnation, being the Evening after Sentence was paſſed upon them, I prayed with " them all; viz. Carter, Tapner, Cobby, Hammond, and the two Mills's " (Jackſon being dead juſt before I went to the Jail); but many Perſons " being preſent, I had no Opportunity of ſaying any thing material, and " therefore told them I would viſit them early the next Morning, which " I did accordingly.

" After Prayers, I talked with them about their unhappy Condition, " and the heinous Crimes that brought them into it. I aſked them, if " they deſired to receive the Sacrament; they all and each of them begged " that I would adminiſter it to them; accordingly I attended them again " about Ten o'Clock for that Purpoſe, and during the whole Time of " my performing that Office, they all behaved with great Decency and " Devotion, eſpecially Carter and Tapner.

" Afterwards I put the following Queſtions to them, and deſired they " would be ſincere in their Anſwers as dying Men; Firſt, Whether they " did not acknowledge the Sentence that was paſſed upon them to be juſt, " and what they highly deſerved? Carter, the moſt ſenſible and penitent " amongſt them, firſt anſwered, Yes; as did afterwards Tapner, Cobby, " and Hammond; but the two Mills's did not.

" 2*dly*, I aſked them whether they forgave every Body? They all and " each anſwered, They forgave all the World. Tapner then owned, that " Edmund Richards and another were the Cauſe of his Ruin, but yet he " forgave them.

" Carter laid his Ruin to Jackſon. " JOHN SMYTH,
" Curate of St. Pancraſs, in Chicheſter."

" Both Carter and Tapner, a few Hours before their Execution, confeſs'd " to me, that they, with ſeveral others, aſſembled together, with a Deſign " to reſcue Dimer out of Chicheſter Jail; that the only Perſon amongſt " them, who had Arms, was Edmund Richards; but that being diſappointed by a Number of Perſons who had promiſed to join them from " the Eaſt, their Scheme was fruſtrated, and their Purpoſe carried no " farther into Execution; that one Stringer was at the Head of this Confederacy, but not preſent with them at the Time of their aſſembling " together.

" SIMON HUGHS, Vicar of Donnington in Suſſex."

" Benjamin Tapner, of Weſt Stoke in Suſſex, Labourer, aged Twenty-ſeven, before he was turned off, owned the Juſtice of his Sentence, and " deſired all young Perſons to take Warning by his untimely End, and " avoid bad Company, which was his Ruin. When in Jail, before he was " brought out for Execution, he ſaid, he did not remember he put the " Rope about Chater's Neck.

" William Carter, of Rowland's Caſtle, in Hampſhire, Thatcher, aged " Thirty-nine, both at the Place of Execution, and in the Jail, confeſt " the Juſtice of the Sentence paſſed upon him, and in both Places acted " more ſuitably to a Perſon in ſuch unhappy Circumſtances than any of " them. He likewiſe at the Gallows, in the ſame Manner as Tapner " did, cautioned every one againſt thoſe Courſes, that had brought him " to ſo ſhameful an End. Tapner and Carter, when all the Ropes were " fixed, ſhook Hands, but what, or whether any Words then paſſed " between them, was not heard.

" Richard Mills the elder, of Tretton in Suſſex, Colt-Breaker, aged 63, " was unwilling to own himſelf guilty of the Fact for which he died, " and ſaid, he never ſaw Chater; but being aſked whether he never heard " him, as he was confined ſo long, and in ſo terrible a Condition, in the " next Room to that in which he generally ſat? made no Anſwer.

" Richard Mills the younger, of Stedham in Suſſex, Colt-Breaker, Son " of the aforeſaid Richard Mills, aged 37, would willingly have been " thought innocent; and it being put to him, whether he made that " Speech about the Council of War, &c. and whether he was not at the " Conſultation? denied both; but in the latter, Tapner confronted him, " and ſaid, "Yes, Major, you was there." To which Mills replied, "Ay, " for a Quarter of an Hour, or ſo," or to that Purpoſe. It ſo happened " that his Rope was firſt fixed to the Gallows, and a conſiderable Space of " Time was taken up in fixing the reſt; which Interim he might have " much better employed, than he did, gazing one while at the Spectators, and then at the Hangman (who was on the Gallows, tying the " Ropes of the other Malefactors), till the Cart was almoſt ready to drive " away.

" John Cobby, of Sidleſham in Suſſex, Labourer, aged 30, appeared to " be very much dejected, and ſaid little in Jail, and nothing at the Gallows.

" John Hammond, of Berſted in Suſſex, Labourer, aged 40, ſeemed likewiſe very much dejected, and had little to ſay for himſelf, excepting " his pretending that the Threats of Jackſon, Carter, and the reſt, were " the Occaſion of his being concerned in the Murder.

" Cobby's Excuſe was much the ſame.

" They all, except the two Mills's, ſeemed ſenſible of the heinous Nature of the Crime for which they died, and behaved as became Men in " their unhappy Condition, more particularly Carter; but Mills, the Father and Son, appeared hardened and unaffected, both in the Jail and at " the Gallows; eſpecially the Son, who was moſt inſenſible, and ſeemed " by his Behaviour, which has been mentioned before, even when his " Rope was fixed to the Gallows, to be as little moved at what he was " about to ſuffer, as the moſt unconcerned Spectator. However, juſt before the Cart drove away, he and his Father ſeemed to offer up ſome " Prayers to God.

" R. Sandham, Vicar of Subdeanry in Chicheſter.
" John Smyth, Curate of St. Pancraſs."

As Jackſon died ſo ſoon after Condemnation, no other Account can be given of him, than that he was of Welſworth, near Rowland's Caſtle, in Hampſhire, Labourer, aged about fifty Years; and that being very ill, all the Time of his Trial, as he had been for a conſiderable Time before, was ſhocked at the Sentence of Death, and the Apprehenſion of being hung in Chains, to ſuch a Degree, as haſtened and brought on his Death, before he could pay the Forfeit of his Life, in that Ignominy to which he was moſt deſervedly doomed, and more peculiarly due to him as a Ring-leader in theſe moſt cruel and horrid Barbarities and Murders.

He profeſſed the Romiſh Religion ſome Years before his Death, and that he died a Roman Catholick may very reaſonably be preſumed from a printed Paper which was found carefully ſewed up in a Linnen Purſe in his Waiſtcoat Pocket, immediately after his Death, ſuppoſed to be a Popiſh Relique, and containing the following Words, viz.

Sancti tres Reges
Gaſpar, Melchior, Balthaſar,
Orate pro Nobis nunc & in Hora
Mortis Noſtræ.

Ces Billets ont touché aux Trois Teſtes de S. S. Rois à Cologne. Ils ſont pour Les Voyagers, contre Les Mal-Heurs de Chemins, Maux de Teſte, Mal-caduque, Fievres, Sorcellerie, toute ſorte de Malefice, Mort ſubite.

In Engliſh thus:

Ye Three Holy Kings,
Gaſpar, Melchior, Balthaſar,
Pray for us now, and in the Hour of Death.

Theſe Papers have touch'd the Three Heads of the Holy Kings at Cologne. They are to preſerve Travellers from Accidents on the Road, Head-Achs, Falling-Sickneſs, Fevers, Witch-craft, all Kinds of Miſchief, and ſudden Death.

The Body of William Carter was hung in Chains, in the Portſmouth Road, near Raike in Suſſex; the Body of Benjamin Tapner, on Rook's Hill, near Chicheſter; and the Bodies of John Cobby and John Hammond upon the Sea-Coaſt, near a Place called Selſey Bill, in Suſſex, where they are ſeen at a great Diſtance, both Eaſt and Weſt.

The Bodies of Mills, the Father and Son, having neither Friend or Relation to take them away, were thrown into a Hole, dug for that Purpoſe, very near the Gallows, into which was likewiſe thrown the Body of Jackſon. Juſt by is now erected a Stone, having the following Inſcription, viz.

" Near this Place was buried the Body of William Jackſon, a proſcribed " Smuggler, who, upon a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, held " at Chicheſter, on the 16th Day of January 1748-9, was, with William " Carter, attainted for the Murder of William Galley, a Cuſtom-houſe Officer; and who likewiſe was, together with Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, " John Hammond, Richard Mills the elder, and Richard Mills the younger, " his Son, attainted for the Murder of Daniel Chater; but dying in a few " Hours after Sentence of Death was pronounced upon him, he thereby " eſcap'd the Puniſhment which the Heinouſneſs of his complicated " Crimes deſerved, and which was the next Day moſt juſtly inflicted upon his Accomplices.

" As a Memorial to Poſterity, and a Warning
" to this and ſucceeding Generations,
" This Stone is erected,
" A. D. 1749."
